there are 400,000,000 more. Now all the confessed living converts to Christianity in India, after seventy years of labor, by thirty-one missionary societies, are at this moment not much over 80,000, the far larger proportion of these being persons of the lowest rank in intelligence. Around these professed converts there is a Christianized population of a quarter of a million. We thank God for even such results. But it is impossible to forget what these figures mean. They mean that if you cause to pass before you all the inhabitants of India in ranks of thirty abreast, and marching a yard apart, you would have a column extending from the Land's End in Cornwall to the edge of the Caspian Sea, while the converts to Christianity would be represented by one thousand of these ranks of thirty. If the whole population passed in single file before the eye, and three seconds were allowed to gaze with awful interest as to his eternal destiny upon each dusky countenance, it would require thirty years, of days of twelve hours each, to survey the whole. But the living nominal converts to Christianity from over the whole of India would pass, at the same rate of movement, in twenty-five hours. In China the known results of missionary action are even more apallingly small. You may, indeed, hope that there are thousands of Nicodemuses in both India and China, a hope at once reasonable and encouraging, and thousands more of men saved by the Spirit in their own twilights, but surely there is some apparent deficiency in the power of modern Christianity. Where is the arm that smote Rahab? Where is the power of truth and grace that smote the philosophies and idolatries of the Mediterranean in the apostolic age, and shook the whole of Europe and Asia in a single generation? Let it not be said, it was the force of miracles that then availed. Miracles exerted an inconsiderable influence in comparison with a truth which commended itself to all consciences, a grace that commended itself to all affections, and a terror which struck like a thunderbolt from the uplifted hand of the Almighty.

It is not that we are propagating a Christianity which is half paralyzed in its two chief forces of hope and fear through the perversions of a corrupted theology? We fail in thoroughly presenting God's love to the nations, a love strong enough to melt even Chinese arrogance, and to develop the belief of a personal God even among Chinese atheists, because we have encumbered Christianity with a doctrine of hell, so unjust, so indiscriminate, so hardening in its frightful propositions, that men's consciences refuse to receive it. Missionary theology cannot "commend itself to every man's conscience," because every man's conscience, whether in Europe or Asia, in proportion as it is enlightened, rejects it with horror. This is doubtless one principal reason for the general rejection of the gospel by the Brahmins, Buddhists and Confucianists of the East, God's love is hidden from them, and they "turn away sorrowful" from so direful a Christianity. Sir John Bowring says, in his work on Siam, that he never yet met with a learned Buddhist who could speak with patience of the doctrine of the missionaries on the hell of England and America. Now whatever the better sort of thinking men of any nation generally reject, will not be widely received by the uneducated.

But the prevailing system of teaching among missionaries fails also in another department—fails through withholding the inflence of a truth favorable to the production alike of hope and of fear. Not only does the hell preached by the missionaries fail by its unscriptural representations to awaken terror in the educated classes, since whatever you exaggerate you weaken, but it is nearly everywhere the custom with missionary societies to send out men opposed to the belief of Christ's advent to judge the nations at the destruction of the Apostacy. The plain doctrine of St. Paul, in the second letter to the Thessalonians, that the personal advent of Christ will occur for the purpose of destroying "the man of sin;" the plain doctrine of the prophets that the "Son of man comes in the clouds of heaven" for the destruction of the "fourth" empire, and of the "horn that has eyes, and a mouth speaking marvellous things;" the plain doctrine that Christ will come to punish "with flaming fire" a church that has perverted Christianity until men can no longer believe in it, and to judge nations that persist in idolatry after due summons to repentance—this doctrine of Christ's "premillennial" advent, under the influence and expectation of which the gospel was indisputably spread in the first century, is systematically exploded and denied by the missionary societies and the generality of missionaries. And here is a loss of power which may be readily appreciated. Let the gospel be preached in India and China as the message of life to the dead, as the promise of immortality in body and soul to a race sitting in darkness and death shade; let it be preached as the message of a God who is intelligibly loving, and intelligibly and justly severe; let it be preached that the "times of ignorance a gracious God winked at," overlooked, "but now commands all men everywhere to repent;" let the words of the angel of the everlasting gospel, in the Apocalypse, become the text of missionary preaching, "Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come;" and one cannot but believe that a new power will attend in the East the proclamation of Christianity. There is something so striking, so fitted to compel attention, in the warning of Christ's speedy advent to "judge the nations," to destroy obstinate worshippers of idols, to avenge the rejection of the truth, to raise the dead saints, and to establish "God's kingdom" on earth, that even languid India must lift its head to listen, and haughty philosophic China must listen awe-struck to the trumpet-blast. Christianity is a power which is designed to operate on man from before as well as from behind, through the expectation of events which shortly "shall come to pass," in the future, as well as through the study of facts accomplished in a remote past. It is emphatically a prophecy, as well as a history. But, under the prevalent system of missionary teaching, it is a gospel without that advent of Christ, the prospect of which filled and reddened like a dawn of glory at the beginning all the eastern sky. The whole body of prophecy is supposed now to prove only that "the Lord delayeth his coming," that wisdom consists in proclaiming the doctrine of the "evil servant," and in relegating all concern for the Lord's return in the clouds of heaven to a generation that shall live at the end of the Millennium. Vain, then, are all such warnings as, "Behold, he cometh in clouds, and every eye shall see him!" for it is well understood that such an expectation of the Lord is peculiar to the "weaker brethren," and to spirits in which fancy takes the place of faith. Thus it happens that Christ's advent is banished from the thoughts of nearly the whole body of missionaries. "Far off his coming shines" to them, indeed, as a remote, dim nebula in the firmament of the future. Who can wonder that a Christianity so destitute of forces to win, to convince, or to appal, maintains a doubtful fight with the stiff-necked pagans of Asia! What is wanted is a doctrine that commends itself to the reason and to the conscience of men—a love so real as to win all hearts capable of love, a terror so real, so near, and so appreciably equitable, as to shake, if it cannot vanquish, the stoutest resistance of the heathen. What is needed, is a hope of speedy victory to the church sufficient to restore the energies of the first century and a courage founded on conviction which would engage in close conflict with the wretched positivism of Confucius. That "throneless king," as the Chinese call him, would soon, I reckon, lose such of his remaining power, before a CHRIST preached as if he were the very Jesus of the gospels—"coming again," to be the "life" of the world.

With all reverence and affection therefore, but with an earnestness which neutralizes the remembrance of personal insignificance, I implore my fellow-Christians at home to reconsider in the light of Scripture the doctrinal basis and method of the missionary enterprise. I adjure, before Christ our Lord, the Secretaries and Directors of the Missionary Societies, not to continue the ban now disingenuously placed upon those who openly deny what so few in secret perfectly believe. I solemnly call upon all the Ministers of Christ who are persuaded of the untruth of the common doctrine on immortality and retribution, publicly to say so, and to confess their real convictions to the people. I earnestly invite all missionary students in the colleges to study these questions in earnest, and not to add to the number of those who carry out to the heathen a creed which they dare not proclaim to the cultured and intelligent people of India and China.

And finally, if my voice could, by a divine providence reach so far, I would call, with profound respect, but equal boldness, upon every honored Missionary of the Cross around the world, to cast aside the fear of brethren abroad, or churches or directors at home, and to apply his mind, if he have failed so to do up to this present hour, to the consideration of that doctrine of LIFE IN CHRIST which is the plain and natural reading of St. John's Gospel and St. Paul's Epistles; and next, to that doctrine of Christ's ADVENT TO JUDGMENT, which has won the conviction, in modern times, of a Bengel, a Stier, and an Alford, and a thousand more, and was unquestionably the belief of the apostles and their followers in the first age of the Christian revelation.

SINGULAR REASONING.

"As we read the word, the Divine plan is, that all that are in their graves shall come forth. It seems to us that the same course of reasoning which proves a portion of them will not come forth, will prove that none of them will rise."

WE extract this from the "Voice of the West," in a notice of our tract, "THE DIVINE PLAN," which we sent to the editor. The notice is moderate in tone, as we justly expected from so eminent a Christian.

But in reading this, it struck us as a singular piece of logic. It occurred to us, also, that his readers would have difficulty—as we have—in comprehending how an argument used to prove the re-living only of God's people could disprove the resurrection of any. We regret that the editor did not attempt to furnish a little Bible proof on this point; but we would not urge him to undertake what we consider an impossibility.

The principle which our respected brother sets forth appears to be that, if a portion of the human family fail to have a resurrection, then none will rise from the dead. Is this true either in reason or Scripture? We think not, and will give our reasons.

1. In the "Voice," of June 1st, the editor made this truthful declaration:

"We conclude that without Christ none of Adam's posterity would ever have seen life after dying."

Therefore, the resurrection of any of the human family is only through Christ. Upon this point we are agreed. The hope of a future life is based upon the revival of Christ from the dead.

2. If any are raised from the dead, it must be by a connection with Christ. This is clearly the sense of the masterly argument by Paul on the resurrection. He says: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv., 22. By a parental relation to Adam we possess a dying nature, and the "even so" in this passage shows that all who shall be made alive will be by virtue of a parental or regenerating relation to Christ, who is the Second Adam. Do the wicked stand in this parental relation to Christ? If not, how can their resurrection from the dead be proved?

3. As the editor of the "Voice" maintains that "without Christ none of Adam's posterity would ever have seen life after dying," and as he believes in the resurrection of the wicked, we deduce as his position that they are "in Christ"—are connected with the Second Adam. If our conclusion is incorrect we hope the "Voice" will give us a little more light on its position on this great and important subject. But we earnestly inquire: (a.) How can the wicked dead in any sense be considered "in Christ," or claim a connection to the LIFE-GIVER, unless it be a parental relationship? (b). If the wicked do stand in this relationship to Christ, how can the editor of the "Voice" disprove their final salvation? Will he favor us with an explanation of this matter?

4. In Paul's day the important question was propounded: "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" (1 Cor. xv., 35.) He does not answer these questions on the premises of Universalism, nor does he take the other extreme and deny the resurrection of any. There were two questions which he endeavors to answer:

(a.) "How are the dead raised up?" In answer to this question his whole argument clearly shows that it is by the quickening power of the Second Adam—Christ—in the production of a new life, spiritual and eternal in its nature. It is by this means only that any deliverance is obtained from death which results from the life generated from Adam. There is no other way shown in revelation by which a revival from death can be obtained; but the result of this quickening power, exercised by the Second Adam, is the production of a spiritual and immortal life. No other conclusion can be fairly deduced.

(b.) "With what body do they come up?" was also a question, which, through the illuminating power of the Holy Spirit, he answers in detail. He says: "Thou sowest not that body which shall be,"—but some say it is sown a mortal body and shall come up a mortal body—what say you, Paul? "It is sown in corruption; it is RAISED IN INCORRUPTION; . . . it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body; and so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." In the face of such testimony as this it seems strange to me how any Bible student can frame a theory for the mortal resurrection of a portion of the human race, when divine language is so emphatic that "THE DEAD SHALL BE RAISED INCORRUPTIBLE."

5. In conclusion, we will briefly notice the bit of singular logic cited at the head of this article. The point which the editor in question wishes to make seems to be, as he looks at it, that the reasoning which proves that the wicked will not be raised from the dead proves that "none" will have a resurrection. This position involves too many absurdities for us to notice now. But I might propound a few questions which will show, in a degree, the inconsistency of the position. Does the fact that a portion of the human family, by complying with the conditions of the gospel, finally obtain salvation, prove that the whole race will be saved? The reader would condemn this at once as poor logic. We will suppose that a judge in our courts should, after an examination of a certain prisoner's case, declare him innocent in the sight of the law, and, by virtue of the power vested in him, deliver the prisoner from the gloomy dungeon in which he was confined. Would that act by the judge release every prisoner throughout the land, irrespective of qualifications? Such an idea is absurd. Of the wicked, Jesus says, "They will not come unto me that they may have life." To the wicked Jews he said, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead."

Those who become the followers of Jesus receive the promise of deliverance from the prison house of death, for he says, "I will raise him up at the last day."

"JUDGE NOT."

OUR Saviour once spake a parable to certain men that "trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others." "Two men," said he, "went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood up and prayed thus with himself: God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are. . . or even as this publican; I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess. And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner. I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other."

Jesus did not often explain his parables so fully, but the lesson couched in this one was designed particularly for them, then and there, as well as to all others of the same character, and accordingly he added as follows: "Every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Human nature has not changed. Men still trust "in themselves that they are righteous," and get into their little heads the great idea of infallibility, and act upon the assumption that they cannot be wrong in their interpretation of God's word, and that consequently they who differ with them cannot be right. So, in the exuberance of self-exaltation, presuming to thank God that they are not like those others, they very pretentiously proceed to pass upon them judgment unto condemnation.

Some time ago application was made for admission of a certain gentleman into membership of the "Young Men's Christian Association," of Brooklyn, and was refused on the ground that he was an Adventist, and therefore not evangelical. They did not, it is true, take action in just this concise way, but as follows: When the question of admission was presented to the Association for decision, two facts were found to exist; a law of the association required that to be eligible to active membership a man must be a member of some evangelical church, and that it had never been decided what denominations are evangelical and what ones are not. This point, however, was in due time officially decided, and upon the books was placed a list of the names of denominations regarded as evangelical, that of Adventists, as well as some others, not appearing among them.

Lest some may think this decision was due simply to youth and inexperience, we remark that although "Young Men's Christian Association" is the title, it is, like others throughout the country, made up largely of men of experience. This action of the society was practically saying, "I am holier than thou." They, to considerable extent, paralleled the case of the Pharisee, and if they did not thank God, they, at least, boasted of themselves that they are "not as the men (professing Christians) are, or even as this" Adventist. But we venture the thought that "this man went down to his house justified rather than" they.

A Convention of Christian Young Men from various parts of the country recently assembled in Portland, Maine, and devoted considerable time to a discussion of the question. "Are Unitarians Christians?" After disposing of that little matter, whether to their entire satisfaction or not we cannot say, the convention appointed among the leading officers of the Association a Mr. F. W. Ballard, of New York. Mr. B. was at this time, and had quite long been a prominent officer in an Insurance Company in this city, and two days after his appointment in Portland it was publicly announced that he was a defaulter to the extent of over $60,000, that amount of the Company's funds, it was subsequently ascertained, having been stolen and lost by him in stock gambling operations in Wall street. Now all this, though so singularly inconsistent that it is well calculated to provoke humorous criticism, is really too serious and melancholy for anything like comedy. If the various Christian Associations and future Conventions are wise they will profit by this lesson. They may learn from it that it very ill becomes any class of Christian religionists to even call in question, much less ostentatiously pronounce upon the religious character of others so long as there is a chance for their being so greatly mistaken in that of their own members. Christian professors had much better employ their spare moments in determining whether they are themselves Christians in reality and truth, and leave that question respecting others to be settled by them, wherever any professing Christian publicly or otherwise proclaim that they are "not as other men are," they most likely assent what is true, but the difference will hardly be thought to stand in their favor.

FROM MARTHA SISSONS.

LOGAN, N. Y., Aug. 4, 1869.

BR. STORRS: It is with a sad heart I write to inform you of the death of my dear husband, STEPHEN SISSONS. He was taken from me in a sudden and shocking manner. On the 24th of June he took his team and span of mules, to draw out manure into the field I saw him about eleven o'clock, A. M., loading his wagon, and I went to get his dinner by the time he should return from the field. Noon came—dinner was waiting, but he did not come. I went out to call him, having no one to send. I called several times, but received no answer. I went to the field, and O horror of horrors, my eyes beheld my dear husband crushed to death between the whiffletree of the wagon and a chesnut tree in about the centre of the field. Words would be but feeble to express my feelings at that moment. There I was, all alone, and a quarter of a mile from any neighbor. I cried aloud for help; at length a lady came, but only to leave me to go for help. I could not bear, in her absence, to remain idle watching my husband, for I still had hopes if he could be extricated he might possibly be restored to life. I went to work to release him from his position; he was upright on his knees. Then I laid him out straight and took his head in my lap, rubbed his temples and wrists; but there came no signs of life.

It was near an hour before help came, but, O, it seemed an age to me; it arose from anxiety to have some one come to see if life could not be restored. But, no; they said he was dead and had donbtless been killed instantly. The team had evidently run about six rods and striking the end of the wagon tongue against the tree, sliding by, had thrown him into the position where I found him.

He was born in Yorkshire, England, A. D. 1811. Just after he was 21 came to this country. We were married in 1836: we have had a large family of children; five only are now living, four married and gone to the West. I am left quite alone, only a little girl ten years old left to comfort me. But I do not mourn as those who have no hope. I believe Jesus died and rose again; and I believe that all who sleep in him will He raise up at the last day. I have reason to believe that my dear husband sleeps in Jesus. But he has been scoffed at, and called hard names, and turned out of the synagogue for daring to promulgate his faith of no immortality out of Christ; for he has been a firm believer and promulgator of this and kindred doctrines for the past thirty years. But not till last fall was he fully persuaded that the wicked dead would live no more. Br. A. Guthrie, of Trumansburg, induced him to take the HERALD OF LIFE, which he prized much. I felt sad that I could not obtain one of like faith to officiate at his funeral; but that was impossible; so I had a Wesleyan Minister, a very kind and obliging man, to give a discourse.

The community say they deeply sympathize with me. But none can miss him as I do. I wish the prayers of all God's people that I may be sustained through this my darkest hour of trial and loneliness. I miss my dear husband at the family altar and everywhere. Truly I am lonely. My health is poor and my nerves unstrung. Pray for me.

I mean to do all I can to spread the light before the people. Send me a dollar's worth of "Campaign Documents." Your sister, who believes there is "No life out of Christ."

FROM CLAMOR FRANKE.

CINCINNATI, August 12, 1869.

BR. STORRS: The time is near at hand when the lovers of Jesus, upon whose hearts and minds the noontide splendor, the meridian sunlight of the Gospel, "Life only in CHRIST," has shone, are to have their annual gathering. O what a feast of love is here in store for all who can attend. To meet this dear people whose faith and hopes and aims are one, on such an occasion, is a privilege my soul covets above all things else. But some of us will necessarily be detained at home; and while we cannot therefore be present in body and look upon the smiling faces and share in the communion and fellowship of our beloved in the Lord, we can be present in spirit and mingle our sympathies and our prayers with theirs before our Father's throne. And this we will not forget to do.

The main object of the meeting of course will be to gather fresh strength for the year that is upon us. To devise ways and means to continue our dear HERALD OF LIFE, and to still more further the cause that is so dear to us all, by providing funds for the publication of Tracts to a greater extent than heretofore, will be the principal business before the meeting, and I for one feel that if anything deserves my heartiest support and my best efforts, it is this God-given cause, of which our paper and tracts are such noble advocates.

The beautiful language of the Psalmist which he uttered as he remembered Zion, finds a ready response in my heart:

"If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

You will please book my name for two copies of Vol. VII. of the HERALD, at $10 each, and $10 as a pledge to the Tract fund; total thirty dollars, which I will remit at no distant day.

Yours in the hope of Life through Christ alone.

J. ROBERTS, Owenville, Cal., writes: I send $3: two for the HERALD OF LIFE and one for "Campaign Documents." I have been nearly a year in this section and have striven to hold up the Banner of my Master and have men believe that "God is love;" that through Christ alone we can gain a resurrection from the dead; but I have met with bitter opposition and sore trials in these endeavors; and have at times felt to despair: but when I dwell on the promises of our Saviour I feel my strength renewed, and am encouraged to battle on for the cause; knowing that He will in that day give unto me the crown of righteousness, if I prove faithful to the vows I have taken in His cause to spread the seed of life, that they who are dead may live. O that men might feel to look upon God as love, and of infinite mercy; and dwell more upon the promises He has given to those who are found faithful in well doing; and forsake the traditions of men, that lead to death and destruction. Thy kingdom come: Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven, is my prayer. Yours in hope of life.

ELD. LIBERTY WETHERBEE, Bangor, Me., sends two new subscribers, and writes: Truth is gaining ground. Some of our strongest opposers have become satisfied that there is "No future life out of Christ." One of the most prominent believers in the re-living of the wicked dead was at Springfield camp-meeting last year and heard your discourse on "God is love;" he came home satisfied that the wicked dead would never live again. Much labor has been expended here to prove that God could not be just, and the gospel would be no benefit to the creature man, if the wicked did not come up and be tormented. But such teaching is a failure.

OUR ANNIVERSARY.

THURSDAY, September 2d, is the time for the annual meeting of the LIFE AND ADVENT UNION. The place will be in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent" in Springfield, Mass., at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon. An informal meeting will be held at nine o'clock in the morning, in the same place, for the exchange of thoughts on various matters relating to the Union and its work.

To provide for the continuance of the HERALD OF LIFE will be the principal business of the Union. Next in importance will be the matter of issuing and circulating Tracts; that this work, which has accomplished so much, may be prosecuted with still more efficiency.

Both of the foregoing subjects call for our united and increased exertions. Let all the friends who can possibly be present not fail to do so. Those whose circumstances will not permit this, should communicate immediately with us, stating how much can be relied on from them for each of the above objects. You know the value of them to you and to the cause to which they are devoted. They are needed no less now than when first originated under the "Chestnut Tree" at Wilbraham, in 1863. A great work has been accomplished in the six years since that time. True, we have had our trials, but we have the consolation that amidst them all the Lord has sustained and prospered the work, so that the prospect of increased usefulness calls for increased efforts to push forward in promulgating the Gospel of "LIFE IN JESUS CHRIST alone."

Shall we not give thanks and take courage at our coming anniversary? Let us give all the praise of all the good accomplished to "God and the Lamb."

CAMP-MEETING IN MAINE.

THERE will be a camp-meeting in North Herman, Me., in James Emmerson's grove, east side of the Euenew road, to commence, Sept. 13, and hold over the Sabbath. We hope there will be one more general gathering of the brethren in Maine. Come with your tents, and bedding. Board and provisions can be obtained, for man or beast, on or near the ground at reasonable rates. Those coming from the west, by boat or railroad, should come to Bangor. The distance from Bangor to the camp-ground is five or six miles, and there will probably be conveyances. The preaching Brn., who may come by boat or railroad, should write Liberty Wetherbee, Bangor, who will see them forwarded to the camp-ground. This meeting is to be a free one, without regard to sect or party; there will be no dictating to brethren what they shall preach, or shall not preach; but it will be left with them and the Lord.

Now Brn. and Sisters, come in the Spirit and with the understanding, come to labor for God: come to greet one another again: and if we cannot all see "eye to eye" now, we will labor on till we all come into the unity of the Faith.

Things Hoped For.

Brighter and better days are on the dawn,
The time, the King long waited for, are near.
Shadows of a heavenly shape and beauty
Forecast themselves upon the world, and tell
Of substances that follow fast behind.
The years have pregnant grown with destinies,
And now are writhing in the pains of travail:
Events undreamt of struggle to the birth,
Which shall strike dumb with awe a slumbering world.
All things move toward a blessed goal,
Men rave—the eternal purpose ripens—
The Christ of God, the Mighty Prince of Life,
Who from the weltering womb of chaos,
Called forth this Kosmos as a home for man,
Shall breathe upon the nations, and impart
Life to the dead, strong purpose to the faint.
Infinite love and wisdom shall arrest
The work of ruin, and redeem the world
From sin's dire curse and man's oppressive rule.
No longer shall the stream of human life,
Flow down through darkness, hissing hot to death,
But upward shape its course to heaven and God,
Adorning earth with righteousness and peace.

Ragged Tom and his Surety.

One Sabbath afternoon a big boy stood at the door of a Sabbath-school. He was so bad that he had been turned out of school the Sabbath before. His father and mother had brought him, and begged that he might be received again. The Superintendent said,

"We should be glad to do him good, but we are afraid he will ruin all the other children. It is very bad for a school when a big boy sets a wicked example."

"We know he is a bad boy at school, sir," said the parents, "but he is ten times worse at home; he will be lost if you do not take him back."

"We would take him back if we could secure his good behaviour. I will see," said the Superintendent.

So he stepped back into the school, and rang the bell for silence. All listened while he said, "That boy wants to come into the school again, but we cannot take him back without making sure of his good behaviour. Will any one be surety for him?"

A pause followed; the elder boys shook their heads. They said they knew him so well. The others did not care for him.

But one little boy pitied the big bad boy, and was very sorry that no one would be surety. The little boy went by the name of "Ragged Tom." It was not his fault that he was ragged, for his mother was very poor. The Superintendent soon heard his little voice saying, "If you please, sir, I will, sir."

"You, Tom! a little boy like you! Do you know what it means to be surety, Tom?"

"Yes, sir, if you please; it means that when he is a bad boy again I'm to be punished for him."

"And are you willing to be punished for that big boy?"

"Yes, sir, if he's bad again."

"Then come in," said the Superintendent, looking to the door; and the big boy, with downcast face, walked across the room. He was thinking as he walked, "I know I'm a bad boy, but I'm not so bad as that. I'll never let that little fellow be punished for me—never!" I think God had put that thought into the big boy's mind. He was graciously helping Tom's work as the surety.

As the children were leaving the school the Superintendent saw this big boy and little Tom walking and talking together. He said to himself, "I am afraid that boy will do Tom harm. I must go and look after them."

When he reached the cottage where Tom lived, he said to the mother, "Where is your son Tom?"

"O, he is just gone up stairs with a great boy that he brought with him. I don't know what they are doing."

"May I go up?"

"O yes, sir."

The Superintendent went slowly and gently up the stairs, and as he reached the top he could see through the door that Tom and the big boy were kneeling together. He soon heard Tom's voice saying, "O Lord, make this boy that has been the worst boy in the school, O Lord, make him the best boy."

The Superintendent kneeled by Tom's side, and they all prayed together.

God heard them. The big bad boy became one of the best boys in the school. God raised up friends for "Ragged Tom," who put him to school, and after that sent him to a missionary college. He is now a missionary, and is preaching to the Africans about Jesus, who became the surety for sinners.—Church Union.

Asking God's Blessing.

Charlie was going home with his uncle. They were on the steamboat all night. A steamboat is furnished with little beds on each side of the cabin. These little beds are called berths. When it was time to go to bed Charlie undressed himself.

"Make haste and jump into your berth, boy," cried his uncle.

"Mayn't I first kneel down and ask God to take care of us?" Asked Charlie.

"We shall be taken care of fast enough," said his uncle.

"Yes, sir," said Charlie; "but mother always tell us not to take anything without first asking."

Uncle Tom had nothing to say to that, and Charlie knelt down, just as he did by his own little bed at home. God's bounty and goodness and grace you live on day by day, my children; but never take it without first asking.—Child's Paper.

If you please, Make Me a Christian.

I well recollect, in the course of my labors, a poor Hindoo youth, who followed me about the garden at the school, asking me to make him a Christian. I said, "It is impossible, my boy. If it is possible at all it is possible only through the Lord Jesus Christ to make you a Christian. Pray to him." How well I recollect the sweet voice of that boy when he soon after came to me, and said, "The Lord Jesus Christ has taken his place in my heart." I asked, "How is that?" He replied, "I prayed, and said, O Lord Jesus Christ, if you please, make me a Christian! and he was so kind that he came down from heaven, and has lived in my heart ever since." How simple and how touching! "Lord Jesus Christ, if you please, make me a Christian!" Can you say that you have made a similar appeal in your spirit as this poor Hindoo boy? And can you say, my young friends, that Jesus Christ has come down from heaven to live in your hearts?—Rev. Dr. Boaz.

The Appropriate Thing.

Let me say, if not the best thing, the one most appropriate; i. e., We live in a blessed time: a time blessed all over; and faith can realize it, but unbelief will keep saying, "All things continue as they were from the beginning;" and it "cannot see when good cometh." This time is more than a charmed one. Our Lord says, in this time, we must "Look up—lift up your heads." Malachi says, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name: and they shall be mine . . . and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Mal. iii., 16, 17. Spare their lives, and keep them in a good way until the day of glory and immortality. And the time for the following is due. "And it shall come to pass, that before they call I will answer; and while they are yet speaking I will hear." Isa. lxv., 27. The following text also, "The wise shall understand." Understand what? Anything that comes up. "Knowledge shall be increased." "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to" this time. Blessed how much? How much do you think? The least bit? Is that your mind? Who has made the promise? A very great King and a rich Father. Think He would be-little himself by giving small things, mere shadows of great and precious promises, to help you drag on a weary life? No: a fulness is what will flow out from His heart; Scripture measure, "pressed down, shaken together and running over." "Open your mouth wide; do not dribble out your askings. Tell your wants full and broad. Ask for much, all you need; perfect soundness, translation, immortality, the kingdom of God.

The litigating plaintiff puts in far more damage than he expects to get. Christians, in our degenerate times, ask for almost nothing; so little, that they appear mean and servile in court and make the Prince appear illiberal. King Ahasuerus said to his Queen, "What is thy petition? . . . it shall be given thee to half the kingdom:" so said the wicked Herod to the famous dancer. She chose revenge rather than the half of the kingdom. This bad choice, even, is suggestive. "We, who groan in this tabernacle," might "lump" our wants; put them in one big request; for we are not beheaded, though like John "shut up and cannot go forth;" are waiting our turn for execution. Let the church ask the Great King for vengeance—ask him to turn the tables on the adversary who has had his way in the world for a long time. He has laid low our friends and dearest loved ones, and is still abroad making desolations every where.

In France, in the time of the reign of terror, arrests and executions were in full tide up to the day of the execution of Robespierre; then, in an instant, the blood ceased to flow, and joy entered every cell and broke every chain; gratitude and gratulations ruled the hour. They were saved; then a respite was granted them. They have all died since.

Our Lord said (and that word is speaking now), "Ask that your joy may be full." Surely that will not be until it can be said, "There shall be no more death."

B. Matthias.

Papal Rome.

"The Ecumenical Council—The Catholic Faith Unchangeable."

To the Editor of the Herald:

Last Sunday's Herald contained an article, headed as above, in which a layman belonging to the Roman Catholic Church thinks it "strange that the intelligent editor should forget to ignore that the Roman Catholic Church cannot change its fixed faith to suit the ever-varying ideas of the world." Now, whether to suit the ever-varying ideas of the world, or for some other purpose, certain it is that the Romish Church has changed its fixed faith, and how an intelligent layman should think otherwise is a fact stranger still. It is almost superfluous for the writer, who is only an humble layman of the Protestant Church, to seek to remove any wrong impression which the article above referred to would be likely to make upon the intelligent reader. But fearful that the writer might feel confirmed in his assertions, though honest in his intentions, and from the fact that he has cast reflections on all non-Catholic creeds and charges their professors with ignorance and prejudice, it may be well to correct him in a few important points. The latter charge—viz., of ignorance and prejudice—comes with a bad grace from a Roman Catholic. It is a well-known fact that the great mass of Romanists are strictly forbidden by their priests to read the works of Protestant theologians, while, on the other hand, Protestants are enjoined to read the writings of Roman Catholics. I would ask, then, Mr. Editor, who has the best opportunity of judging fairly—Romanists or Protestants? And now I would ask the writer of the article to attend to the examination of the following table, which exhibits the dates when the principal Popish errors were made articles of faith by the sanction of a general council:

| | Year. |
| Invocation of saints | 760 |
| Image worship | 787 |
| Infallibility | 1076 |
| Transubstantiation | 1215 |
| Supremacy | 1215 |
| Half communion | 1415 |
| Purgatory | 1468 |
| Seven Sacraments | 1547 |
| Sacrifice of the mass | 1563 |
| Apocryphal books | 1547 |
| Priestly inention | 1547 |
| Indulgence introduced in fifteenth century, but not sanctioned by a council till | 1563 |

Popery is, therefore, a new system; it is a piece of patchwork. One patch was added by one Pope or one council, and another by another. The work was finished at Trent in 1564, when a few additional patches were added. It bears something of the semblance of Christianity, just as the counterfeit coin resembles that which is genuine. There is not a single doctrine, with the exception of the Trinity, in which Romanists do not differ from the ancient Catholic Church. How, then, can it be said that Popery is the religion of Jesus Christ, when its principles are not to be found in any of our Lord's discourses or in the writings of his apostles?

Note by Editor of Herald of Life.—If the "Romanists differ from the ancient Catholic Church" in every "single doctrine, with the exception of the Trinity," then inherent immortality, or the immortality of the soul was not a doctrine of "the ancient Church," for Romanists agree with Protestants on that point. We hope that Protestants will no longer reproach us because we come out against this Popish corruption of God's word. The doctrine stands in no higher authority than that of a Pope who decreed "the soul is immortal."

Faith Illustrated by Electricity.

Unbelief intercepts the communication between us and the Redeemer; faith establishes it. Faith may seem a slight thing to some; and they may wonder how salvation can flow from believing. Hence they try to magnify it, to adorn it, to add to it, in order that it may appear some great thing; something worthy of having salvation as its reward. In so doing they are actually transforming faith into a work, and introducing salvation by works under the name of faith. It saves simply by handing us over to the Saviour. It saves, not on account of the good works that may flow from it; not on account of the love which kindles it; not on account of the repentance which it produces: but solely because it connects us with the saving One. Its saving efficacy does not lie in its connection with righteousness and holiness, but entirely on its connection with the Righteous and holy One. Thus it is that unbelief ruins, because it cuts off all communication with the Source of life; and thus faith blesses, because it establishes that communication.

See these electric wires that are shooting their mysterious threads throughout our land, communicating between city and city; between man and man, however distant, dead, yet instinct with life; silent, yet vocal with hidden sound; carrying as with a lightning burst the tidings of good or evil from shore to shore. Separate their terminating points by one hair's breadth from the index, or interpose some non-conducting substance, in a moment intercourse is broken. No tidings come and go. The stoppage is as entire if you had cut every wire in pieces, and cast their pieces to the winds. But refasten the several points, or link them to the index with some conducting material, and instantaneously the intercourse is renewed. Joy and sorrow flow again along the line. Men's thoughts, men's feelings, men's deed's, rumors of war or assurance of peace, news of victory or defeat, the sound of falling thrones, the shouts of frantic nations—all hurrying on after each other, to convey to ten thousand throbbing hearts the evil or the good which they contain.

That non-conductor is unbelief. It interposes between us and all heavenly blessings, all divine intercourse. It may seem a thing too slight to effect so great a result; yet it does so inevitably. It shuts off the communication with the source of all glad tidings. It isolates the man, and forbids the approach of blessing.

That conductor is faith. In itself it is nothing; but in its connection everything. It restores in a moment the broken communication: and this not from any virtue in itself, but simply as the conducting link between the man and the fountain of all blessing above.

The blood of the cross is that which has made peace; and to share this peace God freely calls us. This blood of the cross is that by which we are justified; and to this justification we are invited. This blood of the cross is that by which we are brought nigh unto God; to this blessed nearness we are invited. This blood is that by which we have forgiveness of sins according to the riches of His grace in Christ Jesus; and this redemption, the forgiveness, is freely set before us. It is by this blood that we have liberty to enter in to the holiest; and God's voice to each sinner is, "Enter." It is by this blood that we are cleansed and washed: and this fountain is free; free as any of earth's flowing streams, free as the mighty ocean itself in which all may wash and be clean. This is good news concerning the blood—news which should make every sinner feel that it is just what he stands in need of; nothing less than this, yet nothing more.—Selected from the Writings of Horatius Bonar, by J. C. Day, Ashburnham, Mass.

The Vaticinations of the Vatican.

The Ecumenical Council is a serious fact. With the few Protestant sneers which have saluted it in advance we have no sympathy. A representative body summoned from the entire Roman Catholic Church throughout the world is a spectacle not to be mocked at, but pondered. Fifty cardinals and eight hundred bishops form a congress of great specific gravity. No matter how much these prelates are given to mummeries or their Church to superstitions, all religions have an equal right to exist, and Rome is entitled to fair play among the other ecclesiastical powers of the earth. Any serious human soul that prefers to stake its salvation on the Catholic rather than the Protestant faith shall have from us, not a rebuff or reviling, but amen and God-speed. Whoever wishes to indulge in so harmless a homage as kissing the Pope's toe ought to have the general permission of Christendom to perform the act unwhipped by any other scourge of criticism than the gentle satire which the absurdity of the ceremony suggests. Accordingly, we look forward in no cynical mood to the majestic unimportance of a great body which (if report be true) does not know why it is assembled, or even whether it is to be assembled at all.

Eighteen Ecumenical Councils have been held since the opening of the Christian era—an average of one to each century. Their records form picturesque chapters of Church history. Each gathering has been marked by a great array of cardinals, archbishops, bishops, mitred abbots, kings, princes, ambassadors and legates. And yet, looking retrospectively at the successive deliverances of these great parliaments of the Church, one is reminded anew of the laboring mountain that brought forth a mouse. The first Ecumenical Council—that over which Constantine presided at Nicæa A. D. 325—is still remembered because it promulgated the Nicene Creed. The Council of Trent, which was called in the last days of Luther's life and which with various adjournments and reassemblings, covered a period of eighteen years, is memorable for the vigorous but ineffectual attempts to stifle the growing cause of Protestantism. With these two exceptions, the Ecumenical Councils seem to a student to have been devoted mainly to learned trifles—theological niceties—matters of doubtful disputation—mint, anise and cumin. What beetter is to be expected of the nineteenth?

Bishop Dupanloup—one of the most able, sensible and liberal of the Romish prelates of France—fears that the approaching council will be guilty of decreeing the infallibility of the Pope. The good bishop knows well enough that such a decree, put forth in the light of the nineteenth century, would turn the laugh of all the world against a Church which can better bear persecution than ridicule. After such a faux pas the enemy's guns would pour against St. Peter's a bombarding broadside of raillery, mockery and scorn. The maxim that "the king can do no wrong" was put to death on the scaffold by Oliver Cromwell, when he cut off the head of a king who had done nothing but wrong. An Ecumenical council that makes the Church assert a doctrine which two centuries ago was exploded by the State—a doctrine which can take no abiding root in an enlightened age or among reasonable men—cannot claim to represent the nineteenth, but only the seventeenth century. A Church that declares a mortal man to be infallible thereby opens a Don Quixote warfare against human nature; and we may expect the windmills of God to grind it exceeding small.

One smiles at reading in a leading Romish organ these moonstruck words: "Either human society must perish outright, or it will be saved by this council." What stuff. Human society will never, from any cause, perish outright. Human society will never, in any contingency, be saved by an Ecumenical Council. Human society will, in all probability, be as little affected by the nineteenth as it was by the least important of the previous eighteen Ecumenical Councils.

It is undeniable that great good could be done in Rome in mid-August if only the potentates who expect then and there to assemble would set their faces forward, instead of backward. Progress, not stagnation, is the watchword of this day and generation. All Churches and all States must either give heed to it, or else die the death. If the Ecumenical Council, recognizing the signs of the times, would solemnly declare itself in favor of free thought and speech, instead of the Index Expurgatorius; in favor of popular education, instead of an enforced ignorance of the masses; in favor of the right of private judgment, instead of the ex cathedra dictum of a supposed infallible pontiff; in favor of religious toleration and liberality, instead of the unchristian exclusiveness of the Romish (and of most other) Churches; in favor of marriage and the family, instead of the crime-fostering celibacy of the clergy—if the Ecumenical Council should, like St. Paul, behold at noon a great light, above the brightness of the sun, and should straightway honestly attempt to enlighten a Church whose chief boast is that it keeps half the world in darkness, the forthcoming festival would send a pulse of benefit through all the human race.

There is a party of progress in the Romish communion. Now is its day—now its hour. Let its voice be heard a fortnight hence, unless, indeed, the great convocation is to be indefinitely postponed. A ray of the Morning Star has always slanted down the naves and aisles of the Church of Rome. That temple has never been, and is not now, and never can be a total gloom, and yet it is a very "dim religious light." For the last twenty years Pio Nono—the soul of conservatism—has been alarmed by nothing in the outer world so much as by certain signs of progress within his diocese. Neither he nor his misadvising cardinals can quell the spirit of liberty which begins to stir that great ecclesiastical body. The Council has an illustrious opportunity to put itself in harmony with the present age. Since it is to speak with great authority we hope it will speak with great wisdom. But, whatever be its ecclesiastical power, its true influence will consist only in its "words of truth and soberness." Cotton Mather spoke profoundly when he said, "The decree of a council hath no more force than there is force in the reason of it." Let the Ecumenical doctors who are to speak in the Vatican and to be heard round the world take heed lest they utter such nonsense as to turn the Papacy into a laughing stock for the human race. It must be a very poor Protestant who would like to see a Roman Catholic council play the fool.—The Independent.

A Severe Test.

Towards the close of the revolutionary war, an officer in the army had occasion to transact some business with General Washington, and repaired to Philadelphia for that purpose. Before leaving, he received an invitation to dine with the General, which was accepted, and upon entering the room he found himself in the company of a large number of ladies and gentlemen. As they were mostly strangers to him, and he was of a naturally modest and unassuming disposition, he took a seat near the foot of the table, and refrained from taking an active part in the conversation. Just before the dinner was concluded, General Washington called him by name and requested him to drink a glass of wine with him.

"You will have the goodness to excuse me, General," was the reply, "as I have made it a rule not to drink wine."

All eyes were instantly turned upon the young officer, and a murmur of surprise and horror ran around the room. That a person should be so unsocial and so mean as to never drink wine, was really too bad; but that he should abstain from it on an occasion like that, and even when offered to him by Washington himself, was perfectly intolerable! Washington saw at once the feelings of his guests, and promptly addressed them:—"Gentlemen," said he, "Mr. —— is right. I do not wish any of my guests to partake of anything against their inclinations, and I certainly do not wish them to violate any established principle in their social intercourse with me. I honor Mr. —— for his frankness, for his consistency in thus adhering to an established rule which can never do him harm, and for the adoption of which, I have no doubt he has good and sufficient reasons."—Selected by L. C. T.

Willard Parker, M. D., has contributed a valuable article to the Observer on Poison and its Effects, in which he of course includes tobacco. That it acts as a poison he proves by its effects. They are: 1. Pallor. 2. Tremulousness of the hands. 3. Palpitation of the heart. 4. Disturbance of the stomach—dyspepsia. 5. Phosphatic urine, indicating waste of nerve power. Tobacco users can make comparisons at their leisure. He mentions that a French physician, Dr. De Cuisne, investigated the cases of 38 boys from 9 to 15 years of age, who had the habit of smoking. He found distinct symptoms in 27; 22 had various disorders of circulation, palpitation, disturbed digestion, slowness of intellect, and a taste for strong drink; 3 had intermitting pulse; 8 loss of red corpuscles in the blood; 12 had nose bleed; 10 disturbed sleep: 4 ulcerations of the mucous membrane of the mouth. They were treated for exhaustion, but while the habit continued, medicine did no good.

It is said that Dr. Chalmers once entertained at his table a distinguished guest from Switzerland, whom he asked if he would be helped to "kippered salmon." The foreign divine asked the meaning of the uncouth word "kippered," and was told that it meant preserved. The poor man in a public prayer soon after offered a petition that the distinguished divine might long be "kippered to the Free Church of Scotland."

O how blessed is the thought that I am going to live with God where sorrow never comes; where heaven's own sun always shines with benignant beams, and where love, pure and perfect, flows on in one everlasting stream!

The poor pittance of seventy years is not worth being a villain for. What matters it if your neighbor lies in a splendid tomb? Sleep you in innocence.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

ALL NAMES of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY AND STATE must be given, and written plainly, and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

ONE BAPTISM.

THE marvel of the divine work of the Spirit is that He produces the same unmistakable results upon all ages, all conditions in life, all temperaments, without destroying the individual character, or in any degree disturbing the natural laws under which we live. When the Holy Spirit renews the heart of a man or woman or child, of one well educated or unlearned, of any nation, of any disposition, impulsive or prudent, the result will be, the production of Christian "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness," and "temperance." This blessing does not unsex a person, but renders a man more manly and a woman more gentle. It does not make a child precociously mature, or an unlearned man wise in every respect; it does not make an Englishman of a German, nor a calm man of one of a sanguine temperament; yet when the Holy Spirit moves over the disturbed surface of the soul, and pours light over its darkness, and brings order out of chaos, there is no mistaking the fact; and there is also a marvellous harmony in the result. In every instance, while the child remains a child, and the individual character preserves its marked peculiarities, we are forced to take knowledge of the person that he has been with Jesus, and that his whole nature has been harmonized by this contact.

The whole work of grace, from the first gift of peace, following trust in our Lord Jesus Christ, until we "come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," is characterized by the same divine harmony exhibited in infinite varieties of expression and disposition. Wisdom is always "justified of her children." Wherever the Holy Spirit is permitted to prosecute his renewing work, enthroning and purifying conscience, subordinating appetite and passion, and suffusing the whole soul with heavenly light and love, although still leaving the man as God made him with his distinguishing traits of character, this work not only reveals itself to the consciousness of the individual himself, but certain unchangeable outward "signs" follow, and disclose to others, to the glory of the divine Worker, the extent and power of the change that has been wrought. Peter was always Peter until he crowned an apostolic life with martyrdom; but how signally was his impetuous zeal sanctified, and made to become a minister of grace to others, when he was "filled with the Holy Ghost!" His infirmities of disposition were sometimes so apparent as to occasion the serious rebuke of a fellow-apostle; yet Paul did not doubt the consecration of Peter, nor Peter suffer any abatement of love for his "beloved brother Paul," although there were some things which Paul had written, according to the wisdom given unto him, hard for Peter to understand. But although he might not be able fully to comprehend all the processes of Divine discipline and sanctification as set forth in Paul's epistles, still it did not prevent his growing in grace, and seeking to be "found of [Christ] in peace, without spot, and blameless."

The only process of sanctification is to yield the heart fully and obediently to the work of the Spirit. There is no patent or peculiar measure to hasten or effect this supreme mission of life. In the use of appropriate means, especially in the close and devout study of the Holy Scriptures, which contain the very directions and counsels of the Holy Ghost, in earnest and persistent prayer and in fasting, and in inseparable trust upon the complete sacrifice and righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, the full establishment of the Master's kingdom over the subdued but exulting affections of the heart is to be sought. The Spirit, who knoweth what is in man, and understandeth all the individual traits of character and personal weaknesses, leads a man often "by a way that he knew not," and appoints to him just the discipline and nurture that he requires. If with a teachable spirit a man yields himself to the Scriptures of truth, embracing "the exceeding great and precious promises," and "follows on to know the Lord," not resisting the Holy Ghost, nor grieving him by disobedience, he will guide the heart into all truth. He understands how to carry on and complete the work until the soul becomes "meet to be partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light." In some proper sense it may be said that every soul is sanctified by a different process, but all by one Spirit, and all, with individual varieties of character, under the power of the Holy Ghost, will exhibit the same ripe fruits of gentleness, love, spiritual life, and consecrated service.

It may not be unprofitable to avail ourselves of the experience of others while thus seeking to welcome and to work with the Holy Spirit: but we should never forget that it is an individual work, and that, by a process varied by our peculiar mental condition, the Divine Guest brings us into entire harmony with himself. Everything besides is secondary—the measures, the agencies, the emotions—while the primary thing is, to submit the soul unto God; to receive the hallowed Presence into the temple voluntarily consecrated to his service, and cleansed by his own divine grace; and to be inspired with the constraining love of Christ, which makes all labor and even suffering for him a delight, and enthrones Christ himself in the heart as the supreme passion of the soul. Whatever may be the protestations, or exultant shouts, or overjoyous emotions, if Christ has not become the true life of the soul—if the spirit is not ruled by him into gentleness, unworldliness, purity, and truthfulness, and is not inspired by him with unselfish benevolence, and with self-sacrificing charity and service for the good of others—such persons have not had Christ "formed within them;" their souls and bodies have not been yielded to him as a living sacrifice, nor have they been "strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man, that Christ should dwell in their hearts by faith; that, being rooted and grounded in love, they should be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length, and depth and height, and know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that they might be filled with all the fulness of God."

The great unanswerable testimony that one can give of the power of Christ fully to redeem the soul is a holy life. It can neither be hushed nor questioned. It speaks above all the noise and confusion of the present hour with eloquent and convincing tones, and says, "I have found him of whom Moses and the prophets did write:" while the jargon of an irregular life and temper drowns the most persistent declarations of a sanctified experience, and awakens distrust in simply verbal professions of godliness.

This holy heart and life, born of the Divine Spirit—a joyful, living, productive experience—is the inheritance purchased for all, by the interposition of the Son of God. It is not the birthright of the elders, the elect few, the princes and nobles of the Church; for we are all brethren, and all one in Christ Jesus. To this grace, from the first act of faith, every young Christian is to be pressed forward. The maturer and more experienced must not draw away by themselves to pray for a richer baptism than that which may fall upon others. There is but one baptism, and every member of the Church needs it. Every meeting should be a means for growth in holiness. There is but one highway to Mount Sion, and that is the highway of holiness. The babe in Christ presses its threshold the moment he trusts. If any lag on the way, those that "are spiritual" should restore such "in the spirit of meekness" and, angel like, bear them up upon their wings lest they dash their feet against a stone of stumbling. Above all we should never withdraw from Christ's body however low its spiritual state. He knoweth that we are but dust, and often find it difficult to "watch with him one hour;" but still he is our "Advocate with the Father" and ever liveth to intercede for us. There should be no service in the Church that does not conduce to holiness: and there should be no better or higher holiness to pray for on one occasion than another. Whenever saints meet together their hearts' desire and prayer to God should be that all Israel may be saved.—Ch. Advocate.

THE TREE OF LIFE.

"WE have no direct information as to the immediate cause of the great longevity of the earliest generations of men. But it seems likely it may have been produced by the influence of 'the Tree of Life;' a vestige of an earlier tradition respecting which appears in Homer, representing his gods as supporting perpetual life and vigor by drinking nectar, and eating Ambrosia (that is, immortality).

"That the produce of this tree (whether its fruits or its leaves), was endued by the Creator with some property of warding off death, we are plainly taught, both by its name and by the exclusion of Adam from the Garden of Eden, 'lest he should eat of the tree of life, and live forever.'

"It is likely that it had the medicinal virtue, when applied from time to time, of preventing, or curing, the decay of old age; just as our ordinary food preserves men from dying of exhaustion or famine; and as several well-known medicines prevent, or cure, certain diseases. We know, indeed, that there does not exist now any medicine that has the virtue of keeping up, or renewing, youthful health or vigor. But such a medicine would not be, in itself, at all more strange than many things which we are familiar with, but whose effects we cannot explain, and could never have conjectured.

"For example, that opium and some other drugs should produce sleep, and strong liquors, a kind of temporary madness, is what no one would ever have thought of, if he had never heard of it, nor seen the experiment tried of swallowing those substances. Nor, even if he were a skilful chemist, would he be able, by analyzing them, to conjecture what their effects would be. If, then, the Tree of Life were such a medicine as we have supposed, a person who always continued the use of it, from time to time, would continue exempt from decay and death.

"But supposing some persons, who had been in the habit of using it (as our first parents doubtless had, since there was nothing to prevent them), should afterward cease to use it, their constitution would, probably, have been so far fortified, that though they would at length die, yet they would live much longer than man's natural term. And they would even be likely to transmit to their descendants such a constitution as would confer on those, also, a great degree of longevity, which would only wear out gradually, in many successive generations.

"Now, it is remarkable, that this exactly agrees with what we do find recorded. If we look into those parts of the Bible history which relate to this subject, we shall find man's life, in the earliest generations, extending to eight or nine centuries, and upward. And we shall find longevity gradually diminishing in each generation, down to the times of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, who lived rather less than two hundred years; and again, down to the time of Moses, who began his mission apparently in the full vigor of life at four-score, and lived to one hundred and twenty. Joshua, who succeeded him, lived one hundred and ten years. And from thence forward, human life appears to have been brought down to about its present limit.

"The above seems to be the most clear, easy and natural interpretation of those parts of Scripture we have been examining. There is not, however, any such distinct revelation on the subject as to authorize our pronouncing confidently that such must be the right interpretation, and making this an article of faith."—Selected by F. ### THE VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT.

"Let the heathen be awakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the nations round about."—Joel iii., 13.

AT Siloam we are in the renowned Valley of Jehoshaphat, meaning, "Jehovah judgeth." The origin of this name is found in a passage of the prophet Joel, in which he speaks of the "Valley of Jehoshaphat," where God will judge the oppressors of his people. It is singular that this valley, in three of the great religious systems of the world, should be designated as the scene of the last great judgment. The Jew here looks for the appearance of Messiah and destruction upon his enemies. On yonder terrace wall of Mount Moriah, that overhangs this valley, the Mohammedan will tell you his Prophet will sit to judge the world; while from yonder summit of Olivet the Saviour ascended to heaven, and many believe that on this spot He will descend, and that before him the nations will be gathered. Well is this wild ravine called the "Valley of Decision." Jews, Mohammedans and Christians all agree in the propriety of the present name. Jerusalem, what a place thou hast in the religious faith and affections of the world!

The head of the valley is on the north side of Jerusalem, and at first very shallow. As you descend the valley to the southward, and come opposite to St. Stephen's Gate, the depth is about one hundred feet, and the breadth about four hundred. Here, a little to the northward as you cross the valley, nestling under the shadows of the deep declivities of Olivet, is one of the sacred spots embalmed in the memory of every Christian, and to which we are yet to pay a formal visit—Gethsemane. As you continue down the valley, along the Temple area, it rapidly deepens and the hills rise in steep precipices on both sides. Passing the Fountain of Siloam, the valley again widens, the pleasant gardens and cultivated terraces make their appearance; and near by, in strange contrast, "Tophet and black Gehenna."

The length of the valley, from its head to En Rogal, or its junction with Hinnom, is two and three-fourths miles. It then cuts its way through the wild, hilly country of the wilderness of Judea, past the convent of St. Saba, where it is called the "Monk's Valley;" below the convent it takes the name of the "Valley of Fire," until it terminates at the Dead Sea, fourteen miles from Jerusalem. Such is the valley that now has an undying name in the records of our holy religion. "A valley," says one, "which has witnessed on its banks the greatest scene in the evangelical drama—the tears, the agonies and the death of the Saviour! A valley through which the prophets have passed, in their turn, uttering a cry of woe and terror which seems still to echo! And we may say, a valley from the banks of which the Saviour ascended to be again with his Father; and a valley which, in the estimation of many, is destined to hear the stupendous noise of the torrent of men rolling before God, and coming to their fatal judgment."

Jehoshaphat, like Hinnom, is a great sepulchral valley. Just under the east wall of the city, the Mohammedans have a cemetery, and a large extent of ground is thickly covered with their singular-looking tombs. Here, under the shadow of the great Mosque of Omar, the Mussulman covets a tomb. On the opposite side of the valley is the great silent city of the Jewish dead. Here, since the days of David and Solomon, generation after generation have been gathered unto their fathers. For thousands of years bones have been piled upon bones, and the dust of the children has been mingled with the ashes of their forefathers. The whole of the east bank, all along up the side of Olivet, is covered with the tombs of the countless descendants of Abraham. It is still said to be one of the greatest priveleges craved by the dying Jew, to have his bones laid in the sepulchral home of his fathers in the Valley of Jehoshaphat. Here they expect their coming Messiah to stand in the resurrection. Those buried in this valley, they say, will rise at once from their tombs; while those who have been buried in other lands will have a long and weary underground pilgrimage to make to reach this place.

The good and the brave, the mitred priest and the sceptred king, may here have sought a secure and quiet resting-place; but their secret chambers have been laid open, their costly sarcophagi dashed in pieces, and their dust scattered to the winds of Heaven. There is no secure hiding-place but in Him who says, "I am the resurrection and the life."—Selected.

ON THE NEW TESTAMENT.

"THE credibility of the New Testament Scriptures is established not alone by external evidence, but by internal marks of truth—by those peculiarities which distinguish the Christian revelation, alike from natural religion and all pretended revelations. Some few of these internal evidences, derived from the characteristics of the Scriptures themselves, may be thus summed up:

"I. Not one of the books of the New Testament is ascribed to Jesus himself; had there been any forgery, the forged books, or at least the principal of them, would naturally have been put forth as written by the very founder of the new religion, laying down the principles and precepts of that religion, and answering to the books of the law written by Moses.

"II. The omission of the title of Christians, as applied by the earliest Christians to themselves, proving the antiquity of the books. The term, which was manifestly of Roman origin, occurs but three times in the New Testament; and in each case, manifestly, as employed by those who were not Christians. This fact, (however it may be accounted for, or whether we can account for it at all or not), is one that would alone be a sufficient disapproval of the notion of some daring speculators, that the New Testament writings were composed in the second, third, or fourth century, from some vague floating traditions, and then, fathered upon the apostles and evangelists by fraud, carelessness, and ignorance. Had this been the case, the title of 'Christians,' which was then in as common use as it is now, would undoubtedly have been found in the books of the New Testament, in its present application by Christians to each other. This omission then alone, furnishes, even to a plain unlearned reader, a complete proof of their antiquity. And the anxiety of of infidels to disprove that antiquity, shows plainly how they despair of contending in any other way against their truth. Such books could never possibly, if false, have been circulated without detection, at the very time when the wonderful events related in them are described as occurring.

"III. The character of Jesus himself, as drawn by the Evangelists. It is quite unlike all that had ever before appeared, or been described or imagined; and the picture is evidently an unstudied one. There is nothing in it of the nature of eulogium and panegyric.

"IV. The brief, calm, unadorned style, in which the miracles and sufferings of Jesus and his apostles are narrated; and the candid and frank simplicity with which the weakness and faults of the disciples are described.

"V. The clear revelation of a future state, and the promise of eternal life through the resurrection of the body.

"VI. The different nature of that kingdom of heaven, proclaimed by our Lord and his apostles, from that glorious worldly empire which the Jews expected; and the total absence of all attempt to accommodate the doctrines to the prejudices, or to flatter the pride of the Jews, by holding out hopes of national or spiritual supremacy.

"VII. The absolute requisition of a morality stricter and superior in kind to any hitherto practised, or even approved; and by this opposition, not merely to men's natural inclinations, but also in some points to their ideas of what is praiseworthy, proving the utter incredibility of mere ordinary human beings contriving a religion which condemns not only men's conduct but their principles.

"VIII. The mode by which that morality is inculcated, so peculiar, 1st, in the motives supplied; 2d, in the examples proposed; 3d, in the precepts delivered.

"IX. The omission, not merely, but the exclusion, of any sacrifice save that offered up by the founder of the religion in his own person; of any sacrificing priest (Hiereus or Sacerdos) except Him, the great and true High Priest, and consequently the exclusion of any priest, in that sense, on earth; except so far as every one of the worshippers was required to present himself as a living sacrifice holy, acceptable unto God; and the exclusion of any temple except the collected congregation of the worshippers themselves. When it is remembered that the gospel religion was introduced by men among men, whether Jews or Pagans, that had never heard of, or conceived such a thing as a religion without priest, sacrifice, altar, or temple, is it credible that Christianity should have been without them, if it had been invented by men?

"X. The practical character of the revelation, and the careful avoidance of all that could serve to mere speculative knowledge or the gratification of curiosity, however natural or excusable, the ministering to which is a marked characteristic of all other religious systems.

"These characteristics, and many others that might be pointed out, would be very remarkable if met with in any one book; but it is still more so when it is considered that they run through all the books of the New Testament, which are no less than twenty-seven distinct compositions, of several different kinds, written apparently at considerable intervals of time from each other, and which have come down to us as the works of no less than eight different authors. Infidels may reasonably be called upon to explain how, if Christianity be the invention of man, the Christian Scriptures the production of uninspired men, it comes to pass that they differ so materially from all other religions invented by man, and all pretended revelations put forward by man. And when they ask, is it likely that Christianity came from God? they may be fairly met with the question, is it likely that Christianity came from man? And the latter is much the fairer and more rational kind of inquiry, because we are much better able to judge what might reasonably be expected from man, than to argue that it did not come from God because it seems to us not such in all respects as the Deity would be likely to deliver us." (ARCHBISHOP WHATELY.)

LOANING TO THE LORD.

"How is it, Betty," said an elder of the church to a very poor woman who was always observed to contribute something whenever a collection was taken; "how is it that I always see you drop something in the plate? Where do you get it?" "Oh, sir, I do not know," she replied; "the Lord knows my heart, and my good-will to his cause; and somehow or other, when a collection is to be made, I am sure to have my penny before me, and when it comes, I put it in the plate." "Well," said he, "you have been faithful in a little, take this sovereign, and do what you will with it." "A sovereign, sir," said she, "I never had so much money in my life as a sovereign; what shall I do with it?" "I dare say you will find means of spending it," said he, "if your heart is devoted to the Lord's cause." Soon after this, a man came round to solicit subscriptions for some benevolent object; he went to one of the elders, who gave him half a sovereign, and another gave him five shillings; both of which were regarded as very liberal donations. Not liking to pass by any member of the church, he asked this poor woman what she would do. "Put my name down for a sovereign." "A sovereign!" said he, "why, where did you get a sovereign?" "Oh, sir, I got it honestly; put my name down for a sovereign." She gave him the sovereign, and in about two weeks from that time she received a letter from a friend saying that one hundred pounds had been deposited with him for her.—Selected by L. C. T.

THE RICHNESS OF THE BIBLE.

REV. T. DEWITT TALMAGE, late of Philadelphia, now of Brooklyn, N. Y., is reported to have spoken as follows of the Bible:

It seems as if to the feet of the sacred writers the mountains had brought all their gems, and the sea all its pearls, and the gardens all their frankincense, and the spring all its blossoms, and the harvests all their wealth, and heaven all its glory, and eternity all its stupendous realities; and that since then, poets and orators and painters had been drinking from an exhausted fountain, and searching for diamonds amid realms utterly rifled and ransacked. Oh! this book is the hive of all sweetness: the armory of all well-tempered weapons; the tower containing the crown-jewels of the universe; the lamp that kindles all other lights; the home of all majesties and splendors; the stepping stone on which Heaven stoops to kiss the earth with its glories; the marriage-ring that unites the celestial and the terrestrial, while all the clustering white-robed multitudes of the sky, stand round to rejoice at the nuptials. This book is the wreath into which are twisted all garlands, the song into which hath struck all harmonies, the river of light, into which hath poured all the great tides of hallelujah, the firmament in which all suns, and moons, and stars, and constellations, and galaxies, and immensities, and universes, and eternities, wheel and blaze and triumph. Where is the young man with any music in his soul who is not stirred by Jacob's lament, or Nahum's dirge, or Habakkuk's dithyrambic, or Paul's march of the resurrection, or St. John's anthem of the ten thousand times ten thousand doxology of elders on their faces, answering to the trumpet blast of archangel with one foot on the sea and the other on the land swearing that time shall be no longer. In the latter part of the Psalms, we see David gathering together a great choir, standing in galleries above each other; beasts and men on the first gallery; above them hills, and mountains; above them fire, and hail, and tempest; above them sun, and moon, and stars of light; until, on the highest round, he arrays the host of angels. And then standing before this vast multitude, reaching from the depths of earth to the heights of heaven, like the leader of a great orchestra he lifts his hands crying, "Praise ye the Lord, let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." And all earthly creatures in their song, and mountains with their waving cedars, and tempests in their thunder and rattling hail, and stars on all their trembling harps of light, and angels on their thrones, respond in magnificent acclaim, "Praise ye the Lord, let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

Behold in this book faultless rhythm, and bold imagery, and starting antithesis, and rapturous lyric, and sad elegy, and sweet pastoral, and instructive ballad, and devotional psalm; thoughts expressed in style more solemn than that of Montgomery, more bold than that of Milton, more dreadful than that of Dante, more natural than that of Wordsworth, more impassioned than that of Pollock, more tender than that of Cowper, more weird than that of Spenser.

Within the last few weeks I carried to my home one of the riches trophies. It was the family Bible that my father and mother used to read. Dear old book! I feel like kissing it every time I look upon it. It is very old; no gilt edges or ridged cover. It is worn and faded, but it is one of the handsomest books I ever owned. Just after the marriage hour, that book was laid on the stand, and they consecrated their alliance by a chapter from its pages. That book they read, and studied and caressed. I see it now lying on my mother's lap as she leaned over in her old age and studied the promises. Every morning of every day the sunlight gilded that page as father opened it. They read it when the children died, and there is where a tear fell at the story of the resurrection. That chapter of the Psalms is worn by oft perusal, and this verse which says, "Cast thy burden on the Lord, and He will sustain thee." Ah! this was the staff they leaned on for more than three-score years. This was the tree that oozed a balm for all their heart-aches. This was the light that shone when the world grew dark. Handle it gently, for every page of that book has a tender history. I will yet wrap it up in purple and damask. In my dying hour I want it close by where I can see it. I will charge my children to let everything else go, rather than that Bible. Dear old book! I leafed you when on my mother's knee I looked at the pictures, while she looked into the mysteries of salvation! May all joy fly my heart, and my sight go out into darkness, and my every cup of gladness turn into wormwood and gall, and to me life become a plague, and all sweet sounds jar into discord, and my head be pillowless, and my name accursed, if ever I forget to honor, venerate, and love my mother's Bible.

JOHN W. STOKES, Little River, Me., writes: I have been an Advent believer for some years, and have held the idea of the re-living of the wicked dead, and cannot fully give it up yet; but if their non-revival into life is a Bible doctrine, how glorious. Send me a set of the "Campaign Documents." I wish for all the light I can get. If "No life out of Christ" be the truth, it makes God look like a God of love, and not such a Being as theologians make Him. Praise the Lord for the truth. May it go far and near. I am longing and thirsting for Bible truth. May the good Lord send it this way, is my prayer.

THE Christian will look back, throughout eternity, with interest and delight, on the steps and means of conversion. My father told me this! my mother told me that! Such an event was sanctified to me! In such a place you visited my soul. These recollections will never grow dull and wearisome. —Cecil.

Rome as a Show.

Perhaps there has been no picture of Rome more sad, or more truthful, than this which is given by J. G. Holland, in the "Springfield Republican."

If I had found a prosperous, free, contented people associated with all these objects of interest—a people well educated, intelligent and enterprising—with a respectable present and a hopeful future—my stay in Rome would have been one of great delight; but I did not find such a people. In the midst of the grand memorials of a grand age, and with all the stimulus of a great history at its back; touched at every point by the influences which come from the finest creations of art; brought into contact every year with the refined and the learned of all Christendom; living at the very centre of those tremendous influences which have done so much to shape the destiny of the world—living indeed in what I heard Archbishop Manning call "the city of The Incarnation," with wealth enough in their churches to make all Italy rich, I found this people poor, discontented, ignorant, and hopeless. Rome is nothing but a show. Its antiquities are a show. The Pope and the various pageantries in which he takes a part are a show. The public museums do not assume to be anything but a show. The churches are a show, and are visited ten times as much in consequence of their character as show-places as they are for the purposes of worship. The private palaces and villas are a show. Almost the entire income of Rome is drawn from the pockets of those who come to Rome to see its shows. The Rome of to-day is indeed, nothing but a great museum of curiosities, papal and pagan, living and dead. The lovers of light and liberty are pining in her political prisons; her multitudinous beggars are licensed like porters, and go around the streets with brass tickets hung to their necks. The Jews are still confined mainly to their dirty quarters, by him who assumes to represent the love of God in the Jew Jesus. There is no such thing as liberty in Rome—civil or religious. The people groan under a despotism more intensely hated than those who are unacquainted with its spirit and operations can possibly conceive. There, where, if anywhere on the face of the earth, the Lord's vicegerent should be loved and revered, he is bitterly hated and despised—despised because he is not so liberal as he would like to be. When he dies—and he is an old man—look out for the deluge!

There are thousands of my countrymen and countrywomen who think that Rome is the most delightful place in the world—who would even like to live and die there. It is true that there is much there to amuse and interest all idlers; and Americans constitute by themselves an exceedingly pleasant society. But these people, pretending to be Protestant, patronize all the papal shows, and some of them are deeply impressed by them. The eyes of these people are necessarily shut to the fact that this rich and magnificent church establishment is maintained only at the expense of the people whom it sucks dry of comfort, competence and intelligence; that there have been brought into the churches of the city, and then expended in marbles, mosaics, pictures, gold and precious stones, millions of treasure which ought still to remain in the hands of the people, and that in the name of religion, these people are the subject of constant wrong. I did not enjoy Rome because the whole life of Rome was in direct contravention of every Christian principle that has a place in my convictions. Christianity was made for the people, and not the people for Christianity,—much less for a church. He who was rich and for our sakes became poor; He who came into the world to serve and not to be served; He who went about doing good, having not where to lay His head; He who declared that his kingdom was not of this world, would hardly feel at home with a bodyguard of Roman nobles, in gilded caskets and white tights, followed by a string of cardinals in scarlet petticoats. The genius of Christianity is to elevate the million through the service of the few, not to elevate the few through the slavery of the million. The kingdom of Christ is in the hearts of His people, not in the will of a pontiff.

Camp-Meeting in Maine.

There will be a camp-meeting in North Herman, Me., in James Emmerson's grove, east side of the Euenew road, to commence, Sept. 13, and hold over the Sabbath. We hope there will be one more general gathering of the brethren in Maine. Come with your tents, and bedding. Board and provisions can be obtained, for man or beast, on or near the ground at reasonable rates. Those coming from the west, by boat or railroad, should come to Bangor. The distance from Bangor to the camp-ground is five or six miles, and there will probably be conveyances. The preaching Brn., who may come by boat or railroad, should write Liberty Wetherbee, Bangor, who will see them forwarded to the camp-ground. This meeting is to be a free one, without regard to sect or party; there will be no dictating to brethren what they shall preach, or shall not preach; but it will be left with them and the Lord.

Now Brn. and Sisters, come in the Spirit and with the understanding, come to labor for God: come to greet one another again: and if we cannot all see "eye to eye" now, we will labor on till we all come into the unity of the Faith.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote there or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Life and Advent Mission Tent.

This tent will be pitched on the same spot occupied by it last year in Springfield, Mass., on the camp-ground near the north-east corner thereof. Br. E. Wolcott, of Keyport, N. J., who is the sole owner of this tent, will send a man with it in charge, and Br. W. H. Hanford, of this city, will accompany it to assist in its erection and care. It will be put up next Saturday, the 28th inst., and be continued on the ground till Sept. 6th. Br. Hanford and others will commence meetings in it next Sunday, and Br. W. S. Campbell is expected to be present on Monday, to lead in the meetings till Thursday morning, Sept. 2, when, at 9 o'clock our preliminary meeting of the "Life and Advent Union" will commence: and at 2 o'clock that day the regular business meeting will be held, when we hope to see the faces of many friends. Let us all go to this assembly in the spirit of love and good-will, praying our heavenly Father to shed on us his Holy Spirit through his beloved Son, our Life-Giver and Lord; and may heavenly grace and peace be upon us and abide with us to the close of this meeting, and continue with us evermore.

A Cheering Assurance.

It gives us great pleasure to lay before our readers the following note from Br. Weaver, one of the principal men in the church at Springfield. It lifts a burden off our heart to know that Christian kindness is to rule at the camp-meeting, and not a proscriptive spirit. We know all our brethren will feel as we do, that it is of the Lord, and is a token for good.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 23, 1869.

Dear Br. Storrs: I have been on the Camp-ground this afternoon, and Dr. Mathewson, one of the Camp-meeting committee, wished me to inform you, that the "Life Brethren" would have the same privileges at the meeting this year as they did last; and furthermore, the Committee had not taken any action to debar the rights of said Brethren, in the least.

He referred to the article in the "Crisis," by H. Munger, as unkind and improper. As far as I have been able to learn the rest of the Committee disapprove and very much regret that H. Munger should have taken such a course. I can assure you, the best of feeling prevails on the part of the Committee, and I think they will do all in their power for the comfort and happiness of all who may come, irrespective of their "doctrinal" views.

Your brother in hope of life when the Life-giver comes. T. R. Weaver.

To Subscribers.

Four numbers more will complete this volume. We trust none will desire to discontinue their subscriptions; yet there are some who have received the paper for more than three months without making a remittance; a few even longer than that. Others have received it on our offer, some four months since, to give them the remainder of the volume for fifty cents; each of these classes we would be glad to have renew at an early day; but if they do not, we shall be, unwillingly, obliged to deprive them of the paper. We send out no Bills. Our subscribers "freely give and freely receive:" and when we can give no longer, we are obliged to withhold. Please let us hear from you all as soon as possible, as we must revise our mail books immediately and do not wish to insert names in our new ones to be erased. Just take the matter in hand at once, and oblige.

A Question.

"As man dies, because of his animal nature, as the infant dies, how does he receive the wages of sin? or, how is he punished for his transgression?" J. T.

Dying is not the punishment to any child of Adam. The punishment of sinners "is death;" to be held in that state past recovery. Or, in other words, to "remain in the congregation of the dead" eternally; Prov. xxi, 16; that is "Eternal damnation;" the condemnation is never removed, and they are "holden with the cords of their sins," which are "the sting of death," or its killing power. It is thus they are "punished for their transgressions," and the punishment is eternal.

A Correction.—In our issue of Aug. 11, in the letter of N. S. Wilbur, Richmond, R. I., speaking of Eld. A. Durfee, it reads, "He does not sympathize at all with us," the words should have been added, "on the non-revival of the wicked dead." Without this addition injustice is done him, which was not intended.

England: Acknowledgments.

We have received from Mr. Andrew Jukes, England, his book on "The Second Death and the Restitution of all things," etc., together with a private note: for which he will accept our sincere thanks. We shall endeavor to read his work with candor, and express our views upon the matter of it in a frank manner, if we say anything. A crowd of other business, arising from closing up this volume of the Herald, attending the anniversary of the "Union," etc., will prevent an immediate notice of the book.

We have, at the same time, to acknowledge the receipt of a note from Dr. Frederic R. Lees, of Leeds, England, who is now in this country on a Temperance expedition. He was our first English Correspondent on the Life theme, which commenced in 1848, six years after the issue of our first edition of the "Six Sermons" on the Immortality question.

Some years later he became mainly occupied in the Temperance Reform, and we lost sight of him for many years, so far as the Life question was concerned; and at the same time all our English correspondents seemed to go into silence; and we have known but little, really, of what was going on there, and feared that silence had come over the Life friends in that quarter. But we felt it our duty to go forward with the work, which we believed God had called us to do in this country, without too anxiously inquiring, like Peter about his fellow disciple, "Lord, what shall this man do?" God had English minds in his own hands; and He seemed to say to us, "What is that to thee; follow thou me." By His grace we have endeavored to do so, "seeking not our own, but the things which are Jesus Christ's," the Life-giver. We have sought to put the crowning glory on His head, by showing that not only is a future life and immortality His to bestow, but that He will give such life only to those who have accepted Him as its author, according to the light afforded them under whatever dispensation they have been placed.

Dr. Lees has been in the United States several months; but unfortunately we have failed to have an interview with him, as he is flying in all directions. A few days since we received a note from him, mailed in Michigan, and dated Aug. 13, 1869, in which he says:

"I leave to-morrow for California, whence I expect to return in October. At Cincinnati, I received the "Examiner," [He doubtless intended to say the Herald of Life.—Ed.], and am obliged. You will be glad to hear that our views are far and deep spread in England now, amongst all sects. I know many Episcopal, Congregational, Wesleyan, and Baptist Ministers who have embraced them. Many years ago, I paid my contributions to this branch of truth, and left the seed to germinate, which it has done. The books on the subject are more than I can keep up with, and for some years I have ceased collecting them. I supposed you would see them through the usual religious channels or I would have advised you. My own professional duties have prevented my attending to the question lately. Yours, truly, "F. R. Lees."

We are glad of thus much information from our old friend, who is now, if we reckon right, 54 years old, as he was 33 when we received his first letter in 1848.

If this paper should reach his eye, we hope he will give us a call on his return from California in Oct., as we desire much to see him before his return to England.

Judging from what we now learn, we are inclined to think it is well that we were shut out from the knowledge of the controversy as it has progressed in England. We may be mistaken, but we fear it has there leaned strongly to restorationism, by retaining, in some form, the element of inherent immortality, or an immortality communicated in this life, instead of being wholly a gift of God at and by the resurrection "at the last day." But we wait for more light as to the real state of the controversy there, at the present time; and trust the way is now opening for us to understand how the subject stands in the English mind. We intend, by the favor of our Lord, to get light and truth wherever it is to be found, and to follow it when convinced it is truth.

The Resurrection: Romans viii.

Some one will say, "Does not Rom. viii., 11, make our resurrection to life in the future depend upon our possession of the Holy Spirit here?" I have yet to learn that Rom. viii, 11, refers at all to a future resurrection of the dead, or that we have any right so to apply it. Was Paul discussing the resurrection, or any question connected therewith? Was he attempting in any way to tell us who might, or who might not hope for a future life? By no means. The theme which he is treating, and treating with admirable skill and clearness, is the way of rescue from the power of sin, which is in our members. . . The subject therefore that Paul is treating in Rom. viii. is not at all who shall be raised from the dead, but how and by whom we may be rescued now from the dominion of sin.

We have clipped the forgoing items from an article in the "World's Crisis" of Aug. 11, wherein the writer labors hard to do away the idea that Paul had any design to teach therein the necessity of the indwelling Spisit in order to a resurrection of the dead. The writer doubtless felt the importance of taking this text from our hands to sustain his position of a "Mortal Quickening;" for that was his topic.

We give him full credit for honest intentions; but the method pursued to displace this text from its connection with "a future resurrection of the dead" would have been more in place in the hands of an orthodox mystic, than in the reasoning of one who believes in the personal advent of Christ and the literal resurrection of his saints.

Has our Br. "yet to learn that Rom. viii." does teach "a future resurrection of the dead," and that in most positive terms? Will he tell us if Paul does not make that "future resurrection of the dead" prominent when he says, "If so be that we suffer with Him that we may be also glorified together?" Is that not in "a future resurrection?"

Again Paul says, "Ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body:" verse 23. That looks as if Paul "refers to a future resurrection;" and he had told us distinctly, at verse 11, how "the redemption of our body" should be accomplished, viz., "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Thus it is evident that Paul "was attempting to tell us who might" and "who might not hope for a future life," and "who shall be raised from the dead;" and that in order to a "quickening" into life, when the "groaning" of "creation" should cease, men must now cease to "live after the flesh;" for if they continued so to live, they "shall die," and die without hope of a future life; while those who "have the first-fruits of the Spirit" were now "waiting for the adoption, to with, the redemption of our body:" not a mere "rescue now from the power of sin;" though that is essential for "the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead," to "dwell in them," as the pledge of "the redemption of our body."

Our friend in the "Crisis" committed an act of mutilation, amounting to a homicide, if not actual murder, on Paul and his words in Rom. viii. The points we have presented in that chapter, were not so much as noticed by him; and they show that the attempt to do away the force of verse 11, in proof of the resurrection from the dead being dependent on the "indwelling" of the Spirit of God, is a total failure. One would have thought the writer himself could not fail to see that Paul's eye was, throughout the chapter, on the "adoption"—"the redemption of our body:" which he clearly states to be a matter of "hope," and not a present possession; thus: "For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Verses 24, 25.

Thus we see how greatly our friend of the "Crisis" errs in the statement that Paul was not "discussing the resurrection, or any question connected therewith."

The truth is, Rom. viii., is to the church at Rome of the same import as 1 Corth., xv. is to the church at Corinth: and both teach, in Paul's most masterly manner, that a man must be "in Christ"—be possessed of the Spirit that raised Him from the dead, if ever quickened into life after this present animal life is extinct, and corruption has taken place; and no amount of special pleading can set aside this fact. There is no future life only by a union with Christ by means of that Spirit which raised up Jesus from the dead; and the sooner men see this, the sooner they will see the perfection of the Gospel scheme, in its glory; and thereby give honor to God and the Lamb.

Death.

Death is a foe. It is a dreaded foe. Every living thing fears it, and shrinks from it. Adorn it as we may, it is a ghastly, horrid thing, a robber, a tyrant, a cruel monster. Put roses around its brow, and spotless robes upon its form, still it remains a cold, relentless foe. Widows, orphans, rich or poor, many shed bitter tears as they behold their dear ones fastened in his cruel grasp; but what of tears? Has he not seen a continual dropping of these for thousands of years? What of sighs, and groans, and entreaties, has he not caused them ever since his entrance into the world?

Ah! it was a sad calamity that brought this enemy into our world. Poor woman, poor man, because of thy transgression sin entered into Eden, and "Death by sin." And ever since, Death has reigned and borne away our loved ones, regardless of our grief. We have seen them fading day by day; weakening hour by hour; and at length heard their last words, seen their last smile, received their last caress, listened to their last "Farewell," and then seen them go down into the deepest waves of the river of death where they were lost to us forever.

Did I say "forever?" Blessed be God, it may not be forever if our friends have died "in the Lord." To them is promised a glorious awakening. For them awaits a blessed morning. Their eyes shall again behold the light. Ah! there's help for them, from one that is "mighty to save." Jesus, who "led captivity captive," will unlock their prison houses and rescue his people. What though they are bound with icy fetters: He can burst them asunder. Hear him say to his beloved, "Though he were dead yet shall he live."

Here, then, light breaks over the tomb. We can "comfort one another with these words." It isn't death we glorify, but He that hath power to destroy death. Our hope is not in the grave, but beyond it. Faith sees the victory, through Christ, which believers shall have over death and the grave. And till that resurrection day we must endure the evil results of this mortal state. Christ is our only hope of a better life. Christ is the only way out of death into life. Men may flatter themselves that they have in-born ability to escape the sleep of death, and that death is not death; but the word of God stands sure: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." And "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregations of the dead."

Reader, would you live? After this present short period of existence is past, would you "enter into life" by a connection with "Him that is alive forevermore?" You can if you will. O be wise, I beseech you. Go not down into death to be its captive forever. Be among those that shall "hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth to life everlasting."

By-and-by this life will end. It is but a brief hour at best. Even "three-score years and ten" do not satisfy mankind. To the bowed old man life is sweet; especially if his days have been spent in the service of God. But old and young are continually dying. Some go prepared to come back into existance among the sinless ones that shall hereafter inhabit earth; and some do not. Let me mention my poor father, who passed from life July 15, 1869. For 76 years he had enjoyed the blessing of life, but in a moment, while at the breakfast table, fell to the floor, and never spoke again. It is not for me to say, "shall he live again?" God knows. Whether prepared or unprepared he was called and taken. A life of upright dealing and good principles is all that comforts his mourning ten children. His cheerful face and rich, clear voice, which from infancy we have heard singing and reading, are remembered by us. But as to the hereafter, that is in God's keeping; we do not know all its mysteries.

So one by one our jewels are lost; and one by one our hearts are made to mourn.

"Let thy kingdom, blessed Saviour,
Come and bid our mourning cease."

Maria Mathews Weaver.
Westfield, Mass., Aug. 15, 1869.

Christian Watchfulness.

Perhaps there is no more touching example of watchfulness on record than of Christ when he took Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, "and began to be sorrowful and very heavy; and he said unto them,' My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death." How heedless they seemed to be of his commands; for when he had "fallen on his face and prayed, he cometh to his disciples and findeth them asleep." Christ passed through the long hours of sorrowful watchfulness in Gethsemane, and now, as then, His professed followers seem so overcome with sleep that they cannot watch one hour. The warning, "Behold I come as a thief," falls unheeded upon the ears of a careless, indifferent world. I sometimes think as I look out on the backslidden churches of to-day, that Christ has uttered those words to them "Sleep on, now, and take your rest; behold the hour is at hand."

There was never perhaps a more thrilling time in the history of the world than the present. The most unmistakable evidence from prophecy—the present state of the world and the nominal church—shows conclusively, to all candid minds, that we stand on the very eve of the Messiah's triumphant appearing—an event awful in its nature to a wicked world but most glorious to His waiting flock. We would not take the position of an alarmist. There is no occasion for alarm to those who are watching and are ready. The subject should be weighed with calm, sober reflection. Oh, may sinners behold their danger, and flee to the extended arms of a merciful Saviour, who alone can be their refuge till the fearful indignation be over-past.

The magnificent panorama of prophecy has passed before us, and we now stand at the end of our journey, tired, and groaning for deliverance. The rays of that morning already begin to shed their pellucid glory upon our pathway, and the scenes which now surround us will soon pass away like the visions of the night. Says the absent Bridegroom, "Behold I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast that no man take thy crown.

Again the suddenness of his coming may be considered as another motive for "watchfulness." "As the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." How painfully this shows the necessity of constant watchfulness; for coming thus suddenly "one shall be taken and the other left."

Rochester, N. Y., August 18, 1869.

Camp-Meeting.

There has been enough said upon the subject of our meeting at Springfield, Mass., Sept. 2d. The friends who love the truth as it is in Jesus, will be edified and made strong by being there, especially if they come to make an effort to build up the cause of the Lord.

But I would speak in respect to the Camp-Meeting itself. We are not going there to spend our time in contention; nor yet to sit down and do nothing. We are neither expecting to contend about our rights, nor to remain idle.

Let us come to worship God, and speak and spread the truth.

I am, for one, disposed to bear and forbear; and in the improvement of the blessing which is given us to be temperate and "let our moderation be known to all men." If we wait patiently we shall reap in due time. A great change is already obtained, and a still further one will come. Let us be patient and wait that we may "be exalted in due time." We go there to worship and for instruction and edification: not for "strife about words" and victory over opponents. I presume none of our brethren of the Advent faith or our own particular views will go to that meeting for recreation. I am sure I should not.

To some, it might seem considerable to speak to a vast concourse at the Great Camp. To me it would be a "small thing, indeed, to be judged of man's judgment" in that respect. There is a more excellent way.

Let me suggest to those who come expecting to lodge in the large tent, that they should well supply themselves with covering; and if cooking, for still greater comfort, with sacks for straw. It will be later this year than it was last; and, if I remember rightly, there was a deficiency last year. Come prepared for the cold and the wet. Will Br. C. Hastings, of Springfield, see about that other tent? W. S. Campbell.

How Have the Mighty Fallen?

The invincibleness of our opponents, and the Christian courtesy with which they meet a subject they are wholly unable to cope with in a fair field, may be seen by the course which has been taken in regard to the annexed document. As yet it has been met by utter silence. Has their strength departed though disdaining the advocates of Life only in Christ: Will he yet come over to the conflict? Are there no mighty men among these opposers that will come to his aid? We shall see .The following document, addressed to Eld. P. A. Smith, of this place, explains itself.

Rochester, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

Dear Br. P. A. Smith: In consideration of the arbitrary position you have taken against the doctrine of the non-living of the wicked dead, I feel it a duty eminently due to an intelligent Christian community, to offer you an opportunity, in a public oral discussion in this city, to demonstrate that said doctrine is unscriptural. Therefore, I respectfully extend an invitation to you to discuss the following question, viz. "Do the Scriptures teach the re-living of the wicked dead?"—Br. Rufus Wendell, of Salem, Mass., to take the negative. Should this invitation be favorably entertained we can readily arrange the preliminaries; and perhaps it would be best to have the discussion come off at an early date in September next.

If this doctrine be "infidelity," as you have asserted, a favorable opportunity is herewith offered you to furnish the proof from the Scriptures. I sincerely wish nothing but truth: and being desirous to obtain all the light that can be brought forward on both sides of the question, permit me to express the hope that this invitation may meet your favorable consideration. An early reply by mail is solicited. Yours in Christian love,

Wm. H. Spencer.

Men Wanted.

The great want of this age is men. Men who are not for sale. Men who are honest, sound from centre to circumference, true to the heart's core. Men who will condemn wrong in friend or foe, in themselves as well as others. Men whose consciences are as steady as the needle to the pole. Men who will stand for the right if the heavens totter and the earth reels. Men who can tell the truth and look the world and the devil right in the eye. Men that neither brag nor run. Men that neither flag nor flinch. Men who can have courage without shouting to it. Men in whom the courage of everlasting life runs still, deep and strong. Men too large for sectarian bonds. Men who do not cry or cause their voices to be heard on the streets, but who will not fail nor be discouraged till judgments be set in the earth. Men who know their message and tell it. Men who know their places and fill them. Men who mind their own business. Men who will not lie. Men who are not too lazy to work, nor too proud to be poor. Men who are willing to eat what they have earned, and wear what they have paid for.—Selected.

It is not hasty reading but seriously meditating upon holy and heavenly truths that makes them prove sweet and profitable to the soul. It is not the bee's touching on the flowers that gathers honey, but her abiding for a time upon them, and drawing out the sweet. It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on divine truth that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.—Bishop Hall.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM WM. R. WARNER.

NORTH CAMBRIDGE, MASS., Aug. 9, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Yesterday was a beautiful bright, calm Sabbath, and we bore another of our dear children to the grave; little LAURA, one year and 4 months old. Disease was to much for her: 'twas the whooping cough, scarlet fever, and cutting teeth, all at once, and in the month of August. We loved these dear children as our life; 'twas hard parting. But God knows what is best. We trust his sovereign will. We will not mourn for those who are with Jesus. "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile, for they are without fault before the throne of God."

Four in one grave in Cambridge Cemetery; but we cannot mourn; we will not put on black; we do not believe that "ONE of these little ones has perished." But they have part "where there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." Yours, watching, waiting, hoping.

FROM THOMAS CHURCHILL.

CINCINNATI, August 11, 1869.

GEO. STORRS: I am just now engaged in reading your book [LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST] on evenings, in which I find great pleasure and also edification, although I have been settled in the views you advocate for some time. Still it gives me pleasure to meet with views on this momentous subject with which I can fully sympathize. I know, however, that such views are very unwelcome to the "Orthodox" so-called; but with good Brother Paul, I say, "Let God be true and every man a liar." I am happy to find you coming out so boldly in defence of this important doctrine, as I am satisfied that the contrary doctrine is a gross and foul libel on the character of Jehovah—and also robs our Beloved Lord of His glorious prerogative of being the only LIFE-GIVER to His people.

As to unbelieving men being raised to life from the dead, I say it is a most egregious mistake, and not taught anywhere in the word; in fact, they have no principle in them by which they can be raised. If God's people can be raised only by the Spirit of God which dwells in them, how can those be raised who have not this Spirit? I know that a great writer has written a book which says that believers and unbelievers will all be formed again from the dust as Adam was; but if it is all new men that will be made, what use in talking about raising dead men? and I do not believe that Jehovah or His Christ, or His Elohim, will ever take that trouble with wicked men, merely for the purpose of causing them to die again. Yours in the faith.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

UNION, WIS., Aug. 16, 1869.

BRO. STORRS: I will say of our approaching anniversary, May God be with you; be the grand Marshal of your host; give you a Banner that it may be displayed because of the truth. May He arm you with all needed and spiritual weapons, and mighty to the pulling down the strongholds of evil. May your loins be girt about with truth, your lights burning, and you all be like unto men that look for their Lord. O how glad I should be to meet you all when you are gathered together in Christ's name; it would be next to meeting you in the kingdom of God. May your peace be like a river, and your deliberations crowned with the blessings of God. May you all take the whole armor of God, that you may be enabled to stand in this evil day; for a mighty conflict is ahead; truth and error, light and darkness are coming to close battle; but blessed be the Lord, truth will triumph; for God and all holy beings are on its side. O brethren and sisters, may God enable you all to send forth your angel, your messenger, the HERALD OF LIFE, laden with the message of life; life, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, and that by a resurrection from among the dead. Let the living truth of "All in Christ shall be made alive," run; ran through the land, and God be glorified, and the world be benefited. And "he that hath not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." I am poor and old, but I will do what I can to keep the HERALD OF LIFE battering the wall that is daubed with untempered mortar; and carrying the Gospel of the kingdom to those that are dying for the lack of knowledge.

May the great Shepherd of the sheep keep us all in his fold, till He shall come; and may that be quickly, amen. Your Sister, waiting for Jesus.

FROM MRS. C. M. HOPKINS.

PRATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 16, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I inclose $5: two for the paper, and three for tracts. I would like to rejoice your heart by reporting progress in the Life and Advent views here, if I could in truth. I seem alone as to our views of God's word. I had hopes that our minister would candidly look at the subject; but after meeting the Presbytery he told me, if such doctrine should be proclaimed, it would be here as it was in the reign of terror in France. I asked if he had searched and was sure it was not God's truth, or whether he would set up man's wisdom above that of God's? I said, I believed it was the truth of God; and that duty is ours, and consequences the Lord's.

O sir, such things stagger my faith in the honesty of ministers. They do not reason so on any other subject. I tried to reason with him upon the evils growing out of such doctrines as inherent immortality, etc; such as Universalism, Spiritism, etc. I inquired of him, if he did not think that all the cruelties of Romanism grew out of such a representation of a perfect God? a God perfectly holy, full of love and mercy, tormenting eternally the greater part of mankind, the workmanship of his almighty power?

And why, if a good and merciful God could do this, would it be wrong for His converted good children to follow the example of their perfect God, and show their hatred of sin by torturing them on a rack, putting splinters in their flesh and setting them on fire so that they should die as slow as possible, etc.? They only imitated, or tried to, as far as in their power, the God held up to their view as perfect.

I believe all these, and many others evils, grow out of teaching for doctrine the commandments of men. Ought not the sin of wresting the Scriptures to be dwelt on more? Believe me ever yours in the Lord.

FROM H. YOUNG.

PITTSFIELD, N. H., August 10, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Please send me a few of the Campaign Documents. We have spent quite a sum for books, tracts and papers which contain the glorious truth of "Life only in Christ." But they are nearly all lent and given away, so that we have very few on hand; and though all we get for our pains is scorn and ridicule, still we feel that such truths should be widespread; for "wisdom is justified of all her children." She does not expect to be justified of any others. Her children alone know that "her revenue is better than silver, and her gain than fine gold;" that "she is a tree of life to them that lay hold on her; and happy is every one that retaineth her."

We know that such, wherever they are found, will gladly receive such truths. Yes, and we know, too, that there are germs of life in these words of truth, these words of God, which when received into the mind and heart will be a conception from which shall come at length a new birth, a new being, working silently this mighty change; "transforming," and so "translating from the kingdom of darkness," or error, "into the kingdom of God's dear Son."

In our present condition we can only pledge one dollar for the paper beside the regular subscription for next vol., and $1 for tracts. Your brother in affliction.

FROM JAMES W. SMITH.

CHESTER, PA., August, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I beg leave respectfully to make a report of what is going on in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Some time ago a stranger came among us in the capacity of a missionary, and who has had some eight years' experience in that sort of work among the "lowly" in New York. Well, since he came among us we have got a Bible Class, "open to all, and entirely unsectarian." But, there are nothing but Orthodox doctrines taught, nor in fact allowable; so it is not unsectarian, after all.

Our missionary is taking lessons in a Theological Seminary near by, and as students there get their education for nothing, I thought surely he will let us have a little for nothing: also, "Freely ye have received, freely give." But it is not so.

Our last lesson was, "Our Lord's Temptation in the Wilderness." In the course of it, in the simplicity of my heart, I asked the teacher to explain to us the meaning of the word "tempter." I am so ready myself to give an answer to any one who may ask me a question, that I never dreamed that I would be denied, especially by one who hails from an institution where every thing is taught without money and without price. But I was doomed to disappointment; for no sooner was the question asked, than our teacher lost his Theological centre of gravity, and got nearly lost in a blaze of evangelical glory. This zeal for the traditions of his fathers was greater than his knowledge of the truth; or, why not explain the meaning of the word "tempter?" It could do no one any harm unless there is a design to keep the "common people" in the dark.

No doubt he thought I was going to make an attack on the devil; but he was mistaken; for I had no such intention; and, indeed, I did not even mention the devil at all; but, he got frightened almost to death, and said he would have no "infidel doctrines" preached here. I felt pained that I was under the necessity of calling him to order, and telling him he might feel ashamed of himself.

He said the devil had got into the room, and they would sing him out, as the devil hated singing. Then he prayed him out for fear the singing would not do; as it is said the devil hates praying. But I do not see how the devil may be afraid of praying, so long as men pray for things to be done that God never intended to be done, and never promised would be done.

During the lesson we received the following instruction. It was affirmed that "the devil tempted our first parents by their appetites." This was a great mistake, for it was God that tried Adam by his "appetite;" and not the devil. "The Serpent" of the Garden of Eden—fame was a literal serpent, and was not, and could not be, by any means, the spirit-devil of our day. The serpent of the Garden of Eden was a visible, tangible creature. The devil, so much in vogue in our day, is invisible, intangible, and consequently has no relationship to the serpent of Eden whatever. The serpent is called a "beast of the field." And God cursed the serpent "above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life."

Is this the devil of theology? If so, nobody need be afraid of him. Some supposed the devil was omnipresent, and in every place at the same time. The teacher did not know whether the devil was omnipresent or not, but if he was not, he must travel very quick from place to place. So then you see the devil is not the serpent; for the serpent could only be in one place at a time. And as he is doomed to "go" on his "belly" and lick "dust" as he goes, his rate of travel would not be like the lightning's flash, as fancy and fiction would have us believe.

Three of God's attributes are omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience. Is it not rather strange to see good people stripping their God of two of his attributes and bestowing them on the devil?

Omniscience belongs to God, and to him only. If it can be proved that any other being besides God is omniscient, then it can be proved that there are more Gods than one. All wisdom belongs to the Most High God alone. God only can read the heart of man. "Thus saith the Lord," 1 Sam. xvi., 7, "The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance; but the Lord looketh on the heart."

1 Kings viii., 39, Solomon says, "Whose heart thou knowest; (for thou, even thou only, knowest the hearts of all the children of men.)" David says, 1 Chron. xxviii., 9, "The Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts." Jeremiah xvii, 8, 9, "For the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, who can know it? I, the Lord, search the heart and try the reins." And Matthew, Mark, Luke and John all affirm that Jesus knew all that was in man, even his very thoughts. And Paul, when speaking of the Spirit and Power of God, says, Heb. iv., 12, 13, "And is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do." And Paul says again, Rom. viii., 27, "And he that searcheth the hearts." Therefore, God only knoweth the thoughts of the heart. It is a strange idea that some people have got into their heads, that the government of the world is a sort of joint stock company. The royal partners of the firm being the God of all good, and the devil, the god of all evil. And it is believed by a great many that the partners of the world government are not only equal, but that the wicked partner is in some respects the greatest; for they say he destroys thousands for one that the good saves. At all events, according to the opinions of theologians, God and the devil are equals; for it is said, that neither party can annihilate the other; and consequently the conflict between good and evil will continue throughout all eternity.

The ancient Greeks used to amuse themselves with the following puzzle: "If a moving body that cannot be stopped, meets with an immovable body that cannot be moved, what will be the result?" It is evident that there is not much common sense in the proposition, as both bodies are only almighty in name. The moving body will not be stopped, and the immovable body will not be moved, and the result is nothing. The idea that the world was governed by two spirits, the one very good, and the other very evil, originated with the heathen; of whom Paul says, "They were without God, and without hope in the world." Surely such wisdom is not from God. Can God say, with any degree of consistency, "I am the Almighty God." "I, the Lord, search the heart," if so be the devil knows as much as he? The devil knows no more of the thoughts of a man's heart, than a doctor of divinity knows about the thoughts of the man in the moon. "Thus saith the Lord, I, the Lord, search the heart." Amen. O Lord, so let it be, "For thou, even thou only, knowest the hearts of all the children of men."

LAFAYETTE NORRIS, Campton, Iowa, writes: After due reflection on the advice you gave me to hold meetings in my own house, I have concluded to try, and have given some notice of it, and shall give more. But I hope you will not consider me of little faith when I tell you that I have but small expectation that any will come. I have appointed 3 o'clock each Sabbath; and so far have taken up the time in teaching my children. The Adventists in Manchester have hired a hall for preaching and other meetings, and say it is free for any Advent preacher who comes that way. I think they have shown a noble spirit. Yours, striving for the mastery over sin.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—Where no other place can be had, by all means, let Life believers hold forth in their own house, even if none but their "own children" do attend. Take courage, Br. Norris, you have made a good beginning. Let the people know you mean what you say; and let your life be a commentary on your faith, and you will not always be alone. The apostle Paul once "dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence." Acts xxviii., 39, 40. If he was at one time in so close quarters that he could preach only in his own house, and a "hired" one at that, do not be discouraged, Br. N., but teach "all that come unto" you. Better do that than to seem to join hands with such as refuse to let the truth be spoken in their meetings. When the man seeking goodly pearls found a treasure hid in a field, he went and he sold all that he had and bought it. The truth of Life in Christ alone, and an inheritance in the kingdom by that means, is a treasure worth more than all the honors that come from men. Let us not hide it, but set it up, that it may give light to all who will come into our houses.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

GRAFTON, ILL., August 12, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I want to express my sincere thanks through our medium, the HERALD OF LIFE, for the five dollars from our beloved Br. "E. W.," of New Jersey. May the Lord reward him fourfold in this age, and in the ages to come life unending. Praise the Lord that he put it in the heart of this Br. to help the poor old one-armed man, and I do assure him and all others that whatever they donate shall be spent in the cause of our common Lord and Master. We are making every possible effort to get out once more in our great western field of labor; and we pray God to help us right soon. I feel deeply anxious, and am resolved to spend and be spent in promulgating the glorious truth of No life future or eternal except in Christ and at his second coming. No immortality to the first Adam's race; consequently no resurrection to those who die out of Christ, the second Adam. May the time soon come when all believers in inherent immortality, endless suffering, together with mortal resurrectionists, etc., shall acknowledge the truth of Life only in Him who is "the resurrection and the life." We are in want of more tracts, as we have repeated calls for them. Hope soon to be able to send some money for a full supply.

PETER KEMP, New York, writes. Please find inclosed ten dollars, being the balance of my pledge to the "HERALD OF LIFE." You may count on me for the next volume twenty dollars, if my life and health are continued. The paper is to me a weekly "feast of fat things:" for which no moneyed value can be fixed; and I have no doubt of its being fully sustained for another volume. May your life be spared and your hand held up as heretofore in this great work, is the prayer of one who has long enjoyed the fruits of your labors.

---

JOHN HAYES, Epping, N. H., writes: I have read the HERALD OF LIFE with interest, since subscribing for it, and I trust with profit. It is a comfort to hear from those who love the truth, from week to week, and to find them looking for their coming King. It is a hard place here; little sympathy for Life believers. I would be glad for some able advocate of these truths to visit us and preach the word. I would like to be at the meeting in Springfield, Mass.; but fear my health will not allow it. I have scattered some tracts and made other efforts for the truth. The result remains to be seen.

---

S. E. HOFFMAN, Minneapolis, Minn., writes: Please send me the HERALD OF LIFE of Aug. 4, if you have it. Mine, of that date, when it came to hand, looked as if it had been read at all the offices from New York here. If so, I do not regret its wear, for the review of Br. Haven, on soul entity, is worthy of being read by all. When I received the tract on the "Devil, Satan and Demons," a Methodist Br., who brought them from the Post-office, and who had read in one about the fallen angels, said, "That is just the way Eld.—— explained it." I asked, "Did I not hear Eld. —— preach an hour and a half to prove a spirit devil," "Well, I believe he does, but Eld. C. believes just that way." I gave a copy of that tract to a man to take to Canada. It is going the rounds. I am good to give away books and tracts, but a poor hand to sell them. To an interested inquirer the last copy always goes.

---

D. SHERBURNE, Waterville, Me., writes: I am still striving for the kingdom: it is but a little way ahead; in a few days or months at most, the faithful ones will take possession of it. It is worth striving for. May God bless the HERALD OF LIFE and all who write for it. I cannot do without it: it is all the preaching I have; only once in a great while. How long will men continue to misrepresent the word of the Lord, and thus blaspheme His name? Fight on, brother: a crown awaits those who fight "lawfully." Yours, in hope of eternal life.

S. MORGAN, North Lawrence, Kan., writes: It gives me pleasure to communicate with the HERALD OF LIFE and its friends. Though I have not written for a long time, I have not forgotten or forsaken our paper. In looking over its contents my heart is made to rejoice that so many are taking God's word for the man of their counsel instead of following the traditions of men. I feel to rest on the words of promise given by the Son of God, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." Let such words encourage us to hold fast to the truth, and overcome evil with good. We must expect to be tried and tempted; but we must follow in His steps who said, "I am the resurrection and the life." In His day the great and the mighty sought to overthrow Him and the truth. Thus it is now; but let us not fear; for, saith Christ, "Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the prophets before you." Christ was a prophet, and He has prophesied of events still future. There is to be distress of nations, men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. Our Lord taught us to pray, "Thy Kingdom come." I believe the time is not distant when this prayer will be answered and God's will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Let us then have our robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb, that we may be found blameless at His appearing and kingdom. Pray for me; for there is much opposition here in regard to the Life views. A few will read the paper and the tracts on the subject. Some think the view is good, and I know it is. Yours in hope of eternal life.

M. C. HARRIMAN, Salisbury, N. H., writes: I want a few more "Campaign Documents." I find a few in this vicinity that love the truth and take a deep interest in our views. They, like all others under similar circumstances, say the Bible seems like a new book, so plain, so clear; and they wonder why they did not see the truth before. May the Lord help them to come forth to the liberty of the gospel as it is in Jesus Christ.

OBITUARY.

FELL asleep in Jesus, at Southington, Conn., Jan. 16, 1869, Br. ROSWELL HART, aged 63 years.

Until Jesus our great Redeemer and LIFE-GIVER returns, and death is swallowed up in victory, it must ever and anon fall to our lot to record events like the above; and until then, hearts will sadden and bleed, tears will flow and the voice of mourning be heard within our borders.

In these days when so few really good men and true are to be found,—men who love the truth of God more than self and the world,—it does not seem right that such an one should go from our midst, out of life, and be laid away to sleep with his fathers, without a passing notice.

"The memory of the just is blessed;" and as such, I may truly say, was our Br. regarded by all who knew him. A man of sound mind, an independent thinker and logical reasoner, together with piety and much integrity of character,—what wonder that when the church and world were aroused by the proclamation of the "kingdom of God at hand," that Br. Hart should be ready to embrace the glorious doctrine of a soon-coming Saviour to redeem His people. Gradually drawing away and cutting loose from the influence of sects and creeds and the bondage of tradition, he was prepared to receive light and truth as presented to him, firmly adhering to and advocating the same.

When Br. Storrs' Six Sermons were first published, a copy was sent to him. Fearful of treading on forbidden ground, and doubtful of the influence upon their children, Br. Hart and his wife, who fully sympathized with him in his faith, pursued their investigation of truth in private for a time. Often while their family were wrapped in slumber, did they, with the "Sermons" and Bible in hand, study, search and compare with Scripture, until the treasure was found and they were prepared to defend the truth of immortality through Christ alone.

Br. H. was also the first one in Southington to embrace the view of the non-living of the wicked dead; and his sympathies were most fully enlisted in the work of spreading the truth among the people. He has ever done what he could to sustain the Bible Examiner and HERALD OF LIFE, where his name has sometimes appeared. For sometime before his death he seemed to have an impression that his work was nearly done. From the first of his sickness, which was lung fever, he expressed his conviction that he should not recover, and with much earnestness spoke to his family of his faith and prospects for the future,—of the resurrection and the glory yet to be revealed,—for which glory he now waits, and rests in hope.

There was much of sadness connected with the death of Br. H. His devoted wife, who had ever been his nurse and comfort in sickness, was herself stricken down by the same disease soon after her husband. Sarah, one of their eldest children, just returned from watching by the sick bed of a loved twin sister, with this new accession of care and anxiety, soon fell a victim to the disease, and on the 21st of Jan., five days after the death of her father, she too fell asleep and rested from her labors.

The circumstances being such it was impossible to send for one entertaining the same views to attend the funeral of Br. H., which was held in the Congregational church. The pastor, Mr. Jones, spoke in the highest terms of the Christian character and consistent life so well known to them all, and made no allusion whatever to his being in any other condition than that of death.

Sr. Hart, after a long illness, has partially recovered; but she, with her surviving children have sustained an irreparable loss in the death of their loved ones. May He who is the "God of all comfort," comfort them under this great affliction, and may the entire family, while cherishing the views entertained by their lamented husband and father, be sharers together also in the great redemption promised to all who are in Christ Jesus, and be reunited in the land of life and endless rest.

LOUISA J. BEACH.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We have long looked for some one to furnish a notice of Br. Hart's life and death. He was one of our most true and loved friends. Sister Beach has said none too much of his excellence. We sorrow that we shall "see his face no more" this side the resurrection. But we rejoice in the blessed hope that we shall see him then among our Lord's redeemed ones. May the Lord sustain the surviving members of his family and bring them all into the glory th be revealed.

THE diplomatic relations between the Austrian Ambassador at Berlin and Count Bismarck having been virtually suspended for the last eight months, and the controversy between Beust and Bismarck increasing in acrimony and mutual recriminations, it remains now to be seen how much time will elapse before this latent warfare culminates in open rapture and actual hostilities. The proposed interviews of the King of Prussia with the Emperor of Russia, and of the King of Italy with the Emperor of the French, as well as the refusal of Austria to reduce her military establishments, and the activity displayed by Italy, France, Russia, and Prussia in strengthening theirs, are hardly suggestive of smooth times. England does all in her power to allay the storm, and to preserve the peace of Europe by hook or by crook; but so long as the relations between Vienna and Berlin remain in their present threatening position, there is not much prospect for the prevention of war. The shaken prestige of Napoleon, too, at home and abroad, may, nolens volens, impel him to seek to retrieve it in a general clash of arms, as his only hope of retaining his throne, or of dying at last in a blaze of factitious glory.—*N. AN English savant has been experimenting in temperature in an abandoned artesian well. He found that at a depth of 1,100 feet the temperature was 20 degrees higher than above ground. At this rate of increase, the boiling point would be reached about a mile and a half down. In our experience in wells we find it grows colder as we go down, indicating a freezing point at less than a mile and and half. Aren't our conclusions as good as his?

Dash Down That Bowl.

Dash down that bowl!
 Though the sparkling wine,
Like a jewel fair
 May brightly shine:
Though the brow it illumine,
 The sad heart cheer,
'Tis followed by grief,
 And the sigh and tear.

Touch not one drop!
 Be no more a slave
To the cup that is friend
 Of the worm and the grave;
Break off the yoke
 That enslaves thee now;
Bear no more the brand
 That's stamped on the brow.

Gaze on thy hearth!
 See want and despair!
The starving, the ragged,
 The wretched are there;
What hath despoiled thee,
 And made all so drear,
Look on the wine cup,
 The answer is there.

Break not her fond heart,
 That bitterness feels,
As alone with God
 In sadness she kneels;
While the heart-broken prayer,
 Rises up to the throne,
From the groaning, the wretched,
 For thee, erring one.

Dash down that bowl!
 No longer drain
That cup of woe,
 Of death and pain;
Drink the crystal stream,
 'Twill life impart,
And true joy give
 To thee, sad of heart.

Children's Department.

Allan's Little Sermon.

It was a rainy Sabbath, too wet for Johnny to go to church, and so father and mother left Allan home to take care of him. The playthings were all put away, except Kitty: so Johnny played with Kitty until he made her angry by trying to take her up by the ears, as Allan took his rabbits. Then she jumped out of the window, and Johnny saw her no more that morning.

"Allan," he said, "I wish I could just go and look into my box of playthings. I won't take out one. I just want to look at them; that wouldn't be breaking the Sabbath, would it?"

"It would be going into temptation," said Allan; and you know you prayed this morning, 'Lead us not into temptation.'"

"O dear," sighed Johnny; "then I wish I was at church."

"Come," said Allan, "I will preach you a little sermon."

"Well," said Johnny, "I will listen."

So Allan took the great Bible, and found this text, which was so easy that Johnny could read it himself: "I am the door."

"Here is a text for a little boy who is four years old," said Allan, "for it has just four words in it, one for every year. The first word is 'I.' That has only one letter in it. This means the Lord Jesus, the good Saviour who loves little children. The second word is 'am.' That has two letters in it. When Jesus says 'I am the door,' of course he doesn't mean that he is the door like that you shut just now; but this little sermon is to show you how he is like a door. The third word is 'the,' which has three letters. Jesus says the door, because there is only one door into the kingdom of heaven. The fourth word is 'door,' which has four letters in it. A door lets people into the house; and if there was no door they could not get in. So the Lord Jesus lets his people into the kingdom of heaven; and if it was not for him they could not get in at all.

"A door keeps out the rain and the dogs and thieves; and so Jesus keeps all evil and hurtful things out of his beautiful heaven. Now, when you want to go into a house, you go straight to the door; and so if we want to go into the kingdom of heaven, we must go to Jesus and ask him to let us in."

So Allan knelt down, and little Johnny by him, and they prayed to the dear Lord to make them his own good children, so that they might go into his beautiful city when he comes.—Child's Delight.

A Little Mission Girl.

A little mission girl knelt down by her bed to pray. She was thinking of her Sunday-school teacher, and of what she had heard of Jesus, and she began to hear a soft voice saying, "Sarah, Sarah, I died for you on the cross. I love you. Sarah, won't you love me?"

This soft voice she heard in her heart, not in her ear; so she began to feel her heart getting warmer, and it whispered to her, "O how he did love me! Yes, I must love him. I am going to begin now." So she said to Jesus, for she knew that it was his voice she heard in her heart, "Jesus, I am only a poor little girl, but I want to love you. It is hard do right, but I want to do it, and I want to come to you."

She got up the next morning, and the next, and the next; and pretty soon the lady she was living with began to say, "Why, what is the matter with Sarah? What has come over her? How nice she keeps everything! and how careful she is! When she takes the baby to nurse she does not drop it, and she does not tell any more lies. What has come over her?"

Ah! she has something in her heart. What is it? Jesus! Jesus! Yes. Who was helping her every day? Jesus. And by-and-by the mistress said, "Sarah has something in her heart that she did not use to have." It was Jesus.

Do not you want to have Jesus in your heart? Do not you want to take him home to your house? He will come if you want him to. Does he not love little children? O yes, dearly.

The Praying Children.

Melancthon, one of the early Reformers, was once very much distressed and cast down about the cause of God; but one day, when taking a walk, he heard some children's voices, and listening, found they were engaged in prayer for the great work of God. He at once returned to his brethren, and entering the room exclaimed, "Brethren, take courage, for the children are praying for us."

Let prayer be the key to the morning and the bolt of the evening.—Matthew Henry.

From W. H. Whitman.

Galesbury, Ill., August, 1869.

Br. Storrs: In the Christian hymn book, on pages 8 and 9, we find the following remarks by Alexr. Campbell, "No exercise of social worship is more delightful, solemn, or sublime, than singing the praises of the Lord. And when we address him in sacred song, care should be taken that the substance and form, or the matter and manner of song, be such as will be acceptable to him." . . . "Our Christian psaltersare are in general a collection of every thing preached in the range of the system of the people who adopt them. In other words, they are our creed in metre, while it appears in the prose form in our confessions."

The above we believe to be true. Now let us look at a hymn found on page 471 of the new Christian hymn book. The third and fourth verses read as follows:

"Shall aught beguile us on the road,
While we are walking back to God?
For strangers into life we come,
And dying is but going home.

"Welcome, sweet hour of full discharge,
That sets our longing souls at large,
Unbinds our chains, breaks up our cell,
And gives us with our God to dwell."

The above is very fine poetry, and is sung to a very fine tune; but the theology would not be pleasing to God, our maker. Look at it. We all come into life strangers, (and this is God's work, for no one would claim that the devil made us) and dying is but going home to dwell with God. Now who performed the best deed in the beginning, according, to the above theology, God or the devil? God put man here a stranger; then the devil brings death along and sends him back home to dwell with God! David says, in His presence is fulness of joy, and at his right hand are pleasures forevermore. Now the devil is the cause of our going to this good place, according to the hymn book.

But look at it from another stand point. Whatever death is, the reversal of it would be a resurrection. The devil brought sin into the world, sin brought death, and death sends the Christian home to dwell with God. Now Jesus will reverse this if there is to be a resurrection. "He binds up our chains, builds up our cell, and takes us from our God to dwell." If this is not dishonoring God, robbing Christ, and exalting the works of the devil, we would like for some learned divine to tell us what it is.

Again, on page 618 we find the following.

"Death is the gate of endless joy,
And yet we dread to enter there."

Here is more of their creed in metre. Now if death is the gate of endless joy, we ask in all candor who made it (see Rom. v., 12), God or the devil? How learned men can become so blinded in theology, and then continue to blind others, is a curiosity to us. May God help to see their error, and turn from it and learn and teach the truth as it is in Jesus, is our desire and prayer.

From S. E. Hoffman.

Minneapolis, Minn., Aug., 1869.

Br. Storrs: Happening one evening to enter the house of one of my Br. M. E.'s, who had that day been visited by a travelling Eld. and his lady, who were about to take their departure, and of course had to have prayer before leaving; and as I was invited to tarry, I took a seat. The chapter read and expounded was Heb. vi., and I will give you his explanation of the first verse. "Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." This needed a lengthy explanation. He said; some had a great difficulty in understanding this passage of Scripture; to leave the principles of Christ, and then go on unto perfection, they could not understand how that could be. But said he, it's easy understood if we just understand the apostle's meaning. (Of course, not what he said, but something else.) Well, to go on. He laid down his Basis, that the apostles adopted the synagogue form of government; and so this was what the apostle meant, in leaving the principles of Christ, to leave that old Judaism that they had adopted and go on to perfection.

I talked some to myself; but as it was a new and difficult passage to me, that had not come to my notice, I thought silence, without questions, would be the best policy. But said I to myself—Is not this putting words into Paul's mouth that he did not say? If Paul had meant for them to leave the synagogue form of government, why did he not say so in plain terms, instead of saying, to leave the principles of Christ? But again; rolling the thing over in my own mind, what is the meaning of the word principles? Why, fundamental truths. Well then, that must be the most important truth. What, did Paul advise the Hebrew congregation to leave the fundamental, most important truths behind, and then, of course, take the less important ones and go on to perfection! There must be a mistake here. Paul had better sense than that. True enough, Eld., it needs patching and daubing and explanations, too; but I can't receive your explanation as my M. E. brethren do.

After prayer I hastened home, took up the Emphatic Diaglott and there read, "Therefore leaving. . . the beginning of the anointed word, towards the perfection we should progress;" etc. This throws light on the passage; this does not need patching, daubing or explanations; it is simple and plain; the beginning of the word of Christ that was preached by Paul.

Now, see what the apostle tells us is or was the beginning of the anointed word. "Not again a foundation laying down for reformation from dead work, (or, works causing death) and of faith in God, of dippings, teaching of laying on of hands, of a resurrection of dead ones, and of a judgment age-lasting."

Here is what the beginning of the anointed word was. Now then, as much as to say, you have examined all these points of the word, you have investigated them to your satisfaction, you are now settled and confirmed in them; now, then, for the present, go on for practical holiness, loving God with all the heart, mind and substance, and thy neighbor as thyself; see that you love one another fervently with a pure heart. I believe this to be near the truth; for without practical holiness the teaching of doctrines are but as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. But the sound "orthodox" can't afford to dispense with the old translation; though there are difficulties in it that puzzle the mind to find some way to solve, and then it may be as unsatisfactory as to say the moon is the sun.

Why is it that the whole orthodox family seems intent on contending for inspiration for that old English version, every word of it? Is is not because they suppose on that they can better build up the inherent immortality than on any other translation? Are they aware "they have made a covenant with death, and with sheol they are at agreement?" Isa. xxviii., 15. In this place you cannot get one of them to listen a moment, or hardly look inside of any new translation; except what they call the "low class," who will attentively listen; and I hope that e'er long will bring forth fruit to the glory of God. O, how I thank God that I have been brought to see that there is no Life out of Christ. Let this doctrine sound from the rivers to the end of the earth; and I believe it eventually will right all errors, and whatever is opposed to Christ, and lay them all down for Life only in him.

Four Lessons from a House Top.

BY MRS. JULIA P. BALLARD.

"Had you noticed the top of that large new building from your room?" said a friend who stood at my window a few days ago.

"No," said I, looking out at once; when the new dome and finished turrets of a public edifice appeared in the distance against the sky.

"How delightful it would be," said one, after looking at it a moment, "if we could get, now and then, even that much of a glimpse of the Celestial City. How it would strengthen our faith!"

"By faith John saw more than such a glimpse," was the reply: "even the whole city. The 'New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven.' If we look less earnestly at the things which are seen and temporal, we shall see more vividly with the eye of faith those which are unseen and eternal."

The words fell pleasantly upon my ear, and the little glimpse of that beautiful dome becomes very precious to me day after day; always reminding me of "the city without foundations whose builder and maker is God." And as I should probably not have noticed this building's top above the crowded mass of houses between, had it not been pointed out to me by a friend, so, I thought, may many fail of getting a glimpse of the heavenly mansion, unless some one used to "looking beyond" point them out with a word of interest and love.

"I wish I could see more of it," I said to myself, looking upon the very little portion of my favorite dome, one day; but contented myself with the wish, with no thought of its being possible without the long walk which should bring me to the building itself. When, lo! a day or two after, having taken my work to a chamber above my own, I chanced to look out of the window, and there against the sky stood out the whole finished top, with every pointed turret and carved ornament perfect, to the very roof itself.

"I wished to see more of it," I exclaimed with delight, "and I can from a higher point of view! The higher we rise from the plane of earth, the further glimpses shall we get of the glories beyond."

A few days later a beautiful sunset was reflecting a soft carmine flush over the sky. I looked from my window and the favorite turrets were bathed in the sunset glory. It was beautiful beyond the power of words to paint; and a voice whispered, "If you would see the brightest, richest glories of the world beyond, look at it in the true light shed over it by the sun of Righteousness—that has no parting beams."

So my four lessons were:

Look and See.

See and point out to others;

Rise higher, and see more clearly;

Look in the light of the true sun, and see the highest beauty and glory.—The Advance.

Interesting Testimony.

"The mission of the ancient prophets, of Moses and of Jesus, has been confirmed by many splendid prodigies; and Mahomet was repeatedly urged by the inhabitants of Mecca and Medina to produce a similar evidence of his divine legation; to call down from heaven the angel or the volume of his revelation, to create a garden in the desert, or to kindle a conflagration in the unbelieving city. As often as he is pressed by the demands of the Koreish, he involves himself in the obscure boast of vision and prophecy, appeals to the internal proof of his doctrine, and shields himself behind the Providence of God, who refuses those signs and wonders that would depreciate the merit of faith, and aggravate the guilt of infidelity. But the modest or angry tone of his apologies betrays his weakness and vexation; and these passages of scandal establish beyond suspicion the integrity of the Koran. The votaries of Mahomet are more assured than himself of his miraculous gifts, and their confidence and credulity increase as they are further removed from the time and place of his spiritual exploits."—(Gibbon's Decline and Fall).

Ockley, a very unprejudiced writer, observes that "when the impostor was called upon, as he often was, to work miracles in proof of his divine mission, he excused himself by various pretences, and appealed to the Koran as a standing miracle. . . . There was no proof of his visions or intercourse with angels beyond his own assertions; and on the occasion of the pretended night-journey to heaven, Ayesha testified that he did not leave his bed."—Selected by F. ### The Imprisoned Austrian Nun.

While passing in the neighborhood of Cracow on Friday last, I heard that the whole town was in a ferment, owing to the following shocking story that was just coming to light, and to which further particulars are now added. The papers have since been full of it:

A few days ago an anonymous letter, apparently written by a woman's hand, reached the Court of Correction, stating that in the Carmelite Convent a nun, named Barbara Abryk, had been kept for years walled up in a dark cell. Accordingly, the Vice-President of the Court placed the information in the hands of an officer, who went to the bishop and requested an admission to the convent. The bishop represented that it was sure to be all an invention, but that since the Court pressed it he would allow it, and thereupon handed the officer to a priest.

The nunnery of the Carmelites stands prettily situated in a suburb of the town, and close by are the botanical gardens and the promenade of the observatory—a favorite resort of the inhabitants of Cracow; and often and often on fine summer evenings have they passed beneath these gloomy walls without ever dreaming of the sad and terrible tragedy that has been silently passing there for the last twenty-one years.

The officer came to the door with the commission, knocked, and was answered by a portress, to whom he said he had come there to see and to speak to the nun Barbara. The portress drew her breath with astonishment, fell back a step or two, and said it was impossible; but while she was turning herself about to go away, the officer put his hand on her and forbade her, in the name of the law, to stir from the spot. The party then entered and was shown through a long corridor to the room of Sister Barbara. It was a cell eight by six feet in size, next the sink; the window had been walled up, and a narrow chink furnished the only aperture through which, now and then, a ray of light fell upon the gloomy prison. I go on in the words of a Vienna paper.

In a dark, stinking hole, on a heap of straw, sat, or rather cowered, a naked, wild-grown, half-witted woman, who, at the unusual appearance of light and human beings, dropped her hands and implored piteously, "I am hungry; pity me, give me meat; I will be obedient." This dungeon, with its little straw and much filth, and a dish of mouldy potatoes, without fire, bed, table or even chair, which no sunstreak cheered or fire blaze ever warmed, had the inhuman "Sisters" chosen as the dwelling-place for their should-be companion; there had they imprisoned her year after year since 1848. For twenty-one years did those dreadful Sisters pass that cell, and to none of them had it ever entered to take compassion on their poor victim. And now, half human, half beast, with her body covered with dirt, with her legs shrunk and withered, with her head squalid, diseased, year upon year long unwashed, a terrible being revealed herself, such as Dante himself, with all his powers, could not have depicted or imagined. So kneeled there that woful victim in the Convent of the Carmelites.

The officer immediately ordered a chemise to be given the wretched creature, and himself went to fetch the Bishop. At the sight of the poor sufferer the Bishop was deeply moved, called the nuns together, and, reproaching them violently for their inhuman treatment, said, "Is this your sisterly love? Is this the way you think to come to heaven, furies, not women?" And when they would have excused themselves, "Silence, miserable ones! you who disgrace religion, away from my sight!"

He suspended them, and then the Confessor and the Lady Superior talked of breaking up the nunnery, and sent Barbara to be clothed and fed. While she was being led away, she asked, anxiously, "Won't they take me back again to my grave?" and inquired why she was shut up there. "I have broken my vows, but these, these," darting wildly round, and glaring furiously on the Sisters, "are no angels." Then, springing at the Confessor, she shrieked, "You beast!"

On examination the Lady Superior said she had shut up Barbara on the doctor's recommendation, in 1848. The present doctor, who has held the position seven years, stated that he had never even seen Barbara once.

In the evening the poor creature became wilder, and it was settled to move her next day to the madhouse. On Friday, therefore, the 23d, the commission came again to take her away. On seeing the sunlight and green grass of the convent garden she convulsed with extreme joy, and when one of the Sisters who accompanied her to the gate ran out, when the others turned back, embraced and kissed her, she was so touched with the strange sympathy that she implored the author of it to come away with her, and incessantly called for her afterward on the road. The fresh air was too much for her, and during the journey she fainted.

In her new home Sister Barbara was provided with everything comfortable, but at first she kept frequently rising from her bed to lie on the bare floor, as she had been used. Since being properly washed and dressed, the wildness has quieted down, and the doctors have hopes of eventually restoring her to her senses.

In the meantime, from the time of the first visit of the officer, the knowledge of this awful revelation began to spread abroad and create a sensation of indignant horror throughout the whole town. On Friday morning hundreds of people had assembled before the convent, smashed all the windows, and crying, "Away with the nuns," had already broken into the interior, when a body of soldiers arrived in time to protect them. On Saturday the same thing was repeated, in spite of adjurations of the papers to the people to wait calmly. By the evening two detachments of soldiers had been called out, for the mob, which had swelled to 4,000 people, after doing what more mischief it could to the Carmelite Convent, went off to attack that of the Jesuits and that of the Franciscans. It was a critical hour for the whole monastic orders of Cracow.

The Jesuit rector was insulted, many Jesuits wounded with stones, and every pane of glass in the monastic house was broken to pieces. For these manifestations of their indignation an immense number of people have been arrested, but a large petition has been sent up to the Town Council to remove the Jesuits and Carmelites out of Cracow.

Far into Sunday morning the disturbances were still going on; later in the day the Lady Superior and her assistant were taken under a military escort to be kept in ward, in order to appease the people. Solders, however, still patrol the town.—Vienna (July 28) Correspondence of the London Times.

Freezing the Brain.

The great discovery that the brain of a living animal could be frozen, and afterwards could recover, was made by Dr. James Arnott, who solidified the brain of a pigeon by exposing it to a freezing mixture. Here research stopped, because with an ordinary freezing mixture it was not possible to act on individual parts of the organ; but the importance of the discovery is not the less on that account. It was a marvellous revealing. Think what it was? Here was a living organ of mind, a centre of power, of all guiding power, of all volition. It took in every motion of the universe to which it was exposed. It took in light and form and color by the eye; it took in sound by the ear; sensation and substance by the touch; odor by the nostril; and taste by the mouth; it gave out, in return or response, animal motion, expression—all else that demonstrates a living animal. With it the animal was an animal; without it the animal was turned into a mere vegetable. And this organ, the very centre and soul of the organism, was, by mere physical experiment, for a time made dead—all its powers ice-bound. And this organ, again set free, received its functions back again, and, as we know now by further observation, its functions unimpaired. Surely this was the discovery of a new world.—Dr. Richardson, F. R. S.

Freddy, a fair-haired youngster of four summers, the other day, after being for some time lost in thought, broke out thus: "Pa, can God do anything?" "Yes, dear." "Can he make a two-year colt in two minutes?" "Why, he would not wish to do that, Freddy." "But if he did wish to could he?" "Yes, certainly, if he wished to." "What! in two minutes?" "Yes, in two minutes." "Well, then, he wouldn't be two years old, would he?"

The Hebrews and Quakers have the most systematic arrangements for relieving their poor. Every Jewish synagogue has a committee of the most respectable members, whose business it is to become aquainted with the condition of every Hebrew in their district, and, if necessary, to afford assistance. The aged are pensioned, and the disabled placed in hospitals, or furnished with regular relief. As a result, the genuine broadbrim and Jewish nose is never seen at the world's back door begging cold victuals.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

INTERPRETATION.

MUCH is said about it; many are the charges made against it; but still each one seems to think that he has a perfect right to his own way, and perhaps if questioned about it will think he is very much abused. While talking with some men in a friendly way upon scriptural questions we find that they are very easy to get along with until a difference of opinion occurs; then look out. We were very much amused, a short time ago, with a conversation which took place between two parties who differed somewhat in opinion, and soon discovered the "Knock down" argument brought in; upon which one party began to "back out" by making blind statements, or in other words, statements with no sense at all in them, in order to discover whether his opponent really understood his own premises, or whether, in the highest sense of the word, he was prejudiced, and was completely surprised to find that even one of the wise ones only had a kind of a patched up theory, made up of extremely "old cloth," which nothing could protect from the mighty pull made upon it except such arguments as are fully calculated to "brow beat." Hear them: "You don't know nothing." (I wonder what, Br. Phelps would think of that?) "What makes you talk like that?" "There, don't twist the Scriptures like that." "Wouldn't snap my finger for all the religion you've got," etc.

But again: another charge is this, "Ah! when every thing is not according to their idea then the interpretation is wrong." It is said, that "People who live in glass houses must not throw stones." Suppose we look among the Advent preachers as a class. I am very much afraid that this failing would be found to apply to every one of them. It is but a little while ago that we heard one finding fault with "that comma" in Luke xxiii., 43, and then the "Rich man and Lazarus;" next a contention about "Rauch"—"Pneuma," etc., until we came to the conclusion that we had better set some one to work to prepare a new translation especially for us, (for it is very evident that King James did not get the right men together when he ordered the translation of the Scriptures into the English language to suit the varied wants of all people,) or else stop the continual battle of charges made against each other of unfairness in interpretation.

Said one, "We have a plain positive declaration in John that the dead must all be raised to life." But wait a moment, friend; did you say life? "Yes?" But I thought Adventists said that damnation, meant "Eternal death." "O! what is the use of talking like that? you have to twist the Scripture."

So it goes. I do not intend this article as proof of anything, but only to show how things work. Again. Rom. viii., 11 reads, "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall ALSO quicken your mortal bodies." Now what does it teach? First that Christ was raised from the dead, (physical death), i. e., from the grave, hades. Secondly, that if the Spirit of God dwell in you, he, or it shall ALSO, (now this little adverb is worth everything right here), quicken (make alive) your mortal bodies. We are told, by a recent writer, that the above text, all of it, relates to a quickening in this life from a state of deadness in sin. What! monstrous! can it be possible after all that we are mistaken? Says the Scripture, in so many words, Christ was raised from the dead. We have always supposed this meant what it says. But, says one, you are mistaken; you have been twisting the Scripture; it means that Christ was raised from a state of being dead in trespasses and sin. Like as he was raised, also—in like manner—ye shall be.

A Baptist minister told us, some time ago, that Christ died, "dead in trespasses and sin." We denied the charge, and do now repeat the denial; and we have no inclination whatever to turn back to orthodoxy at present.

Now, to our mind the 10th and 13th verses settle the whole matter. Let us see. "And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin." Not in sin: but, because "Death passed upon all men, for all have sinned." Consequently we must die. No escaping that, unless we are changed. "But the Spirit is life because of righteousness." "Then shall the spirit return to God who gave it;" not immortal, but "Hid with Christ in God; when Christ, who is our LIFE, shall appear, there shall ye also appear with him in glory." Now says the apostle, "But if the Spirit of him who raised up Jesus from the dead, (not spiritual death, but physical) dwell in you, he . . . shall ALSO," (ah, here we have it; i. e., in like manner, or likewise) "quicken"—or make alive—"your mortal bodies"—which are dead because of sin, not in sin. Some render "mortal bodies" "dead bodies." "Therefore"—here we have a conclusion drawn by the apostle—"Therefore, brethren, we are debtors not to the flesh to live after the flesh." Why? "For if ye do, ye shall die." How? morally or physically? "But if you, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the bod ye shall live." How? spiritually or really? The answer to the above questions will be given at once: really, or physically. Very well; but how do we so understand the Scripture? for here is a positive declaration that if ye do so and so "Ye shall live." What does this mean? Does it mean that we shall live and not die? No: for the apostle said we must die; we could not escape that. Well, then, something is lacking; let it be the translators or the interpreter that is at fault. As the sentence stands, it does positively declare that "Ye shall live." Now, if we had immortal souls we should have no trouble; for we could just say that the "Death that never dies" is meant; or, "Dead in trespasses and sins." But as we lay no claim to orthodoxy, we cannot take shelter under its wings, and are obliged to shift for ourselves; and says one of our Advent preachers, the text means that, "Ye shall live—again." O, that is it! Ah, I see! Ye shall live again after you are dead, if you do so and so. Granted: but let us see: "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die." But there was an addition made to the last clause of the verse by our friend. Please give us the same privilege. Nay more, we claim it, and put your addition together with our own and read—"For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die"—and not live again; "but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live"—again. Here we have the thesis and antithesis; both are plain; but we leave it.

Again. They are asked to produce one Scripture that will prove that a wicked man will live again. Says the opponent, "When you say challenge me, you challenge Christ." Very well; produce the text. "What did Christ mean when he said to Caiaphas, 'Ye shall see the Son of man . . . coming in the clouds of heaven?'" Why, I understand that Christ was being examined before the High Priest, and the high priest spoke for all; for, said he, "What need have WE (plural) of further witnesses?" But, says the opponent, "He means the high priest alone." (Lord deliver us from unreasonable men). Well, let it stand so; and please tell me, in turn, what does Christ mean when he says to his disciples, "When YE shall see these things come to pass." "O," says the opponent, "that's nothing: Jesus meant those that lived eighteen hundred years afterward." Wonderful! Why, I want to know? Well, I will give up. Indeed I supposed ye meant ye; but let it go for the present.

The men who charge others with inconsistency perhaps are guilty themselves. A volume might be written on the inconsistencies of men, all claiming the right of interpretation for themselves; but generally very unwilling to allow that right to others. We entreat all to give us the same privilege which they claim and so freely take; and remember, after all, we are but fallible men.

THE GOSPEL.

HAVING shown in a previous article, "On the Scope of God's Purpose in the Gospel of the Kingdom," that the gospel means good news, and always pertains to the kingdom which was prepared when the world was made, and which is now in rebellion, and which is to be restored to loyalty in the time of Restitution of all things, spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began; and having shown also, in another article, "On the Nature of that Kingdom," that it was prepared by Him whose work is perfect, and whose purposes change not; that in that preparation, the elements of the kingdom were distinctly brought out, and their objects definitely stated; that the earth was to be the place, and earthly men the subjects, and the law given to Adam was to be the law of the kingdom, and God who prepared it was to be the supreme Ruler; that this preparation was made for a perpetual kingdom, and that the reason why the preparation for this kingdom was made as it was made, will continue to be the reason why that arrangement will continue forever unchanged, I now propose to explain the gospel of this kingdom.

To understand the gospel, it is necessary to understand, not only the nature, but the condition of the kingdom to which it is applied. In considering my present subject I will notice: 1. That the kingdom is now in rebellion, and subject to the curse.

The punishment for transgressing the law of the kingdom was death, "Thou shalt surely die." Adam sinned. God explained his punishment, "Saying unto the woman, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children. And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it, cursed is the ground for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee . . . In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

To secure the execution of this penalty, the Lord excluded him from the tree of life, lest he should eat of it and live forever. When sin is finished it bringeth forth death. The end of sin is death. All the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died. He died so as not to live.

Paul applies this death to all men. "As by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom. v., 12.

Thus it is that Adam introduced rebellion into the world, and subjected himself and his posterity to the curse of the law. This is the present condition of the kingdom; and it is to this condition of the kingdom that the gospel pertains.

There must be a kingdom before there could be a rebellion. The rebellion must occur before the gospel could be needed. The gospel then, must have reference to the kingdom in its rebellious condition, and provide for its restitution to loyalty. The good news can be only in the direction of removing the curse. There can be no other good news possible. 2. My text comprehends the whole gospel.

This is shown by both the Old and New Testaments. It does not specify all the promises made to Abraham, but it comprehends them all. God made promise to Abraham, saying, "I will bless thee; and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xii., 3. This promise was confirmed by an oath to Abraham. "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, By myself have I sworn, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies. And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxii., 18.

This same promise was repeated and confirmed to Isaac: Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee; for unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," Gen. xxvi., 3, 4.

And to Jacob the Lord said, "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; and in thee, and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxviii., 13, 14.

This promise reveals God's purpose in the gospel, and is the foundation of the hopes of the prophets, Jesus Christ, and the apostles. It is on account of this promise, made to Abraham, and confirmed to Isaac and Jacob, that God is called the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.

The seed of this promise was to be blessed, and inherit the land promised to Abraham, and possess the gates of his enemies, and bless all the nations of the earth.

Concerning this seed the Lord swore unto David, saying, "I have made a covenant with my chosen. I have sworn unto David my servant. Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me." Psa. lxxxix., 3, 4, 36. The seed of Abraham and the seed of David are the same. "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David the son of Abraham." Matth. i., 1. He who is the Son of David is also the son of Abraham. Before Jesus was born, the angel said to Mary, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." This will be done in remembrance of his mercy, as he promised to Abraham and to his seed forever—to fulfil his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham. Luke i., 32, 55, 73. Christ was raised from the dead to fulfil the same promise. Acts xiii., 32; and he will sit upon the throne of David to fulfil the oath which God sware unto David. Acts ii., 30. "Now to Abraham and his seed was the promise made, which seed is Christ." Gal. iii., 16. Then all things pertaining to the life of Christ, and to the resurrection of Christ, were to fulfil the promise made to Abraham.

Paul preached the promise made to the fathers as the hope of God's people, saying, "When God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swear by himself. . . . Wherein God, willing swore abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things," (the promise and the oath) "in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us," in this promise and oath.

Paul says again, that this promise, which was confirmed by an oath, is the gospel. "And the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel to Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." Gal. iii., 8. Our text then, is the gospel. It comprehends all of God's purpose in relation to the kingdom. It is what Paul preached, and he says, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Gal. i., 8. Thus we are referred to the promise contained in our text as the gospel, by the authority of the whole of the New Testament. All that pertains to Christ is for the fulfilment of this promise; and all that is comprehended in the hope of God's people, is derived from this promise.

We come to our text, then, with all assurance from the word of God, that it is the gospel; that it comprehends all of God's purpose relative to this world, or his kingdom, which is now in rebellion. We stand upon this rock, as the immutable purpose of God according to the whole record. Let us brush away all the sand, that we may stand upon the naked rock. We are safe here, and here only are we safe.

The promise: What does it mean? Let us analyze it.

1. What are the elements of this promise? The seed, the nations, the earth, and the blessing. Each of these elements is essential to the promise. Without the seed the promise could not exist. Take away the nations, and no promise is left. Remove the earth and the foundation of the promise is gone. And leave out the blessing, and the object of the promise is gone. Hence the promise cannot exist without all of these elements. They make the promise. They must all stand or fall together. Then we are sure that the gospel comprehends the seed, the nations, the earth, and the blessing. We have not gone away from the promise. It must be so. The Seed represents that class who are to become the heavenly by a resurrection from the dead. The Nations represent all the inhabitants of the earth who are earthy, and who will always remain earthy beyond the resurrection of the seed. The Earth is the place where the nations live, and the Blessing is the work of the seed, or what they are to do.

The history of these four elements of the promise made to Abraham, is all that the Bible contains. There is nothing outside of it or beyond it. They must all continue as long as the promise is of force. The promise must be of force as long as the seed, the nations and the earth exist.

2. What relation do the elements of the promise sustain to each other?

The seed shall bless the nations of the earth. The relation of the elements to each other cannot be changed without destroying the promise. The seed must always bless the nations. The nations must always be blessed of the seed. The earth must always be the place where the nations live, and the blessing must always be the work of the seed in behalf of the nations.

3. What is the final end of this promise? What does God design to accomplish by it? What will be the condition of the world, or the kingdom, when its final end shall be reached?

1.) All the nations of the earth shall be blessed. This is what shall be done. This is the very object for which the promise was made. Is there nothing better than this contemplated in the promise? Nothing better. This will be the final condition of the nations, or inhabitants of the earth. They will always be the inhabitants of the earth, or earthy inhabitants. They will be blessed in the highest sense of blessing. The wrongs, the suffering, the death, and the curse, which now afflict them, will afflict them no more. Every possible annoyance will be removed. Instead of being cursed as now they will be blessed with all the prosperity spoken of by the mouth of the prophets, as long as God's purpose in the gospel endures. This is the final thing promised in the gospel. 2.) This end will be accomplished by the seed of Abraham.

It is the seed that is to bless the nations. The seed will fulfil the promise made to Abraham, and the oath which he sware unto David. It is the seed that will effect the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets. Thus, we have found in our analysis of the text.

(1.) That the promise contains fonr elements, which are essential to the existence or validity of the promise; that they can neither be increased nor diminished without destroying the promise; that all the elements must stand or fall together; that the elements must exist as long as the promise is of force, and that the promise must be of force as long as the seed, the nations, the earth and the blessing exist.

(2.) That these elements mnst always sustain the same relation to each other that they do in the promise, and that they cannot be changed without destroying the promise.

(3.) That the final thing in the promise is, that all the nations of the earth shall be blessed. These nations being composed of earthy inhabitants.

(4.) That the means of blessing the nations, will be the seed of Abraham. The seed will be made "the heavenly" before they will commence to do this great work.

4. Will this promise ever be changed?

Never. It is one of the immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie. His purpose as expressed in the promise will stand. He will not lie unto Abraham or unto David.

5. Does this Gospel meet the necessity of the kingdom, which is now in rebellion, and under the curse?

It does. The time was when there was no rebellion in the kingdom. This promise assures us that the time will come when all nations shall be restored to loyalty, and be blessed, and serve him. The time was when there was no curse in the kingdom. This promise assures us that the time will come when there will be no more curse in it, but blessing. Then this promise is truly the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.

Is there any better thing described in the Bible than that all the nations of the earth shall be blessed?

Is there any other way provided to bless the nations, than by the seed of Abraham?

THE FATE OF PAPAL ROME.

BUT how foully has she fallen! Well might St. John, as he beheld, be confounded with a great amazement! "A city of blood" is she in very deed. Drunken with blood, with the blood of the saints, the martyrs of Jesus. We have read the sad details of the persecutions of Pagan Rome, of the cruelties of Nero, Domitian, Diocletian, Julian, and others of infamous renown. But where Pagan Rome hath slain her thousands, she of the Papacy hath slain her tens of thousands. Bear witness ye martyrs of Piedmont; ye Vaudois, ye Albigenses, illustrious heroes in the annals of the human race. Attest, ye scathing flames, ye tormenting racks of most refined cruelty. Ye murderers of the Inquisition, Jehovah is about to make inquisition for the blood of his slain!

Torquemada, who held the office of Inquisitor-General for fourteen years, used to make his boast that he had burned alive with august and solemn pomp, no fewer than six thousand heretics. The execrable Duke of Alva glorified himself in having butchered thirty-six thousand in the Netherlands, who had committed no other crime than protesting faith in Jesus. By the auto-da-fé of the Spanish Inquisition there perished by deaths of untold horrors, one hundred and fifty thousand of the noble confessors of Jesus. How shall we recount the horrors of St. Bartholomew's Eve, or of the Irish massacre in 1641. One million bled in France, a million more in Spain! and in other nations thousands, myriads more. These are thy noble witnesses, thou King of kings. They shall not be forgotten of thee! The city of blood is about to come into remembrance before thee, and receive at thy holy hand double for all her sin.

Where is Popery in this last drama? Behold the harlot in her shame! For twelve hundred and sixty years has she played her part, decked out in meretricious tawdriness, alluring the world to ruin, death, hell. Behold her sad career during the last twelve hundred and sixty days!

Her end is very nigh; widespread is the impression that Pio Nono is to be the very last of the Popes. We are told that, of the numerous niches in the walls of St. Peter's at Rome, made for the reception of the statues of the Popes, only one remains to be filled up. Filled up also is the cup of her iniquities, even to overflowing, and her time is short, very short. All agree that she hath well-nigh filled up the measure of her days; her twelve hundred and sixty years of crime. This merciless murderess, foremost among persecutors, is about to be repaid with full requital, with Jehovah's "double," for all her sins. Soon shall the shrill trumpet utter forth its clarion call. The monster dragon, by whose power she hath asserted her universal catholic pre-eminence, shall cast off the queenly rider, and plunge her headlong into ruin and woe. Volcanic fires shall do Jehovah's bidding. Vesuvius is very nigh; Ætna is not far away; volcanic agency is at work in the doomed land around the last great metropolis. Subterranean fires even now are sapping and mining the foundations. There shall be earthquakes in divers places premonitory of woe. There shall be most strange commotions of the sea. At length the pent-up fires of earth, stored up for this, the day of Jehovah's anger, shall burst forth, and what was but yesterday, the sumptuous, luxurious mart of commerce, the giant metropolis of the world, filled with life, with wealth, with crime, shall be a huge blazing mass of ruin, vomited forth as a most loathsome thing from the crater of a strange volcano; and cities far away shall totter at her fall. The waters of the Mediterranean Sea, but lately cerulean, clear, to a third of its breadth, are strewn with wreck, with gory carcasses, "even as the blood of a dead man." Its harbors, but yesterday filled with the iron fleets of remote lands, freighted with supplies—those harbors are now surging with boiling billows "incarnadined" with death. Alas! alas! for that great city! She shall indeed come into the remembrance of an avenging God. Her golden cup shall become a cup of trembling, a vial of unmixed wrath. Instead of wine, this cup is filled with blood. Instead of mirth and revelries, are confusion and trembling; and then, in one hour, a crash of irretrievable ruin. Alas! for the panic-stricken world! Dreadful shall be the consternation; loud shall be the wail. But louder still shall be the shout of victory, the prolonged acclaim of the Lord's redeemed. The crimsoned waves shall roll into the deep the carcasses of the many slain, stricken down by the arrows of the Lord; a sea of death shall settle over that great city, that has been guilty as Sodom, and abandoned as Gomorrah. Thus terribly shall Babel fall. In an hour her plagues come; in one hour shall her magnificence be despoiled, her marvellous riches be brought to nought; in one hour shall the populous, the luxurious city become an utter desolation. She shall expiate her witchcrafts by being burned alive on the pyre of her magnificence, and none shall deliver her. Then shall be chanted forth this strain from an ancient lay:

> "In a moment, in one day,
> Come upon thee these two things—
> Childlessness and widowhood;
> According to their perfection,
> They have come unto thee.
> In the multitude of thy sorceries,
> In the exceeding might of thy charms,
> Come on thee doth evil;
> Thou knowest not its rising:
> Desolation cometh on thee suddenly;
> Thou knowest not."

Loud and widespread shall be the lamentation upon earth during the brief remnant of the time of the end. "Weeping and wailing they shall cry, Alas! alas! for that great city. Wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of costliness, for in one hour shall she be made desolate."

> "Rejoice over her, thou heaven;
> Ye prophets and holy apostles;
> Your blood hath Jehovah avenged."

Direful have been the alarm notes of these trumpets of warning. Terrific have been the outpourings of these apocalyptic vials of woe. Say not that any such can ever have been poured out upon this world of ours during the past dispensation of mercy and salvation. Nay, rather, they are the skirmishers of Jehovah's fierce army of sore judgments; the prelude of the world's catastrophe; the inauguration of the great and terrible day of the wrath of the Lamb.—The Rainbow.

LIVING EXISTENCE.

WE take the following extract from the work of Rev. Edward White on "LIFE IN CHRIST," of which we spoke last week in our remarks on the movement of the English mind on the Life question. Mr. White says:

It would be endless to enumerate the passages of Scripture in which the bestowment of Life is declared to be the grand object of the constitution of Christ's mysterious person; and of his death and resurrection. "God so loved the world as to give his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but should have everlasting life." "I give unto my sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish; neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life."

Now we trust it will not be thought too much to observe, that this great distinguishing title of THE LIFE-GIVER harmonizes, in a very remarkable manner, with the doctrine, that in Adam the world lost its prospects of immortality. The result of being driven out from the Tree of life to Adam, was not merely unhappiness, but physical dissolution; and therefore it seems to be only carrying out the analogy, if we suppose that the life which the Redeemer bestows is the opposite of the physical death which trangression brought in. If mankind already possessed, through the Divine constitution, the attribute of everlasting life, if every man were by nature immortal, it cannot be admitted in the proper sense of the term, that the Messiah was the Prince of life and the author of immortality. His title, as the Life of Men, must be understood as being applicable to him only in a metaphorical sense, as the giver of happiness, without any reference whatever to eternal life properly so called. But when we recollect that the gospel itself is ever represented not merely as an instrument for operating on mind, but for regenerating, recovering, and redeeming the entire dissolved human nature (see Rom. viii., 23), we seem obliged to refer this appellation of Christ to his character as the restorer of that eternal life to the world which consists in the everlasting existence and conjunction of body and soul.

That this, the plain and natural signification of the term, was really intended by the Spirit of God, appears further from the connection in which it first occurs. The Apostle John fixes the meaning of life to its literal sense, when he introduces the statement—"in him was life"—by declaring that "all things were made by him," clearly with the view of intimating, not that he was the fountain of happiness merely, or of holiness—but of existence; that with him was the fountain of life. The terms likewise repeatedly used in contrast with the life-giving grace of Christ Jesus, add fresh force to the conviction that literal life, vital being, is intended. "The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy; I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." (John x., 10.) And again,—"That he that believeth in him should not perish, but should have everlasting life."

From John C. Bailey.

Lynn, Mass., Aug., 1869.

Br. Storrs: I have for some time contemplated stating what I will do to help publish the Herald of Life another year, if time continues. I have to say, "if time continues," because I believe we are living in a time when we may expect the immediate return of our Lord and Saviour, he that is to ransom the sleeping saints from the power of the grave, and change the living ones from mortal to immortality. Oh what a glorious thought seems to fill my whole being when I contemplate being for ever with Jesus and all the apostles and prophets. And here passes through my mind, while writing and thinking of that glorious state of things, the question, Shall I be there? have I that Spirit dwelling in me that raised up Jesus from the dead, without which there is no promise of a future life, or of a resurrection? But, thank God, I have that Spirit witnessing with mine that I am his and he is mine; and when he who is our Life shall appear I shall appear with him in glory. Thank God for this hope; and I feel I can with all my heart adopt the language of the Poet—

"Fly, lingering moments, fly, oh fly,
Dear Saviour quickly come."

I am deeply interested in this, to me, important doctrine of "No Life out of Christ." For it sets the character of God forth so gloriously that one cannot help exclaiming, in the language of the Bible, "God is Love." I am also in favor of publishing the Herald of Life, for which I will do all in my power. I purpose, by God's help, to send you $5 in three months, and another $5 three months after, and more if I possibly can. I feel that it must be sustained, as it is the only source through which we, as believers in the Life views, can communicate and exchange thoughts with one another. We do not really appreciate the value of such a paper as we should if its weekly visits were to cease, and it pass away. I say to all who are interested, take hold: send the needful funds, that truth may be scattered, some good done, and God's name be glorified.

Your Br. in Christ, expecting deliverance soon.

Camp-Meeting in Maine.

There will be a camp-meeting in north Herman, Me., in James Emmerson's grove, east side of the Euenew road, to commence Sept. 13, and hold over the Sabbath. We hope there will be one more general gathering of the brethren in Maine. Come with your tents and bedding. Board and provisions can be obtained, for man or beast, on or near the ground at reasonable rates. Those coming from the west, by boat or railroad, should come to Bangor. The distance from Bangor to the camp-ground is five or six miles, and there will probably be conveyance. The preaching Brn., who may come by boat or railroad, should write Liberty Waterbee, Bangor, who will see them fowarded to the camp-ground. This meeting is to be a free one, without regard to sect or party; there will be no dictating to Brethren what they shall preach, or shall not preach; but it will be left with them and the Lord.

Now Brn. and Sisters, come in the Spirit and with the understanding, come to labor for God: come to greet one another again: and if we cannot all see "eye to eye" now, we will labor on till we all come into the unity of the Faith.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 1, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear nnder what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote there or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

A Few Words to our Patrons.

By the time this paper reaches our subscribers, we shall be on our way to, or be at the sixth anniversary of the "Life and Advent Union;" possibly, on our return before it reaches some of our distant ones. We know many will be anxious to hear the result of our meeting; but we shall be obliged to delay spreading it before them till week after next; so they will not look for the Herald of Life again till then. If a delay of one week is painful to you, how would you feel if discontinued altogether? It cannot be carried on unless its friends use their efforts to extend its circulation by procuring subscribers and the funds essential to that end.

How soon the years roll around; to think, six have passed away since under the "Chestnut Tree," in an open field, a few of the friends of "Life only in Christ" resolved in reliance on God to have a weekly paper in which their views could find a channel to other minds, and to cheer their own hearts; this grand enterprise was entered on, with both hopes and fears. Notwithstanding the trials we have passed through, fro m some causes, yet through the abounding goodness and mercy of God the paper has been kept right on its way. A few, who were prominent at the outset, have retired for some reason; but their retirement has not retarded, perceptibly, the onward course of the enterprise set on foot six years since; and we have to say, "Thus far, the Lord hath helped us." To Him be all the honor and praise.

The experience of the past has taught the friends of the Herald of Life to rely more fully on God for aid and direction than on any human agency, however desirable such agency may be. The Lord has given help and strength even in the most trying hours of the Herald's life; nor has it seemed to falter for the want of needful help, pecuniary or otherwise. The time however has come when additional help and energy should be employed in the department of the Tract enterprise, connected with the issue of the Herald. The labor in this department has greatly increased in the last eighteen months; and the call for tracts imposes a labor on the Editor from which he ought to be relieved, that he may devote his time and strength exclusively to his proper editorial duties.

For this purpose a tract fund should be raised sufficient to enable the "Board of Managers" to employ a suitable person in that work; who could also keep the books and attend to the mailing department in general.

The Editor thanks his friends for the generous manner in which they have borne with his faults and sustained him in his work. Years are multiplying on him; and you will be the judges whether he shall continue to labor in the position he has occupied, or in some less responsible one. May the Lord direct both him and the "Union" to that course which shall best promote the "Life and Advent" cause.

Many thousands of Tracts have gone from our office the year past, sold or given away; and all done at a trifling cost to the "Union;" none, in fact, of its funds have been used for that purpose excepting about $200 paid Br. Burbank; and nearly half of this sum was for aiding in the mailing department of the Herald.

The reports from such as have bought tracts, or who have received them gratuitously, are such as to inspire us with courage in our work. But even if this were not so, we should be animated by the love of the truth, which has so comforted and supported us, to press on the work with greater earnestness and zeal, that our heavenly Father's name may be "hallowed"—reverenced, honored, adored, and loved: that the reproach, which has for centuries been heaped on His blessed name by the "traditions of men," may be rolled off, and glory be ascribed to God and the Lamb for the wondrous love and kindness that have so long borne with our ignorance and past false notions of man's nature and his Maker's designs concerning him.

Temptations.—Temptations, when we meet them, at first, are, as the lion that roared upon Sampson; but, if we overcome them, the next time we meet them, we shall find a nest of honey in them.—Bunyan.

The Theology of the Age.

Cedar Falls, Iowa, August, 1869.

Br. Storrs: Inclosed please find a sample of the theology that is most popular. It is from "Cedar Falls Gazette."

I have been a constant reader of your paper, the Herald of Life, for nearly two years, and feel that I have been greatly benefited and instructed, and am firmly convinced that you have the truth on your side. Yours, in hope of eternal life. C. Bozarth.

THE LIVING SOUL.

Geo. H. Grindon, in one of his masterly efforts, says of the death and burial of man: "As the soul is the man, and the material body only his house while upon the earth, a man is never really buried! No human being since the beginning of the world has ever yet been buried, no, not even for a few minutes. Buried! How can a living soul be buried? Man is where his conscious being is—his memory, his love, his imagination; and since that cannot be put in the grave, the man is never put there. So far from being our last home, the grave is not a home at all, for we are never laid in it or go near it. Happy the day when all shall learn that corpses of the departed are no more than relinquished garments of living men and women—temples of God, in which divine service is over and finished, the chanting hushed, the aisles deserted, and to be contemplated with as little terror and revolting as we gaze at the silent walls of some ruined cathedral."

It is about time orthodoxy had its eyes open to the blasphemy of its theory about souls. If such statements as the above are not the rankest infidelity, we beg to how what is. Saith Paul, "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures; and was seen," etc. 1 Corth. xv., 3–5.

Saith the above blasphemer, "No human being since the beginning of the world has ever yet been buried; no, not even for a few minutes." There gentlemen, immortal-soulists, do you see who the "Infidels" are now? Behold the legitimate fruits of your theory! It directly gives Paul the lie. "The soul is the man . . . a man is never really buried," saith this blasphemer.

Such is the legitimate conclusion from the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the human soul. It tears down the whole Christian fabric; the "first" principles of the religion of Jesus Christ are set at naught by it; for if "the man Christ Jesus" was not buried, then He was not dead, and the scripture is false which saith, "Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin," and "He hath poured out his soul unto death;" yea, "He made his grave with the wicked," etc. Isa. liii., 9–12.

This is not all which such blasphemy does; for Christ himself is convicted of deception—not to say lying—for He saith, "I am he that was dead:" Rev. i., 18. Now, He never was dead, according to this immortal-soul theory: He never was "buried"—He never came up out of "the grave," for, saith this blasphemy, "the man is never put there." Thus Christ practised deception on his disciples and the "five hundred" witnesses who saw Him "at once," after His resurrection; and they all, by being deceived themselves, have been deceiving the world and practising a system of lying, by which multitudes have been led to believe that Christ did really die, and that "He was buried;" when in fact it was no such thing! It was only a grand deception palmed off on the world by some knave to deceive the people! And all this is done, or practised, to keep on its legs the father of all deceptions, viz., inherent immortality; or, an immortal soul in man: a doctrine unknown to the Bible, and without a solitary text in support of it.

But we are not yet done with this blasphemy. If Christ was not buried, neither did He die; and not only are the apostles "found false witnesses of God," but there is no deliverance from the consequences of sin; and the whole race of Adam are doomed to "eternal damnation;" and if damnation is "eternal torture," all, yes all the souls of men are doomed to experience it.

Thus immortal-soulism lands us all in eternal torments, and there is no escape. "The man Christ Jesus" did not die, is the legitimate teaching of the theory; for that was impossible; and He could not have been "buried," of course, if He did not die; and as the Scriptures represent, in the Old Testament by its types and other testimony, and in the New Testament by facts, pretended to be such, and various testimony, that our deliverance from the curse of the law all depends on the death and resurrection of the Christ; and as immortal-soulism maintains that He did not really die, and was not really buried, and therefore had no real resurrection, all men must be damned eternally; and as that damnation is eternal torments, according to the immortal-soul theory, there is nothing remains to the human family but to make the best they can of this life; to "eat and drink and be merry," for there is no escape from eternal torture hereafter, if inherent immortality is the truth! Thus we are brought into universal damnation by the theory of Mr. Grindon and his colaborers, who attempt to prove that a man's soul, or the man himself, cannot die—never does die—never can be buried, and of course never can have a resurrection! and all hope excited for the future by the Bible, is a delusion, a deception, a mere mockery of the poor children of Adam!

These teachers of inherent immortality have rung the changes about our "infidelity," who believe all future life and immortality is the purchase of Christ's death and resurrection; and now the time has come to turn the batteries of eternal truth on their stronghold and charge home on them that they are the real infidels; and these preachers of "another gospel," which Paul did not preach, come under the malediction of the apostle when he says, "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Gal. i., 8, 9.

Immortal Soul a Pagan Notion.

"The Independent" of this city has opened a column under the head of "Current Religious Views," stating that it does not hold itself "responsible for the soundness of the opinions."

The [German] Reformed Church Monthly contains an article on "The Middle State," from which we make the following extract:

"I read the funeral discourse on Mr. Buchanan, by Dr. Nevin, with much interest, and feel strongly impressed to make a few remarks about it; and, in doing so, I shall commence at the top of the tree and come down.

"In the last part of the discourse, Dr. Nevin declares that 'Christianity' knows nothing of the immortality of the soul,' and that 'it is a pagan view—Platonism at best.' This agrees precisely with the views which I have held, for some time, as the true doctrine of the Bible; yet for this I was branded as a heretic by some, and an infidel by others.

"Dr. Nevin's treatise on the Apostle's Creed contains the following sentence: 'The immortality of the soul, as it is called, in the common sense of the doctrine, is not taught in the Bible; on the contrary, it is heathenish, and tends to subvert the fundamental idea of Christianity.' [See Nevin on the Creed, page 66.]

"This one thing then appears plain to Dr. Nevin, and I agree with him on this point, viz., That no immortality is taught in the Bible until the resurrection of the dead takes place. But then according to the second division of the funeral discourse, he says: 'Between death and the resurrection all is awful and mysterious; even with the light of revelation we are bewildered and confounded, when we attempt to picture to ourselves the condition of our departed friends.' 'Where they are,' he continues, 'the Bible does not say, and we cannot tell.'"

"Our readers need not be told, of course, that these views of the state of departed saints until the resurrection are entirely at variance with the doctrine of the Catechism and the established faith of the church. Dr. Nevin does not claim for them any ecclesiastical authority. They are offered simply as private speculations. How he and his disciples will reconcile the indulgence of such private opinions with their very exalted theory of the church is hard to guess."

Remarks by the Editor of the Herald of Life.—The above shows that the question of inherent immortality is being somewhat agitated among the "orthodox" community. What mind, that calmly and without prejudice examines the question, can come to any other conclusion than that arrived at by Dr. Nevins we cannot see, viz., that "Christianity knows nothing of the immortality of the soul," and that "it is a pagan view—Platonism at best." It is paganism, baptised and tacked on to Christianity by some of the Roman Popes with the aid of their councils, and forced on Protestantism (though Martin Luther fought against it for a time) through fear that the Popish church would load Protestantism with the reproach of "no-soulism."

Thus Protestants submitted to be loaded down with that Roman and Pagan incubus which has shorn them of their strength, and brought in the scourge of Christendom, "Spiritism," which goes on in the strength of this corruption of Christianity; a corruption which was essential to the life and being of Romanism, but which is every day paralyzing Protestantism, and will be found to destroy its power in suppressing or overcoming the various forms of error spreading in the land, and prevent its advocates from making inroads on Romanism or Heathenism. See the article in Herald of Life of Aug. 18, by Rev. Edward White, on its effects on Missionary labors among the heathen.

"Will the Wicked be Raised from the Dead?" a tract "By Elder J. S. White," and issued by the "Advent Christian Publication Society: Boston."

We love and respect Br. White; but his effort in the above direction, at present, needs no other reputation than its own statements. Enough will be found in it, when compared with works issued from this office, to show the untenable positions taken by its author. We "do not think that" we would "be much in the dark," if we were now to say, "The method of interpreting Scripture on which this theory"—of the resurrection of the wicked dead—"depends, unsettles all faith in the Bible, and saps the foundation of Christianity."

"The Age of Murder."

The above is the title of a 16 page tract, by Eld. D. T. Taylor, Rouse's Point, N. Y., sent us by the author. It is full of statistics showing the terrible and alarming increase of murder and crimes generally, indicating that we are fast approaching that period spoken of before the flood, viz., "the whole earth was filled with violence." Gen. vi.

In a single week in January, 1853, there were eight murders in New York City. In 1856 only eleven homicides were reported, but the next year the number leaped up to fifty-five. In 1858 there were inquests held over the bodies of forty-nine murdered persons, but the whole number who met violent deaths in the city that year was seventy-nine. In 1859 there were sixty murders, and in all this time only one murderer was hung. In 1860 there were one hundred and three (103) inquests over murdered persons in the city, while the arrests for crime were sixty-eight thousand eight hundred and ninety, (68,890,) of whom only three thousand nine hundred and seventy-three (3,973) were convicted on trial and punished—the remainder who were guilty, escaped justice to pursue a career of crime. Only a year or two later it was announced in the journals that over seventy murderers lay in the prisons of New York City, either awaiting trial or under sentence of death. Neither Paris, with its population of two millions, (2,000,000,) nor any other city in the Christian and civilized world was declared to have an equal number. It was said that this fact was "startling;" the "spirit of Cain it seemed had descended on the island;" "who could explain the dreadful problem?" In ten years, from 1859 to 1868, inclusive, there were in the city, five hundred and thirty-two (532) known deaths by violence, while in thirteen years previous to 1868, there were one hundred and sixty-five (165) murders committed in the city, the perpetrators of which have never been discovered. "Make a chain, for the land is full of bloody crimes, the city is full of violence." Ezek. vii., 23.

A New York paper of 1869 says: "During the past nine years there have been eight hundred and five thousand one hundred and forty-nine (805,149) persons arrested by our police, and that does not by any means indicate that this nearly a million, were a tenth of those who in the time named were drunk and disorderly, and committed often the entire list of crimes." In February, 1858, the New York Observer spoke in an alarming strain of the uninterrupted course and increase of crime, and said, "Is this state of things to continue?—then we may fearfully apprehend the future." Five years earlier than this, in 1853, the Hartford Courant of April declared, "It is a lamentable fact that crime throughout the country is on the increase. Murders for the mere purpose of plunder, highway robberies, and burglaries, are much more common now than they were forty years ago, and have increased in a ratio greater than the increase in the number of the inhabitants." Such was the constant testimony relating both to city and country. Sixteen years ago, in 1853, the children trained in crime, the receivers of stolen goods, gamblers, beggars, drunkards, habitual tipplers, thieves, and profligate persons of New York City were estimated at one hundred and fifty-three thousand, (153,000) a terrible army when compared with the sixty-four thousand (64,000) which make up the total of Protestant communicants there, "a greater number in proportion to the population than in London," said a city paper while deploring these facts.

As to the causes producing this fearful increase of crime, Eld. Taylor dwells on two, viz., "novel-reading and intemperance." On the first of these the facts are appalling; but on the second still more so. We have room only for the following statement:

In 1850 the value of the spirituous and malt liquors produced in the United States was twenty-one and a-half millions of dollars ($21,500,000.) In 1860 this sum had nearly doubled, it being forty-one and a-half millions ($41,500,000.) Only seven years later, in 1867, the number of gallons of intoxicating liquors manufactured amounted to two hundred and forty millions ($240,000,000,) or about six gallons per year to each and every man, woman and child in the United States. In this last brief interval of years the distilleries had increased from one thousand one hundred and ninety-tree (1,193) in 1860, to three thousand (3,000) in 1867. These drugged and damnable liquids, together with others imported were, it is well known, according to the report of Commissioner Wells, made out from the sworn returns sent in to him, sold at retail during the year, for the gigantic sum of one billion, four hundred and eighty-three millions, four hundred and ninety-one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-five dollars, ($1,483,491,865.) Such being the sum expended for drinks of this kind in a single year ending June 30, 1867, we have here, in part, the secret of the Age of Murder; the horrible figures and facts which underlie the Carnival of Crime with which the whole land is being flooded and desolated. Indeed, the New York Tribune of November 18, 1868, goes further and makes the yearly loss to the whole country by the use and abuse of intoxicating drinks to be equal to "two billions, two hundred and fifty millions of dollars, ($2,250,000,000,) or considerably more than the interest-bearing portion of the national debt." Have the people in this land looked these figures in the face?

As the result of this general drunkenness, Hall's Journal of Health a few years since stated that of six thousand (6,000) persons tried in one year before the New York Court of Sessions, only ninety-four (i. e. one in sixty-three) were sober when arrested. Senator Henry Wilson recently declared in public that we have now five hundred thousand (500,000) drunkards in the country; and Mr. Murray, whose address is already quoted from, with a terrible earnestness, declares: "Bear me witness if I exaggerate when I say that the country is rapidly becoming one vast grog-shop, to which half a million of its youth are yearly introduced and over whose threshold sixty thousand are annually carted to a drunkard's grave." With these facts before us it is easy to see that a desperate and fearful struggle is at hand. Will the Christianity of this age, the moral conscience of the country, meet and defeat this tidal wave of hell? We shall see.

In conclusion, Eld. Taylor says:

It is our solemn conviction that this Carnival of Crime, this Age of Murder, this sad era, when a country of nearly forty millions of free and enlightened people has become one vast grog-shop, this overflowing wickedness of the careless multitudes, is the predicted iniquity which in the waning years of time was to come to its full tide,—and that the Last Days with all their foretold deluge of evil are upon the world, and that the coming of the Lord is very near. And it is our deliberate opinion that the crimes of this last age are provoking the most terrific divine judgments on cities and countries, and that before long there will be such calamities and catastrophes in the earth as will cause the ears of men to tingle when they hear the tale. The Judge has said, "As it was in the days of Noah so shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed;" and in Noah's time, just anterior to the world's destruction, not only was man's heart given to continual sin and evil, but this inward evil overflowed until "the whole earth was filled with violence," Gen. vi.

Redeeming Features.

I listened to-day to a very interesting Sermon at the Methodist Camp-meeting, near this place, upon Rom. viii., 18. "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." The discourse was delivered by Rev. Mr. Pottle, of Portland. I do not know how far he would admit the position taken by some of his Brn. or how much he would be willing to say in defence of the position which he really took, but for the time, certainly, I could respond with the most hearty Amens to what he said.

Little did I think when he began and as he went on, that we should have the doctrine of "Life only in Christ" from the stand of the great Camp-meeting. It was especially gratifying that so vast an audience should have heard that the glory that shall be revealed in us is to be secured by the "dead hearing the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear should live;" for this the speaker quoted; and also, and with great effect, the language of Paul, that the body, sown a natural body, and raised a spiritual body, is the man—the identical individual. Then followed the other language of Paul "Sown in dishonor, raised in glory." "Sown in corruption, raised in incorruption." Here was a glory to be revealed in us, really and truly. It was good to hear him. Then how was the glory to appear? by the likeness or image of Christ. Then came the great passage from the apostle, with appropriate remarks, "Who shall change their vile bodies that they may be fashioned like his glorious body." This was to be the revelation of an unspeakable and real glory in the church of God. This is the resurrection from the dead; because he had obtained the glory, the saints should have it.

I will do the gentleman justice. He believes in the existence of the spirit, between death and the resurrection; but he did not attempt to place the revelation of the glory in that. He did speak of the glory of dying as a Christian, as well as the glory of the Christian experience; but most beautifully did he urge the resurrection of the dead, and the image of Christ or those raised, as the great manifestation of glory.

Again without a doubt he believes in the resurrection of the wicked; but that conviction did not interfere with his argument.

He was followed by a Mr. Foster, who dwelt earnestly on the physical image of the Son of God upon the saints in the kingdom.

I drank it all down; but still I heard the P. E. say, after they had sung, "we will gather at the river, Paul is over there now—he has the glory." Most believe that little song refers to the river of life; but he made it Jordan. I don't see how Paul can be glorified without his crown; and he said his crown was awaiting him at the appearing of Christ and his Kingdom; when all that love his appearing will be glorified too.

THE TWO SEEDS.

"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed."—Gen. iii., 15.

THE seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent—Who are they?

It may not seem hard for us to decide who are the seed of the woman; while it may seem much harder to tell who are the seed of the serpent.

But we think when we have found the seed of one, we shall have little trouble in finding the seed of the other.

Now while we may not be allowed to say that both of these seeds are the woman's seed, still we must be allowed to find both seeds among her descendants, or we must despair of finding them at all. The chief trouble with us, in finding this seed of the serpent, is, that we will think this serpent is something more than a figure: and if we do so think we shall fail to see, as we should, the thing this figure is given to represent.

After all that is said of his "subtlety," of his being a "beast," and yet speaking of his going on his "belly" and eating "dust," etc., still we must be careful that we have no tangible thing formed in our minds, for a figure is but a symbol, and has nothing real or tangible about it. The tangibility is found alone in the thing represented. Now, if this serpent is but a figure—a shadow—what then is the real thing? we answer;—evil,—sin, which is the transgression of God's law, all morally wrong doing; all "the works of the flesh." But it will be said, these are as intangible as is the serpent figure seen above. Yes, until we go farther in our argument. But whenever evil is spoken of, there is an evil-doer presented to the mind. When we speak of sin, we think at once of a sinner; and so of all wrong we think of the wrong-doer.

So we have found something tangible at last; and are they not human beings? wicked men and women? transgressors of clearly spoken or written law? and are not these the descendants of the first woman, named in our text, at the same time that they are the only real or tangible seed of the serpent? i. e., they are the seed of that of which the serpent is a figure. And as we have seen above he is a figure to represent evil, sin, and that the only tangible forms of sin or evil are evil doers,—sinners; and so these are the seed of evil when the thing is carried through.

"I will put enmity between thee and the woman." To whom was this spoken? Was it spoken to any one that could hear and understand? God was speaking to the serpent, one may say. Not so, say we; for this serpent is but a figure. Could God speak to a figure? We say, he was not speaking to one who could not understand: but rather for the instruction and encouragement of such as could understand. These words were spoken to bring to our knowledge God's gracious purposes concerning the woman and the evil before which she had just fallen.

"And between thy seed and her seed will I put enmity." If we have found who these different seeds are, then we know who they are between whom God has put enmity; and if we are not fully certain who these are, it will be a help to us if we can find two classes of persons between whom there exists an enmity very marked.

Cain and Abel were brothers, sons of the woman we have now in our thoughts. Was there a marked enmity between them? and did God "put" it there? and if so, how? God's language to one of them on a certain occasion, was. "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? but if not well, sin lieth at the door." Cain "was of that wicked one, and slew his brother." He was of evil; the seed of the serpent. He might have "done well," and so been the seed of the woman as his brother was. But, as it was, there was enmity between these brothers—put there by God. But how? We answer: God can put this enmity between two persons in no other way than by giving to each a law, a rule of action, which law, if one shall keep and the other shall not, then this enmity is at once seen to exist. This is just what inspiration has said of these two brothers: "Wherefore slew he him? Because his own deeds were wicked and his brother's righteous."

Here, then, is, seen the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, with the enmity "put" between them.

If we think of the Saviour, who was emphatically, "The seed of the woman," and ask with whom was he in painful conflict all his days? and for whom? the answer will be, with the seed of the serpent, and for the seed of the woman. Who sought his life when an infant? The seed of the serpent. Not the seed of the figure serpent, for then we might say he was carried into Egypt lest he should be destroyed by literal serpents. But no, it was Herod and his subjects which "sought the young child's life." These then were the seed of the serpent, and not the seed of the woman, though they were all her descendants, most certainly.

This same enmity exists now between two classes of the woman's descendants "put between" them as seen above: and of this enmity the Saviour has spoken thus: "Suppose ye that I am come to send peace on earth? I tell ye nay, but rather division: for, from henceforth there shall be five in one house, divided three against two, and two against three, . . . and a man's foes shall be those of his own household."

Here again are seen the two seeds dwelling in the same family, and they are men and women; all descendants of the first pair.

Now what shall we say of Mother Eve? Is she lost? If so, then God has not fulfilled his promise to put enmity between her and the serpent, i. e., evil. But if this promise is fulfilled, then she is reckoned on the side of her seed, and not with the serpent's seed or the seed of evil-doers. God claims the woman and her seed as his, in contradistinction from the seed of evil.

This evil seed shall finally be destroyed; all evil and evil doers shall one day cease to be.

Now; if we have fully in our minds the truths which God designed to teach us by this figure serpent, then we shall think and speak less of the figure and think only of the glorious truths the heart-cheering realities here so beautifully conveyed to us.

PAUL AND THE RESURRECTION.

PAUL was charged with heresy by his accusers. In making his defence, he confessed that after the way which they called heresy he worshipped the God of his fathers, "believing all things written in the law and in the prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."

Now, in my mind Paul had no idea of teaching a revival into life of both classes, for the very reason that he was accused of something his accusers did not believe, and this related to the resurrection of the dead; for he says, verse 21, "except it be for this one voice that I cried standing among them touching the resurrection of the dead." Now, if Paul preached the reliving of both classes, what reason had they to accuse him? It is evident he was preaching something that they did not concede, and it related to the resurrection of the dead. Paul taught through Jesus the resurrection: which cannot embrace but one class; "for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." As the unjust are not in Christ, His resurrection life does not touch them, and they cannot therefore be made alive by it.

Paul says, Acts xxvi., 6, "Now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers, for which hope's sake I am accused of the Jews:" v. 7. It was for this hope he was accused. What hope? was it for the hope of the revival of both classes? No. Why not? Because if he allowed that, his opposers would have had no ground to accuse him; and they were accusing him "touching the hope of the resurrection of the dead. Acts xxiv., 21, and xxvi., 6.

MAN'S DAY.

"IT is a small thing to me," says the Apostle (1 Cor. iv., 3), "to be judged of you, or of man's judgment." But the words translated "man's judgment" mean literally "man's day." The expression is peculiar, and the following verse shows that it is designed to stand in contrast with the day of the Lord Jesus, which, not to mention other parts of the New Testament, is again and again mentioned in the Epistles to the Corinthians as the time when the believer will be manifested, and the grand issue of his faith realized. This is man's day; man now looks at things, and judges of them by the light of his own selfwill, and their relation to the present and the passing. He looks on appearances, and his judgment passes current, and is little questioned. It was thus that the Just One, the Anointed of the Father, was condemned and rejected; and those who judge according to man's day still reject him. Judged by man's day, all the conclusions of the word of God are reversed, the cross of Christ is foolishness, and those who go out to him without the gate bearing his reproach, are fanatics and enthusiasts.

But in that other day, the day of Christ, judgments of man's day will be reversed; and it must be remembered that the decisions of the day of Christ are for eternity. The Christian lives now in the light of that coming day, which shines forth from the word of God. This light shows things as they really are, for it shows them as God sees them; and it shows them as they always will be, for it is the light of eternity. The man who lives in it sees God as the only satisfying portion of the soul; and while, for the present, he seeks all his joy in God, he is looking forward to the more perfect enjoyment of this portion in His presence for evermore. The man who lives in the light of man's day sees only the perishing things of time as a portion, and can choose no other. At the close of an earthly life, he must leave forever all of good that he knows or dreams of; in that hour his thoughts perish.

Yet it must not be supposed that those who are living in the light of man's day are necessary irreligious. They bring in religion, however, only as one of the many duties and decencies of life. They may even profess to regard it as very important; but then they think that it ought to be confined to its own time and place, like other duties. At great cost they build its temples; they observe its sacred days and hours; they respect its ministers and ordinances; they profess to reverence the Bible, and perhaps read it at set times in appointed portions. They have their stated hours of private as well as of public prayer. They may take an interest in various efforts to bring the ignorant and depraved under the influence of their Church, and may contribute of their substance to support schools and missions, as conducive to the best interests of society. In fact no inconsiderable portion of the funds by which the church buildings which adorn our cities and villages are erected and maintained, and by which the religious enterprises which are the boast of our age are supported, is contributed by those who are living in the light of man's day. Alas! that it must be owned that those who profess to be living with that coming day in view, go down to meet the men of this world on their own ground, and court their support by countenancing their delusions. We need not pause to inquire what the religion of man's day ends in. Whatever its influence, it cannot reach beyond the day to which it belongs. Verily they have their reward.

But we would rather call attention to the lamentable extent to which Christians are living in the light of man's day, and are judging matters of faith and practice according to it. The result of this is the accommodation of the former to the wisdom of this world, and the conformity of the latter to the ways of this world. To say nothing at present of accommodations of doctrine to the speculations of philosophy, falsely so-called, it is very sad to observe how often in the teaching of the Church the plainest teachings of the word of God are set aside. Worldly-mindedness is called prudence, covetousness is called foresight, and the devotion of existence to personal aggrandizement is called a laudable diligence in business. All is judged according to man's day, in opposition to Him who has said: "Seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, and live not in careful suspense. For all these things do the nations of the world seek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. But rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."

"Seeking the kingdom of God," is, in other words, living in the light of the day of Christ. And he who does so, instead of being occupied with the affairs and interests of this life, finds all his objects beyond it; and, as to present necessities, has a ground of perfect peace in the assurance of a heavenly Father's care—the care of Him who counts the number of the stars, and calleth them all by name, and who at the same time numbers the very hairs of your head. No mother's tender care ever went so far as this, and the most self-occupied man never so counted his own. But God's care of his children goes so far as this. He is sufficient for every exigency, great or small, and He encourages us to trust in him for everything. He cares for us, and thus leaves us free to be occupied with Himself and the things that are above. Brethren, let us challenge our hearts in this matter. Unless we have a practical, habitual, living trust in the living God, it is vain to talk of seeking the things that are above. Now, it is doubtless true that many have obtained peace of conscience by faith in the blood of Christ, who do not enjoy peace of heart by faith in the assurance that He careth for us. Thus, even prayer brings no relief, because they are all the while judging according to man's day, and the actual dependence of their hearts is on things seen. Just as Jacob asked God to deliver him out of the hand of Esau; but showed where his actual dependence was by saying, "I will appease him by a present."

Christianity is not something which takes its place as one among the other duties and proprieties of life, to be attended to at its proper time, and then to be left out of view till that time comes around again. A man is not to be seen on the Lord's day and at church as a Christian, and all the rest of the week in all other places as any other man. Christianity is a life in which the eternal realities of the kingdom of God are anticipated. A Christian is one who is taken off from the old root in nature, and is grafted into Christ as the new root of all his thoughts, desires, and actions. He is not of the world, even as Christ is not of the world. His relation to all present things is changed, inasmuch as his life has its proper sphere in the day that is coming, and everything must be viewed in the light of that day. If this is a practical, living reality to us, we have two things to do—"to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven;" or rather we have one thing to do, which extends over the whole of life—"to serve God;" and one hope which fills up all the future—"to wait for His Son from heaven." Thus serving and waiting, everything is referred to God, and faith leans upon him, leaves everything to Him, and even in a sea of trouble, rides upon the crest of the swelling wave, thence looking away in perfect repose to God, whose faithfulness is engaged to bring him to the desired haven.

How is it, my brother? Are you living in the light of man's day, or of the day of Christ?—Selected.

IMMENSITY OF CREATION.

SOME astronomers have computed that there are not less than 75,000,000 of suns in the universe. The fixed stars are all suns, having, like our sun, numerous planets revolving around them. The solar system, or that to which we belong, has about thirty planets, primary and secondary, belonging to it. The circular field of space which it occupies is in diameter 3,600 millions of miles, and that which it controls much greater. The sun which is nearest neighbor to ours is called Sirius, distant from our sun 852,000,000 of miles. Now if all the fixed stars are as distant from each other as Sirius is from our sun, or if our solar system be the average magnitude of all the seventy-five millions of suns, what imagination can grasp the immensity of creation? Who can survey a plantation containing seventy-five millions of circular fields, each ten millions of miles in diameter? Such, however, is one of the plantations of Him who has measured the waters in the hollow of His hand; meted out heaven with a span; comprehended the dust in a measure; weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. He who, "sitteth upon the orbit of the earth, stretches out heaven as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in." Nations to Him are as "a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance;" and yet, overwhelming thought! He says: "Though I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also will I dwell who is of an humble and contrite spirit, and trembles at my word."

FROM SAMUEL BROWN.

BR. STORRS: I had intended to be at the meeting of the Brethren at Springfield this year; but fear I shall not be able to do so. But I can say, as Paul said on a certain occasion, "I am with you in spirit," if not in person. I will say to you, and to the Brethren, you can count on me for twenty dollars to help spread the good news of salvation through Christ who is our life; and more if I prosper so that I can. I want to see the Campaign Documents kept in circulation; for I think in some respects they are better than the living preacher; for I often slip them into the hands of persons and they read them, when I should not be able to get them to go and hear a sermon from one that is called by the popular Church an "Annihilationist;" that, they say with one breath, is an awful doctrine, which fairly makes them shudder; and with the next breath they will tell you it is no punishment at all; so inconsistent, and still they seem not to be aware of it.

I think I can say from my own experience that these little silent preachers have done more to spread the good news of Life only in Christ, by the resurrection from the dead, than has been done by any and all other means put together. I don't want to be understood as being opposed to the living preachers, for I am not; wish I could hear them oftener, but when they come there is a great effort made to make it unpopular to go and hear them; and many by this means are kept away; but these little, silent messengers are often preaching when ministers are asleep; and thus gradually they bring the heart into harmony with the truth; then they begin to read their Bibles to see if these things are so; and they find to their great surprise that these little preachers are in harmony with their Bibles; and thus they are led along, and gradually they become bold for the truth.

I hope and trust, yes, and believe you will be sustained; and the HERALD and tract distribution be kept up until our blessed LIFE-GIVER shall come. I shall do what I can in the good cause; and if possible increase my subscription. What I have already subscribed you can use for what you think most needs it. I will send you part of it this fall, and the balance in the spring, and perhaps sooner; and in addition to this, I shall send money from time to time for tracts for distribution. I am very truly yours.

FROM LA FAYETTE NORRIS.

CAMPTON, IOWA, Aug. 8, 1869.

To Life Believers, assembled at Springfield, Mass.:

Dear Brethren and Sisters, though far away from you, I hope you will consider me one of your number. I hope you all feel like consecrating yourselves anew to the cause of Christ and his truth the coming year. I hope you are living every day in such a manner that you feel you are in a saved state. This, by the grace of God, I am striving to do. And I am certain that your prayers are going up to God for me and many other wanderers in this vale of tears. I feel sure that we all love each other with a pure heart fervently; having none of that selfish love that governs the world at large. But being governed by the pure principles of the Gospel of Peace.

Let us ever bear in mind that the world is at enmity against God; and that if we would be Christ's disciples we must be transformed from the rudiments of the world. And should we not be careful how we follow in the footsteps of the nominal church, lest we become a part of the world that is at enmity against God?

I feel certain that everything at the anniversary meeting will be done decently and in order, without strife and vain glory; looking only for your reward at the resurrection of the just. This from your brother in the hope of eternal life at that glad day.

FROM WILLIAM H. SPENCE.

BRISTOL, R. I., Aug. 22, 1869.

BR. STORRS: It is six months now since you had a line from me, and the only reason we can give you, is, for the want of being a penman. We have had much good matter in our good paper, HERALD OF LIFE; then again, we see some things which we believed need sifting with the gospel sieve and the chaff separated from the wheat. Small as we feel, we should attempt it were it not for the above reason. We see by our English writers what a muss they have got into on the first and second death. The difficulty lays here, as we see and believe, first and second death. For ourself we know of no death, or any kind of death, spoken of in the Scriptures of divine truth, which ends man's consciousness, but the death that follows the proclamation of God to Adam in the garden, "in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Again; "for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Here is a state of unconscious existence; for man, in this state, will be as though he had not been.

Now, dear reader, establish yourself one moment in this position, and believe that God is perfect in all his attributes and all his ways, and how can you believe, standing in the position you are called to stand in, that God will bring men under his penalty, which is a state of death, unconsciousness, non-existence, and then bring them back from this state to the state of life, and then put his affliction and punishment on them until there is left neither root nor branch. For what purpose has He said, He would do it twice? or, has He said He would do it but once? Bless God for ever, we say, once, and once only. And we join with the great apostle Paul, "It is appointed unto men once to die," not twice; and we will praise God, for it is a joy and consolation to know that we understand the appointment that our God has made; though we feel very unworthy.

Now if the reader will only consider this matter and examine the word of life with a prayerful heart, for the glory of God, he will see clearly what is meant by the phrase "first resurrection," and also the phrase second death." The objection says, "the first implies a second; consequently, the second must imply a first." Now for the truth. What is the first resurrection? We answer, Christ. Hark: "I am the resurrection and the life;" "blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection (Christ). Now, what constitutes the second? Christ first: second, those who have a part in the first, viz., Christ's Church. This is what constitutes the Bible's first and second resurrections. The resurrection first; Christ not being in the second; and the Church's resurrection second; not being in the first, but by the first. Now, reader, you must find a third resurrection, or you will never get the wicked dead up.

The first and second resurrections spoken of are general in their character. The first took the great General and King in his power. The second will take all His Church, but the few living, when He comes. The first and second deaths are also general in their character; the first taking all the wicked in the old world; the second taking all the wicked in this world.

O may God open the minds of the readers to see the truth, as it is in Jesus. Glory be to his ever blessed and adorable name. Amen. From a mortal worm of the dust, looking and trusting in God through Christ.

FROM J. S. POTTER.

EAST BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 24, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I some think I shall not be able to attend the camp-meeting at Springfield.

But my heart will be there, beating in unison with all the brethern and sisters of like precious faith, who will have the privilege of meeting on such an important occasion. I say "important," because those brethren holding the Life views, are under greater responsibility than any other class of people on the earth; for they have received greater light; and where much is given, there is much required. I hope and pray that the good Spirit of the Lord will meet with you, and that you will all be united in spreading the light of the great plan of redemption, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST; and may "The Life and Advent Union" be instrumental in the hand of God in sweeping away the last vestige of popery, whether found in the old lady or her "youngest daughter."

Your Brother, in hope of life.

T. T. HALSTEAD, Franklin, Ind., writes: I have been in this place since June 7, and distributed quite a number of "Campaign Documents;" and the HERALD OF LIFE I have given away; and truly it heralds forth Life in Christ, the anointed of the Father, only as revealed by the prophets, Christ and his apostles. One poor Bro., rich in faith, says the HERALD OF LIFE is truly and emphatically a herald of Life only in Christ Jesus our Lord. He wishes you to send it to him, and he will send the subscription price in October.

SARAH GRIGG, matron of the "Rosine Home," Philadelphia, Pa., writes: As this is a time when the friends of the cause are expressing their desires and hopes for the future of our excellent paper, the HERALD OF LIFE, I take the opportunity of returning my sincere thanks for your kindness in furnishing me with it for a length of time without remuneration. This must no longer be so. I will send you $5. How little have I ever done for the cause of Christ. Pray for me, that I may at last be found clothed in His righteousness, which is without blemish or spot.

HIRAM DROWN, Coventry, Vt., writes: I pledge $5 to the HERALD OF LIFE for Vol. VII. I hardly know what I should do without it; for it is about all the preaching I get on Life only through Christ. For tracts I will do something, but cannot say how much now. I am poor in this world's goods, but will do all I can to help spread the truth. May God bless all who are trying to send forth the words of Life in Christ, alone; and may He bless with abundant success the HERALD the coming year.

A. W. DURKEE, Lake City, Minn., writes: I do thank the Lord for his care over you and all concerned in publishing a paper I so dearly love, and that has been the instrument of so much good. The tracts sent me last winter were received while I was on a sick bed and soon distributed among calling friends. May the blessing of our heavenly Father rest upon the annual meeting of the "Life and Advent Union," to guide and direct all things to His honor and glory. I remain looking for our Lord's coming and kingdom till He shall appear.

THE UNASKED GOOD.—The prayer which Socrates taught his disciple Alcibiades deserves a place in the devotions of every Christian: "That he should beseech the supreme God to give him what was good for him, though he should not ask it, and to withhold from him whatever would be hurtful, though he should be so foolish as to pray for it."

OBITUARY.

KENNEBUNK PORT, ME., Aug. 24, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I feel that something more than a brief obituary of BR. J. T. CORNELL, of Thomaston, Conn., might be profitable to the readers of the HERALD, as well as interesting to his friends. Having been acquainted with him for many years, and being permitted to see him a short time before he died, I could speak of his strong and unwavering faith in God in the hour of trial. He died as he had lived—a man of God. He was one of the first in the State of Connecticut to embrace the views of Christ's coming and kingdom which have qualified the position of the Advent believers, and the believers in Life only through Christ; and he was an ornament to this profession, in any feature of it which he declared. He ever stood firmly, during all the years that have passed since we first obeyed the voice of God in coming out to stand upon the principles of faith which, in Christ, have made us free. He was a free man in Christ. When the march of truth required the farther action of the Church of God, that it should speak the great word in opposition to Spiritualism, he became a ready and full believer in the most blessed doctrine of the Gospel, that immortality is the gift of God only in Christ. This was, at the time, of which I speak, a cross indeed; but the cross having been consecrated, he took it up manfully, and bore it faithfully. I find him again fully indorsing the grand idea inculcated in the Gospel of no life, of any kind, for the future, out of the Son of God. Here he stood before all men who knew him; and friends and foes could but admire the position. He was a man of faith in God;—faith that others were aware of. Even to visit him, to be in his room, when he was wrestling with the fell enemy, was sufficient to convince those who had any acquaintance with the love of God, that here a man of truth and faith, was gaining the mastery of the powers of darkness for the future—though for the present he falls.

He had the consumption for a long time. He bore his sufferings for these years of infirmity with Christian resignation and fortitude, and at last he did not shrink from the final result. His friends and acquaintances in the town could all see whether his hope was sustaining; for, some of them, including some of the first men, called to inquire of him, especially, whether he was upheld by that faith, which looks to the resurrection alone for the future life. I saw him two or three weeks before he died, so weak then, we thought he could not survive more than two or three dry. It seemed to me like the "verge of heaven." He had victory over the fear of death.

He died July 14, 1869, aged 54 years. His widow, who confesses and rejoices in the same faith, with his children, mourn his loss; but leave him, in his hope, to rest upon the couch that Jesus fitted in the realm of death, till the morn of satisfaction shall place him in the image of the beloved Redeemer.

Poetry.

The Quaker Girl.

In a quiet little cottage,
Near a busy little town,
Dwells a pretty Quaker maiden,
Clad in sober gray and brown.

In that cottage neat and cheerful
Note of Music ne'er is heard,
Save the merry morning warble
Of a voice that's like a bird.

Never flow of gleaming gas light
Lures a festal crowd within;
On its walls no pictures brighten,
For the Quaker thinks them sin.

Yet my footsteps love to linger
Where the lowly maiden dwells,
Oftener than in homes of fashion
With their throng of laughing bells.

Once upon the narrow flagging
Of the miry village street,
As I walked, two truant school boys
In fierce fight I chanced to meet.

Waiting near them, most impatient,
Stood a group of naughty girls;
O what gathering back of flounces!
And what scornful toss of curls!

At that moment, satchel-laden,
Tripping o'er her school-ward way,
Came the pretty Quaker maiden
In her suit of sober gray.

Not a moment paused she doubting,
Balancing her good intent;
Toward the angry-eyed belligerents
Straight her eager eyes she bent.

One hand upon each shoulder,
Earnest eyes fixed on their own,—
"Thee must never strike thy brother!"
Said she, in her gentlest tone.

And the wayward children softening,
Yielded to her mild command;
Slowly down the street they sauntered,
Peaceful, chatting, hand in hand.

Then the maiden, deftly brushing
Specks of soil from gown of gray,
Wore a smile so bright and beaming,
As she turned upon her way.

That the butterflies of fashion
Paused to envy as they stood,
Wondering at such waste of beauty
Underneath a Quaker hood.

History of a Waif.

An Incident of the Freshet of 1847—An Infant Floating all Night on the Flood—What Became of Her.

During the great flood of 1847, when the Ohio River so far overleaped the bounds of propriety as to come up to Pearl street without any invitation, a great many dwellings located on the river-banks were swept away and came floating down upon the pitiless tide. Loss of life not unfrequently attended these disasters, as when a family, unconcious of their danger, were asleep in their beds when the waters rose about their house, and lifting it from its foundations bore it away amid the darkness and the turbulent flood.

On the left bank of the Ohio at that time, between Marietta and Pomeroy, stood an humble dwelling occupied by a small farmer and his wife, together with five children, the youngest an infant girl a little over a year old. The river rose during the night while the family were in bed. The rocking of the house as the surging waters claimed it awoke the inmates, and through great and hasty exertion the farmer was enabled to get all his family, as he supposed, to a place of safety, though he lost everything else. Standing on a little eminence near by he saw, through the gloom of that dreadful night, his house with all its contents yield itself to the grasping, avaricious flood and float down the river, where it was soon lost in darkness. He supposed that all were saved, but alas, it was soon discovered that their infant girl was missing.

In the confusion and excitement of the moment the baby was left asleep on its bed, and had been swept away to destruction with the house. Great was the grief of the parents at the loss of their youngest born, and although due efforts were made to learn whether or not she had been rescued, nothing was heard of her, and it was very naturally supposed that she was drowned in the river.

Such, however, was not her fate. A hundred miles below where his dwelling was swept away, some people on the river bank the next morning saw something peculiar floating down on the current. They thought it was the form of an infant. A boat was procured, and the object was indeed found to be an infant girl, sleeping calmly and profoundly upon a bed.

She was taken in charge by a family in the vicinity, who took such means as they knew to ascertain to whom the child belonged, but there was no clue to guide them, and soon the little waif that had floated down to them came to be considered as their own child. They adopted her the more readily perhaps on account of being themselves childless.

Meantime the waif grew into a beautiful girl, and became as dear to her adopted parents as though she was their own. She had mourned for "mamma" a little time, but, ere long, all recollection of her early surroundings were but dim and shadowy, and her new parents and her new home became all in all to her. A few years and the family moved into Illinois, settling on a farm near Chicago. The man prospered there, and was enabled to give his beautiful Ohio River foundling an education fitting her graces of person, her amiability and her virtues. A short time ago her hand was sought in marriage by a worthy young farmer in the vicinity of where she lived, consent obtained, and the happy day appointed. One day the family were in Chicago purchasing her wedding outfit. At a dry good store a clerk who was waiting on them observed our heroine intently, and seemed singularly affected—so much as to attract attention.

"Excuse me," he said, in some confusion, addressing the young lady, "don't be offended at my staring at you, but the truth is you are a perfect picture of a sister of mine at home, and I couldn't help thinking you looked just as another sister of mine would have looked, who was swept down the Ohio in a great freshet and lost."

The words attracted the attention of the young lady's adopted parents. The resemblance spoken of, and the incident of the freshet taking in conjunction, could hardly have failed to do that. Explanations followed, and it was pretty satisfactorily concluded that the clerk and the young lady were brother and sister, as indeed was afterward proved to be the case.

Her parents, too, had emigrated to Illinois, and lived not far from her own home. The families were brought together, and what was before believed to be true was established beyond question when the bed on which the child was found was produced and the garments she wore: for what frugal housewife wouldn't recognize one of her own beds, and what mother would not remember the garments of her favorite baby?

There is little more to tell. Our heroine was married to the husband of her choice last week, and had the satisfaction of having her own as well as her adopted parents at the wedding.—Cincinnati Times, Aug. 12.

A Contented Mind.

"I saw the most splendid doll down-town," said Carrie. "It was as big as baby, and it had such beautiful curly hair, and Parian arms and feet—not old kid ones, as my doll has. I wish it was mine."

"Better wish for a contented mind, Carrie," said grandma. "I must tell you a story."

"When I was about your age, I was very fond of dolls, too; but we did not have such handsome ones as children have now-a-days. I never had any except a rag one, with bead eyes, but was continually wishing for a German doll, made of wood, with a painted face. One day my mother told me to get ready for a walk with her, saying that, after I came home, she would give me money to buy a doll, if I still wished one. I was delighted. We went to the poorest part of the town, and entered a small house, hearing a little girl singing as we opened the door. I was surprised to find she was the only person in the house, and that she was blind. She sat in a chair by the fire knitting, and seemed very happy. We sat down, and mother told her she had brought her little girl to see her, and asked if she did not feel very lonely when her mother was away. 'Sometimes, but not very often,' she said, 'for I like to knit fast, so that I can sell many stockings; then if I begin to be lonely, I sing hymns, or repeat Bible-verses.' I was very much interested in her, and asked if she would like me to come and read to her sometimes. She was delighted, and looked so happy as she said: 'No one has ever thought of reading to me but mother, and she has very little time.'

"On our way home, mother said she would give me the money for a doll if I still wanted one, or I might buy something for the blind girl."

"What did you do gran'ma?" said Carrie, eagerly.

"Oh! I bought a warm woollen dress for the blind girl, and I think that gave me far more pleasure than if I had bought a doll. I found it more blessed to give than to receive."

Babylon.

The 18th chapter of Revelation, in which the fall of Babylon is described, is one of the most sublime in the sacred volume. It stands near the close of this wonderful book, and the description evidently belongs to the final scenes of the mighty drama the aged seer was summoned to witness. It may well therefore claim our most serious attention. What does Babylon here represent? And what is to be her doom?

It is a very common interpretation among Protestants to apply this passage to the downfall of the Papacy. Babylon, say they, means Rome. "That is, the great harlot church which has proved faithless to the Lord, and prostituted herself to the kings of the earth." There is ground for this application. Doubtless that Church is included.

But woe be to those who, with a keen eye for others' heresies and crimes, fail to observe their own. There is no other wickedness more severely denounced in the Bible than Phariseeism. And it is to be feared that Protestants in their denunciations of Rome, are often guilty of this sin. Not that the wrongs of that system must be excused. But "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." "Be not high-minded, but fear."

The term "Babylon," here, is broad enough to include all the worldliness and pride and wickedness of Protestant, as well as Papal Christendom. Infidelity is even more heinous than superstition. And the worship of mammon is no less idolatrous, and even more debasing than the worship of man.

That this description cannot refer exclusively to the approaching downfall of the Papal system, is manifest from the terms. For Babylon here spoken of is a great commercial emporium, as well as an ecclesiastical centre. At her fall, the merchants of the earth weep and mourn, "for no man buyeth their merchandise any more." "And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stand afar off and behold the smoke of her burning, and cast dust on their heads, weeping and wailing, saying. Alas! alas! that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea, by reason of her costliness! For in one hour is she made desolate." That this description cannot, without great compression, be confined to the Papal system, and to Rome as the chief seat of it, is manifest. Rome never was, and is not now, a great commercial mart. Nor would the overthrow of that system seriously disturb the commerce of the world. That commerce is chiefly in the hands of Protestant nations. The great merchants of the earth are to be found among them.

To ascertain the true meaning of this mystical term, "Babylon," it is necessary to go back in the Scripture record. The promise of a coming kingdom of God is as old as the fall. On the occurrence of that calamity the subordinate dominion of the earth passed into the hands of Satan. He became "the prince of this world." And his endeavor, from the outset, has been to organize and perfect the human race, in opposition to the kingdom of God. The first attempt in this direction was on the plains of Shinar. Kingdom power on the earth was made to centre in Nimrod, the mighty hunter. Here was the beginning of the Bablyonian empire. In arrogance, and with heaven-defying spirit, it was commenced at the tower of Babel. The germ of the kingdom of God was deposited in Abraham and his seed. The kingdom power of this world was centred in Babylon. And through all its changes and vicissitudes, whether its seat were on the banks of the Nile, or at Nineveh, it remained the same world power. As the kingdom of Israel began to decline, Babylon, the great antagonistic kingdom of this world, was allowed to wax into greatness. It became the great foe of the Jewish nation already proven faithless and apostate, and God used it as his scourge against them. The destruction of the Holy City and temple, the deportation of the people by Nebuchadnezzar, as slaves to Babylon, closes the independent existence of the Jews as a nation, and winds up the trial God had made of their worthiness of kingdom power in the earth. Henceforth, the dominion of the world is allowed to pass over without restriction to Babylon. Hence, in the Old Testament prophets, Babylon is always spoken of as the great foe of the convenant people, and as the representative of the grandeur and power of the world. And although it is said in Daniel that this greatness and dominion was intrusted to the monarch of that empire by God, yet it is very plainly foretold that he should prove in every way unworthy of the trust, and provoke a judgment all the more severe, by reason of the height from which he should fall; this abuse of trust was especially manifest in the attempt to compel all men to worship the golden image set up on the plain of Dura, since the prophets of that age, and especially Daniel, were commissioned to foretell the downfall of Babylon. And some of them, Isaiah particularly, speak of this overthrow in such terms as are appropriate to the judgment of the great day of the Lord.

It is worthy of remark that our Saviour, in the 24th chapter of Matthew, speaking of the last times, and John, in this chapter, both borrow their imagery largely from the ancient prophets. And it must be borne in mind that this great world empire, of which Babylon was the chief seat, in the days of these prophets, it represented as having a continuous existence, although transferred from the hands of one power to another. Whether Tyrus, or Medo-Persia, or Greece, or Rome, is the immediate subject of prophecy, in the wide sense, these are only varying forms of the same great Babylon. And this explains why Isaiah's prophecy reaches forward and connects itself with the scenes of the last great day of the Lord. It is because Babylon, as the great embodiment of the world's splendor and dominion, and the great antagonistic power to the kingdom of God, lives on, through all these phases, to the very last. The same thing is indicated in Nebuchadnezzar's vision of the golden image. That image stands in all its pride, up to the very time of the coming of that kingdom which shall utterly destroy and supplant it.

Bearing all this in mind, remembering the fact that ancient Babylon was the first centre around which the power of this world was aggrandized, remembering its relation of antagonism to God's ancient people, and its representative character, as the exponent of all those state fabrics which now occupy the sphere and usurp the prerogatives of the coming kingdom, we are at no loss to determine the sense in which it is here used by the revealing angel. Babylon stands here as the typical name for all worldly dominion, and especially for that great world-fabric, which in all ages, Satan has pushed into the place of the promised kingdom of Heaven. He even tried to induce the Lord Jesus to take the crown of this world's empire. He would thus forever have delayed that kingdom which shall uproot and destroy his own.

In this sense, the primary fulfilment of this chacter was the downfall of the Roman Empire. In the days of the Apostles, pagan Rome was the highest exponent of Babylon the great. But, the prophecy manifestly reaches much farther. As we have said, Babylon remains, whatever particular phase of it may come to its doom. So, after the fall of Rome, the kingdom power of this world assumed a new and still more dangerous form for the Church. The Church became incorporated with the State. And so the pretence of this new phase of worldly power to be the real kingdom of God, was more specious than ever. Then the professing Church readily submitted to the claim. Papal Rome arrogated to itself all the emoluments and functions of the true kingdom on the earth. Hence, in this new phase, Babylon the great became the mystery of iniquity, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication, and with the wine of whose fornication the inhabitants of the earth were made drunk. That is, they were stupefied and sensualized in all their views of the kingdom of Heaven. They hailed an earthly system in place of the heavenly.

Babylon the great, then, doubtless includes the Papal system. But, with the decline of the Romish power, we can detect a new phase of the same old Babylon rising into greatness, and about to demand supremacy in the earth. We refer to that form of dominion developed especially now in Protestant nations, which is, if possible, a still more artful substitute for the coming kingdom. It is the kingdom of worldly culture, and civilization, and scientific progress, and inventive art, which is rapidly accumulating its resources, and preparing to effect the promised regeneration without any such intervention as the appearing and kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. It proposes to disenthrall and elevate mankind by free institutions and social reforms. It promises to subsidize and apply all material forces to promote the prosperity and happiness of men. It is the kingdom of modern civilization, about which so much boast is made, even by men who profess to be Christians, and who ought to know that the coming regeneration cannot be effected in that way. For it ignores the necessity of a new birth of the Spirit and the power of the resurrection of Jesus. It is, after all, another attempt to permanently improve and exalt man on the basis of his fleshly, natural life, which all Scripture denounces as corrupt, and which all past experience proves incapable of such improvement.

This is the form in which Babylon the great is being now developed. And this, we believe, will be the last form in which it is to be revealed before the divine polity and kingdom of the future, the new Jerusalem, comes to sight. And it is this last form which is eminently in the mind of the angel in the revelation of this chapter. Here we see why Babylon is represented as the great mart of trade and commerce, as the gathered storehouse of all delicacies, and luxury, and wealth. And why, also, it is still represented as a harlot. For we are persuaded, the harlotry of the Protestant Church with this new form of Babylonish greatness will be just as conspicuous and complete as was that of the Roman Church in the Middle Ages. We already see painful evidence of this. But the Romish Church will not be behind in her spiritual whoredom with this new idol. She is not yet off the stage. And, as soon as she finds that homage at this altar is the only way to retain her power in the earth, she, too, will bow low before the golden image. Perhaps she will, in this way, advance her claim to be recognized again as the Universal Church. And here we naturally recall what we have said before about Antichrist. This new form of world power of which we speak, is to be at last headed up in what will be virtually a universal empire, in which the ideas of this modern age will be embodied, and over which "the spirit of the age," another name for the god of this world, will preside. This will be the Antichristian empire of the last days. Its personal head will be Antichrist. In him will be summed up the power and culture of the world. Babylon will be greater than ever at the last, and all the symbolic character of Babylon and Nebuchadnezzar will be then fulfilled. The golden image set up on the plains of Dura will be fulfilled in the homage Antichrist will exact from all men, as the true Messiah of the human race, the world's Saviour. All must worship the beast, and submit to his mark and the number of his name, or all privileges of trade will be denied them, and even life itself be forfeited. The image of Nebuchadnezzar's vision, with its head of gold, its breast and arms of silver, its thighs of brass, and legs of iron, summing up in itself all riches and strength, political wisdom joined with military power—absolute despotism, yet standing on the clay and iron feet of the popular will—this also, will be then fulfilled. And the overweening pride of Nebuchadnezzar, who gave not God the glory, will be more than realized in him who shall palm himself off upon the world as the divine man, the lofty exponent of that incarnation of God in man, of which the whole human race is the subject; for such is the theory of modern pantheistic philosophy. He will be the founder of the Church of humanity for which such writers as Comte and Renan declare the world is fast preparing, the true Christian Church which must supplant, in their view, the narrow sect which now usurps the name of Christ. And hence we see how this new form of Babylon will still deserve the name of mystery of iniquity, mother of harlots. For a large proportion of the visible Church, Popish and Protestant, will be deceived by these pretensions and be dazzled by their success, until the religion of Antichrist has displaced, in many an eclesiastical fabric, the religion of Jesus. Here we have the last and highest form attained by the Babylon of this world. An empire world-wide in its reach, assuming to act the part of a universal providence to man, and erecting on the foundations of the visible Church the new religion of humanity, the very essence of which is the denial of the world's need and the obliteration of its hope of God's king, the coming Man, the Lord Jesus from heaven. And this empire is even now fast preparing. The body of Antichrist is forming, and limb is being joined to limb. Whether the man who shall head up the system has yet appeared on the stage or not, it is premature to say. But all the elements of this last form of kingdom power on the earth are actively at work. The world even now sighs, and groans, and staggers in blood for a universal empire. Nation jostles against nation, till the cry is: Give us union, and mutual help, and peace, instead of ceaseless jarring, and warring, and menace. Let us go to and build us a fabric that will hand down our name to all time, and under the shadow of which all nations may dwell safely. The divine ideal of government is an absolute, universal monarchy. Republics have been thought of, only because the men who have ruled have been bad. But give us a man, strong enough, and wise enough, and good enough, and we will give all power into his hands. The world is in search of such a man. It has not yet found him. But the devil is making ready a man to supply the want. And, when found, men will do homage to him as to a God. But God has such a man in reserve too, even the second Man, the Lord Jesus, the annointed Head of His kingdom, through whose rule He shall bless the world as long as the sun and the moon endure. But first, He will suffer men to take the devil's king, because they want him; because they prefer him. He will let them groan under his tyranny, that they may be filled with the fruit of their own devices, and reap as they have sown. But blessed be His name, He will not suffer Antichrist always to sit on the throne promised to His Son, nor allow Babylon to sit as a queen where His own Church, His chosen bride, is promised the inheritance. And hence, in this chapter there is revealed the fall of this last great form of the world-power. Babylon goes down, no more to appear, and the holy city, the heavenly Jerusalem, the seat of that celestial polity and kingdom of the future, comes down to bless all nations with its light and rule, and, henceforth, they walk in its light, and bring their glory and honor to its gates forever.

And now, dear reader, in which will you cast in your lot—Babylon or the kingdom of God? The kingdom which is soon to fall, or that one which cannot be moved? The city over which the clouds of God's wrath are gathering, or that city which is to come, whose builder and maker is God, and which He will fill with His light and joy forever? B.

Thoughts to Remember.

The meanest are mighty with God, the mightiest mean without him.

Would we do our heavenly Father justice, we must look on Calvary as well as on Eden.

We have no faith in terror dissociated from tenderness. We trust more to the process of drawing than driving men to Jesus.

Like the inn of Bethlehem given to lodge meaner guests, a heart full of pride has no chamber, which Christ may be born "in us the hope of glory."

The magnet which drew a Saviour from the skies was not our merit but onr misery.

None are so sure to lie in Jesus' bosom, as those who lie lowest at Jesus' feet.

That man gave the atheist a crushing answer, who told him that the very feather with which he penned the words, "There is no God," refuted the audacious lie.

Simply Believe.

Let me entreat you to look to the Word of God's testimony, and think not that anything else than a simple reception of these words, "that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin," is necessary for the purpose of your being cleansed from your sin. It is the idea that something more is necessary which obstructs this reception. It is the imagination of a great personal work to whih you must set yourself, and in which you have hitherto sat down in listlessness and despair, that keeps you at a distance from God. He approaches you with overtures; and what you have to is to close in with them. He approaches you with tidings; and what you have to do is to give credit to them. This is doing the work of God that you believe on him whom he hath sent; and could this transition be accomplished, then would you be translated into a habit of cheerful and progressive obedience, which, in a way of legalism, or in the attempt to establish a righteousness of your own, you never can attain. —Dr. Chalmers.

Were it not for the scorching drought we should not appreciate the refreshing shower. With less conflict, we would have less victories; with less trial, less joy.

To make Cows give Milk.—A Wisconsin farmer says: "If you wish to get a large yield of rich milk, give your cow, three times a day, water slightly warm, slightly salted, in which bran has been stirred at the rate of one quart to two gallons of water. A cow will gain immediately under the effects of it, and will become so much attached to it as to refuse clear water unless very thirsty, but this mess she will drink almost any time, and ask for more. The amount of this drink is an ordinary waterpail full three times daily. The cow will then do her best in return.

To make Vinegar.—To nine gallons of water add one gallon of molasses, and let the mixture stand for six weeks in an open barrel; over which a cloth is laid to prevent the admission of impurities. Excellent vinegar will be the result after the lapse of the time indicated.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—" the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

TIME TO AWAKE.

"And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."—Rom. xiii., 11,12.

NIGHT and sleep usually go together. The one was made for the other. And when united and used as God has designed, both are beautiful and good. One of the most touching figures expressive of God's kindness to his people, is that where it is said, "He giveth his beloved sleep."

But there is a night which has no beauties, and a sleep which has no blessing in it. There is a moral and spiritual night, and a moral and spiritual sleep, which it would be well for man if he had never known. The one consists of ignorance, depravity and misery; the other of obliviousness, unconsciousness, self-satisfaction, and inactivity in what relates to God, eternity, and the soul.

When a man is ignorant in sacred knowledge—having no just conceptions of God, of Christ, or of what respects our moral relations—to whom the subjects of revelation are unknown, unappreciated, imperfectly understood, and still more feebly felt—a darkness is in him. He walks in shades. Obscurity broods over his mental nature. He dwells in night.

You see a man of rude morals—in whom principle is not the governing motive—a man led on by mere passion, ambition and lust. He may have some good traits, wrought by the pressure of circumstances, but he has no fear of God before his eyes. He has no love or submission to the Lord Jesus Christ, in which alone true morality is to be found. His strongest impulses are all selfish and sinful. He finds it much easier to swear than to pray, and can find much more pleasure in the impure jest, the vulgar amusement, the social glass, than in that holiness without which he can never see God. Men like him may admire him, but when viewed in the light of sobriety and truth, the halo around him is dark. He is enveloped in the gloom of night.

And all who live in this night are occupied with the proper business of night. They are asleep. Forgetfulness is upon them. The sleeping man recollects nothing. He thinks of nothing. He is for the time a blank. And so it is morally with all those who are under the shades of spiritual night. They have forgotten God. They think not of his terrible majesty, or of his matchless goodness. All the mighty subjects of Revelation are as nothing unto them. They remember not what has been threatened against sinners, nor what has been promised to saints.

They are insensible. The sleeping man has no consciousness, no feeling. You may call, but he does not hear. You may hold things up to him, but he does not see. You may touch him, but he pays no attention. And so with these spiritual sleepers. Divine things make no impression upon them. They are deaf to the calls and blind to the exhibitions of the Gospel. We preach to them, but they pass it by as nought. Providence lays hold upon them, but still they do not recognize the hand of God. They are plied with a thousand means, but they give no response and exhibit no signs of effective impression.

Such is the condition of those who have not risen up to be true and faithful disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ. Night is upon them. They have not the light of spiritual truth shining in their hearts, nor the light of well-ordered affections illuminating their lives, nor the light of lasting pleasure or immortal hope to cheer their march to eternity. And as they are in darkness, so they are asleep. All their spiritual senses are locked, or moved only with pitiable eccentricity and delirium.

Nor is this true only of the grossly vicious, the skeptical and the profane. It is equally true of every one, in any station in life, who has not wholly given up to be a servant and disciple of Christ the Lord. He that wallows in filth, and the cultivated worldling who boasts upon his good breeding and superior intelligence—he who denies the Scriptures and takes refuge in downright unbelief, and he who acknowledges Christianity only to neglect its duties—he who cares not for his God, and he who means to repent but never does it, and every man, woman and youth not diligently engaged seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness—all alike are in a spiritual condition just such as above described. The inactive, dreamy, delirious, sleepy tenants of spiritual darkness are neither scarce nor hard to be pointed out. That church member who would rather hear a song than a sermon, or prefer to attend a dance to a meeting of the saints around the Saviour's feet, is one of them; and he who dislikes to be pressed with the claims of practical godliness is another; and the churches, and the streets, and the theatres, and the highways are lined with them, and no observer can mistake them. Nor is it unlikely that some of them will read this.

Friend and brother, a year of Divine grace has dawned upon you. It also brings a special message with it, direct from the Spirit of God. That message is, "that now it is high time to awake out of sleep." "Wherefore He saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph. v., 14. Awake—cast off the works of darkness—put on the armor of light—walk honestly as in the day—put on the Lord Jesus Christ—live for another life—such are the inculcations now again addressed to every one of us.

A spiritual sleeper awakes when his senses open to his situation—when he begins to see, and learn, and know what a lethargic and unsatisfactory life he has been leading—when he commences to realize what a slothful servant, and what a guilty and faithless being he is in the sight of God. The Prodigal awoke when he came to himself, and saw his wretchedness, and thought of the father he had wronged, and said he would arise and go to his father, and confess what a sinner he had been. The Publican awoke when a consciousness of his crimes so overwhelmed him, that he smote upon his breast and cried for mercy. The base multitudes, on the day of Pentecost awoke when they were pricked in their hearts by Peter's charge of the wickedness they had done, and cried out to know what they must do. And we shall awake, as the Apostle here admonishes, if we set ourselves to a review of our ways, learn our many defects, and come to a more decided and earnest mind with regard to the great things of a future life.

An awakened spiritual sleeper casts off the works of darkness, when he solemnly and honestly abandons his careless and evil ways, and determines no longer to walk with the wicked, or to remain in his indifferent and prayerless ways of life. When the man who has been overcome by his appetites dashes from him his cups, absents himself from the society of the drunken and the lewd, and sets his heart upon being a decent man and a Christian; or when the unpraying man begins to call upon God, and to live as a man ought to live; or when he who has been betrayed and caught by any of the many snares of the devil, confesses his guilt, and from henceforth is resolved to be found no more in such associations and such crimes; then it may be said of him, that he has cast off the works of darkness.

An awakened spiritual sleeper puts on the armor of light, when he enlists and arrays himself as a good soldier of the Lord. What that armor is, the same Apostle elsewhere tells us. To take unto us "the whole armor of God," that we may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand, we must have our "loins girt about with truth," have on "the breastplate of righteousness," our "feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace," take "the shield of faith," wherewith to quench the fiery darts of the wicked, and "the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," and pray always with all prayer and supplication.

An awakened Christian sleeper walks honestly, as in the day, when he need not be ashamed of what he does—when he so orders his life that he need not fear to have all his habits known. Rioting, drinking, lewd behavior and thoughts, strifes, envyings, or the indulgence of bad passions of any sort, are all incompatible with this walking honestly as in the day. Ah, these nights, and these screened places about our cities, have records, which if told out, would cause the head of many a one who would be considered respectable, and even pious, to drop, and fill many a bold face with confusion. But any doings that we could not bear to have told before others, is not walking honestly as in the day.

And an awakened spiritual sleeper puts on the Lord Jesus Christ, when he takes shelter in him as his refuge from deserved condemnation, and seeks to live Christ's life, and by faith in His Gospel clothes himself with Christ's righteousness. The Colossians had put on Christ, when they had risen with Christ, and had set their affections on things above, and became dead to this world, and had their life hid with Christ in God.

Such, then, is the spirit and import of these apostolic inculcations. Shall they be heard and heeded, or not? They are all greatly needed by every one, and by some so much needed that there is very great danger of utter shipwreck of faith if they be not heeded. Shall we not, then, take them to heart, and start with a new life? And if any are at a loss for motives, the Apostle abundantly supplies them.

"It is high time to awake." So many years and privileges spent to no better effect is an argument of overwhelming force, not to trifle for the future as many have trifled in the past. If twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, sixty years of grace have passed with no better results than some can this day show, what hope is there that such will ever find eternal life without a vastly different way of dealing with sacred things than that which has characterized them hitherto? What reason can there be for allowing things to drift on for another hour as they have been drifting for these years that have gone? Averaging the ages of all our readers, it may be safely said that two-thirds of the very best time to become what we ought to be have passed away. For many it is already the ninth and eleventh hour of the day. Short, very short, and liable to be cut off any instant, is the space yet remaining wherein the opportunities of salvation are accessible. Is it not therefore, "high time to awake out of sleep?"

"The night is far spent." This night time of our world will soon be over. There is a day coming in which the unsanctified and the unprayerful shall not be able to stand. The chariot of God's judgment, which is to sweep all the unholy to their deserved perdition, is already in motion. Who knows but this shall be the last year of grace this side of the coming of our Lord? Shall we then let it come in and go by without an effort to make our calling and election sure?

"The day is at hand"—the day of final deliverance for the suffering saints—the day when that He shall come will come, with power and great glory, to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe. A little while, and then shall be fulfilled the prayer which He has taught us, "Thy kingdom come." Any of these passing nights the shout may go forth from the sky, at which the very dead shall rise, and the day dawn which shall have no more night. Shall we not, then, bestir ourselves, and so live and pray that we may be ready for it? O, if it were to overtake some with no more preparation than they now have, what would become of them? And yet there is no guarantee whatever that it will not so overtake them, unless they at once repent, and change their careless ways.

"Salvation is near,"—the means of it are near. It is ready to become the consolation of all that will awake and put on the Lord Jesus. It is 1,800 years nearer to its consummation than it was when the Apostles were on earth. It is half a lifetime nearer than when you began to live. And how is it possible for us to realize these things without being moved, as we never heretofore have been? Let the world think of us what it will; let the godless sneer, and point at us the finger of scorn, and talk of us as foolish and weak; let others risk it to go on as they always have done, not caring for God or his judgments; but let us not suffer ourselves to be laughed out of eternal life, to have a little of this world's deceitful favors. The kingdom of God is the proper goal of our being. To that let us look. For a place there let us live and labor and suffer. And, whatever this year of grace shall bring, let us make sure that it brings us closer to God, and arouses us more to the importance of the things of eternity, "Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep."—Selected.

THE RESURRECTION BODY.

BY REV. D. D. BUCK, D. D.

THE model after which the Resurrection bodies of the saints will be fashioned, is the glorious body of Christ.

1. Not the body of Christ, as he appeared during his natural life in this world; for it "behoved him in all things to be made like unto his brethren." (Heb. ii., 17). And when God sent his own Son into our world, he sent him "in the likeness of sinful flesh." (Rom. viii., 3.) . . .

2. Not his body, as it appeared from time to time during the forty days' interval between the resurrection and the ascension. During that time, so far as we know, he did not assume his "glorious body." Had he appeared with a body so essentially different from the one that was crucified and buried, the testimony concerning the identity of the resurrection body with the one that was dead, would have been greatly weakened.

3. Our Lord's body was glorified. And the promise is, that he "shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to even subdue all things unto himself." (Phil. iii., 21.) This power of our Lord to subdue all things unto himself—this will give assurance of a wonderful transformation of the mortal body. Think of what he can do: he could take the cinders that we fling into the streets to tread upon, and change the carbon into diamonds that would dazzle the strongest vision.

4. Several times our Lord appeared with his glorious body. Once, in anticipation of what he shall be seen to be, when he shall finally appear. This appearance is called his epiphany; it expresses the idea of brightness, splendor, effulgence, radiating beams of glory. At his transfiguration upon the mountain, when "the fashion of his countenance was altered," . . . "his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light," "glittering," "exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them." (Matth. xvii., 2; Mark ix., 3; Luke ix., 29.) St. Peter, who witnessed the transfiguration, considered it as a representation of "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ;" for then he shall appear with his glorious body. (2 Pet. i., 16.)

5. With this glorious body he appeared to Saul, when there shone about them a light more dazzling than the meridian brightness of the Syrian sun. (Acts xxvi., 13.) And thus he appear to St. John in Patmos, when "his eyes were as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace;" "and his countenance was as the sun shining in his strength." (Rev. i., 13–16.)

6. This was our Lord's glorious body. This is the model and fashion after which the resurrection bodies of the saints will be fashioned. They shall literally "shine as the brightness of the firmament," and "as the stars forever and ever." (Dan. xii., 3.) Moses became divinely luminous, even before he died, during his forty days' continuance with the Lord upon Mount Sinai. "The skin of his face shone, and they were afraid to come nigh him." He was so terribly and unendurably luminous to the people that it became necessary when talking with them, for him to cover his face with a screening vail. (Ezek. xxiv., 29–35.) What must be the effect then of being forever with the Lord!—[Extracted from "Resurrection Destinies," by W. H. S.

IS IT INFIDELITY?

Is it infidelity to believe that "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul?" Gen. ii., 7.

Is it infidelity to believe that after man sinned, "lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever; therefore the Lord God . . . drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubims, and a flaming sword that turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life?" Gen. iii., 22, 24.

Is it infidelity, therefore, to believe that God "only hath immortality?" 1 Tim. vi., 15, 16.

Is it infidelity to believe that God is the giver of immortality, "to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life?" Rom. ii., 7.

As men are not now immortal, is it infidelity to believe that this gift will not be bestowed until the resurrection, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and THE DEAD shall be RAISED INCORRUPTIBLE? "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. xv., 52, 54; Isa. xxv., 8; Hosea xiii., 14.

Is it infidelity to believe that none of the dead are raised in a mortal state? "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in INCORRUPTION. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a SPIRITUAL body.

Is it infidelity to believe that the Holy Spirit is the agent which shall quicken the dead into life at the last day? "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

As the Holy Spirit does not dwell in the wicked, is it infidelity to believe the Scriptures which declare that they will not share in this revival from the dead? "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii., 36. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead"—Prov. xxi., 16. "Drought and heat consume the snow waters; so doth the grave [sheol] those which have sinned." Job. xxiv., 19. "Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." "He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light"—[the "light" of life]. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them . . . their beauty shall consume in the grave;" [Margin—"or, the grave being a habitation to every one of them"]. Psa. xlix., 14, 19, 20. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." Isa. xxvi., 14. "These as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed . . . shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. ii., 12.

Is it infidelity to believe that "the wages of sin is DEATH; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord?" Rom. vi., 23. [The "wages of sin" is not misery, nor dying twice; it is not a condition, but an eternal state of non-existence—loss of life.]

Therefore, is it infidelity to believe that "they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx., 35, 36.

Is it infidelity to believe that "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord?" 1 Thes. iv., 16, 17.

Is it infidelity to believe the words of Jesus: "Whither I go ye cannot come," John xiii., 33. "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." John xiv., 2, 3. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. xxiv., 27, 31. "Behold I come quickly,"—Rev. xxii., 12.

Finally, is it infidelity to believe the great plan of God that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life?" John iii., 16.

If this be infidelity, or heresy, then this I confess, "after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Acts xxiv., 14.

BURNING WORLDS.

I HAVE been much interested, and somewhat amused in reading two articles in the HERALD OF LIFE, of Aug. 11. One from the "London Spectator," headed, "THE SUN AND EARTH," the other from the "British Quarterly Review," headed, "WORLDS ON FIRE." Both writers seem to more than intimate that this world will, or may meet with a similar fate in 1870; even next year, burst into flame and burn up like a heap of shavings. And lest it should give the fidgets to some of the timorous ones, I thought it necessary that the articles should be followed by a few remarks. And first, it is much more probable, and even almost certain, that these far distant fires are the birth of new worlds instead of the funeral pyre of old ones.

We have no evidence that God made this world out of nothing. The passage of Scripture nearest to it is, Heb xi., 3. And that is nearly as far from it as these celestial fires are from the earth. We have no account of the origin of matter. We are compelled to believe it had no beginning by the tenfold difficulty of believing it to have had one. For nothing can never be something; and something can never be nothing.

It may be thought presumption in a man to undertake to tell how worlds are made; because the time from Adam to the present is not sufficient to see one in the infant state grow to maturity. But suppose an intelligent being should be dropped down from Jupiter into some of our Western forests. He might view with astonishment the sturdy oak of more than a thousand years' growth; and might see the acorns on its boughs, and some on the ground. He would also see some oaks smaller, and some still smaller and smaller until one is seen just bursting from the acorn. He then would know the big old oak of four feet diameter came from an acorn. All this he might learn in an hour. So, as short as life is, we may know something of the growth of a world. The heavens are more or less filled with mundane acorns. They are called nebulæ, little whitish spots, generally round, with the brightest spot in the centre, around which is a darker ring, outside of which the light is less and less, proceeding outward from the dusky ring, until it fades away so as to give no well defined circumference. These nebulæ, however, are not always round. Some are oval, having a long and a shorter diameter, and not unfrequently a bright spot in each end of the ellipsis. Here we see matter in its original and chaotic state; gradually condensing to the focal centre, the brightest spot of the nebulae. This gathering, or condensation may be by electrical, magnetical or chemical attraction, which, no doubt, are but modifications of one and the same thing.

Now when the chaotic or nebulous matter is sufficiently condensed, the inevitable result will be a conflagration of the grandest and most magnificent kind ever seen by men or angels: a globe on fire as large as the diameter of the orbit of Saturn; and perhaps thousands of times larger. And what would be the result? Fire does not annihilate any combustible matter, that is certain. The result then would be a vast globe of ashes and cinders, of precisely the same weight that the whole mass had before it was ignited. That our earth had such a Plutonic origin can scarcely be doubted. It had its birth in fire, as its mountains and rock strata abundantly testify; and is now a cooled nebula, and once burned as brilliantly as the one in 1866.

In the burning of the star of 1866, the astronomers detected the burning of hydrogen gas; but that gas alone does not burn; but with oxygen gas it burns brilliantly. And when the two are burned together the result is water. Water being composed of hydrogen and oxygen gasse, in a chemical mixture, which is only effected by burning them. And hence the great desideratum of the present day is to find means to decompose water with ease and facility sufficient to use the two gases for common fuel. This would not only give us an inexhaustible supply of fuel, but an undiminishable supply; for any given amount of water, decomposed and burned, would give back the same amount of water. Therefore, the burning of hydrogen gas in the star of 1866, was the formation of water for its future seas, lakes and rivers, very possibly to be navigated by its future inhabitants.

And as to the magnetic storm predicted for 1870, it is nothing unusual, since they occur once in eleven years, and are a magnetic, or electric phenomena of which, as yet, we know but little. Science may yet discover that the zodiacal light, the aurora borealis, the Nov. Meteors, and even the light of the sun and the fixed stars, may have one and the same origin, viz., the various modifications of electricity which seem to pervade all matter, even the most distant nebulæ. I am almost fully persuaded that it is the life-sustaining agent in the animal and vegetable kingdoms. Be these things as they may, our earth is the ashes of a consumed star; and by no physical law will ashes burn. If God exerts his omnipotent power to burn it up, so be it. But the text must first be found that says he will do it, before any one need be alarmed about it. The earth will abide forever. See Psa. cxii., 90, and cxxv., 1, and Ecc. i., 4. All the fear we need have about it is, that we may not be found worthy to inherit it forever.

Human wisdom is an excellent thing in its place. But of all else it is the most miserable thing when woven into a religious creed. It is, however, of great use in extracting truth from divine revelation; but never should be alloyed with it. And let us one suppose that great men in science are less liable to err than great men in religion. For man, by nature, is an erring creature; and he only is wise who strives more to find where error lies than to find where truth lies. Truth floats on the surface of nature's crystalline stream; while error lies deep in the mud at the bottom; for instance, "The wages of sin is death," is a truth readily seen on the surface. But down in the mud, human wisdom has found, "The wages of sin is endless misery or die twice," etc. Again: "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body," is a truth as easily seen as a plank on the surface of a small river. But deep down in the mud, with much ado, is dug up, "It is sown a natural body, it is sprouted up a natural body:" and, "So they wrap it up." Micah vii., 3.

ASHTABULA, OHIO, Aug. 30, 1869.

FROM ELD. B. MATTHIAS.

LANESFIELD, KANSAS, Aug. 28, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I hope and pray that the HERALD OF LIFE is in no danger. I try to see none. I am altogether unwilling to see the possibility of such a disaster as the failure of our excellent paper. It is like treason to stop such a mouth, and silence such a voice. If God should so determine, it would be like saying to modern Ephraim, "Let him alone, he is joined to his idols." The HERALD is too great a favorite with many select friends to be liable to the pain and penalty of suspension. Though its friends are few, comparatively, they are peculiar. They have the virtue of a generous love for men, and the highest regard for the honor and glory of God. They have the boldness to believe and do outside of all proscription. They choose to "go forth unto Jesus without the camp, bearing his reproach." They know there is a secret happiness in this out and out business that the dim sighted cannot see. "They have an altar whereof they have no right to eat, which serve the tabernacle." Heb. xiii., 10, 13.

Allow me to say, it is no small mercy, and a special favor from God to be in this category. I think, now, there could be no surer token of my Maker's displeasure, than to "cast me into that outer darkness," where they see visions of immortal souls, demons, ghosts and spectres in general, with all the rest of that sort. And proportional wrath upon me, to allow me to believe that the resurrection of our Lord could become a reason, and a means of torment to any, little or much; that is, to pervert the resurrection of Jesus from its single, pure, joyful, blessed, triumphant use and end; and make it the means of giving life for a longer or shorter time, to all the wicked that have ever been, in order that they may be duly tormented. From the "calamity and penalty" of believing such absurdities and barbarities, good Lord deliver us. I trust we have a guarantee for the life of the paper, in the peculiarity of its friends.

But what a singular case: every birthday of this fair, promising creature, its life is threatened. The spirit of Edom cries, "raze it, raze it;" and it must be redeemed at a price. If it would only drop the virtue of its being, it would pass at par. It had better by far die, than compromise.

In a book notice in the Tribune, I read lately, Renan's opinion of Paul the Apostle; which I neither like, nor believe. But some of his remarks are suggestive and appropriate. The remarks relate to "men of action." "The first places in the kingdom of heaven are reserved for the gracious and devout." "The man of action is always a weak artist, because he does not make it his only aim to reflect the splendor of the universe." He moulds his opinions by ideas of utility. "Such are never irreproachable; the folly or wickedness of men forcing them to come to terms with them. The world favors the audacious; those that help themselves."

Politic men, politic papers and preachers, can have influence and "help themselves," and think they help others; they may conserve somewhat. But as a rule, where the effort is for "influence," it is like this: "Compass sea and land to make a convert, when done, he is twofold more the child of hell." There are two chances to one against the initiated, and in favor of the unsophisticated. At all times and ages, the single-minded in any good cause have had uphill work, and they never had it otherwise until they yielded to the "folly or wickedness of men."

The reason of the annual necessities of our indispensable paper, is its singular virtues. This will endear it ever to the true-hearted, and such as have "a single eye." One Master to serve. Yours of the little flock.

Bear Ye One Another's Burdens.

These words came forcibly to my mind while seeing the brethren giving their money to first one object and then another, till it seemed like "riding a free horse to death," to ask for more.

I thought at the time some of the friends might fling "'67" into our faces; as two or three prominent "time" believers were presented as needy. They spent all they possessed in proclaiming the Lord's advent in 1867, and now come to us for help. Well, they were honest, then, you must admit; and honest ones are worthy your generosity. Besides all, they are good, talented and useful at this period. They are all life believers. May be if they "spent all," it wasn't much. We have heard over and over that husband and I spent $400 in '67; but not so. Indeed, it would scare me to see him have half that amount. And he won't have it unless he preaches something more popular than the "Life and Advent" views. Preach the truth, Dwight, and I'll risk the bread and butter, or money either.

So don't think of fanaticism or extravagance too much; may be they have over-estimated the matter.

How beautiful is God's system of benevolence. The church that dwells together in love will bear the burdens of its weak members. None of their "widows indeed," or sick "worthy poor" will be sent to the poor-house; or thrust on to strangers for support. But like brethren or sisters of one common family will they look out for each other's good.

This was done at Camp-meeting without "grudging" or ostentation. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver," and they acted as though they gave cheerfully. Who would not with R. Wendell for speaker?

At that meeting Bro. L. C. Percival came to mind. Dear Lewis, we want you to write for the Herald, You haven't written "$30" worth yet. Let us know how the battle goes in Victoria's dominions.

How great a blessing to have the Herald open to communications among God's little toiling band. Let us appreciate and improve it, and thus encourage and build up each other. Amen. Maria M. Weaver.

Westfield, Mass.

It was the advice of Seneca to his friend Lucilius, in order the more diligently to keep himself up to his full duty, to imagine some great man, some strict, quick-sighted, clear brained man, as Cato, continually looking upon him. So the Christian who would labor earnestly and successfully must walk with Jesus—must feel that he is ever by his side, noting all he does. But O! how blessed is the thought that he is more than a silent spectator. He is an all-powerful helper—an ever-ready and willing helper.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 15, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote there or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Late Anniversary.

Our time has been so occupied since that meeting that we could not prepare anything in detail, and our friends must content themselves with the Secretary's Report, and the letters touching it, found in our columns.

That the cause in which we are engaged has been much accelerated by it, we have great reason to believe; but time will show. The promptness with which the friends made their pledges to support the Herald of Life shows they are in earnest.

The number present this year was much larger than ever before; and the other meetings held in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent" were much more fully attended, and a deeper interest in the truths we hold on Life and the Resurrection was manifested. Hitherto hath the Lord helped us. Bless His name. Let us take courage and labor on, knowing that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. If truth advances slow, it moves strong and loses no ground; and though our opponents may ask "What do these feeble" Life Believers? we know they are alive and in working order. May God continue them to life eternal, for which they seek.

We left the Camp-ground Saturday at 11 o'clock, A.M. As to the meetings after that time till the close, Sunday evening, we have received the following note from Br. Rufus Wendell:

Boston, Sept. 9, 1869.

Br. Storrs: It seems to me that the Life views never before received such an impetus at our Camp-meeting as they have received the present year. The labors under the Life tent moved forward gloriously after you left the ground—you know they did so while you were among us. I look back upon the whole occasion as one in which much solid work was accomplished, and much solid conviction produced. Our friends in every direction would exult if they could have seen with their eyes what we saw with ours. But the Christian's life is one of faith, and our scattered brethren must take our word for it when we tell them, through the paper, that the tokens are most encouraging, and that Adventism is getting to be pretty thoroughly leavened with the crowning truth of Life only in Christ.

The Life and Advent Union.

SIXTH ANNIVERSARY: SECRETARY'S REPORT.

1. The Informal Meeting.

This took place in the Life and Advent Mission Tent, commencing at nine o'clock A. M. The Secretary read communications from Brn. Leonard C. Thorne, and others. The two brethren named were detained from the meeting on account of sickness. An expression of regard and sympathy was voted both of them.

In this meeting there was a free interchange of opinion and experience, and all brought forth from their treasures the riches of divine truth.

2. The Regular Meeting.

According to previous notice, the six annual meeting of the Life and Advent Union was held at two o'clock P. M., on Thursday, Sept. 2, 1869, in the Life and Advent Mission Tent, on the ground of the National Advent Camp-meeting in Springfield, Mass.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Br. Jacob Grim, and was opened by singing, and prayer by Br. Rufus Wendell.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

|---|---|
| Total amount received | $5,399 31 |
| Interest | 122 19 |
| | 5,521 50 |
| Total amount paid out | $5,034 67 |
| Interest | 22 19 |
| | 5,056 86 |
| Balance in the treasury, Sept. 1, 1869. | $464 64 |

Br. Storrs, the Business Agent, made a verbal report. In addition to what appears in the Treasurer's report, he said that more papers had been distributed than in any previous year, while there was enough paper on hand, and paid for, to complete the present volume.

The second article of the Constitution being called for, was read by the Secretary.

On motion of Br. Denny, a committee of five, consisting of Brn. G. W. Denny, A. W. Macdonald, George K. Carroll, John C. Day, and W. H. Hanford, was appointed by the meeting to nominate a board of officers for the ensuing year.

While the committee was in consultation, the meeting was entertained by remarks from Brn. Brown, Wendell, Storrs, Roworth, and others.

The nominating committee reported as follows:

For President, Jacob Grim.
Vice-President, Wm. H. Thorne.
Secretary, W. H. H. McAllister.
Treasurer, Leonard C. Thorne.

DIRECTORS.

Geo. K. Carroll, John Kemp, Richard Martin, Wm. Roworth, and Thos. M. Redhead.

All these brethren were duly elected by a rising vote of the meeting.

Br. Grim returned thanks for this renewal of confidence, and pledged his best endeavors in the cause of truth.

Bro. Geo. Storrs was elected Editor of the "Herald of Life" for the year ensuing.

On motion of Br. Carroll, voted that we do now raise $2,500 for the purpose of publishing the Herald of Life for the next year. Under this motion $2,501 were pledged. (See list of pledges.)

Br. John C. Day, Br. T. R. Weaver, and Br. Chas. A. Hastings were appointed a committee to take care of our property on the ground.

Br. A. W. Macdonald introduced the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Herald of Life, being the organ of the Life and Advent Union, it is advisable that all articles appearing in its columns, original or otherwise, treating on subjects not held in common by all the members of the association, be presented therein as individual expressions of opinion.

Resolved, That articles from correspondents, printed in the Herald of Life, shall not be replied to in any manner in the same number in which they appear, except the Editor should deem it advisable, by their authors.

Both of these resolutions were adopted.

On motion, adjourned.

W. H. H. McAllister,
Secretary.

To Subscribers.

Two numbers more complete the present volume. Those who wish their papers continued should attend to it immediately and remit payment for the next volume. If any find theirs *dis*continued who have paid beyond the present volume, please inform us as early as possible, that we may rectify all mistakes at once.

We trust that none will allow themselves to be deprived of the first numbers of the next volume by neglecting to renew their subscriptions without delay. All persons who have not paid in full for the present volume, and such as have received the last 12 or 15 numbers for "50 cents," will, most likely, find the paper does not visit them, after the close of this volume, unless we hear from them. Let there be no delay, if you would not meet with the loss of the paper thereafter.

We send out no "Bills" or duns to any one.

The above notice must suffice, if you would continue to read the Herald of Life. As a general rule, all subscriptions are supposed to end with the volume.

Removal.

At a meeting of the "Board of Managers" it was decided that the interest of the "Life and Advent Union," of the Herald of Life and of the Tract cause, required a removal of their office to a more eligible location; and, accordingly, have fixed on 206 Broadway, Room 7, to which we shall remove in a few days; and from there the paper and all our other works will be issued after the first of October. This location is just below Fulton St., on the east side of Broadway. It is easy of access, and in a prominent place. Our friends generally, who wish to visit the office, will be rejoiced to know that they are saved the labor of climbing to the top of a five-story building; and none will feel the relief more than the Editor.

It will be a gratification, also, to our friends to know that Br. Wm. H. Spencer, of Rochester, N. Y., has been engaged by the Board of Managers to give his entire services to the work connected with the office; and he is expected to be in this city early next week.

Let us now have your prayers, your funds, and your communications for the Herald.

Justice to H. Munger.

It is due to him to say, we are satisfied, from a personal explanation, that his motive in publishing the article which we copied from the "Crisis" into the Herald, July 21, under the head of "A Proclamation," was good; not designed to injure us, but the reverse, however opposite in appearance; and we acquit him of all evil design toward Life Believers: and no man among friends or opponents took more pains to make our situation on the Camp-ground agreeable and comfortable; for which he has our thanks.

It is not until the flower has fallen off that the fruit begins to ripen. So in life it is when the romance is past that the practical usefulness begins.

LETTERS RECEIVED AT ANNIVERSARY.

From L. C. Thorne.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: Being by sudden illness deprived of the great privilege of meeting with you, permit me to say a few words by letter. Though we have had severe trials and discouragements, retrospection sees them only as blessings. We have met together from year to year, as you do this day, for the purpose of considering and adopting such measures for the promotion of truth, the upbuilding of the "faith once delivered to the saints," as seems to us best calculated to insure success, and God has been near to bless. We have felt that He, by the influence of His Spirit, operating on our minds, was with us directing our steps aright, and when, at these times, we have separated, and gone out into the broad world to battle against the dark sins and errors of the age, we have felt stronger for the conflict; felt that we were battling for Jesus, for truth and the right, and that in this holy warfare we have not to rely upon self but may lean with all confidence upon the strong arm of the mighty God of Israel.

As God has blessed us in the past so may He now bless, and more in this, that He may give us to see as we may not have before seen how weak and unworthy we are; how unstable and unsafe a thing it is to trust in self or in any arm of flesh; knowing, as saith the apostle, that we have "the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead." Especially do we need divine assistance in this respect in these days of "Lo heres," and "Lo theres."

Let us all strive to cleanse our hearts from everything calculated to impair our usefulness in the cause of Christ; all envy, jealousy, and desire for fruitless strife, if aught of these exist, so that the love of God, pure and holy, may reign triumphant there. This love will then reach out and fold within its kind embrace the Lord's people everywhere, whatever be their opinions. May we all constantly and thankfully remember how the God of our salvation did in boundless love follow us in all our wanderings in the by-ways and the dark ways of sin and error whither we wandered, and turned our faces Zion-ward, showing unto us some of the great glories of the future. How He did also raise us up and establish our going, placing our feet upon a sure foundation, Jesus Christ, the rock of ages. May we all continue on this foundation, striving to rear a superstructure of pure faith and godly life. Then we shall labor confidently and with our lamp of faith brightly burning, knowing that when our Lord and King shall return with his angel band, and obedient to his call death and hell shall give up His dead that are in them, we shall be "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead." Submitted in gospel love,

Nantucket, Mass., Aug. 29, 1869.

Dear Brethren of the Life and Advent Union: Greeting: In the allwise providence of our heavenly Father I am deprived of meeting with you this year for the first time since the Union was formed; and wishing to be represented among you, as I have been heretofore, if not with the living presence, then with the next best means, by an epistle I now address you.

My heart and hand are with you, as at the beginning: and never was I more convinced of the value and importance of the great truth that we cherish, than at this moment.

"Life only through Jesus Christ, to be bestowed on all those who are accounted worthy of that world," even the "resurrection from the dead," is the key note of the gospel; and to me all other notes, called Gospel, are subordinated and tested by this. If they will not harmonize and chime in with this, I unhesitatingly reject as another gospel.

I have watched with keen and peculiar interest the progress of this truth during the past year, and am persuaded that more progress has been made in spreading it than in any year preceding.

Valuable additions have been made to the ranks of "Life Believers;" and the literature in defence of "truth" has greatly increased.

In despite of all efforts of unbelief, truth has constantly and rapidly gained ground.

There is more willingness to hear and less bitterness in opposition than ever before.

This may be attributed partly to the increasing conviction that there is something more than a mere "hobby" (as it has been called) in it; and partly to the increasing kindness, fellowship and true Christian love: in other words, entire sanctification, that the truth produces upon its adherents.

I still adhere firmly to the position early taken, to overcome all opposition with Love, Love, Love."

My health has been so impaired that I have not labored in the vineyard as in former years, and cannot safely bear the excitement of public meetings; but, thanks to our father, I feel the springs of life are touched anew, and health and strength returning.

May I be remembered in your prayers, brethren, that this "sickness may not be unto death" but that God may be glorified thereby.

Finally, my brethren, may the great head of the church be with you and guide you in all your deliberations by His holy Spirit, that we may seek only His glory in all things, and soon we shall receive the eternal inheritance. Your brother in the patience and hope of the Gospel. R. E. Ladd.

From Lucretia B. Lamb.

St. Paul, Minn.

I desire earnestly the Herald's continuance, and earnestly pray that it may herald the truth until Jesus shall come and take possession of his inheritance which he purchased with his own blood. For its support, I will do as much as I did last year. Would gladly do more if I had the means. I will soon pay for three copies, subject to the same address as last year. I purchased, during the past year, several dollars' worth of tracts and scattered them. I will continue in this work as my kind Father provides the means. I cannot think of parting with the Herald; and, therefore, pray that wisdom may be given the Union at their annual meeting that they may devise liberal things and manifest their gratitude for so precious a light, by scattering it broadcast over the earth.

Would that I could meet with the friends at Springfield; was with them when the Herald of Life was born—but as that is impossible I rejoice that I can have access to God the Father, through Jesus Christ, as well at St. Paul as in Springfield, and wil constantly and faithfully improve this rich privilege in behalf of us all. Yours in Christian love.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ; believers in life only through the second Adam, by a resurrection out from among the dead, or a change from mortality to immortality at his appearing: As the time draws nigh when you will meet for the purpose of conferring with one another in matters pertaining to the important question, "Shall the dear Herald survive and ride out the storm?" we feel deeply on the subject, and our prayer daily is, that our Father will guide the ship safely through. As Dr. Franklin once said, "God helps those who help themselves," and we feel well satisfied that in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent" there will be union and strength. Though we are so situated that we cannot meet with you, personally, we are in spirit praying that God will give you the spirit of love, and power, and sound minds.

I am a poor old one armed-man, and have no way of making money, else would I not fail to meet with you. I have been doing all in my power during the past twelve or fifteen years, and now submit to my lot.

In regard to this western field, all that is wanted is more laborers. May the Lord send Br. Campbell and others out here.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

From Joseph Laciar.

Mauch Chunk, Pa., Aug. 8, 1869.

Br. Thorne: As the time for the anniversary of the "Life and Advent Union" is drawing near, I thought it would be most desirable to the Treasurer to receive pledges at the earliest opportunity. You can therefore reckon on my name as good for $50 on vol. vii.; but in case the requisite amount to carry on the good work another year cannot be raised, or pledged fully, you can reckon an additional amount, not exceeding $50.

Owing to business circumstances it will be impossible for me to be present at the anniversary, but trusting to the earnestness of the brethren and the help of the Lord, there is no fear in my mind about the great truths, which we hold and promulgate, being quickly and with powerful effect trumpeted throughout the world. The Lord Jesus and his Apostles have sowed the seed-truth into the soil, it sprang up, first the blade, then the stock, and then the ear. And what then? The full corn in the ear. So that during the last eighteen centuries that the growth has been going on, there was no fruit like the appearance of that which was sown; the only fruits noticeable were those which the weeds, growing up with it, have continually brought forth. But, says Jesus, "As soon as the full corn is in the ear, the reapers" will be sent, for "the Harvest is come." Now Jesus says, the "word" is the "seed." And this "word" is the "truth"—true doctrine. If then the truth which our Lord revealed unto the world was so corrupted, during the time of its growth, that none of the fruits could appear for the many centuries past, and that which the Lord planted was all along obstructed in its growth, by the watering and superfluous nourishment afforded to the weeds about it, may we not rejoice exceedingly in the fact that the "harvest" is near, because we are certain that the same seed which Jesus and the Apostles sowed is visible in our day as the "full corn in the ear." For if the great truths which we have embraced, and are heralding, are the same as those which were sown by Jesus and his Apostles, and which have not been kept before the world in the past ages, then indeed are the words of Jesus fulfilled, and it is an onimous sign of the harvest being at hand.

So much error and other rubbish accumulated at times in the past that the stalk, springing from the good seed sown, was well-nigh choked at times; and by reason of which the fruit-bearing time was exceedingly delayed (in the good stalk); but glory to God the time has arrived when the full corn in the ear is not only formed, but ripening; and so is also the seed of the weeds which have grown up with it; but alas! what is it? does it seem to be analogous to the seed bearing the germ of a future life by a resurrection from the dead through the Son of God, which seed was own by the Son and Apostles? Does it not much more resemble the seed of Phariseeism, Sadduceeism, and Paganism, which were sown abundantly at the same time that the good was? For what fruits are found, partake exceedingly, or I might say, almost universally, of hypocrisy, infidelity, and Spiritism; which in reality are nothing else but what Phariseeism, Sadduceeism, and Paganism were in the time of our Lord's life on earth, and which errors of man's invention are to be as tares bound into bundles and burned; for, as worthless as such are, will they be found at the coming of the Son of God. Nothing will stand the fiery trials of that day except what partakes of truth. The foundation (Christ), upon which most of these errors have been erected, is solid, undoubtedly, and will remain. But, woe unto all them who have been building on there with such combustible material as wood, hay and stubble, for if they cling too closely to their workmanship they are in danger of being consumed with it. They may be saved (so as by fire) if they stand a little aloof; and especially as they see the burning process of "Babylon," we should at least hope that the wise among them would hasten and get out their "stocks" from thither, least they find too much of their wealth and possessions have been there invested; the loss of which would be considered fearful. But we fear it is too late, and those who would like to get out their stocks are afraid of being scorched. Let believers in Life only in Christ, thank God that they hold no stock in "Babylon;" and take courage in prosecuting the work set before us, unto which the Lord has called us. Let the torch of the Spirit of truth be applied until the whole fabric is consumed; for we know that the blaze and smoke of their burning goeth up forever. Great is the Lord God who judgeth in righteousness and exalteth his name forever. Amen. Lord, make a short work in the earth that we may behold thee sitting on the throne of glory to reign in righteousness forever. Come quickly, Lord Jesus, Amen. Thy Brother in the Lord.

From William S. Green.

Philadelphia, Sept. 5, 1869.

Br. Storrs: Though personally you are to me a stranger, yet I feel that I know you through coming in contact with your mind and thoughts, weekly, in the Herald of Life, a paper which is throwing more light upon the Scriptures, for me, than I can express.

I was brought up under the teachings of those who believed in the inherent immortality of the soul; and as I constantly came in contact with that view, and those which necessarily grow out of it, I believed firmly that all would live forever, either in heaven or hell. Some years since, my curiosity was excited in reference to a teacher in this city, who affirmed that no one was immortal by nature; or, in other words, that immortality is the gift of God, in and through Jesus Christ, and that all out of Christ would be destroyed, or perish literally.

Of course, my prejudices were shocked at first; but little by little, upon investigating the subject, and comparing Scripture with Scripture, I have irresistibly been led to receive with all my heart what I believe to be the teachings of the Bible; i. e., that we inherit nothing but a mortal nature from Adam, and that immortality of existence is to be derived only from and through Christ.

Since this key has been placed in my hands the Bible is a new book to me; and so far as I understand it, it is in harmony with itself and its Author. I find, though, that the truth is of comparatively slow growth in my mind, as the views formed, and prejudices imbibed during over a score of years, do not readily yield, excepting to clear demonstrations of their fallacy. For the reason that your paper is to me constantly like a light shining in a dark place, I prize it highly. It brings with it to me so much of instruction, and sets forth God in such a glorious light that I await its arrival impatiently, every week.

I have presented some of your publications to friends, at times, and speak freely of those things which I know; but it seems to me as though the church generally are so wedded to traditions and superstitions, believing them to be the teachings of the Bible, that they are afraid to accept the views of truth you present.

Please send me five copies of the "Six Sermons," as I love to have some of your documents on hand to lend and give away. The copy which I have had, for some time has been going the rounds, and is now out.

That you may long be spared to defend the truth, and honor your God, is the prayer of your friend, WM. S. GREEN.

FROM BENJAMIN MELLOR.

ROCKDALE MILLS, PA., Sept. 4, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Although I have not written sooner it is not that I am cold or slack in regard to the great work in which we are engaged. I wish to assure you, and all our brethren and sisters who believe in Life only through Christ, that I am still with you, heart and soul; and the reason of my delay in answering the general call was, I was hoping to receive a considerable remittance which would enable me to give much more than I can give, or promise, at present. But I will not say less than I have given for vol. vi. So you may put me down twenty dollars for vol. vii. But still I hope that will not be all I shall be able to do.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in the blessed hope, let an unworthy brother rejoice with you, for as much as He, our Lord and LIFE-GIVER, hath counted us worthy to be intrusted with truths so important, that we may be found faithful in spreading the light which has been committed unto us, and that we may be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in labors of love, for as much as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord, is the prayer of your rejoicing brother in the gospel hope.

BENJ'N MELLOR.

FROM A. BOYNTON.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y., Sept. 6, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Having to write on business, I would also say a few words as a blessing to the household of faith. I purposed to write another article on "The Spirit;" but ill health unfits me for much effort in any direction. I was made glad and comforted with the comfort of the gospel, when on taking up the HERALD of Aug. 25th, we read the first article, "One Baptism." Truly, we said, the writer has anticipated us and done our work far better than we could. I would ask our brethren to read this article again: am glad it was given such prominence of position. These things are the pith, marrow, heart of Christianity, of which there is now a fearful lack.

False hopes are about to be mightily shaken: the tests are being applied which will bring out the evil and the good. If we have the spirit of Christ, its manifestation will be love, brotherly kindness, forbearance—tolerant, charitable; not hasty to judge or condemn, suffering long, kind. Let us have a good share of such articles as this, and the children will be fed and grow in the knowledge and love of God.

FROM J. HAMILTON, SEN.

FREDONIA, N. Y., Aug. 30, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Once more I take my pen to write a few lines concerning the precious HERALD OF LIFE. I have waited in hopes, if it was the will of our heavenly Father, to be in a condition to do more for the support of the paper than I can now feel it duty to do; for I have been out of health for the last four months, unable to labor for our support; and as I have passed my 66th birthday, I may not be able to labor any more, and my wife is a cripple, unable to walk, only by the aid of crutches. But we do not feel to complain—by no means; for the realizing of our blessed hope seems to be nearing every day, when mortality shall be swallowed up of life.

I should esteem it a great privilege if I could attend the coming anniversary of the Life and Advent Union. I long for one more meeting on earth, where love prevails in truth and not merely in word; where men and women so love the word of God that they feel willing to count all things else but drug and dross for the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord; and may love be the motive power propelling all your movements and efforts for the further usefulness of the HERALD OF LIFE. I have ever believed that it was begotten in love, and brought forth in love; and I believe the God of love will sustain it; and as one of the Lord's stewards I desire to do all He would have me in sustaining the paper. May we meet in the kingdom.

J. HAMILTON, SEN.

FROM DR. J. F. LEE.

MONROE, N. C., Sept., 1869.

BR. STORRS: It is true indeed that vain is the help of man under certain circumstances, and equally true is it that God sometimes, in mercy, convinces us of the folly of trusting in man, confiding in him, or leaning on him for aid, when seemingly we need most his assistance. In spite of all our knowledge of human nature and divine revelation, we are sure to to meet with disappointments, if we lean on man for aid or assistance, unless we are led to do so by the Holy Spirit.

We mistake in our estimate of some characters, even upon slight acquaintance, and are highly pleased with certain traits in them. Our charity and brotherly kindness may be lavishly expended on them, and yet they may ultimately prove unworthy our confidence—ungrateful, unthankful, and bitter enemies. We first took them to our bosom as sincere friends, beloved brothers, talented, highly gifted; and finally discovered they were enemies, who appeared in borrowed garb, and figured for some time in the eloquence of other men's brains, which they had memorized, or transposed in such a manner as not to be easily detected.

Now what is the sequence of such discovery—such disappointment? First, it is exceedingly unpleasant and keenly mortifying. Why? Because our self-love is wounded; our judgment was at fault; we made a grand mistake; in a word, we are convinced of our misplaced confidence and trust, and if we judge correctly, should censure ourselves more than blame the man who opened our blind eyes. Now it seems to me that, in such times as these now in progress, as well as all times, it is wisdom to listen to the dictates of the Holy Ghost—to trust wholly in God, in the Lord Jesus Christ, and humbly pray for the abiding and controlling influence of the Divine spirit, so that we may be made wise unto salvation.

It is said, "experience teaches." Some men pay dearly for their experience—painfully and dearly have some paid for reposing "confidence in a friend," and confiding in a guide. This idea is evident to many now living. It was surely evident to prophets and apostles. And God, in mercy cautions, admonishes us to avoid the danger.

Read, my dear Brother, attentively, Micah, the 7th chapter, and see the important lessons it teaches. Is human nature now any better than it was in his day? Or are the lessons needful then, of less use at present?

I know not what a day may bring forth, but I do know that, God helping me, I will continue my subscription to the HERALD OF LIFE so long as you are the Editor—and, if it please my heavenly Father to aid me in lawfully obtaining the means, I will procure in a few months, Tracts and Pamphlets for circulation. I have now none on hand—and I have loaned the only copy of Bible v.s. Tradition I have had for years, to a Baptist; who is receiving some light that enables him to see the errors so prevalent in all the sects. He and another member of the same church (both of sound intellect) are anxious to know the truth, and write, if able, in a short time, procure each a copy of Bible vs. Tradition.

The tracts and pamphlets I have distributed are working favorably, and creating no small uneasiness among some sectarians who endeavor to prevent people from reading them.

JOHN H. FENTON, Newark, N. J., writes: You may expect ten dollars from me for volume vii. of the HERALD OF LIFE. I do not know how it is, but the last issue of it is, it seems to me, almost always the best. Yours, in hope of everlasting life, when Jesus comes.

IRA FANCHER, Sandy Hill, N. Y., writes in the "Crisis," Aug. 11: A writer claims that Paul taught, Rom. viii., 11, that the quickening, brought to light, is a change from sin to holiness. Question: Was the dear Saviour changed in that way? I think not; but He was raised from the dead by the Spirit of God, from mortality to immortality, to die no more. So it will be with all them that have the same Spirit dwelling in them. I hope the HERALD OF LIFE will be sustained till Christ comes.

THE CAMP-MEETING.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: I am thankful that it was my privilege to attend the camp-meeting at Springfield. There I saw, and became better acquainted with many who write for our paper. Was glad to see and hear Sr. Corwin, and very many others.

But one who disappointed me more than all others was our Editor, Bro. Storrs. Indeed, I did not know before that he had such a soft heart. Truly, he has a soft heart if they do complain about his hard head. It astonished me to see him break down in the midst of his preaching and speak as soft and tearful over his dead friends as would a mother over her first-born. "Lost all the Holy Ghost," eh? That's what I was told by a good sister, more than a year ago: "They say George Storrs used to be powerful, but that he has lost all the Holy Ghost now." Well, as to his being powerful, his power is from God, and is felt yet. I know he writes sharp sometimes hard, and that is why I was glad to see him melt. Ah! who dares to judge in the matter of possessing the Holy Ghost? This is dangerous work.

Then, there was the Sister who has had experience in thawing out frozen "leaven." Well, well, may she keep near the Sun of Righteousness, so that at all times her soul may be warm with the love of God. And our good-natured Bro. Rowarth, pure English. Ah, I feel a little drawing toward the subjects my Queen. May be 'tis childish, but Victoria is a dear name to me. Servant of all was our dear Sr. Campbell. May God bless her for her patient care with us women and babies.

Brethren and sisters, you will indulge me by reading this rambling letter, for my little ones prevented me from speaking to you in our tent meetings. But my mind is more than ever established in the doctrine of "life only in Christ." And on both sides the question I see a deeper settled feeling; a calmness on our side and despair on the other. There is not quite so much ugliness, as a general thing. You know the password now is, "Let us have peace." What for? Don't know; and its wicked to surmise evil. One thing is sure, the Lord will build up Zion, and bless his truth. And though they who preach it be cast out of society and despised among their brethren, and their families suffer want, sometimes, it won't last forever; thank God.

I come back from the Camp-meeting determined to do more for the future. My eyes are so weak that it is with pain I write, but every little helps. Dear readers and friends, will you not write more for the future? L. R. H. Bishop, we miss you. And ye "little and unknown" ones, scattered here and there, let us hear from you. It will relieve the Editor, and make the paper more interesting. How eager you all were to hear from each other in the tent. Well, it is just as interesting to read your communications in the HERALD.

This truth is "onward." Nothing can stay its progress. When prejudice gives way, all honest minds can understand and appreciate the truth. It amused me to see them tip-toe into the door of the tent and gaze at the brethren during their "business meeting" Thursday. Said one, that man is GRIM." "He's a smart looking man, anyway." This "any-way" suggested something to me. Said a third, "They are all smart looking people in this tent." And I thought many of them were, and wasn't ashamed either of their looks, actions or doctrines, "any-way." How blessed it will be to get home, where we can meet to part no more. May we be there. Amen. Your sister, waiting for the warning. MARIA M. WEAVER.

WESTFIELD, MASS., Sept. 8, 1869.

FROM W. H. H. MCALLISTER.

ST. ALBANS, VT., Sept, 10, 1869.

BR. STORRS: I left the camp ground Friday evening, 3d inst. Next morning I left Springfield, bidding good-by to Bro. Roworth, who staid at same hotel. I went to Guilford, Vt., near Brattleboro, when I met my wife. I staid there over Sunday, and Monday returned home, joining Bro. Glass, and Bro. and Sr. Castle at Brattleboro. From them I learned the progress of the meeting after I left. I very much wish I could have staid over.

I had a good time at our meeting this year, but I think I lost very much in not being on the ground early in the morning and late at night to get the benefit of the social meetings. I stopped at the hotel on account of the cool weather, and thus lost nearly all the social meetings and some of the preaching. Next time I attend Camp-meeting I shall go prepared to stay on the grounds.

There is a Camp-meeting appointed for Vermont Adventists, to be held in Bethel the 20th to 27th of September. I have been invited to attend, and it is my intention to do so a portion of the time. I don't know what arrangements have been made for preaching or how much liberty will be given. If I go I shall have all the liberty I want or I shall leave. I would like to have some of our preaching brethren there to represent the Life views. If nothing better can be done, I shall try to do it myself. I think also that a supply of our tracts might be distributed to good advantage, and if no other arrangements have been made I will see to that for the last three days. If you think best you can send me a supply of tracts and papers for sale and distribution, as there is a demand. I will also take subscriptions for the HERALD OF LIFE, and use my best endeavors to extend its circulation. I am going there to labor and, in common with other branches, I shall claim recognition of the Life views. It is to be a feast for the people. Let the bill of fare present as great a variety of dishes as possible, so that each may select what he likes best. I am not one of those who are afraid that the truth will be damaged by coming in contact with error. Truth is only the more beautiful and striking when exhibited in contrast with error. If I can have my way, I shall favor the recognition of all the different branches of Adventists, and, could it be, I would have Litch, Himes, Grant, White, and Storrs, all on the platform together, and give them all a hearing on their most peculiar topics, and compel them to fraternize. But we shall see what we shall see, and I will report in due time. Yours waiting for the Lord,

W. H. H. MCALLISTER.

JOHN MILTON well said: "Wherefore did God create passions within us, pleasures around us, but that these, rightly tempered, are the very ingredients of virtue?"

THE "POWER OF GODLINESS:" HOW TO CULTIVATE IT WITHIN US.

IN the first place, watchfulness is indispensable. Eternal vigilance is no less the price of spiritual freedom than civil liberty. Those even who have known the freedom wherewith Christ makes his people free are ever liable to come into bondage to ordinances—to lose the power of godliness in the form. And what increases the danger is, that the change is always gradual—usually so gradual as to escape observation, especially by the subject of it. Thus, by insensible degrees, many from a high state of spirituality slide into a lifeless formalism without knowing when or how the change came over them. Hence the necessity of watchfulness to guard against the first step in this direction, as well as also to detect the influences which tend to such a result. Our spiritual foes are many and subtile. They meet us at every turn, and approach us under every conceivable guise. No marvel if at times they appear as angels of light, suggesting that we be not righteous overmuch; that religious emotion savors of fanaticism; that singularity should be avoided; that a little conformity to the world increases the influence of a Christian by giving him access to those whom he could not otherwise reach; that a decent observance of the forms of godliness is more serviceable to the cause of religion than the possession of its power.

Then objects of sense, and matters appertaining to our temporal interests, press upon us continually, tending to withdraw the mind from spiritual things, and in a measure disqualifying us for spiritual exercises.

But at no point is the spiritual life assailed as through the moral character. The power of godliness can exist only in connection with pure morals. As the carnal revives within us, the spiritual dies. When depravity gains strength the power of godliness is diminished. And how many and strong are the temptations to depart from a course of strict morality even in the ordinary intercourse of life; and how are they multiplied and strengthened when we engage in business affairs! The wish to please, the love of approbation, and the desire of possession—all lawful within their proper limits—are fruitful sources of temptation. To preserve truth and honesty, these incentives to action must be strictly guarded. The thoughts, also, need to be closely watched. No one who has carefully observed his own experience can have failed to notice the effect of his thoughts upon his character and life. Much is effected by the mere flowing of thoughts through the mind, but more important results are consequent upon the action of the imagination. No doubt the disposition prompts this action, but it is equally true that the imagination reacts upon the disposition. The passion gratified is inflamed by the image held before it in the imagination, and thus stimulated the imagination presents with increased vividness the cherished image, which, of course, again acts with increased power upon the passion. And thus the process, if not checked, goes on, molding the character into harmony with the thoughts. The process however, may be checked: for though the disposition stimulates the imagination, the imagination is, in some degree, under the control of the will. And so of the flowing of thoughts through the mind by association. The action of the imagination can be arrested, and the train of thought changed. Were it not so, watchfulness over the thoughts could be of no avail.

The appetites are likewise inlets to temptation which need to be continually guarded.

Without pursuing the subject further, it is manifest that he who would maintain the power of godliness must be watchful; and that so must he who, seeking after godliness, would not rest in the form without the power.

But we must also exercise ourselves unto godliness. Spiritual exercise is as essential to our spiritual life as bodily exercise is to our physical. If we would grow in grace we must use the means of grace. These God has appointed for our spiritual culture, and he who neglects them will certainly fail of maintaining a life of godliness. We must work out our salvation if we would have God work within us.

And this leads to the great central truth of spiritual religion; namely, that the spiritual life is awakened and preserved within us only by divine influence. It is the Spirit that quickeneth. This quickening, this awakening into life by the power of the Holy Spirit, must be preserved and carried forward by the same power which called it into being, till our whole nature is brought into harmony with the Divine will.

But to secure and retain this quickening and sanctifying influence of the Spirit two things are required of us—repentance and faith. And what is repentance? Not the mere shedding of a few tears, nor yet sorrow for having done wrong. Tears there may be, and sorrow there must be; but the repentance which is unto life is something more than these both. It is a turning about; a ceasing to do evil, and a learning to do well; a submission to God, and an acceptance of his will as a rule of life. It is not an act performed once for all, it is to be a life-long act—a ceaseless consecration of ourselves to God; and if a perfect repentance, it is an entire consecration. And herein lies the great practical error of most professing Christians—a lack of consecration—an imperfect repentance. O how few are fully given up to God! How few can say with a sincere heart, under all circumstances, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt!" Who in all their business transactions are heard inquiring, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and, knowing the Master's will, doing it? Yet if we would enjoy that baptism of the Spirit by which we are made to know the richness and fulness of the spiritual life—all the power of godliness—there must be this entire consecration of ourselves to God. Self must be denied, and God obeyed. Upon our hearts, upon our heads, upon our hands, must be written, "Holiness unto the Lord." Our daily motto for business as well as devotion must be, All for God. Whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, his glory must be our motive and aim.

But with this consecration there must be faith. Indeed, there must be some faith before there can be any consecration, for he who does not believe in God cannot devote himself to his service. To take the first step in spiritual religion requires a belief that God is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. But while consecration requires faith, faith waits on consecration. It is God's order that they walk hand in hand, faith leading the way. When consecration gets in advance of faith it becomes a spirit of legality, and the soul is left in darkness. Faith advancing without consecration passes into Antinomianism, deceiving the soul with the hope of heaven while unsaved from its sins.

This relation between consecration and faith is of the utmost practical importance. There are some who pray much and receive little. They pray and try to believe, but are left to wonder at the weakness of their faith and the barrenness of their soul. They have failed in their consecration. They have come to the temple for a blessing, but have neglected to bring their offering. Let them present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, and faith will claim, while God fulfils, the promise of the Spirit. The gift upon the altar, the fire will descend. On the other hand, there are those who sincerely and earnestly strive against sin, but make little advancement. They fight manfully the powers of darkness, but instead of signal victories they themselves are often cast down. Without consecration faith has no warrant; but with it, it is their privilege to ask with the assurance of receiving. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Consecration and faith thus united, each becomes the helper of the other. Does the soul, in struggling to give itself away, encounter difficulties which seem insurmountable?

"Faith, mighty faith, the promise sees,
And looks to that alone;
Laughs at impossibilities,
And cries, it shall be done;"

and there comes upon the soul a baptism of power which enables it to triumph over all opposition; for so the Spirit helpeth our infirmities. Or does faith waver? The soul points to the waiting sacrifice—the consecrated gift and again faith is heard to cry, "I will not let thee go."

Thank God, thus repenting and thus believing, we may enjoy that gracious and Divine influence which begets and keeps alive within the soul the power of godliness.—Selected.

CHRIST THE INTERCESSOR.

JESUS is our priest. We have no need of any other. The priest who steps between man and his Maker is out of his place. The preacher is sent forth to preach glad tidings; to point men to the great high priest, Jesus, above; every way-worn sinner may come to the mercy-seat in his own person.

A boy in Ireland went to the priest to confess. This converse ensued:

"To whom do you confess?" the boy asked.

"To the Dean."

"To whom does the Dean confess?"

"To the Bishop."

"To whom does the Bishop confess?"

"To the Pope."

"And to whom does the Pope confess?"

"To God."

"Ah, then," said the young man, "the Pope is but a man, and so am I. If he can confess to God, so can I."

And so can every sin-stricken soul.

The Catholic dying in the wilderness must sink in despair because there is no priest near to give him absolution. And the Campbellite who goes through water into the kingdom of God, dying on the desert, can find no hope because there is no minister near him to dip him in the water; nor waters in which to be "buried" were there a minister. Stand back, false guides, Jesus is the priest!

We may never know in this life how much we owe to the intercession of Christ. Perhaps when we were so nigh death's door God dispatched the angel, commanding him to cut us down as cumberers of the ground. Who knows but in that hour Jesus pleaded: "Spare him yet another year."

But what is the manner of his interceding?

When the trembling sinner weeps at the altar what language do we hear before the throne?

"Father, I bring a worthless child to thee to claim thy pardon; receive him at my hands. He is a sinful child but owns his guilt. Look not on him; he will not bear thy gaze. Look but on me—his cause is mine. I am his Intercessor. By each poor drop of blood I spilled for him, by all the sorrows of my soul, by every wound I bear, I plead for him. I would not have him lost since he comes with such humble confession in his mouth. Sin hath destroyed; death hath desired him; but, Father, forgive. I cannot bear to see him cast away, vile as he is. Father, once more I plead, forgive, for I have died that he might live. Justice and broken laws plead hard against him, but mercy hath been purchased for him by my wounds. Guilty, condemned, he claims the merit of my death."—Selected.

RELIGION AND WAR.

SOME say there is nothing in religion that militates against war, and it has always been a mystery to us how any man could say so in sincerity. If there are any two things diverse one from the other, it seems to us it must be these two. They are entirely opposed to each other, as much so as light and darkness, good and evil. This is no assertion of ours, it is a simple fact. Look and see. Let each one be tried by their fruits. Religion saves men, and war destroys them. Religion elevates and refines men, and war degrades and debases them. Religion purifies and sanctifies men, and war corrupts and defiles them.

Let us listen to the language of each:

Religion says, Thou shalt not kill.

War says, Thou shalt kill.

Religion, Blessed are the peace-makers.

War, Blessed are the war-makers.

Religion, Love your enemies.

War, Hate your enemies.

Religion, Forgive men their trespasses.

War, Forgive them not.

Religion, Resist not evil.

War, Resist to the death.

Religion, If a man smite thee on one cheek, turn the other.

Religion, Bless those who curse you.

War, Curse those who curse you.

Religion, Pray for those who despitefully use you.

War, Destroy those who thus use you.

Religion, Overcome evil with good.

War, Overcome evil with evil.

Do they speak the same language? If there is any such matter as one thing being antagonistic to another, do we not find it here? Let us seek for the things that make for peace. —Christian Era.

THE LIFE STRUGGLE.

THE world knows no victory to be compared with victory over our own passions. The struggle of life is between the flesh and the spirit, and one or the other finally gains the ascendency. Every day and every hour of the Christian's life is this contest going on, and sad it is to think how often it is that victory is declared in favor of this earth with its sinful passions. The Apostle Paul, after having labored long and earnestly in his Lord's service—after having done more for the spread of the truth than all the other apostles, still felt that he was a human being, and liable at any time, through the weakness of the flesh, to lose all. "I keep under my body," says he, "and bring it into subjection, lest after I have preached the Gospel unto others I myself should be a castaway." If this watchfulness was needful on the part of this aged and long-tried servant of God, what care and diligence ought we, my brethren and sisters, to exercise lest we should lose all in an unguarded hour? Our pathway through life is thickly set with snares for our feet. The seductions of passion, the allurements of vice, things to arouse our anger and stir up our heart's feelings, await us at every turn of life's devious ways, and blessed, indeed, is that man or that woman that meets them all without harm.—Selected.

LINES

TO BRO. AND SR. WARNER, NORTH CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

Four little ones sleep side by side,
Four loved ones fast asleep;
O'er Lazarus the Saviour wept,
And, mother, thou mayest weep.

I would not bid thee check thy tears,
Let nature mourn its fate,
'Tis well to know how sad it is,
And seek a better state.

Weep: I have wept o'er friends laid low,
And thought they had no heart
Who carelessly could chide me when
They saw my sad tears start.

We may lament this work of sin,
And yet find comfort too;
For CHRIST appears amid death's gloom
And brings new life to view.

"Thy dead shall live," the Saviour saith:
These words can cheer the heart
And make us smile amid our tears
When from our friends we part.

TRUE STORIES:

FOR OUR OWN LITTLE ONES.

BY SISTER MARIA.

No. 1.

SOME time ago I promised you, my little friends, a few true stories. And now if my little boys will amuse themselves a few moments I will commence.

Children, were you ever ugly? I don't mean by "ugly" what thorough Englishmen would understand—ill-looking,—but were you ever ill-tempered? It wasn't a very happy state, was it?

There was once a little girl whom they called Ria. She was a sickly child, and, being the only girl at home among four or five great noisy romping boys, had been teased and plagued by them, "just for sport," till the little girl had come to have a very quick and high temper, and sometimes tried to get revenge on them. Sometimes her roguish brothers would commit a fault and let Ria have the scolding for it.

In the year 1853 Ria's grandmother came to live in her father's family. Never having seen her grandparents before, it quite elated her to learn that she, like other girls, was to have a "grandma" to talk with. But grandma had reached that age when "children" were considered "an awful plague," and being very nervous, it was all in vain to try to please her, at times. Ria did love her grandma, and it was a great privilege to prepare her dinner and eat with her and grandpa. It was much nicer work, too, to wash up her dishes, sweep the floor, etc., after dinner than to do it for her mother.

But one day Ria got awfully out of sorts with grandmother! Indeed, she secretly vowed never to wash her dishes again.

"O dear, O dear, the naughty things have stolen my pipe and smashed it into a thousand pieces! I know they have. Ria, Ria! come, look round sharp and find it. Did you take it?" No, grandma. "La! sakes, there's no telling anything about a young one; you took it, so there!" And she went on in this strain till Ria got scolded off to bed for "plaguing grandma," though Ria had not thought of such a thing.

"It was real cruel," mused Ria, "for grandma to accuse me of taking her old pipe, if she does know I hate tobacco; and it was real mean usage for them to scold me to bed for it." And what is worse, when she sat down, and kept quiet long enough to think, she found the old pipe in her hand. All she said was, "Did you ever see how forgetful I am!" Why didn't she come and say, I was not to blame.

So she determined on revenge. Next morning grandma called: "Ria, have you got your penknife?" Yes. "May I take it to rip out some sewing?" No answer; but pretty soon another call, "Ria, will you bring me your knife?" No answer, though she knew grandma could see her from the chamber window. Ria sat by the well thinking of the pipe affair, when again grandma called, "Ria, will you bring me your knife?" But Ria did not go with it, and grandma used some other knife. She had her revenge, 'tis true, but all through life, whenever she thinks of grandma she thinks of her pale aged face as it looked at the open window vainly calling her. It troubled her through the day. But the day after much more.

Early next morning, a brother up stairs called, "Mother, and all, get up quick, grandma is sick, and says if you ever want to see her alive again to get up quick."

We all hastened up to her room, but she was in spasms. It fell to Ria's lot to stand by her bed-side much of the time, and oh! how much she wept about the "revenge" she had on the day previous. Once she determined to tell grandma she was sorry that she did not bring her the knife; but grandma grew cold and pale and cramped so dreadfully that Ria ran away from very fright. Before six o'clock that day grandma was dead. "Ria, will you bring me that knife?" rang through the little girl's ears, and from that day to this she has not tried to return evil for evil. She always has (and always will) greatly respect the aged. And one sin above all others that she through life has lamented is, the sin of being so unkind to grandmother.

Little children, respect the aged. When you see an old man, or woman, wandering about, poor, neglected, insulted, disrespected, before you join in the common sin of this age, stop and think, "How would I feel if it was my father, or my mother?" O how soon, too soon, we may ourselves be old, perhaps homeless also. Never forget that God loves the old, and has promised to renew their age in the world to come. Let us all strive to dwell in the better world.

DANIEL AND HIS PROPHECIES.

INTRODUCTORY OBSERVATIONS.

PAINS have often been taken to make believe that we know almost nothing of Daniel, the author of the book of Holy Scripture which bears His name. It has not been because ample records are wanting on the subject, but because men have been very anxious to get rid of them. Gibbon once said, "The stubborn mind of an infidel is guarded by a secret incurable suspicion." And it is this "incurable suspicion"—this shutting of one's self up against the admission of the truth—this foregone conclusion against the possibility of miracles and prophecy—that explains the reason that some men find no information about "Daniel, the prophet." The truth is, we know more of him than we do of Adam, Noah, or Job; as much as of Joseph, Isaiah, or Herod the Great; and nearly as much as of Moses, David, or St. Paul.

Three Daniels are spoken of in the Scriptures: one, a son of David, born in Hebron, of Abigail the Carmelitess, referred to in 1 Chron. iii., 1; another, a son of Ithamar, who went up with Ezra after the Babylonish captivity, and of whom we read in Ez. viii., 2, and Neh. x., 6; and the third, the great Daniel, the prophet of God, who wrote one of the most remarkable and important books of the Inspired Canon.

This Daniel, with whom alone we have here to do, was descended from one of the highest Jewish families, in the last period of the Hebrew monarchy. He was, almost certainly, of royal blood, born of Jerusalem. He was among the captives whom Nebuchadnezzar carried away from Judea to Babylon, at which time he was a boy not over fourteen years of age. Of all the Jewish youths thus transported, he was the foremost in every quality and attainment of body and mind. He was without blemish, skilful in wisdom, cunning in knowledge, understanding science, and having ability in him which, with his royal blood, soon secured for him an election for service in the King's palace. For three years he was put under special training for court duty, under the charge of the Babylonian eunuchs. It had been prophesied by Isaiah to Hezekiah: "Of thy sons which shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the King of Babylon" (Is. xxxix., 7). The inference is, that in Daniel was this prediction fulfilled, and that in suffering and privation he was formed for the place in which he became so conspicuous and notable. His name, also, was changed, partly as a badge of servitude, partly to obliterate the memory of his early home, but principally, that he might forget the God of Israel and become a servant of Nebuchadnezzar's god.

Still, though living among an idolatrous people, put into a school of idolaters, named after an idol god, and serving in the court of an idolatrous king, Daniel never became an idolater. From childhood he had been instructed in the knowledge and law of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, his fathers, and from those teachings he never departed. When but a boy of fourteen, he refused to be persuaded to eat of the king's meats, because they were connected with idol-sacrifices, and were not prepared in accord with Jehovah's law. And so vigorous was his youthful faith, heralding in its simplicity his future greatness, that he trusted in God to uphold his health and strength by pulse and water, quite as well as through the stronger but forbidden food. He was from the first persuaded, and on this persuasion he ever acted—an abiding model for all young men—that abstinence from sinful indulgences is the only sure way to real prosperity in the end. In that faith he succeeded beyond all his heathen companions when a youth. And in that faith he continued and prospered, from the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, through all the changes of empire, and all the extraordinary trials of his high place, down to Cyrus. From early youth one of the Judges of Babylon, president over all the colleges of its wise men, and head of the heads of all the sections of the empire; amid all the intrigues indigenous to Oriental despotisms; amid all the envy toward a foreign captive as a counsellor of royalty; amid all the troubles incident to the king's seven years' insanity, and the murder of two of his successors; amid all the varied changes of the kingdom and its monarchs; he maintained an unbroken political greatness of seventy years, preserved his integrity untarnished, and outlived envy, jealousy, and dynasties. Honored during forty years of Nebuchadnezzar's reign; intrusted with the king's business under the insolent and sensual Belshazzar; owned by the conquering Medo-Persians; the stay and earthly protector of his people during the dreary years of their exile; the writer most likely of the decree of Cyrus giving leave for their return to the land of their fathers; a worshipper of the true God in the most dissolute and degraded as the most grand of the old heathen cities, his life presents one of the rarest pictures the world has ever beheld—a living poem of faith and greatness more eloquent than words.

Four times, outside of the book of Daniel, is this distinguished man referred to by name. He is twice mentioned by Ezekiel; once for his preeminent godliness, and once for his transcendent wisdom. In the one instance, the word is: "Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing greviously, . . . though, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness" (Ezek. xiv., 13, 14). In the other instance the prince of Tyre is charged with the presumption of professing to be "wiser than Daniel" (Ezek. xxviii., 3.) And the Saviour himself is twice said to have referred to him in full acknowledgment of his eminent character as a servant and prophet of God (Matt. xxiv., 15, Mark xiii., 14).

The book of Daniel is quite as remarkable as the life of its author. "Daniel," says Jerome, "not only, as do other prophets, writes that Christ should come, but also teaches at what time he should come, and arranges the kings in order, and numbers the years, and announces the most evident signs." But for this very reason he has been assailed, and the most extraordinary attempts made to impeach his prophetic character. The natural heart dislikes certainty and definiteness in sacred things. As long as they are left in the mist, capable of being turned and twisted into harmony with any system that may be invented, people are quite willing to have them pass for Divine; but so soon as they become fixed, and fastened down upon definite events and dates, the character of which can no longer be doubted, then the proud heart rebels, its lurking unbelief is detected, and the superior clearness and certainty of the thing is made an argument for the rejection of it as not Divine. This was the ground upon which Porphyry, in the third century, assailed the inspiration of this book; and the same is the staple of argument on the part of troops of rationalistic critics in modern times.

But, we have no quarrel with the Book on this score, and consider it very unreasonable that any one else should have. We accept and hold it, from beginning to end, as it stands in the Canon, as the production of the great Daniel of the captivity; and by no possibility the work of any other man; and as, at the same time, an inspired Book, unerring in its history, and infallible in its predictions—yea, one of the noblest and most important individual sections of the Word of God.

It is agreed on all hands, that the Book of Daniel is from one writer. Its style, language, structure, and the interior dependence of one part on another, prove that it was composed by one mind, and proceeded from one author. And as the production of one author, it is impossible, from the nature of the contents, the languages employed, the perfect mastery of facts and their minutiæ, and the exactness of allusions which could not have been known by any one in the time to which some have assigned the composition of the work, that it could have been written by any other than the very Daniel whose history it gives, and who so often in the course of the narrative claims to be the seer and actor whose life and visions it records.

It cannot be successfully disputed, that this Book was received into the Canon of the Old Testament, as the authentic and sacred work of the Daniel of the captivity, which canon was regarded as complete long before the time of the Maccabees, to which skeptical critics would refer it. With all the scrupulousness of the Jews, as to what they admitted into the catalogue of their sacred Books, there is no instance in which they ever classed the Book of Daniel with apocryphal writings, or doubted concerning its authenticity or inspiration.

Josephus witnesses that this book of Daniel was in existence in the time of Alexander the Great, that it was shown that conqueror in Jerusalem by the high priest as one of the prophetic Books of the Jews, and that it told that a Greek should destroy the Persian Empire, and that Alexander was encouraged by it to undertake his Eastern expeditions, and was so pleased to learn what he had ascertained from it, that he agreed to grant to the Jews whatever favors they might desire of him. (Antiquities, B. xi, chap. viii.) This account is corroborated by other historic facts, viz., that Alexander was at that time personally in Palestine, that he had an interview with the high priest and others, that the Jews voluntarily surrendered to him, and that he did treat them favorably. Yet all this occurred more than a century and a half before the time of the Maccabees.

But above and beyond all this, is the testimony of the Lord Jesus himself. In Matt. xxiv., 15, he says: "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth let him understand) then," etc. In Mark xiii., 4, the same is again recorded: "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not (let him that readeth understand)," etc. The Saviour here recognizes Daniel as a true and real historic personage, the same as Moses, Isaiah, or David; He distinctly ascribes to him the character of an inspired and worthy prophet of God; He also refers to him as the author of a book, quotes from it as well known, and commands and admonishes that special attention be given to what is thus prophetically contained in that book. The world knows of no other "Daniel the prophet," and of no other Book of Daniel the prophet, to whose records to give special heed, or which speaks of such an abomination as that to which the Saviour refers. But we do know that this very Book of Daniel was in existence in the Saviour's time, that it was then received and held by all as one of the sacred Books, and that it does speak of the very thing to which the Saviour refers. He must therefore have had this Daniel, and this book in His eye. . . . The whole religion of the Bible thus stands or falls with this book of Daniel. Deny its authenticity and prophetic character, and you strip Christ of all claims to our confidence, and leave no ground for faith at all. And when the matter comes to such a pass, it is time for a criticism, which would fain call itself Christian, to hide its face, and confess that it has sinned before God and man, in attempting to make believe that this great and holy Book is a forgery, and unworthy of our regard.

Nor will it answer to bring in half way proposals, to the effect that it was written by some other Daniel, and that its object and tendency were good, though feigned, and its facts overstated. Either it is Divine and true throughout, or it is an insufferable imposture, and an immoral and untrustworthy thing throughout. If another Daniel wrote it, he was a consummate liar, upon a most frightful scale, and in a line of particular aggravation. Even the heathen had better ideas of morality than to allow such forgeries in the name of God as lawful means of edifying His people. And then, to make the Saviour himself connive at and sanction such a cheat, is irremediably fatal to his claims as the Son of God, and to Christianity as the religion of God.

The original Book of Daniel is written in two distinct languages. The first chapter, and the first three verses of the second, are written in Hebrew. From chapter 2, verse 4, to the end of the seventh chapter, it is written in Chaldee. The eighth chapter takes up the Hebrew again, which is continued on to the end.

We have seen it stated that "it is now utterly impossible to ascertain the reasons why one portion of this Book was written in Chaldee and another in Hebrew." But this is a misstatement. The reason for the use of the two languages is plainly inferable from the nature of the subjects. Where the language is different, the central subject is different. The early history of Daniel and his companions, is a part of the history of God's people, and so it is written in their national language. It is Hebrew. The account touching Nebuchadnezzar's forgotten dream, its interpretation, and the historical matters following, had reference to the world-powers, and the affairs of the empire. It related to God's dispensations to the heathen; so also Daniel's first vision, which supplements the revelation in the king's dream, expands it, and fills it up. These therefore are given in the world's language, that which was chiefly employed by the Babylonians, and understood from the Persian Gulf to Damascus. What comes after the seventh chapter, relates also in part to the world powers, but only as they stand connected with the people of God, the coming of the Christ, and the setting up of his glorious kingdom. The centre is different from the other instances. Hence the common language of the prophets is resumed, and what mainly concerns God's people is written in their own language.

There is thus a distinct and ascertainable principle, at once beautiful and just, upon which these different languages are employed. What relates specially to the world and its empires, is given in the language of the then great head of those empires; and what relates specially to the Divine kingdom and its adherents, their trials and triumphs, is given in the sacred language of the chosen people.

Thus, even in its remote external accidents, the Book of Daniel suggests the broad and everlasting difference which exists to the eye and mind of God between His own people and the common world with which they are in contact. The whole thing argues one author to the Book, and that author not only versed in knowledge and languages as only the Daniel of the captivity was, but also in profoundest internal accord with the spirit of prophecy and the mind of God.—Prophetic Times.

BURYING ALIVE.

THE great Washington, and others of eminence, suffered through life with a fear of being buried alive. Most distressing narrations have been given from time to time about dead bodies being found turned over in their coffins. Such things may have taken place but it is a very rare occurrence. It is known that in some parts of Europe the corpse is placed in such a position, for several days, that if it should revive, a bell rope touches the hand, and the alarm could be given to the whole neighborhood; in one hundred years it did not occur that one of these bells had rung a single time. Still great efforts have been made by scientific men to discover some rule by which death may be infallibly indicated. For many years the French government has held out a standing reward of a large amount of money to any one who would discover and communicate a satisfactory test, other than that of natural decomposition, indicated by the skin turning to black and blue and green, which is conclusive on the subject; but in cold weather this may not take place in many weeks, and to keep the body so long would be inconvenient and objectionable on many accounts. A method has recently been given to the French government, which will probably take the prize: Hold a lighted candle to any portion of the body; a blister will soon rise; if on puncture it gives out a fluid substance, death has not taken place; if it emits air only, it is perfectly certain that life is extinct; for which we offer but one reason among others, in case of actual death the blood is congealed in a sense, and there is no moisture—simply a little air: this being rarefied under the flame, raises up the skin; if there is life, the flame causes an inflammation, and nature in her alarm sends increased material there for repair—a kind of glary fluid—and this being sent there in excess, causes the skin to rise. Inability to feel the pulse or heart beat, cold skin, no dew on a bit of glass—none of these are conclusive, as there has frequently been life where none of these were observed.

A SABBATH AFTERNOON AT DR. BONAR'S CHURCH IN EDINBURGH.

HAVING gone to St. Giles' in the morning, to sit where, if we had sat once, we should have heard John Knox preach, or seen Jennie Geddes throw her stool at the Dean, we sought out Chalmers' Memorial Chapel in the afternoon, to listen to Dr. Bonar, the sweetest hymn-writer of our day.

The morning's lifeless sermon had wearied us so much that we determined to make sure of Dr. Bonar before entering the church, intending, in his absence, to return at once to our hotel. So, bowing to an old gentleman who stood in the door, I asked him (in a carefully prepared euphemism, for people in this country seem to suffer in their nerves when a straightforward question thrusts itself upon them) if Dr. Bonar would preach to-day. The courteous affirmative reply pleased and almost surprised me, so often is one's heart's desire defeated in this matter of the minister. I speedily forgot decorum, and exclaimed;

"How glad I am, for we Americans admire him greatly!"

The kind old gentleman became enthusiastic, too.

"Good, good! You shall have the best seat we can find;" and soon he had us, by the sexton's intervention, installed in a most eligible place, whence we inspected the elegant church, whose comfortable seats contrasted pleasantly with the straight up-and-down board backs where we sat at the "Establishment" this morning.

"Notice the symbols in this passage:

"1. The Axe.—You know what this is meant to do, and what it is not meant to do. It is not a pruning-knife, to lop off here and there a branch; it has one use alone—it is the weapon of destruction.

"2. The Warning.—'Laid at the root of the tree.' Not a word is spoken; the symbol carries its own weight. The husbandman, when he lays an axe at the root of a tree, means to cut it down. (With startling emphasis these words are uttered.)

"3. The Execution.—For a while the axe lies idle, its sharp edge glittering in the sun; but now the mandate comes which calls it into quick, relentless action: 'Cut it down!'

"4. The Doom.—'Cast it into the fire!' The tree cumbered the ground when living, it must not cumber it when dead.

"Now in conclusion, note the cause of this tremendous tragedy. It is simple unfruitfulness. I think it is just this that makes the whole symbol so unspeakably terrible. It is the cutting down of him who had everything but fruit. He had root, stem, leaves, branches—everything but fruit. Does not this charge, brought home to each of us, search through and through? But, oh! I would not have you hear these solemn words despairingly. Remember there is time to be fruitful yet. There's One who gives himself to each of us—One who is full of life. Fly, then, to Him, who came from heaven that, from earth's withered trees, He might rear for himself a fruit-producing forest!

"May the Lord bless these words to all who hear!"—The Methodist.

TALLEYRAND'S DEATH-BED.

FOR nearly half a century, this veteran diplomatist acted a prominent part in the affairs of Europe. As the prime minister or ambassador of the Directory, the Consulate, the Empire, and the monarchy of Louis Phillippe, he negotiated the important treaties which determined the boundaries of empires and the fate of kingdoms, and formed plans which made Napoleon an emperor, and the emperor an exile. Such a man's view of an eventful life of fourscore years, furnishes instructive lessons to men who are wasting the energies of being on political ambition or worldly aggrandizement. Just before his death, a paper was found on his table, on which he had written, by the light of the lamp, such lines as these:

"Behold, eighty-three years passed away! What cares! What agitation! What anxieties! What ill-will! What sad complications! And all without other results, except great fatigue of mind and body, and a profound sentiment of discouragement with regard to the future, and disgust with regard to the past!"

Contrast with this the exclamation of "Paul the aged," as he was about closing his earthly career: "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day." A death-bed is the triumphal chariot of the useful Christian, however humble; it is the executioner's cart of the worldly unbeliever, however exalted.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. BY GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

TRUTH AND LOVE.

LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN.

From Rev. S. Minton.

I SHOULD not have troubled you with another letter, but for the avowal with which you conclude, that you feel bound to withdraw from Christian intercourse with any who "cause to err;" i. e., who differ from you in any religious opinion, and venture to express their opinion; including of course all Baptists, Arminians, anti-Millenarians, and others, whom you must necessarily consider amongst those who "cause to err." This spirit or principle, if you prefer it, has been the bane of the church in all ages; it was the life and soul of the Inquisition, it is the essential virus of the worst kind of schism, and is that which enables the world to say—"See how these Christians hate one another!"

In this question of eternal suffering you have not even the excuse of its being a matter of faith; it is simply a matter of opinion. I do not say merely of interpretation, because a matter of faith, such as the Deity of Christ or the atonement, may depend on interpretation. But this doctrine, however important it may be in its practical bearings, and therefore however worthy of earnest discussion, is purely a matter of opinion.

I might have some excuse for elevating it into a matter of faith, because my enjoyment in looking forward to eternity depends in great measure on the assurance that God will be "all in all;" that sin and misery will come to an end; and that at length "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

I can rejoice even now, notwithstanding the existence of present evil, "in hope of the glory of God;" in the prospect not merely of being myself delivered from the power of evil, but of forming part of God's glorious universe, when evil has been banished from it for ever.

I should be sorry to be able to rejoice in the prospect of an eternity, throughout which the wailings of despair would be continually ringing in my ears, and the writhings of agony be ever before my eyes; and equally sorry to think that I could ever sink to such an unutterable depth of selfishness as to be able to spend an eternity of happiness in forgetfulness of the fact that such things were going on, even though they were put far away out of sight and out of sound.

Furthermore, my hope of immortality depends upon the plain natural meaning of those innumerable texts which you are obliged to rationalize upon, and interpret in a non-natural sense, in order to maintain the traditional philosophy about man's inherent immortality.

But you have no pretext for it whatever. Neither your faith nor your hope can, in the slightest degree, depend upon your interpretation of those passages being correct. Your hope centres in the salvation which Christ offers from sin and all its consequences. What those consequences will ultimately be to such as are not saved is a matter of opinion, and cannot possibly, in your view of it, touch the foundation at all. The eternal life, which we have in him, is precisely the same thing, whatever be the alternative to those who refuse it. So, too, are the means by which he obtained it for us, and communicates it to us.

If indeed we believed your view to be taught in Scripture, and still denied its truth, the case would be different; for we should be shaking the foundation of all faith. But you know that it is not so. You may think that our judgment is biassed by our feelings, as we may think that yours is biassed by traditional opinion and party discipline. But when Christians of approved character and undoubted credibility on both sides, solemnly declare their conviction that the view they hold is in accordance with the teaching of Scripture as a whole, then, for either party to break fellowship with the other on such a matter as this, because they refuse to do violence to their own convictions, and to accept the dictum of those who take another view, is, in the last degree, unchristian in principle, and disastrous in its effects, upon the church and the world. "Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing, and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you."

That the difference of opinion is a very serious and important one, as bearing upon the success of the gospel, from a human point of view, I not only admit, but strenuously maintain. I believe that your doctrine is the fruitful parent both of infidelity and of indifference; that it weakens the gospel message, and in a variety of ways does incalculable mischief. You, on the other hand, think that my doctrine will make sinners less anxious to be converted, because less afraid of the ultimate consequences of sin; that the state of mind, which St. Paul pronounced to be the natural consequence of disbelieving in any future state, either of happiness or misery, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," will also be produced, if men are told that the result of such conduct will merely be the loss of eternal happiness, and everlasting destruction of soul and body in hell.

No doubt this difference of opinion, like every difference in a greater or less degree, must interpose some difficulty in our working together, and detract somewhat from the pleasure of mutual intercourse. But to refuse to hold communion with one another, to denounce one another, or to change countenance towards one another on that account, would be a grievous sin—a sin of ignorance, perhaps, but still a sin.

Do not those who are looking for the Lord's speedy coming believe that they who expect the world to be converted by missionary agency, "cause to err," and weaken the force of the cry, "Prepare to meet thy God?" And on the other hand, do not those who refuse to believe that expectation to be scriptural, consider that you and other Millenarians "cause to err?" Do they not believe that you will probably be the cause of many heathens spending an eternity in torment, by damping the missionary zeal of those whose enthusiasm would have been kindled at the prospect of converting the world? Both sides are not only at liberty, but absolutely bound, according to the strength of their convictions, to endeavor to spread their own opinion. But are they to excommunicate one another, or look coldly upon one another, on account of this difference? Is it to embitter their mutual intercourse, or to debar them from all intercourse? Is one to call the other heretic, infidel, and so forth, because he "perverts" or "corrupts" what appears to his opponent's eyes so "plainly revealed," so "explicity declared" in Scripture? Alas! for our Master's seamless robe! Alas for the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace! How long, O Lord, how long?—The Rainbow.

MILLENNIAL JERUSALEM.

BY J. T. BARCLAY, M.D., MISSIONARY TO JERUSALEM FROM AMERICA.

"MENE, mene, tekel upharsin" was the terrific verdict denounced alike against the empire of the Chaldees, its haughty monarch, and its mighty capital, "the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency;" and upon many a splendid city of antiquity has "Ichabod" been written: but of Jerusalem, Jehovah says, "I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands: thy walls are continually before me. I will make thee an eternal excellency." We accordingly find that, however often doomed to utter destruction by her merciless spoilers and subverters, Phœnix like, she has always risen from her ashes in due time. For the same Almighty Being that not only suffered these chastise ments to be inflicted upon the holy city, but declares in judgment for her sins, "I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons. Zion shall be ploughed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house like the high places of the forest," also declares, in fulfilment of his inscrutable decrees, "Because they have called thee an outcast, saying, This is Zion whom no man seeketh after; behold I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling places, and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof"—"it shall not be plucked up nor thrown down forever."

It is strongly intimated in this comprehensive promise, that the city would not only be fully restored, but be built up according to her ancient landmarks, and that such a re-edification was literally accomplished under those great reformers and restorers, Ezra, and Zerubbabel, and Nehemiah, we have abundant evidence in the memoirs of the admirable Tershatha, and the zealous scribe. But the same Divine Being who so graciously promised its restoration, is pledged also for its enlargement beyond its ancient boundaries. And, to any one at all acquainted with the history of Jerusalem, and the topography of the city and its environs, the truth of this declaration will abundantly appear from the following explanatory paraphrase of the prophetic text recorded (Jer. xxxi., 38–40).

38. Behold, the days come saith the Lord, that the city shall be builded to the Lord from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

[38. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, after the expiration of the seventy years' captivity, that the city shall be built to the Lord, not only on its most impregnable foundations (in the southern quarter) but also the less defensible wall in the north—from the tower of Hananeel even to the gate of the corner—that portion of it most completely in ruins—from the most eastern point even to the westernmost, whence southward, the fortifications are strong—so as to occupy all the site heretofore inclosed.]

39. And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.

[39. And not only so, but the measuring line shall go forth yet further over against it, the former northern boundary, upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about on that ridge and the rising ground that separates the Kedron valley from the land around the north-east part of the city, commencing at the north-west corner of Zion, and encircling a large district even around to Goath (or Golgotha), the place of a skull, that head of land that juts out into the valley of Kedron near Gethsemane like a cape into the sea.]

40. And the whole valley of the dead bodies and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kedron unto the corner of the Horse Gate, toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord: it shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more.

[40. And this extended wall shall embrace in its north-east portion, the whole valley of ashes and dead bodies, as well as in the included portions of the sepulchral declivities of Kedron: and all the fields or vineyards even unto the corner of the Horse Gate, toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord, and it (the city, at least under its original dimensions) shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more during the present age, (though it may be repaired and beautified), but it shall remain throughout the whole millennial age in one position or another.]

And to this permanence and prosperity of the holy city throughout the Millennium, Zechariah also abundantly testifies in the last chapter of his prophecy—tenth verse: "And it shall be lifted up and inhabited in her place from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the King's wine press." The landmarks here indicated seem expressly designed to mark out the ancient capital of the Jewish kings, and purposely to exclude much of Cænopolis—the large addition made by the apostate Jews under Agrippa:—and not without special reason, for Jerusalem is yet to be surrounded by another inclosure, whose prescribed limits, of course, the city bounds must not transcend—a fact most significantly indicative of long premeditated design in superintending providence. This wall of the sanctuary, seen in vision by Ezekiel, is a square of five hundred reeds, or rather more than a mile on each side, around which extends a narrow suburban strip, thirty yards in width. If the southern boundary of this square be located so as to coincide with the southern limits of the ancient city and the western limits as closely as it can well be, there will be a considerable vacant surplus on the east and north of the city, and the temple area will fall about the centre of the enclosure, in accordance with the intimation conveyed by the prophet in his description of the holy city and vicinity. (Ezek. xlv.) The extension of the bounds of the city will render its area rather greater than any phases under which it has hitherto existed; and, with this enlargement on the north and the east, still more completely will "the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields, unto the brook Kedron, unto the corner of the Horse Gate, toward the east be holy unto the Lord."

Whilst the temple, seen in vision by Ezekiel, so far at least as the details are given, bears a general resemblance to that of Solomon, and the later structure erected by Zerubbabel, and repaired by Herod according to the accounts of Josephus and of the Talmud, it is yet not designed after either. In order to locate this temple and the surrounding "sanctuary" within the compass of Moriah's surface, it has been seriously proposed to change the text and substitute cubits for reeds, in some passages, after the example of the seventy, who took the liberty of making such an alteration, no doubt under the impression, however ill founded, that the prophet was describing the fashion of the temple to be erected on the restoration of the Jews, after the seventy years' captivity. But as Dr. Scott well observes, "If men allow themselves to substitute one word for another in the sacred text, because the alteration would render that consistent with their systems which otherwise would be incompatible with them, there is no knowing to what lengths they may proceed. Surely it is better to acknowledge our ignorance on such abstruse subjects, than to support a favorite scheme of interpretation by giving countenance to so dangerous a measure." A sentiment surely worthy of all acceptation; and especially in reference to the portion of Scripture now under consideration, which has always been esteemed by the Rabbis so abstruse and difficult of exposition in some respects: yet the adaptation of the temple and courts described by Ezekiel to the temple mount, at least, is attended with no special difficulty, and certainly requires no such reduction as that proposed. The area of Mount Moriah is abundantly adequate to the accommodation of the projected temple and its courts. And there is certainly no kind of objection to the inclosure of the whole city within the five hundred reeds quadrilateral, constituting the boundary between the sanctuary and the profane place, provided at least, that it be remodelled and inhabited only by the Prince, the Priests, Levites, etc., in attendence on the temple service.

But while the exterior inclosure of the sanctuary described by Ezekiel is so much more extended than that of the former temples, the sacred fane itself, as well as the other corresponding structure, is but slightly larger. Their respective dimensions, indeed, are generally identical as far as recorded; but it must be remembered that the cubit used by "the man" in measuring Ezekiel's temple, is the "greater cubit," being 21.648 inches in length, while the measurements of the other temples were given in the common cubit of eighteen inches—shorter than the former by a handbreadth, which is rated at nearly four inches. (Ezek. xl., 5, and xliii., 13.) And besides this discrepancy in size, there is also a considerable dissimilarity in the internal arrangements. In the former temple there were four courts, that of the priests, that of Israel, that of the women, and that of the Gentiles, whereas in the Ezekiel temple, there are only two mentioned, the inner and the outer, or utter court. But there are many points of difference between the Ezekiel or millennial temple, and the old Jewish temple in some of its former phrases, all going to show a modified ritual adapted to the millennial age.

That this temple is not to be erected before the final advent of the Messiah, is obvious from the declaration of the Lord by Zechariah (vi., 12,) "Behold the man whose name is the Branch: and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord."

The temple and the courts described by the prophet as being in the midst of a square plot, called the "sanctuary," surrounded by a wall five hundred cubits long on each side, situated in the midst of the "holy oblation," a special reservation of territory, about fifty-one miles in length, and twenty and a-half in breadth, which is assigned to the priests as their place of residence. Contiguous to the "possession of the priests," is that of the Levites, of the same dimensions, lying immediately on the north; and to the south lies the "possession of the city," the same in length, but only half the breadth of the other two portions, called also the "profane place for the city for dwelling, and for suburbs for them that serve the city." This great city, Jehovah-Shammah, is a square of ten and a-fourth miles on each side, inclusive of its suburbs, half a mile wide, and occupies the exact middle of this last portion.

It is thus seen that these three portions united form a rectangular quadrangle of fifty-one miles on each side, quadrating with the cardinal points of the compass, which being protracted upon the map of Palestine, will be found to occupy nearly all the regions of country lying between the Mediterranean and Perea. On the eastern and western faces of this immense square the Prince is assigned his "portion", the exact quantity not specified, but doubtless including all that triangular tract between the holy oblation and the Mediterranean on the west; and the immense parallelogram extending from the eastern side of the oblation, between the new divisions of Judah and Benjamin, entirely to the border of Perea. It will be seen on inspecting the map, that the lots respectively assigned to the different tribes of Israel, differ very materially in position from the former partition under Joshua, being arranged nearly in a reversed order. And although this great oblation is situated much nearer the southern than the northern border of the newly appointed Holy Land, yet there being only five divisions below and seven above and the land being also much wider below than above, the divisions are nearly equal in capacity, though so widely differing in length and breadth. And this remark will apply with equal truth to the entire country in its utmost boundaries from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean in one direction, and from Mount Amanus to the Red Sea and Persian Gulf on the other, as it does to the restricted limits described by Ezekiel.

The exact location of the holy oblation within this district of country, though so minutely described, is not very clearly delineated, and hence cannot be determined with absolute precision. But upon the supposition that the temple is to occupy its former site, and the "very high mountain," to the south of which the great city is to be located, is Jebl Fuseidis, or Trork mountain (Beth-haccerem); its nothern boundary will run due east from a point on the Mediterranean coast, about twenty miles above Jaffa, to the western declivity of the mountains of Ammon and Moab; its eastern side will be a few miles east of Jordan, on this declivity, and corner with the south line near the mouth of the river Arnon, thence crossing the Dead Sea, and passing a short distance south of Jebl Fuseidis and the ancient Jeba, will unite with the western border eight or ten miles west of Beersheba. If "the living waters that go out from Jerusalem," as recorded in the fourteenth chapter of the prophecy of Zechariah, be identical with the waters described by Ezekiel in the twelve first verses of the forty-eighth chapter of his prophecy, as issuing from the temple (and they undoubtedly are), then must the temple be built upon its ancient foundations in the Holy City. And that the city is to be rebuilt upon its ancient site (and if not under the very meter and bounds that circumscribed it at the period of its subversion by Nebuchadnezzar, at least as extensive) is also evident. (Jer. xxxi., 38–40; Zech. xiv., 10). That the "very high mountain," on the south of which the prophet saw the future city in vision, can be no other than Jebl Fuseidis) that celebrated station in days of yore) is sufficiently obvious from a consideration of the fact, that there is no other mountain in all southern Palestine to which this expression would apply with the least propriety. A circumstance strongly corroborative of this conclusion, is found in the fact that this mountain is situated just on the northern border of the belt of country that is to be levelled as a plain from Geba to Rimmon; and for what purpose is this rugged region to be reduced to an even surface, but as a site for the vast millennial city—Jehovah-Shammah!

This city of cities will cover an area of more than a hundred square miles, and will number its inhabitants by millions. It can be rendered very accessible by a short railway from Al Arish, Ashkalom, or perhaps still better, Gaza, reputed the very best seaport on all the coast of Syria; and the construction of a railroad to Ezion Geber, Solomon's celebrated seaport at the head of the Elanetic branch of the Red Sea, is also practicable at a small cost. The commerce of the East once flowed mainly through a channel almost identical in position with the route here indicated, between the Mediterranean and Indian Ocean. And it is doubtless destined again to become the great highway of trade and travel between the East and the West. Such a city in such a climate, in a position so advantageous in a civil, commercial, and geographical point of view, might well claim to be the mistress of the world, when Judea shall have again become inhabited by its rightful owners. But still it is to its neighbor, a few miles to the north, the city of the Great King—the joy of the whole earth—that this supremacy is assigned in the coming age by him who is Governor among the nations, the King of kings and the Lord of lords.

LETTER TO A BROTHER IN ENGLAND.

LYNN, MASS., Sept. 3, 1869.

MY DEAR BROTHER: Some time ago you requested me to make you a statement of my opinions and belief on subjects connected with religion.

The undertaking has always appeared to me to be formidable and difficult. I am afraid I shall fail to express myself with sufficient clearness, and I know that I cannot give my views with much fulness or detail.

At the outset I desire to say that I do not expect to change your ideas on those subjects by anything I may be able to advance; you undoubtedly have, or at least you believe you have, which is the same thing, good and sufficient reasons for the particular views you hold, and I am very far from being vain enough to suppose that you will get any new light from my poor farthing candle.

Most of my life I have drifted about in a sea of doubt and uncertainty, and I am by no means fixed and settled even now; but you will, I am sure, do me the justice to believe that such ideas as I have (however much they may differ from yours) represent the conclusions to which I have been really forced in a sincere and anxious effort to discover truth and to have some fixed belief of my own.

You well know, dear Jardine, what a good Christian man our father was, and how anxiously he labored and strove to impress upon our young minds the duty and importance of personal religion. I think I have never doubted the reality of religion; how could I with an example such as his before me? His walk and conversation were always consistent with what he professed to believe, and never, in all my experience of him, do I remember an instance in which his act was out of accord with his Christian character and the principles he professed. His religion was real, it was his motive power in great things or small, and governed all his actions. All my life I have recognized the importance and happiness of personal religion; and often, often did I wish and pray to be able to give my heart to God, and become such a man as father was, to share all his hopes and aspirations, even if I had to adopt all his views. But, alas! I never could. When I was a child I was taught, as you well know, to believe (as you were taught to believe and as I suppose you now believe) that somewhere in the universe there is a place called Hell, to which God will consign, or rather does consign what you term the unconverted; and there throughout eternity continually inflict upon them most intense and ever-increasing torture. I never, from the earliest dawn of reason, believed that doctrine, that terrible doctrine. I doubted it when I was so young that my conclusions must have been the natural and independent result of the workings of my own mind; they were not drawn from anything I had read or heard, for I had neither read nor heard of any doubts upon the subject, and was not aware of any one besides myself holding it in question. I was afraid to tell my unbelief, and was often terrified to feel that that most dreadful of all names to my young mind was mine, "Infidel." At times I was exceedingly anxious to be able to believe what I was taught to be the word of God.

I was too young to think of inquiring if that doctrine was to be found in the Bible; I took it for granted it was. All to whom I looked up for instruction seemed to believe it was plainly taught in the Bible; teachers in the Sabbath-school and ministers in the pulpit alike said, that is what the Bible teaches. I was too young to inquire or even to think of searching the Scriptures for myself; I believed it to be a doctrine taught in the Bible; then I doubted the Bible: I was not too young for that. This, you may be sure, was a wretched and unhappy state of mind; but, looking back, I do not see even now how I could help it; one can't believe or disbelieve things by the power of will; and though all of us believe many things we can never understand or comprehend—things far above our reason—I think we can never believe what seems contrary to it. As I have already said, I am not so vain as to suppose I can give you any new light, or change your opinions in the least particular. But it is natural for me to wish, and I do wish, to give some reasons why my mind has always revolted against this terrible doctrine taught to us in our youth by the best and kindest of parents, and still believed in by many good, true Christian men all over the world.

I have never been able to see how it could be possible that a God of infinite goodness should choose to perpetuate evil, and by his Almighty power keep it in eternal existence. I have never been able to see how it could be possible that a God of infinite love should choose to keep in existence sentient beings for the sole purpose of torturing them, and throughout the endless ages of Eternity relentlessly keep increasing their sufferings. I have never been able to see how it could be possible that a God of infinite justice could choose to inflict upon his creatures punishment infinite in severity and endless in duration for the sins committed in a short life by a being prone, from his very nature, to err, and surrounded continually from the dawn of reason to the last hour of life by every variety of temptation to sin. But I am aware, you will say, He holds out to the sinner a way of escape, an opportunity of salvation through Christ, and if he refuses to take that way, and neglects that opportunity, having been warned of the consequences of such refusal and neglect, the responsibility rests with himself, and God is justified, inasmuch as the sinner knew beforehand what would befall him. We do not reason thus in relation to other subjects; we instinctively feel that punishment to be just, must be measured and proportioned to the enormity of the offence, and it would not be regarded as sufficient justification of a severe punishment that the offender knew it would be severe.

Suppose, for example, that a man was to proclaim to his children that he stood ready and willing at all hours, up to a certain time, to forgive them their errors, faults or offences committed against him, but that if they neglected to come to him and comply with his terms before the time elapsed he would put out their eyes; and suppose those children know and felt sure that it was no idle threat, but that disobedience would certainly entail upon them blindness for life. Can you believe that because the child wilfully refused to obey, with a perfect knowledge of the consequences, therefore the whole responsibility of so cruel and severe a punishment would rest upon himself, and the parent be justified in inflicting it. I am sure you will answer, no; all your nature would rise against such cruelty, because the punishment is out of all proportion to the offence; and a knowledge by the offender of the consequences of his disobedience does not in the least change that fact.

Shall man, then, be more just than God? Be very sure, dear brother, that all the pain and punishment God inflicts or ever will inflict upon his creatures has for its aim and object some wise and good end, and from what has been revealed to us of the character of the all-wise, all-good, and all-powerful God, we may surely predicate that he will by some means bring to an end all that is antagonistic to himself; evil and sin, sorrow and suffering will finally be purged from his universe; He will not allow them to be coexistent with himself. His plans were laid in infinite wisdom and in infinite love to man, and He has infinite power to bring about what he desires. He saw the end from the beginning, and every event happens only in full accordance with his will.

But you ask do I rest my faith in the deductions of poor weak human reason, and reject the revealed word of God? My dear brother, it is the word of God which has revealed to us his character and perfections, and to me it does not appear to teach anything which reason can regard as being out of harmony with, or opposed in any manner to his character and attributes as there unfolded. I do not rest my faith upon the deductions of human reason; I do not reject the Bible. So far from it, I hold that it sustains completely and fully the views I have endeavoured to express, and in my next letter, on this subject, I hope to be able to show some of the reasons why I believe that nowhere in the Scriptures is to be found evidence upon which to found or even from which to deduct that terrible and revolting doctrine, the eternal torment of the finally impenitent.

I hope to hear from you soon; and though perhaps we can never agree, still I trust we will each of us respect the honest and sincere convictions of the other. Your affectionate brother.

The Lost and Found Chapter.

"Read the 'lost and found chapter' to me, if you please," was the request made by an invalid with whom I loved to read and pray and offer my few weak words of consolation.

"What do you mean by the 'lost and found chapter'?" said I; "please tell me and I will read it to you, James."

"O, I mean the chapter about the lost sheep, the lost piece of silver, and the lost son—the fifteenth chapter of St. Luke's Gospel. See if I am not right in calling it the 'lost and found' chapter."

So with fresh interest I opened the holy volume, turned to the chapter, and began to read the wonderful parables of Him against whom the Scribes and Pharisees had been murmuring because, as they said, "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them."

I felt, as I read, that I was among the friends and neighbors who rejoiced with the man who had found the sheep which was lost, and then with the woman who had been seeking diligently for the missing piece of silver, and my tears fell fast upon the sacred page as I mourned for the lost son, and went with the father who saw him a great way off, and rejoiced with him to meet the returning prodigal.

"Thank you, James," said I, as I closed the blessed book. "I think I never before read those wonderful stories with half the interest. I shall always remember where to look for the 'lost and found' chapter."

"Well," said my suffering friend, "I am sure I am very glad; for to me it is a most blessed and encouraging chapter. No doubt you have often noticed in the newspapers whole columns headed, 'Lost and Found.' Some one has lost a valuable watch, or article of jewelry, or a pocket-book containing money and papers; some a pet dog or bird; and sometimes even a lost child, or a missing friend is advertised; and their return is watched and waited for, often hopelessly, for a long time. And then again, among the notices, 'Found,' we feel glad with the owners. This chapter is just like it. 'Lost and found' follow each other all the way through; and how thankful we ought to feel that 'there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.'"

"Yes, James, you have given me some new ideas," I answered. "Each and all of us were among the lost sheep; and Jesus Christ himself has left his home of glory and blessedness to come to earth to seek and save us all. His offers are to all; and yet how many will not come to him that they may be saved. It is marvellous to think so many will persist, like the lost son, in taking all the good and perfect gifts which the Heavenly Father sends to them, and waste these blessings in sinful and selfish indulgence, until at last body and soul are among the lost—lost forever and ever. All have erred and strayed like lost sheep; and we must pray that all may be brought back into the way of holiness, and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd."—Am. Messenger.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 22, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Removal.

At a meeting of the "Board of Managers" it was decided that the interest of the "Life and Advent Union," of the Herald of Life and of the Tract cause, required a removal of their office to a more eligible location; and, accordingly, have fixed on 206 Broadway, Room 7, to which we shall remove in a few days; and from there the paper and all our other works will be issued after the first of October. This location is just below Fulton St., on the east side of Broadway. It is easy of access, and in a prominent place. Our friends generally, who wish to visit the office, will be rejoiced to know that they are saved the labor of climbing to the top of a five-story building; and none will feel the relief more than the Editor.

It will be a gratification, also, to our friends to know that Br. Wm. H. Spencer, of Rochester, N. Y., has been engaged by the Board of Managers to give his entire services to the work connected with the office.

Let us now have your prayers, your funds, and your communications for the Herald.

To Subscribers.

One number more completes the present volume. Those who wish their papers continued should attend to it immediately and remit payment for the next volume. If any find theirs *dis*continued who have paid beyond the present volume, please inform us as early as possible, that we may rectify all mistakes at once.

We trust that none will allow themselves to be deprived of the first numbers of the next volume by neglecting to renew their subscriptions without delay. All persons who have not paid in full for the present volume, and such as have received the last 12 or 15 numbers for "50 cents," will, most likely, find the paper does not visit them, after the close of this volume, unless we hear from them. Let there be no delay, if you would not meet with the loss of the paper thereafter.

We send out no "Bills" or duns to any one.

The above notice must suffice, if you would continue to read the Herald of Life. As a general rule, all subscriptions are supposed to end with the volume.

Leonard C. Thorn.

The above-named dear brother, who was sick at the time of our Anniversary, so far improved as to undertake a visit, with his family, to his Mother-in-law's, in Granville, N. Y., over two hundred miles north of this city. We are permitted to publish the following private communication, written to his own Br. William and Br. George K. Carroll, which will be read with deep interest by all his known friends. May all our praying ones remember him who has contributed so largely to this paper, both by his funds and pen. Very few persons have so endeared themselves to our heart, and taught us by their daily life and spirit, as this beloved brother in the Lord. He is a choice spirit whom God raised up in an hour of the greatest need the cause we advocate ever experienced. Praise God for such a helper; and, if consistent with His will, may he still be continued to that cause which he so much loves and strives to promote.

Dear Bro. Storrs: The following letter we have just received from Leonard, and knowing that our friends would desire to hear from him you can publish it if you deem it desirable. Wm. and Geo.

Granville, Sept. 13, 1869.

William and George: Dear Brothers—Having somewhat recovered from the fatigue incident to my journey from Bloomfield here, I sit me down to report our safe arrival. The journey was tedious, but I do not know that I am any the worse for it. We have had unpleasant weather since we came here, and to day it has been raining very hard,—a cold rain. I have been troubled considerably with pain in my chest since being taken sick, somewhat, in fact, before that, and the cold, wet weather, we are having, aggravates it, so that I do not feel so well, but hope we shall have fine days soon. We are very much in hopes the rain has reached our parts, for we needed it even more than they did up here.

Notwithstanding the rain and cold, it is really refreshing to have a change of scene, and hence new channels of thought. I look out upon the grand old hills and beyond them the mountains, and indulge in many and varied flights of feeling and fancy. Could the mountains speak, what tales could they relate—tales of woe and of gladness. We would ask their age; and being told, would wonder how far into their infancy their memory might reach. We would give them no rest until they had told us all they have ever beheld of human joy and sorrow, and these we would try to weigh in the balance, seeking to know which is greater. Could they prophesy, how eager would we be to know their future, and how long before their distant brother Olivet will feel the sacred tread of Zion's King. We would ask them if the hills are indeed everlasting, if they are to stand in their dignity and behold the glory and the progress of the eternal kingdom, or whether at the birth of redemption they shall "be melted like wax at the presence of the Lord;" whether they will "be joyful together" when the saints have entered upon their inheritance, or whether they have treasures concealed in their great bosoms which the universal King will require in contribution to the development and glory of his kingdom? These and a thousand other questions would we ask, and what floods of light would their answers pour into our minds.

But the mountains are dumb, and from them I turn to my little Bible beside me. Revealed in that almost tiny book is all (and more) that we shall know of the future until the fetters of mortality are broken and the Lord's people filled with his knowledge. God help us to read aright. But lest you grow weary of my rambling I close. My regards to all. Your brother,

Zion's Herald: "Annihilation."

It is some time since we have seen anything in the above-named paper on the above subject. We, however, failed to receive two or three numbers of it some weeks since, and it seems one of those contained an article on "Annihilation," written by R. Atkinson Cape Elizabeth, Me. We are indebted to a recent issue of the "World's Crisis" for the article, and notice it as it there appears. The writer says:

> All theories of annihilation or non-existence, as the penalty of sin, alike reject the essentials of Christianity.

Does "Zion's Herald" indorse such a sweeping charge? Our theory maintains that man is a sinful, dying being; and the only remedy for him is in Jesus Christ: if this remedy is rejected or neglected, when made known to man, his sinful, dying condition remains, and he is eternally lost to holiness and life. Is that "rejecting the essentials of Christianity?" Again this writer says:

> The Millerite excitement of '42 swept over the country like a tornado, leaving ruin behind it. Being an anti-scriptural and unwholesome excitement, it confused and unsettled the minds of very many on the subject of religion and of church order.

"The Millerite excitement of '42" did more to increase the members of the Methodist E. Church during the period spoken of than any effort that church ever put forth; and the "minutes" of their conferences show an increase of one hundred and fifty thousand members in one year, during that "unwholesome excitement," of which the Methodist were but too glad to avail themselves. During the period spoken of, more Bibles were sold and read than any equal time in this generation; hence more attention was given to the study of the Scriptures than any similar period of the world's history; and more knowledge of the writings of the "holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," was obtained than in a half century previously. That no errors were involved in all this effort to arrive at the true meaning and intent of the word, none should claim; but far less evil has arisen from them than from the ignorance of the people under the corrupted Christianity of previous centuries.

That some minds were "unsettled on the subject of religion and church order," as maintained by the stationary churches, who fancied themselves to be "rich and increased in goods, and in need of nothing," is, undoubtedly true; and that some were unsettled in a bad sense, may also be granted; but the same sun and rain that mature the wheat may be expected to mature bastard grain also. Must the sun never shine and the rain never fall lest such a result should be realized? Are Methodists afraid of "excitements?" Let their history speak. But it is "an anti-scriptural and unwholesome excitement" they do not like. But have they forgotten their infancy, when they were met by the "standing orders," of all denominations, with the same objections about the excitement that attended their ministrations?

There are periods when excitement is inevitable, unless a universal stagnation is submitted to, and the waters become too putrid to heal; they need "an angel to descend into the pool and trouble the waters at certain seasons," or they lose their healthful properties.

"Millerism," as it is called, with its errors even, was an angel of mercy to a church becoming at ease and disinclined to "go orward." It roused up even the minds of its opposers to a study of the Bible, of which many were ignorant though professing to be believers in its teachings; and many who now speak disparagingly of the "Millerite excitement of '42" and '43 are more indebted to it for light on the teachings of the Bible than to a half century of previous efforts in that direction.

We now come to the main effort of the writer in "Zion's Herald." He speaks as follows:

> But the adoption of annihilationism by the Millerites, or Second Adventists, as they are termed, is calculated and likely to do immensely greater mischief. Its workings are less noisy, but more subtle, and consequently more wide-spread and injurious. The first did its harm by the apparent sincerity and earnestness of its advocates, as connected with so great a mistake, while they claimed to have the witness of the Spirit that they were called of God to thus warn the people concerning the time of the end of the world. With the same people, there is a similar honesty and zeal in the promulgation of their annihilation theories. Though with less excitement, yet with far greater efforts do they labor to extend much more dangerous sentiments, by a profusion of books and tracts, and preaching wherever they can secure an audience. They pretend to believe in Jesus Christ, the atonement, spiritual regeneration, and future rewards and punishments, while their theories absolutely exclude these and other important doctrines, as taught by the evangelical churches.

The first part of this extract shows our views are noiselessly making inroads on the minds of many, which causes alarm to stereotyped theologians, just as Martin Luther's efforts alarmed the "Mother" church, centuries ago: that was then the only "evangelical church," in its own estimation, as some fancy themselves now to be. But God is pleased sometimes to take "the foolish things of the world to confound the wise." Men wise in their own estimation, and monopolizing the idea of their being "evangelical," are made to see and feel that they are not "infallible" in their "theories;" and that it requires more labor and study of the Scriptures than they have yet put forth to arrest a theory which has "Life only in Christ" in it; which theirs has not, though baptized "evangelical."

What is evangelical? The term is from Evangelion: Ev., good, well; Angello, to announce: literally, "To announce good:" or, "The Gospel announcement:" "The glad tidings of Christ." Those who hold and promulgate the truth of those tidings are the "evangelical."

Tested by this explanation, who the evangelical are, may be known by the careful student of the Bible, without any boasting on the part of the promulgators of the "Glad Tidings." "It is a small thing to be judged of men. He that judgeth us is the Lord." Let us study to be accepted in His sight, even though men revile us.

"Zion's Herald" has given place to language, in the closing sentence of the last quotation, that we trust it overlooked, or it would never have suffered it to defile its columns. It is a virtual charge against us of the blackest hypocrisy—"They pretend to believe," etc. Does this writer mean to say we are all "fools and blind?" Do we not know what our "theories" do, as well as he? Most certainly we do; and we must be hypocrites, indeed, and "fools and blind" also, to hold in theory, that which denies our pretended faith in Christ, etc. But our opponent may claim that he has put in a saving clause for himself. Our theories exclude the doctrines named, "as taught by the evangelical churches."

Even this will hardly cover his lack of that "charity which suffereth long and is kind." That we do differ with those calling themselves "the evangelical churches," in the manner of presenting some of the points named, is true; but to say our "theories absolutely exclude these doctrines," even as held and "taught by the evangelical churches," is an issue which it seems to us it is neither charitable nor wise for "Zion's Herald," or others of its faith, to raise, at a time when "every man's work" is likely "to be tried as by fire," and "the wood, hay, and stubble" will find no abiding place, whether found amongst us or them.

We promulgate our views with the fullest conviction that they are "evangelical;" we will not question but our contemporary does the same; but He who shall finally decide, as to our work, is the Lord. May we so labor as to be accepted of Him, even though we may "suffer loss" by having builded with materials, "on Christ," that will not stand the trial.

The next paragraph of the article in "Zion's Herald," is more sweeping and antichristian than the previous. It is as follows:

> Should a Second Advent Annihilationist, on first coming to a place, state his doctrines, fully and honestly, he would make few, if any, proselytes. Their success depends upon the fact that their doctrine, excluding the essentials of evangelical religion, and the infinite demerit of sin, is kept out of sight. For a while they preach hard against sin, they argue against its infinite demerit, and ridicule the doctrine of conscious punishment as the penalty of the moral law. Nor is this a question upon one point of doctrine only; it includes true Christianity as a whole.

Here is a charge of the rankest hypocrisy. It may be that there are some such amongst us; for hypocrites are found in all religious bodies, and traitors too: but the above charge includes all the preachers; they are charged, without exception, with not stating their "doctrines, fully and honestly." We know, for ourself, that the charge is not true. We never fail to state what we believe on the subject "fully and honestly," as we have time. Whether we "make few" or "any proselytes," is not our business; our work is to proclaim what we believe to be the truth and leave the result with God. If others ask, "Have any of the rulers or Pharisees believed on him?" we do not join in the inquiry, for we do not look for such accessions, nor stop to number "the common people," who are most likely to "hear gladly;" and often we find such, rejoicing in the deliverance from bondage to the traditions of men, which had embittered their whole lives. Many such have we seen made happy in the Love of God, and rejoicing in the hope of immortality and eternal life, through Jesus Christ and the resurrection from the dead, "at His appearing and kingdom."

Our "success depends" not upon hiding, or "keeping out of sight" our views, but in presenting them clearly and fully; and the more fully the better; the more they are contrasted with the teachings of those who claim they, alone, are "evangelical," the more will they "commend themselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

Let no believer in "Life only in Christ," fear to proclaim "fully and honestly" all "the counsel of God" on man's nature and destiny; but do it in love and good-will to all; being "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." That is the secret of success.

"The Rainbow" for September is received; and, also, those of May and June, which we solicited, have been kindly forwarded to us by Dr. Leask; for which he has our thanks. We are glad to know the work goes bravely on through his Magazine. May great success attend his efforts and that of his co-laborers in England.

"It Is Finished."

The above words were uttered by Jesus, just before he expired on the cross. And we have been led to ask ourself, what does the above expression convey to the world?

Did Jesus merely wish to say, The Jews have accomplished their purpose and succeeded in putting me to death? or, did he mean that some noble work or purpose of God was accomplished? We find, on one occasion, Jesus used almost the same words, but under quite different circumstances. In John xvii., we find the following: "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee: as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him."

The reason assigned for this is in the fourth verse: "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

Here we find that Jesus had a work given him to do, which, according to his own statement, he had finished up, and then prayed the Father to glorify him, for the accomplishment of the work.

Now, can we find in the scriptures of truth what this work was, and in what the glory consisted which Jesus prayed might then be accomplished?

We read, again: "Then, said He, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me), to do thy will, O God." "Then, said he, Lo, I came to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first (covenant) that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ." Heb, x., 7–10. Here we are informed that in the volume of the book we may find written the will of God concerning his Son Jesus, and the work he came to accomplish.

We read, also, in John vi., 38, "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will, which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."

You will excuse me for one moment, if I digress from the subject to say, that here is the true source of all wisdom and knowledge; that is, to have no will of our own, but to lose everything in the will of God. If we can, when we are called upon to examine any new subject in relation to divine truth, just lay aside self, and say, "Lord, not my will but thine be done," we would grow much faster and attain to a greater growth in divine truth. We think the key to the whole truth of God's plan in relation to mankind is contained in these words, "But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." John v., 17.

I fancy I hear some one say I cannot see the plan of God in these words. Friend, I did not say the plan of God was in these words; but the key, which, with the help of God's Spirit, will unlock the whole storehouse of truth. My Father worketh hitherto. The Jews supposed he had reference to the mere making a man whole on the Sabbath-day, was the work which Jesus had reference to; and some suppose that it was the miracles of raising the dead to a temporal life was the work to which he had reference. But we think we see something deeper in this text than any temporal work or blessing.

John, the historian, in recording the facts which he saw, and the sayings of Jesus which he heard, penned them down, some years after the accomplishment of them. For instance, when John wrote "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. In him (or it), was life; and the life was the light of men. He was in the world; and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

Now, John, after the labors, death, resurrection and glorification of Jesus, could say, looking back to the promise of God to our Mother Eve, after she and her husband had lost the dominion of the world, through the failure of the trial under which God had placed them, and looking to the word of promise to Eve, that she should have a seed that should bruise the serpent's head (keeping his eye on the volume of the book where it was written of him), John could say, The word of promise was made flesh and dwelt among us. He could say, "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life: (For the life was manifested and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us)."—1 John i., 1, 2.

John saw this eternal life in its full manifestation, when he saw Jesus raised from the dead and glorified. "The glory of the only begotten of the Father." The purpose of God conceived by the Holy Spirit, which was first announced in the garden, to our first parents, that her seed should accomplish the work that her husband failed in. And the work of God, in which he has been engaged through the dispensations that are passed, has not been to establish an earthly kingdom, nor has it been to raise up a few men and quicken them into mortal life. In the language of Jesus: "For as the Father raiseth up the dead (as in the few instances in the Old Testament, where God showed his power through the prophets), even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." John v., 21.

But is this the great work for which Jesus came into the world, to quicken men into mortal life? Or, was this done merely to show that God was with him, and that men might acknowledge the power of God, which the Jews attributed to Beelzebub?

To commence where God commenced, we read, "So God created man in his image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God blessed them . . . and said unto them, "have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." And, in Gen. ii., 7, we read, that God made this "man out of the dust of the ground." And in Gen. vii., 21, we read, "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, . . . and every man." Here, we find, God gives man his origin from the dust of the ground, and God calls them flesh. So Jesus said to Nicodemus, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit." Here are the two elements that stand opposed to each other—flesh and spirit. And we find Jesus uttering these words, in his prayer to his Father, "As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." John xvii., 2.

In our next, we will take up and show that it was the business of Adam's life to generate with animal life; and the great work of God and his Son Jesus has been to introduce into the world a new principle of life; began by the Father, conceived by the Holy Spirit. and perfected in Jesus, to be transmitted to those who were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. John i., 13.

"I Believe."

Man, by nature, is a very religious creature: so much so that his tendency to religion is a far greater barrier to the truth than his irreligion. He is also a very believing creature, insomuch that his belief is a greater barrier to divine truth than his unbelief. I have never been more sensible of the truth of the above statements than of late, since the Campbellites have just closed a three days' meeting in this vicinity: one object, as it appears, was to annihilate the little taint that some of them, and others had of "Storrism." And since then I have been assailed and pitched into, roughshod and without mittens, on the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. I have been told that I ought to have heard the sermon preached on such a day; for it would have convinced me that man has an immortal soul. But when I ask what texts were quoted to prove it, they cannot tell. And so the battle goes here.

Now, the world is in a bad fix, surely: sunk in ignorance, and enveloped in cimmerian darkness, and all through, "I Believe." No wonder it is overrun with sin and iniquity, and ripe for destruction. "I Believe" has become the foundation, the main pillar, the base and apex of the religion of the day. Then every religionist in the world must be exculpated, the Mormon, the Catholic, the Mohammedan, the Jew and the Pagan, for they all alike can say, "I Believe."

But should not a man have a belief? Yes; one religious belief, and but one; that is, I believe God, as Abraham did. For if we do really believe God, we must of necessity believe His word: for whoever believes in God, and does not believe His word, makes God a liar, and is worse than the avowed atheist, who does not believe in a God. And the world is overrun with such. Millions there are who thus make him a liar, but through ignorance and superstition, do not wilfully intend it. Lord, have mercy on them; "for they know not what they do."

I know of no instance in which the prophets or the Saviour that ever used the term, "I Believe;" which is good evidence that none of them relied on it for proof. They had something better, a "Thus saith the Lord;" which is the only true article in any religious creed.

Beware of, "I Believe;" it has turned the religious world upside down: not in believing the truth, but in believing something which prevents a belief in the truth. Many a time I refer to the plainest Bible language to refute a certain error, and am met with, "I don't care! I Believe" so and so! Now, is not this ridiculous, and even outrageous, for a professor of the religion of the Bible to say, in substance, "I don't care what the Bible says! I don't believe it when it does not harmonize with my faith."

This is a dreadful state of things; but let us continue to fight the good fight of faith, and patiently wait the time to come when truth will triumph over error, and righteousness over wickedness. Z CAMPBELL.

"EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT."

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous, into life eternal."—Matth. xxv., 46.

THIS is considered the strongest passage of Scripture adduced to favor the endless torment of the lost. Albert Barnes, in commenting upon this text, says: "The word used here is the same in the original as that used to express the eternal life of the righteous." But this criticism in substance only proves that future punishment is of the same duration as the reward of the righteous. It is all assumption to claim that this passages teaches the eternal misery of the lost; for not a word does it say in regard to the nature of future punishment. If this passage implies anything in regard to the nature of the punishment, it must be something very opposite from torment, for the same term when applied to the righteous proves their eternal freedom from death: but death is the very opposite of life, and "the wages of sin is death." (Rom. vi., 23.) Therefore, this passage strengthens our position that everlasting punishment is an eternal loss of life.

But we will bring forward another passage which will furnish light upon the meaning of this text. Says Paul, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. i., 7–9. This passage not only shows the duration of future punishment, but plainly declares that its nature is "everlasting destruction." It will not avail our opponents anything by saying that the word "from" means a separation from God. According to their theory, that God is every where present, such a condition is impossible. The plain meaning of the passage is, that God is the source from whence this destruction comes. That this is the true sense may be seen from numerous texts of Scriptures. (See Acts iii., 19; Rev. xx., 9; 2 Kings i., 10, 12, 14, etc).

John, as the forerunner of Christ, represents him as coming with his "fan in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat in his garner, but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. iii., 12. This is a positive passage. The wicked are described as the most combustible material—chaff. They will be "consumed" with "unquenchable fire"—fire that cannot be extinguished—and will "leave them neither root nor branch." (Mal. iv., 1).

No metaphysical reasoning can deprive this passage of the plain import that the wicked will finally cease to exist; and the divine statement that they will "become ashes" fully corroborates this conclusion. It is a complete loss of life. The very idea conveyed by the word "consumed" requires that the thing to which it is applied shall decrease, and by its own inherent existence grow less and less, which must continue unless the consuming process is arrested. But inspiration compares them to "chaff," to "stubble," to "withered branches," etc., and declares that they shall be "consumed." This passage alone disproves the inherent immortality of the human family.

The term, "eternal fire" strengthens the position which we have taken. An instance of the use of this phrase is in relation to the destruction of Sodom and the cities of the Plain, upon which God rained fire and brimstone, and utterly destroyed or consumed both them and their inhabitants. The apostle Jude speaks of the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities round about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."—Jude 7. This is probably the strongest language our opponents can adduce to prove the duration of the fires of hell. But if it can be ascertained that this fire, according to the nature of facts, cannot be endless, then such an idea cannot be proved by any language in the Scriptures.

What are the facts in relation to those fires which consumed those cities? They have long since expired, and not a trace of them remains. The spot is marked by the Dead Sea, which to-day stands a fearful monument of God's vengeance.

Now, the reader will please mark the point. This destruction is not said to be the effect of the vengeance of eternal fire; but the utter consumption of those cities by fire and brimstone; and is set forth for an example of all who should afterwards live ungodly.

Therefore, from God's inspired penman we learn the nature of future punishment. As surely as fire and brimstone reduced those cities and their inhabitants to ashes, so surely will the wicked be "consumed"—cease to live—cease to exist as beings—and return to the elements from whence they were taken. Then will the divine decree of God be accomplished, "Of dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be"—Psa. xxxvii., 10.

Thus we plainly see that eternal punishment is eternal death: for "the wages of sin is death." Suffering and anguish is not the penalty, Death is the end of all these; and they are not under the wages of sin until they are fully dead. But they deserve death, for they would not believe on the Lord Jesus that they might be saved! He offers them life—eternal life.

This offer canst thou, wilt thou spurn?
Canst thou his fearful thunders turn?
Then come, before the quenchless fire
Is kindled by Jehovah's ire;
Life, eternal life receive,
It shall thyself from death retrieve.

FROM ELD. C. F. SWEET.

ALBION, N. Y., Sept., 1869.

BR. STORRS: Please say, through the HERALD OF LIFE, that my brief review of Dr. A. Campbell's "EXTRA ON LIFE AND DEATH," is now published in a pamphlet. I will send it, post paid, on receipt of cash, at the following prices: By the 100, $4; twenty-five for $1; twelve for 60 cts.; four for 25 cts.; two for 15 cts.; 10 cts. single copy.

Who will help me circulate this messenger of truth, and thus help themselves, and help to enlighten those now sitting in darkness, unenlightened in the truth of God on their future destiny. Orders for it will be promptly attended to, by addressing me as above.

C.—(p. 16.) Our second objection to this in our day new vamped old theory is, that it assumes that eternal life and eternal death mean eternal being and eternal not being.

S.—This second objection, Doctor, would hardly be worthy of a passing notice, were it not to show the unenlightened and candid that it contains the elements of its own explosion and annihilation as a valid objection to the true and gospel doctrine of the Christian's hope, which is held out in the Scriptures as being life eternal in the sense of an endless and glorified being; and that in opposition to the end of the disobedient and unconverted, which "end is death," "they are dead and shall not live, deceased and shall not rise," but "punished with an everlasting destruction," so as "not to be, and their place not to be," and "they be as though they had not been," having been "burned up root and branch," and become "ashes," and having been "consumed into smoke," in the lake of fire when the "elements melt," and they go to "perdition" by "the second death." This is their "end," and this scriptural and inspired theory, doubtless, as thus stated in scripture language, is the "new vamped old theory" of which the Doctor so bitterly complains, and to which he so piously and earnestly objects. If this is not what he means by "new vamped old theory," then what does he mean? For this theory is, as we see, a Bible theory, stated in Bible language, and is as old as the Scripture itself; and he does not deny, but has frankly admitted, that its present advocates believe and call it the Bible theory, and claim also that through misinterpretation of that holy book, by her ladyship the Queen of Mystery, Babylon, and also her legitimate offspring, and perhaps others, this "old Bible theory" has been put aside, crushed, and trodden under foot by apostates and lovers of evil: and now, these having their minds enlightened and their hearts enlarged and their souls disposed by the power of the God of truth to "new vamp" this old Bible theory, why should the Doctor's soul be vexed, or he find fault with its antiquity, and also with their labor of love that is worthy of all praise, and that deserves to be commended? Upon what ground can he object, seeing he himself professes to be also a reformer, and the founder of "the reformation," endeavoring to exhume old Bible theories on other points in Bible theology from the debris of the religious theology of this corrupt and apostate age? Surely he should not object to his contemporaries laboring to "new vamp" old truths that have been anathematized, crushed, and lost sight of in the dark days of Papal triumph, bigotry, and superstition, simply because those truths are unpalatable to him, and because the advocates thereof follow him not, neither make his flesh their arm. Doctor, "forbid them not," as Jesus directed his "disciples."

But will you please define the terms life and death?

C.—(p. 17.) Union with nature, or union with God, is life. Separation from nature, or from God is death.

S.—Whether that is a correct definition of the terms life and death or not, I have no objection to it in this controversy; for to be united to nature as a living and personal being is also to be united to the God of nature, in some sense at least: for the God of nature and the God of the Bible are the same supreme, self-existent, and omnipresent God. Hence for an animate man to be united to, and associated with animate nature, is also to be united with the God of nature, as his creator and upholder in animate life and being, whether that life and being be spent in heaven, earth, or hell; and, therefore, as you truly affirm, to be separated from nature and nature's God would be death, and we might add, if understood in the absolute sense, it would be the worst form of annihilation: for to separate man from nature and nature's God, in the absolute sense, is to annihilate the material of which man is composed, as well as to annihilate him as a personal being and his personal and animated existence forever. As an organized being, then, man cannot be separated from nature and nature's God without the loss of life and organized animate existence just as long as the said separation from God and nature shall be continued. Therefore the sequence is, to punish a human being with a separation from God and nature forever, would be to punish him with an everlasting destruction in the absolute sense, which is to annihilate him, and that forever.

FROM A. B. VAN DOREN.

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 7, 1869.

BR. STORRS: You will find within $1, for a copy of BIBLE VS. TRADITION. I hope to be able to dispose of many tracts and books in the future. I have been requested to send for this book for a "Christadelphian." There are a great many common people in our city that are thoughtful, and are inquiring after truth. They seem to think I am the only one to look to for books, tracts, etc. If the friends wish, I will scatter all that they are willing to send. If I had money I would order 1,000 tracts on the "Atonement and the Gospel Hope." They are just the things to attract attention. I feel like giving them to all. The truth in Christ, "how precious." It seems I cannot wait to send this truth to all. And when we understand the truth as it is in Christ, then we can exclaim with John, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we might be called the sons of God." I trust that you will return home refreshed in body and spirit. And that you may live to see the seed you have sown, grow unto an abundant harvest. I have prayed for God's blessing on our anniversary meeting, and trust that good has been done for the cause of truth and right. I feel anxious to receive the HERALD OF LIFE and learn all the particulars, etc. Yours, in love.

Z. MCLESTER, Paris, Tenn., writes: I have given out my papers and tracts, and loaned books on the Life theme to reading men, ministers and professors of different callings and professions. Then I have watched your business column to see if any of my friends had felt sufficient interest to send you a few cents only for further knowledge on the subject, till I despair of getting up any interest in that way. I read your paper every week with much interest; please find one dollar inclosed; it may pay arrearages, perhaps. Money is scarce, and at 77 I can't work. Most truly, yours.

SALLY DILLINGHAM, West Brewster, Mass., sends $5 for the HERALD OF LIFE, and writes: I love the doctrine it contains and believe it firmly. It is all the preaching I have, and I thank the Lord for that. I have some good friends that can't believe as I do, but I wish not to have doctrine separate us where the true spirit is manifested. Pray for me, that I may be ready and waiting for the coming of my blessed LIFE-GIVER. May you live to be useful to many as you have been to me. I thank the Lord for your "SIX SERMONS." How dark my mind was; it seemed like beginning the alphabet; but I commenced to learn and have followed on, learning more and more, ever since, so that now I can read and understand, and desire more of the Spirit in my heart, and that love which casteth out all fear.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Our aged Sister has our sympathy and prayers. May the Lord preserve her unto His kingdom and glory, soon to appear. Let none of us ever "separate" from those who "manifest the spirit of Christ," however we may differ from them doctrinally. Nothing can compensate us for a lack of love to the members of Christ's body. "Love to one another" is the first of all Christian duties.

H. A. CROSS, Kalamazoo, Mich., writes: I can say, for your encouragement, that truth is advancing in this part of the West. There "certainly" is a stirring among the "dry bones" of "orthodoxy."

ARE WE TO HAVE A NEW RELIGION?

To the thoughtful observer of social developments no proof need be adduced in support of the assertion: that the present is a time of unusual religious activity, in all parts of the civilized world. The more thoughtless may be reminded of the increasing number and growing acerbity of divisions among the leading sects of all faiths, the spread of Protestantism in Italy, Spain and South America, the increase of Catholicism in England and in parts of Germany, the Ritualistic exitement in England and the United States, the threatened split among the Jews and Mormons, the growth of new sects, the rise of Spiritualism into a church, and even the organization of so-called infidelity into religious bodies, with priests, and emblems, and forms of worship. Nor are great political measures wanting to illustrate or prove the depth of the movement: the disestablishment of the Irish Church, though in its execution and anticipated influence intended as a merely political measure, is yet in its essence purely a tribute to the rights of religion; while the freedom of worship in Austria has scarcely any real political character, and the proposed Ecumenical Council at Rome is merely the expression of a powerful desire on the part of all Catholics to restore to their church organization its endangered unity and compact force. Everywhere the social influence, and in many places, especially with us, the political influence of the smaller religious circles, the congregation, is quietly but rapidly extending and leading to earnest differences of views. The general interest finds expression in various minor ways. Led by one or two of the great New York dailies, newspapers throughout the country regularly report the sermons preached by leading clergymen, and there is everywhere much less of that kind of profanity which finds a vent in ready appeals to sacred things at inopportune moments and in public places.

What is the cause of this growth of religious activity, this increased interest in matters of faith, this deepening respect for whatever men think sacred?

The essence of all religion is the recognition by man of a power superior to himself, all faith is but the unresisting submission, all prayer but silent appeal, all worship but the open homage to that higher power which all men recognize, though they may forget. Influences of various kinds affect the intensity of all men's religious feelings, and vary the degree of consciousness with which men recognize their weakness. In times of prosperity, when success follows our efforts, we are strong and confident in our strength. In times of danger we involuntarily pray. When we encounter difficulties that we cannot overcome, we appeal for aid. Never since the Reformation was there a time, when the great masses of peoples everywhere felt so utterly helpless and wretched as they do now. The mute despair of growing pauperism stifles the pæans of joy over our so-called material progress. Suffering peoples everywhere are unconsciously revolting against evils which they indistinctly feel, but do not understand. Whichever way we turn we see peoples sunk to incredible depths of immorality, corruption and base selfishness. Gambling such as the world never knew before, amid high and low; extravagance, frivolity, drink, opium, infanticide; corruption in the courts, corruption in the legislature, corruption in the family; the growth of immense capitals and the illegal combinations of corporate powers, making men more powerful than the State; perversion of legislation to the oppression of the poor by the creation of monstrous monopolies and legalized robbery; corporations combining to throw thousands of families out of employment, in order to double and treble the price that they can wring from every one obliged to use their products; entire States controlled by two or three corrupt demagogues; the law openly defied, the moral sense derided, fraud, deceit, violence, shamelessness everywhere, and nowhere redress! Government has lost its influence, the law its power, public opinion its purity, and men are once more vividly reminded that there is a power higher than man, that there is an appeal that will be heard, that there is a court which knows no bribes. The helpless, hopeless subjugation of the world to the tyranny of a degraded Roman Senate prepared the minds of men for the teachings of Christ. From under the irresistible iron heel of feudalism Northern Europe rose to listen to Luther and his compeers. Can it be, that from the dire oppression of moneyed oligarchies the peoples of this century are to awaken to a higher spiritual life? Is the recent growth of religious activity the first evidence of reviving faith? Are men turning with a faint and almost despairing hope to seek in religion the justice, the truth, the purity they nowhere else can find?

The church as it stands can offer but little of what men seek. Like society, like law, like government, it is led, sustained, protected, supported by the very gamblers and thieves against whom it should afford redress. Its teachings now have no power over the consciences of men. Its ablest disciples doubt its vitality. "Is Protestantism a failure? Is Christianity a failure?" resounds on all sides. But the very doubt implies inquiry. The struggle of sects proves the earnestness of thought. The outer form of the church, with its hierarchy, and its rituals, and devices, and emblems, may prove unequal to the task of regeneration. But the fundamental thought of all religion, that before the higher power that rules the universe all men are equal, will ever remain. In that thought all that are oppressed will ever find refuge; to that thought all oppressors must bow; and whether in the shape of a new religion or in the shape of a new revivified Christianity, that thought will ultimately restore men to virtue, justice, liberty and peace.—The Free Trader.

SHAKING HANDS AS A MEANS OF GRACE.

I MAINTAIN that shaking of hands, rightly administered, is a means of grace. You, my dear sir, are established, and every one knows you to be a solid man. There is a man beside you just fighting his battle and making his way. You know him, and nod to him. Take him by the hand, my dear sir. It will do him good; and if he was cast down a little as men will sometimes be, it may encourage him. "Our minister shook hands with me." What made that hulking fellow, too big to be a boy, too raw to be a man, announce that fact so loudly when he went home? The truth is, for sensible effect on him it was more than the sermon. John Smith has been a hard drinker, but is trying fairly to get out of it. Going down the village street, he meets Mr. Brown, who is "boss" at "the works above." Mr. Brown shakes hands with "Mr. Smith," in sight of the entire village. Does that do Smith any good? I tell you it is as good to him as one of Mr. Gough's admirable lectures. It says as plainly as if Mr. Brown had written it: "Mr. Smith, you have only to take care of yourself, and you will be a respectable man in spite of all." That makes Smith stronger; and when he goes to church next Sabbath, and looks over at Mr. Brown, he will find it easier to believe God's most loving word: "Their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more." So "shake hands and be friends"—at market, on the street, and, above all, at church. I presume the apostle meant something when he said: "Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss." Some people quit church for want of this means of grace. Everybody looks as if just returned from the north pole, and there had not been time to thaw, and the deacon, who "runs the church," (if anything so lifeless can be said to be run) had been in command of the party. I suspect the boys sometimes says: "Well, I guess I ought to be good, but if I ever do, it won't be 'long with the deacon." They wait, poor boys, till some one comes along with heart—getting no good in the meantime—whose genial, life-like ways make them "feel kind o' good," and they catch the inspiration and "run with gladness in the way of God's commandments."—Dr. John Hall.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

"Do you think," I ask, "that the Lord will let me see in this life the salvation of the souls for whom I pray?"

"I cannot say as to that. When I was a child in the Sabbath-school in the old country," she continued, "my faithful teacher used to say, "I have prayed too much for my class for one of them to be lost." I was a thoughtless girl at the time, and remembered wondering at it, and thinking it a very self-confident remark. "I shall have them all," she would say: "I shall say to Christ at the judgment,' Here am I and the class thou hast given me.'"

"And were they all converted?" I asked.

"Yes; she did not live to see it, but my eyes have seen it—the last of the sixteen gathered into the fold."—Witnessing for Jesus.

ITEMS.

EVERY morning we enter upon a new day which carries a yet unknown future in its bosom. Thoughts may be born to-day which may never expire; hopes may be excited which may never be extinguished; and acts may be performed to-day, the consequence of which cannot be realized until that day when "the secrets of all hearts shall be made known."

SELFISHNESS is that detestable vice which no one will forgive in others, and which no one is without himself.

LET your thoughts be fit and suitable for the subject. Every day have higher thoughts of God, lower thoughts of self.

SELF-DENIAL leads to the most exalted pleasure, and the conquest of evil habits is the most glorious triumph.

MAKE no more vain resolutions, but proceed at once to duty. Know your weakness, trust and pray. God will help you through, and give you patience.

THERE is no salvation of the soul, no hope of everlasting life, but in the Cross.

HE that reproveth another without praying for him, or having compassion on him, is a merciless foe; no good physician, but a troublesome prater.

HE that is truly polite knows how to contradict with respect, and to please without adulation, and is equally removed from insipid complaisance and low familiarity.

A HOLY life has a voice; it speaks when the voice is silent, and is either a constant attraction or a perpetual reproof.

THE full assurance of faith, always attended with the full assurance of hope, never fails to be productive of perfect love, even the love that casteth out fear.

FEW things are necessary for the wants of this life, but it take an infinite amount to satisfy the demands of opinion.

Do you wish to learn how to give anything? Then fancy yourself in the place of the receiver.

SOLITARY NIGHTS IN PRAYER.—The supplications of the Redeemer, which ascended on those solitary nights, when of His people there was none with Him, survive in no human record; yet, doubtless, to the end of time, our world will be indebted to the lonely hours when the Man of Sorrows watched and prayed upon the Mount of Olives.—Rev. J. Hamilton.

CLOSE PREACHING.—The following is from a sermon addressed to a congregation in Turkey, in a community all of whose members, with one exception, were known to be given to lying. "Now, you know that all of you, except Brother Sarkis, who sits over there with his feet down in the oven, are addicted to lying; and God means you when he says 'All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone.'"

"Himself Hath Done It."

Isaiah xxxviii., 15.

"Himself hath done it" all! O, how those words
Should hush to silence every murmuring thought!
"Himself hath done it"—He who loves me best—
He who my soul with His own blood hath bought.

"Himself hath done it." Can it then be aught
Than full of wisdom—full of tenderest love?
Not one unneeded sorrow will He send,
To teach this wandering heart no more to rove.

"Himself hath done it." Yes, although severe
May seem the stroke, and bitter be the cup,
'Tis his own hand that holds it; and I know
He'll give me grace to drink it meekly up.

"Himself hath done it." O, no arm but His
Could e'er sustain beneath earth's dreary lot;
But while I know He's doing all things well,
My heart His loving kindness questions not.

"Himself hath done it." He who searched me through,
Saw how I clave to earth's ensnaring ties,
And so he breaks each reed on which my soul,
Too much for happiness and joy, relies.

"Himself hath done it." He would have me see
What broken cisterns human friends must prove;
That I may turn and quench my burning thirst
At His own fount of everlasting love.

"Himself hath done it." Then I fain would say—
Thy will in all things ever more be done;
E'en though that will remove whom best I love,
While Jesus lives I cannot be alone.

"Himself hath done it"—precious, precious words!
Himself—my Father, Saviour, Brother, Friend,
Whose faithfulness no variation knows—
Who, having loved me, loves me to the end!

And when, in His eternal presence blest,
I at His feet my crown immortal cast,
I'll gladly own, with all His ransomed host,
"Himself hath done it" all from first to last!

The Young Witness.

A little girl nine years of age was offered as a witness against a prisoner, who was on trial for a felony committed in her father's house.

"Now, Emily," said the counsel for the prisoner, upon her being offered as a witness, "I desire to know if you understand the nature of an oath?"

"I don't know what you mean," was the simple answer.

"There, your honor," said the counsel, addressing the court, "is any thing necessary to demonstrate the validity of my objection? This witness should be rejected. She does not comprehend the nature of an oath."

"Let us see," said the judge, "Come here, my daughter."

Assured by the kind tone and manner of the judge, the child stepped toward him, with a calm, clear eye, and in a manner so artless and frank it went straight to the heart.

"Did you ever take an oath?" inquired the judge. The little girl stepped back with a look of horror, and the red bloom mantled in a blush all over her face and neck as she answered, "No, sir!"

She thought he intended to inquire if she had ever blasphemed.

"I do not mean that," said the judge, who saw her mistake; "I mean, were you ever a witness before?"

"No, sir; I was never in court before," was the answer.

He handed her the Bible, open.

"Do you know that book, my daughter?"

She looked at it, and answered, "Yes, sir; it is the Bible."

"Do you ever read it?" he asked.

"Yes, sir; every evening."

"Can you tell me what the Bible is?" inquired the judge.

"It is the word of the great God," she answered.

"Well, place your hand upon this Bible and listen to what I say;" and he repeated, slowly and solemnly, the oath usually administered to witnesses.

"Now," said the judge, "you have sworn as a witness; and will you tell me what will befall you if you do not tell the truth?"

"I shall be shut up in prison," answered the child.

"Anything else?" asked the judge.

"I shall never go to heaven," she replied.

"How do you know this?" asked the judge again.

The child took the Bible, and turning rapidly to the chapter containing the commandments, pointed to the injunction, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." "I learned that before I could read."

"Has any one talked with you about your being a witness in court here against this man?" inquired the judge.

"Yes, sir," she replied. "My mother heard they wanted me to be a witness, and last night she called me to her room and asked me to tell her the ten commandments; and then we kneeled down together, and she prayed that I might understand how wicked it was to bear false witness against my neighbor, and that God would help me, a little child, to tell the truth as it was before him. And when I came up here with father, she kissed me, and told me to remember the ninth commandment, and that God would hear every word that I said."

"Do you believe this?" asked the judge, while a tear glistened in his eye, and his lip quivered with emotion.

"Yes, sir," said the child, with a voice and manner that showed her conviction of its truth was perfect.

"God bless you, my child," said the judge; "you have a good mother. This witness is competent," he continued. "Were I on trial for my life, and innocent of the charge against me, I would pray God for such witnesses as this. Let her be examined."

She told her story with the simplicity of a child, as she was; but there was a directness about it which carried conviction of its truth to every heart. She was rigidly cross-examined. The counsel plied her with infinite and ingenious questionings, but she varied from her first statement in nothing. The truth, as spoken by that little child, was sublime. Falsehood and perjury had preceded her testimony. The prisoner had intrenched himself in lies, till he deemed himself impregnable. Witnesses had falsified facts in his favor, and villainy had manufactured for him a sham defence; but before her testimony falsehood was scattered like chaff. The little child, for whom a mother had prayed for strength to be given her to speak the truth as it was before God, broke the cunning devices of matured villainy to pieces like a potter's vessel. The strength that her mother prayed for was given her, and the sublime and terrible simplicity—terrible, I mean, to the prisoner and his associates—with which she spoke, was like a revelation from God himself.—Shining Light.

"No Time."

I once took dinner at the house of a very intelligent man, until that day a stranger to me. He was at home on all subjects of conversation: the news of the day, past and present history, mechanics and recent inventions. I thought as I heard him entertain a company composed of layman, clergymen and ladies, "how fortunate he is to have received a superior education in early life, and to have leisure to continue his reading and study.

He showed me his new house just built, and seemed especially proud of one room, well lighted, and fitted with tables, books, pictures, and easy chairs. "This is my children's study," said he; "here they learn their lessons with no one to disturb them, and they disturb no one. I spare no expense to make it an attractive room, and feel rewarded by their enjoyment of it."

As I looked at the comfortable chairs I remarked, "These seats are very unlike the stools and benches without backs upon which we sat in school."

"Madam, I never went to school a day in my life," was the astonishing reply.

Boys, what do you think of that? I afterward learned that this accomplished, intelligent gentleman, exerting an influence in the city where he lived, whose society was sought by men of culture and renown, was a poor boy who had always worked for his living, and though never in school, had never known a vacation.

I wish some young men I know, who are behind the counter or learning trades, who have said in my hearing, "I am anxious for an education but have no time," could see the gentleman I have been describing; it might shame them out of their folly. He had no short business hours, evening classes, lectures, or public libraries, or associates to help him. He did not tell me of any cigars, fancy neck-ties, "Police Gazettes," or of kid gloves, he bought during the years in which he obtained his education. His mind was upon something better.—American Messenger.

The Unseen One.

When a great Scripture truth sheds its light for the first time upon the understanding, a feeling of joy and wonder is experienced—joy, because that truth is the key which opens an entire cabinet of precious things hitherto hidden from sight; and wonder that, with the Bible in hand, it should not have been seen before. No change has taken place in the book; it contains precisely its former message, without the addition or subtraction of a single word; but to the eye, to the mind, to the heart, a wonderful transformation has taken place.

At first, those Scriptures which obviously furnish "proof texts" of the truth in question are examined and treasured; but the light thus obtained speedily expands, like the light of the morning as the sun ascends, until many a hitherto unnoticed allusion, reference, implication, or form of words, confirms the value of the discovery, and gives fresh beauty to the Bible, and fresh strength to the believer. A golden thread is seen running through the entire texture of Scripture, and, to change the figure, the symmetry of revelation stands before the student in all its exquisite completeness.

Hence it is that the return of the Lord, at the close of this dispensation, seen at first in its broad outlines in parable and prophecy, now meets us in doctrine and precept, imparting its wonderful significance to both—even when we are not looking for it. In the ordinary course of reading it flashes upon the mind as the animating thought to which the inspired writers would call attention. That the Redeemer's work for men, when he offered himself "without spot to God," and his work in men when, by his Spirit, he applies the efficacy of his one offering to their consciences and hearts, are among the ever recurring topics of Scripture, every Christian knows; but every Christian does not know that the hope of the Lord's return breathes and throbs, like a thing of holy life, in many a passage where the reader, searching for evidence of this doctrine, would hardly look for it. The indirect proof, the implied evidence that it was constantly in the minds of the sacred penmen, is very strong. They felt its vast importance, even when they did not expressly teach it, and gathered strength from it in the midst of their manifold sorrows, even when they did not put it in so many words on the parchment. By overlooking this fact, the real force of many of their utterances is lost.

For example, the life-giving hope—the hope of life—inspired by the resurrection of Christ, who is our life, occupies the first section of Peter's first epistle. He utters thanks to the Father for this abundant mercy; refers to the incorruptible inheritance reserved for those who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time; and adds: "Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations: that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ: whom having not seen, ye love; in whom though now ye see him not, yet believing ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Now can any thoughtful believer fail to see that this double allusion to the unseen One—"whom having not seen"—"whom now ye see not"—reveals the dominant thought of the apostle that the present dispensation is incomplete, and will remain so until the appearing—the apocalypse—of Jesus Christ himself, the object of Christian love and faith? Christian love and faith really receive their highest commendation in these words, reminding us of the beloved Master's statement to Thomas, "blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." That he walks "by faith, not by sight," is the prominent characteristic of the Christian's pilgrimage; but however blessed this walk of faith may be—and it is unquestionably the most blessed thing on earth at present—the idea of incompleteness most certainly belongs to it. It is not the goal of the journey, not the perfection of bliss, not the highest good. It is associated with sore trials and manifold sorrows; tests, discipline, training, nights of weeping, and days of heaviness; and all this is fully recognized in Scripture as features of the time of waiting for the Lord's return. When his glory shall be revealed, we shall be glad also with exceeding joy. The blessedness of believing in and loving him whom we have not seen is great; but it is not complete; our joy will not be "full" until we see him as he is, and that will not be until his promised return in glory.

This is really the doctrine which pervades and gives wonderful meaning to the New Testament. When asked for evidence of our so-called "novel doctrine," that our Lord himself will return before the golden age of prophecy sheds its lustre upon a world so long kept in gross darkness by the father of lies, we have furnished that evidence copiously from the prophets of both Testaments, and from the words of the Lord himself, of whom and whose kingdom the prophets of both Testaments speak: but so far is this from either exhausting our testimony, or ending our labor of love, that we find fresh proofs from every re-perusal of the wonderful documents that form the Bible, and fresh energy to labor in this holy cause as we "see the day approaching" which will solve all mysteries, and bring the church out of the whirlwind of perplexities in which she is now involved.

We have this idea of separation, absence, sorrow, when our Lord said to the disciples, "I go my way to him that sent me." The thought was distressing. The Messiah, the Lord, the King of Israel, go away! Away! Where? Why? Was not the nation of Israel his peculiar inheritance, the seed of Abraham his people, the world his kingdom? No doubt of it. Go away? Sorrow filled their hearts. Surely we—we who love Jesus understand something of this, however little it may be. Love would have its object within sight, near, close at hand. To "go away," therefore, must be in pursuance of some profoundly wise arrangement which, in its issues, should compensate temporary absence by an enduring and glorious reunion. And that such is the fact is clearly taught; but still the absence was, in itself, a great sorrow.

Leading them out as far as Bethany, our Lord blessed his disciples, promised them the Holy Ghost, and charged them to be his witnesses in Judea and Samaria, and to the uttermost part of the earth. "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight." They stand and gaze heavenward. They begin to realize their mournful condition. The master they loved had left them! They are poor men in the midst of a world of enemies! But suddenly they are aware that two strangers stand by them, who speak thus: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Clearly, then, they must wait; and here was their hope: he is not to remain away always; he will come again! They must trust, and work, and wait. They will bear testimony to his Messiahship, death, resurrection, ascension, and promised return; by the help of the Holy Ghost they will preach these grand truths, and be faithful to their high commission, however complicated the trials, and however deep the sorrows that await them. The unseen One shall live in their hearts and be the burden of their speech, until this mystery of absence shall be cleared up in the glory of his return. The thing is not as they thought, nor as they could have wished—very far from it; but He knows best; and whilst they suffer persecution unrepiningly for his sake they will comfort one another with the hope of his return.

This was precisely what they did. Peter's speech to his countrymen, on occasion of the healing of the cripple, comprehends all these points—the death, resurrection, ascension and second coming of his Lord. The restitution, predicted by the prophets has not been forgotten; you may rely upon its complete accomplishment; and God "will send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you, to carry his glorious purposes into execution." (Acts iii.) In the house of the centurion, also, the same apostle said: "Ye know the word which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached: how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil; for God was with him. And we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem, whom they slew and hanged on a tree. Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead." (Acts x.) But as Christ will not judge the quick and dead until his appearing and his kingdom (2 Tim. iv., 1), Peter's thoughts were undoubtedly on the return of his Lord, as he spoke to Cornelius and his friends; as were Paul's when he addressed the Athenians: "God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead" (Acts xvii.,) as when he reminded the elders of the Ephesian church that he had preached "the kingdom of God" among them (xx., 25); as when he reasoned before Felix, "of judgment to come" (xxiv., 25); and as when he earnestly "testified the kingdom of God" to his countrymen in Rome (xxviii., 23).

The same ever-present, hope-sustaining thought, pervades the apostolic letters. It is the refuge in every storm that sweeps across the church; the consolation in every sorrow; the bright star in the darkest night of persecution; the solution of every mystery; and the glorious victory over death itself. There is not a word in these divine epistles either about glorification before resurrection, or the conversion of the world by the gospel, but oh, how much about the glorious apocalypse of Jesus Christ whom, having not seen, we love!—Wm. Leask, D. D., Ed. of "The Rainbow."

Gamaliel and Nicodemus.

The Talmudic and early Rabbinical writings of the Jews cast great light on many parts of the New Testament. Although most probably not committed to writing until centuries after the destruction of Jerusalem, and the final dispersion of the nation, they embody a vast number of facts and theories handed down from the times before and after Christ. Like the Apocryphal Gospels, they furnish a strong negative argument for the divinity and inspiration of the New Testament. We can point to the manifold absurdities and triflings of both the pseudo-Christian and the Jewish writers, and say "such would the New Testament have been were it but the embodiment of the ideas and 'the spirit of the age,' as modern skepticism asserts."

Yet it is worth while to pick out the valuable grains from the great chaff-heap, and find in the undesigned testimony of the Talmud, a confirmation of the truth of the nobler record. This we will do (at second hand of course) in regard to two New Testament characters.

The Gamaliel who is recorded in the Acts of the Apostles as giving wise and temperate advice in regard to the suspension of the persecution of the Church, succeeded his grandfather, the great Hillel, as the head of the Sanhedrim. Though a profound theologian, according to the Jewish standard, he was more of a Herodian than a Pharisee. His temperament forbade his being an enthusiast, either in religion or politics. He was one of the men who always see two sides to every fact, and was not indisposed to accept Roman supremacy as, on the whole, not a bad thing. As a matter of course, Pharisaic Jerusalem grew too hot to hold him, and he removed the theological school to Jamnia, a few miles to the west, where probably a young man of Tarsus, Saul by name, and Paulus by cognomen, was brought up at his feet.

He was, as might be expected, a man of liberal culture. He was familiar with the Greek language and literature, and with what was known of astronomy. In various little ways he excited the hostility of the Pharisees, and evinced a readiness to mingle with the heathen, which they regarded as unorthodox. At Ptolemais (they recorded) he had bathed in a place where a statue of Venus had been erected. He had a figure carved on his own seal, which was not the only indication that his love of the beautiful overcame his regard for the traditional interpretation of the second commandment. He made use of his astronomical knowledge in the compilation of lunar tables, to be used in testing the truth of those who deposed that they had seen the new moon, upon whose appearance the time of the Passover depended.

His Liberalism, however, was rather a fashion learned by imitation from the heathen, than the outgrowth of any principle of spiritual freedom within. His actual teaching was rigid adherence to the "traditions inherited from the fathers," while he had a horror of the wrangling captiousness of the Pharisees. When he died, it was said, with an oriental excess of expression, that "the glory of the law had departed, and general wickedness had spread among men."

The "Nicodemus who came to Jesus by night" is described by the Talmudists as one of the three wealthiest men in Jerusalem. His name was originally Bonai, but was changed to Nicodemus, in memory of a miracle wrought by his prayers.

Yet after the destruction of the city by the Romans, his daughter was reduced to such penury that she was obliged to sustain life by gathering particles of barley from the ground. The atrabilious Pharisees did not hesitate to attribute the change to some violation of the law, which is supposed to confirm the opinion that her father was a secret convert to the Christian faith. Ultoniensis.—Am. Presbyterian.

"Father Knows."

A gentleman was one day opening a box of dry goods. His little son was standing near, and as the father took the packages from the box he laid some of them upon the arm of the boy. A little friend and playmate of the merchant's son was standing by, looking on. As package after package was laid upon the arm of the boy, his little friend began to fear his load was becoming too heavy, and said,

"Johnny, don't you think you've got as much as you can carry?"

"Never mind," dear little Johnny answered, in a sweet, happy tone, "father knows how much I can carry."

Brave, trusting little fellow! He did not grow restless and impatient under his burden, heavy though it doubtless seemed. There was no danger, he felt, that his father would lay upon him a burden too heavy for him. His father knew the strength, or rather the weakness, of that little arm, and would not overtask it. More than all, his father loved him and could not harm him.

It is such a spirit of loving trust in him that God desires all his children to possess. He says,

A child may not understand why he is obliged to perform a certain action, or why he is sometimes refused that for which he very much longs, and which it is in his parents' power to bestow; but if a dutiful child he will submit cheerfully, feeling that father or mother knows best. Sometimes, when a child interrogates a parent as to some course which he has been asked to pursue, he receives this answer:

"My child, I cannot explain this to you now; you are not old enough to understand it; but some day you shall know all, and then you will see that father's way was the best way."

So God sometimes calls us to walk in a path where all before us is dark. We cannot understand his dealings, but he bids us put our hand in his and press on, trusting to his infinite wisdom and to his loving guidance. We may not know in this life why our heavenly Father led us in such devious paths, but in the light of eternity all will be made clear. Then shall we see that God's way was not only the best way, but the only way. God afflicts not willingly. If he lays a burden upon us, it is because that the chastening, which for the present is grievous, will afterward yield the peaceable fruit of righteousness. It is sweet to the child of God to feel that his heavenly Father knows how much he can bear, and will not lay upon him burdens too grievous to be borne; sweet too, to feel that he will not be left to carry his sorrows alone. Into his bleeding heart the Comforter will come and heal the wounds that Love has made, and in his weakness the everlasting arms will be underneath him.—Selected.

"Caught in His Own Trap."

The "Observer" tells an amusing story of a student who upon examination for licensure preached a remarkably good sermon. The Moderator, after the young man had left the room, stated that the young man had not written that sermon, but procured it from an old work which he named. The young man being recalled said that the sermon was not his own, but made up from notes of one preached some time since by the Moderator. The "Observer" finds a similar instance of this elf-conviction in an exchange. A Manx (or Isle of Man, whose dialect is peculiar) Local Preacher chanced, in the south of England, to come upon a Mormon orator, who was loftily claiming the power of comprehending unknown tongues, and challenging his audience to test his capability. The Manxman stepped forward, and, uttering of a string unknown words, demanded the interpretation. The orator was nonplussed, and took refuge in the denouncing of the words as mere extemporized gibberish. But the Manxman slowly repeated his words, so that all might know that his utterance was a bona fide language; and wresting thus from the Mormon a confession of ignorance, he went on to show that what he had spoken was simply the Lord's Prayer in the Manx tongue, so well using his advantage over the impostor as to drive him from the field, and to be able to preach to his audience the truth as it is in Jesus. Deceivers often overreach themselves, and produce the very result which they seek to avoid.

Lord Coke wrote the following, which he religiously observed: "Six hours to sleep, to law's great study six, four spend in prayer, the rest to nature fix." But William Jones, a wiser economist of the fleeting hours of life, amended the sentiment thus: "Seven hours to law, to soothing slumber seven, ten to the world allot, and all to heaven."

Six Sermons on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE ORIGIN OF POPULAR THEOLOGY.

ALSO, THE TRUE THEOLOGY STATED.

BY ELD. L. F. MOORE.

TEXT.—"But as it is written: Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his spirit." 1 Cor. ii., 9, 10.

Such is the declaration of Paul, the learned, but humble follower of our Lord Jesus Christ. In our experience, we meet with all kinds and classes of men, and in our conversation with them, we find that they all have ideas and opinions peculiar to themselves. If we talk with men of the world, about worldly matters, we discover at once a very great discrepancy among them in their opinions relating to worldly matters.

Indeed, we expect this; for having no sure foundation upon which to base an opinion, except their own reason or way of reasoning, we must expect to find a difference of opinion just in proportion as each individual expects to be benefited or damaged by the matter in question.

If we enter into conversation with religious men, we again discover just as wide a difference among them with reference to their belief, as we do among worldly men in their interests; and if we come to the Christians, among the different denominations, we find the same disagreement; and if we carry our investigations to individual members of Christian churches, we still find among them differences of opinion. Now what is the reason of this? As far as the mere religionist is concerned, we can, in answer, ascribe the same reason to them, that we have to men of the world, only adding that they are led by a degenerate reason, which is pushed on by a perverted will; but why Christians should differ so much from the same premises as they do is truly curious, to say the least.

That many men do believe just alike in some things we do not deny; but that this belief is the legitimate result of reasoning on their part, we very much doubt, for quite frequently we meet with men who are almost unable to discern between good and evil, who believe great truths. Take the degraded criminal, brought up perhaps in the midst of vice and pollution, and by faithful perseverance he can be taught the sublimest truth that ever reached the mortal ear; yet, after he has learned it, can he give a reason for it? No, unless he has been taught the why, and the wherefore. It is enough for him to know that it is truth, and that giant minds have believed it before him. So we might answer, why it is that there is so much difference among Christians. In many cases we find them, in order to sustain a loved theory, flying to some standard author, and with all the confidence imaginable earnestly contending for the truth from the writing of some great man. They believe as they do, not because they can by any logic demonstrate their belief, but simply because great minds have believed thus before them; or it may be, as in the case of the Catholic, who seems to enjoy a kind of ancestral pride in his belief. His forefathers believed so; therefore he does.

There seems to have been, not an universal, but a general opinion among men of most all ages, that there is life beyond the grave. Many have been the speculations concerning it, as to its character, its locality, its employments, its results, and also the manner of entering into it. So far as our experience goes, let us for one moment consider man.

Take one look at him in all his nobility; consider his structure; his perfect adaptation to minister to all his wants and necessities; his wonderful power of mind, and the vastness of his mighty intellect; add to this the position he holds in the world as its sovereign ruler; see how every thing bends to his will; distance vanishes as he advances; wind, vapor, gas, water, and even the very lightning, are all made to become subservient to his will. The wild beasts of the forests retreat at his approach, the heavens are explored and laid out in signs and consellations; his eye has followed the "swift planet" and "fiery comet" in their flight.

Behold the inventions he has sought out. We see him enjoy the works of his hand, but soon, alas, we follow him to the narrow resting place in the earth; he is deposited in the charnel house, and here our experience ends: we can go no further; the future is closed from our vision; never has one returned, of our human friends, to disclose the mystery of the future to us. We are, as far as our experience goes, altogether in the dark, but we ask ourselves the question. Is this the last of man? Has he run his race so soon? If a man die shall he live again? In vain we attempt to get answers to these questions from human sources, for there is no positive knowledge or experience; and in our despair, we cast about us for answers. Where shall we go for them?

Here we have traced man as far as we can, our knowledge of him ends with the grave, and there we must leave him forever—DEAD, unless we can get some positive evidence of his future existence. I am aware that learned men attempt to settle the whole question for us; but, if we accept all that they say, for truth, we shall only be doing what we have been deprecating, and perhaps, may not, after all, be able to demonstrate our belief; and besides, it were impossible for us to accept all that learned men say; for there are about as many different views as there are learned men. So we will explore among them all to discover, if possible, something to fasten our hopes upon.

If we go back to the early ages of the world, before the time of Moses and the Pentateuch, we find a human being—man—speculating about a future life. (There is something in man that tells him that he was created for some great and noble end; not merely to live a short period of time and then cease to exist). His name is Zoroaster, of Persia. He is skilled in all the learning of his age, and is the reputed author of the following system of religion, to wit:

"In the first place we have presented two beings; one good, called Ormazd; the other evil, called Ahriman. Both possessing creative power, but in different degrees. Ormazd is King and creator of the world of light. He begins his creation in bringing forth the Fravashi (spirits, or basis of existence) of all things. He then creates, for his assistance in an anticipated struggle with the evil one, the sun, moon, planets, and stars. The Fravashis (spirits), of men created by Ormazd (Zoroaster was a firm believer in the dualism of all things) are preserved in heaven, the realm of light; and Michra (the sun) was appointed to lead them into the bodies they were to inhabit.

"Ahriman is king of the world of darkness, and looking from the gloomy depths of his kingdom, and beholding the work of Ormazd prepares himself for the fearful conflict which awaits him. Ormazd, knowing all the misery that Ahriman would cause, and knowing also that victory remained for him, offered the evil one peace; but he chose war; and the vast preparation of this great war being completed, Ahriman was urged by one of his demons to begin the conflict. He counted his host, but finding it inferior to that of Ormazd he sunk back in dejection. But the time was fa t approaching for the onset; and soon again, with all the impetuosity of the arch fiend, he sprang to the contest. His host followed him, but he alone succeeded in reaching the realm of light, his troops remained behind. He is driven back to earth, and here the conflict is renewed, which resulted, after ninety days and nights, in the complete victory of Ormazd over Ahriman, who is driven with his demon troops into the abyss of Duzahk.

"The result of this fearful struggle upon earth, was the production of man and woman, who were originally innocent; but being tempted by Ahriman they yield, and lose their right to heaven, for which they were originally created; and now they are to go on the path of probation in this world, called the way of the two destinies. Those who do good and obey Ormazd are at death received by good spirits and guided to the bridge Chinevat; the wicked are dragged there by the demons. Here Ormazds holds a tribunal to decide the fate of the spirits. The good pass the bridge into the mansions of the blessed; the bad fall over into the abyss of Duzahk, where they are tormented by the demons.

"Finally comes the consummation when the whole earth, by a great conflagration, is changed into a stream like melted iron, which will pour impetuously down into the realm of Ahriman. All beings must now pass through this stream; to the good it is pleasant; but sinners must be burned three days and nights, after which they are purified and restored. Afterwards Ahriman is purified with his demons by the fire; all evil is consumed, and all darkness banished; and from the extinct fire will arise a more beautiful earth, and destined to be eternal."

This system of the religion of the Persians claims great antiquity; biographers claiming that its author lived as long ago as six thousand years B. C., although there is a great difference among them; some say twenty three hundred years B. C., and some thirteen hundred and fifty years B. C. Be that as it may, we find in the system the fundamental principles of the systems of the religion of the Hindoo, the Parsee, the Turk, the Chinese, the Catholic and the Orthodox; and among each of the above-named sects we find their wise men, teaching and adhering to their peculiar views, or different phases of the above great system; presidents of universities among the rest.

Now shall we receive the above views, or some or all of the peculiar construction put upon them by great and learned men, simply because they have believed: as an answer to our questions and bid our despair flee away? I answer most decidedly, No! for the author of the system was a mere man, and his experience went no further than our own, which is confined to our earthly existence. Again, the views are altogether void of demonstration; they have never been illustrated. Perhaps some one will say, "you lack faith." I know it. I long ago lost faith in wise men and their wisdom; and when they undertake to teach me, I ask, Why? And besides, as we understand it, faith is the gift of God; and how can we exercise faith in things which are not of God?

But leaving these collateral issues, let us still seek for answers to our questions. We find still other views that obtain to-day, and among them the doctrines of the "man Christ Jesus." Let us consider them. For brevity we will take the creation and fall of man, or the introduction of sin into the world, as a fact, and proceed with man from the place where our experience left him—in the grave, dead, unconscious.

The doctrines of the "man Christ Jesus," teach that man lost his life through sin; consequently are of and in themselves perfectly helpless. They also represent that man must forever remain in the grave, held by his sins unconscious, unless the "man Christ Jesus" dies, is buried; and is raised again to life to live forever. They also teach that it is very essential to exercise faith in Christ in order to receive any benefit from him. And if we believe on him we may have everlasting life and not perish. While the Bible represents man as dead indeed through sin; lost forever without the intervention of the Divine and mighty architect to again rebuild the noblest structure ever produced by him; it presents to us a merciful plan of redemption for our thoughtful consideration; which I am sure, well understood, recommends itself to every man's conscience and reason. What is it? Life from the dead through Jesus Christ. How? By a resurrection out from among the dead ones, at the last day. Here we have in few words, the doctrines of the "man Christ Jesus." But some one will say, the doctrines of this man, as they stand above, are no more than those of other men. True, as they stand above stated. But we ask the question, Did Christ ever give any proof of his statements? Had he any experience beyond this life? Did he ever illustrate his doctrines? We answer unhesitatingly and emphatically, Yes! That was his mission to illustrate and demonstrate, "Life and incorruptibility by the glad tidings;" and there is evidence which his enemies cannot gainsay. Gibbon says, that the cause of the success of gospel was "The convincing evidence of the doctrine itself." Chap. 15. He is "declared to be the Son of God with POWER, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." And after his resurrection that power was exerted in the raising of "many bodies of the saints." It is in this that we claim for the Christian religion the superiority over all other religions, to wit: its demonstration. Christ both made and proved the proposition he made, and in it we will rest, and by faith in him, bid all our despair flee away: and then if dead, by a resurrection to life, receive our crown of life; and if living, by a change to immortality, enter into the world to come, when He shall consummate our hope.

We ask. How many does this plan of redemption affect? Various answers are given. Some say, "All men." We ask. In what way? The answer is given, "By giving them again the life lost in Adam." But that is contrary to Scripture, which says, "The GIFT of God is ETERNAL LIFE, through Jesus Christ." Surely Adam had not such a life. It has been remarked that in order to receive any benefit from Jesus it is essential that we have faith in him; hence we read that, "WHOSOEVER believes in him, should not perish" (be lost out of being), "but have everlasting life." John iii., 16. Here our condition is defined as "perished" without him; but upon the condition of belief on him, we can have "everlasting life," from such a condition.

The Scriptures represent us as being stung to death with sin. "The sting of death is sin." 1 Cor. xv., 56. Disease came by sin; all the pain we suffer is the result of sin; and death is the inevitable result of disease and pain, which are introduced by sin. Men have been seeking an antidote for disease. The ancients sought it in magic; the moderns in "portable gold." Prince de Leon sought it in Florida in quest of the "fountain of youth." All have failed of success. Still there is an antidote. Hear it: "He that believes on me (Christ) though he were dead, yet shall he live AGAIN. John xi., 25. Here is the antidote—Christ,—who has the power to entirely eradicate disease. He will do it by removing the cause, which is sin, by extracting the sting; then the grave opens, the redeemed come out shouting, "O death! where is thy sting?" It's gone; Christ has removed it. The sting, if never removed, must still hold all under its deathly power: but the removing of it is, "Life from the dead;" and with that bestowment comes the shout, "Thanks be to God, who gives us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

All who come out from the grave must give this shout, because it is a shout of triumph, caused by being brought out of the grave through or by Jesus Christ.

We, therefore, come to the conclusion that, the plan of redemption does not affect all men by giving them a resurrection to life, but only believers.—"Whoso findeth me (wisdom), findeth life." . . . . "All they that hate me (wisdom), love death." Prov. viii., 35, 36. The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding, shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16.

In conclusion, let me say, that, in our humble opinion, the resurrection of dead men to eternal life through Jesus Christ, at the last day, upon condition of implicit faith in him, is the fulfilment of our test, i. e., together with the bl ssing attendant upon a future life; for heathen nations or philosophers never dreamed of it. True, we find the resurrection spoken of in some of the ancient systems of religion; but it is only an addition of modern days. No, the resurrection is of Jesus. We find some of his professed followers who disbelieve it; but to us it looks like LOVE, and we love it. Amen.

MILLENNIAL JERUSALEM.

BY J. T. BARCLAY, M.D., MISSIONARY TO JERUSALEM FROM AMERICA.

WE learn from the prophecy of Zechariah (xiv., 8), that at the coming of the Lord, two most copious perennial streams of water shall burst forth from Jerusalem; one going forth toward the Mediterranean, or "hinder sea;" and the other toward the former or Dead Sea, developed apparently by the great earthquake; and as this earthquake, which shall rend Mount Olivet asunder and produce a "very great valley" running eastward, apparently for the purpose of conveying one of the life-giving streams to the parched desert below, will probably effect other physical changes in the immediate neighborhood of Jerusalem as well as in the depression of land from Geba to Rimmon; it will be useless to speculate as to the course the western stream will pursue, though it would seem from the third chapter of Joel, v. eighteenth, in connection with the declarations of Ezekiel (xlvii., 1–12), that the course of the eastern river is very definitely marked out, though there is no valley in the neighborhood of Jerusalem known at the present day by the name there designated Shittim. Wadyaneh-Nazel, however, would seem to be indicated as the most natural channel, and may originally have been called Shittim.

We are not informed where the healing stream bifurcates, if indeed there be only one source of the waters, or in what part of the Temple inclosure, or of the city, the second fountain arises. If there be two distinct sources, Ezekiel only measures and describes one; but Zechariah clearly indicates the existence of two, and inasmuch as that which flows eastward arises on the east of the holy house, that which flows westwardly probably arises west of that building. If so, it must necessarily fall into the Tyropœon; and if left to itself, would naturally be carried down Wady-en-Nair into the Dead Sea, unless it be conducted out of it westwardly by an aqueduct or else the earthquake divert it in the same direction, either by opening a new channel, or by blocking up or elevating some portion of the present Wady-en-Nair. It would be perfectly practicable, with very little labor, to conduct a stream issuing from the Temple area to the region of the future Jehovah-Shammah, by a short serpentine canal conformed to the requirements of the ground about the upper portions of the Tyropœon, Mount Zion, Hinnom, etc., situated as the ground now is. This western stream may thus readily be conducted to the great city, and thence, after irrigating a large portion of the arid region of southern Judea, enter the Mediterranean at El-ansh, or by any of the numerous valleys that empty into the Mediterranean. We have no positive information as to the size of this river, but if it be as large as that emptying into the Dead Sea, it may be rendered very serviceable not only for the irrigation of a large district of country, but for internal boat navigation. If it be true that the desert of Arabia was once an inland sea or lake, and is still depressed below the level of the sea, may it not be refilled either from the sea or by this river? It will be recollected that while Jerusalem is 2,927 feet above the Dead Sea, its elevation above the Mediterranean is only 2,610 feet, and that Jehovah-Shammah will be much more depressed.

The waters that issue out eastward seem to undergo no increase in passing from the altar through the surrounding buildings, nor, perhaps, for a further distance of six hundred yards. But, at this point at the least, the fountain becomes a stream ankle-deep; twelve hundred yards from the sanctuary, it becomes knee-deep; at a distance of eighteen hundred yards it is found to be loin-deep; and when it is last measured, at a distance of two thousand four hundred yards (more than one and a third mile) from the wall of the sanctuary, by which time it has passed through the cleft in Mount Olivet, it has become more than chin-deep, "risen waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over." Whether the river becomes still deeper, and what is its width, we are not informed; but it is probable that it receives no further increment. Its gradual augmentation thus far at regular intervals of one-third of a mile, seems to be due to subterranean accessions received from the rent bowels of Mount Olivet.

Should this river rush immediately down this valley into the Dead Sea, it would produce a succession of rapids, cascades, and cataracts unequalled in all the world; for the distance being only about fifteen or twenty miles, and the difference of altitude nearly four thousand feet, the rate of descent could not be less than an average of two hundred feet per mile, or one foot in twenty-six—a fall of four thousand feet in twenty miles! while the entire fall in the Mississippi, through its whole course of two thousand miles, is only one thousand five hundred and seventy-five feet. What inconceivable power for the propulsing machines! What teeming luxuriance must cover the banks of this fertilizing and vivifying stream, and especially if the waters be made to meander along the declivities of the once frightful, barren, and desolate desert! How surpassingly beautiful the evergreen landscape in which this life-giving river sweetly meanders, where "grow all trees for meat, whose leaf fadeth not, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: bringing forth new fruit according to his months, the fruit thereof for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." (Ezek. xlvii., 12.) Then, indeed, will the wilderness and the solitary place be glad, and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose. These are the gladdening waters of which the exulting psalmist spoke in vision, "There is a river, the streams of which shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most High." (Psa. xlvi., 4.)

We are not positively told that the waters issuing to the west will possess those wondrous properties that characterize the eastern river; but it is altogether a legitimate inference that they will be similarly endowed. And if, on the banks of this refreshing and fructifying stream, adorned with their health-imparting and life-giving trees, the highway of holiness shall lead from Jehovah-Shammah to the Holy City and Temple, through the desert of Tekoah, then really become "an house of prayer for all nations," what a paradisiacal avenue would conduct the millenarian pilgrim up to the house of the Lord! Thus shall "the ransomed of the Lord return and come to Zion, with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads." "And it shall come to pass . . . . in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." (Isa. ii., 2, 3.

"See the streams of living waters,
Springing from eternal love,
Well supply thy sons and daughters,
And all fear of drought remove.
Who can faint while such a river
Ever flows their thirst to assuage!
Grace which, like the Lord the giver,
Never fails from age to age.

Great as are the temporal blessings of the millennial age, greater by far are its spiritual blessings. Satan being then bound, and the evidences of the Lord's presence ever before their eyes, who can from even the faintest conception of the blessedness and splendor of the glorious era when "the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea!" For "wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of salvation."

The waters of the Dead Sea would not only be "healed," but, doubtless, much increased in depth, and extended in length; for the latter rain being also fully restored, would form, in concurrence with these waters, far more than a counterbalance to the evaporation by which this mysterious sheet of water is now restricted to its narrow limits; and being walled in by perpendicular cliffs towering to the height of one or two thousand feet on each side; while its breadth would not be much increased, its length must necessarily be greatly extended, particularly toward the south. It would seem, even from existing indications, that its length was formerly much greater than at present; and such a copious accession would, doubtless, cause its permanent outflow into the Red Sea, thus effectually sweeping away its bitter waters.

Very considerable geological changes will doubtless be produced by the great convulsions that accompany the subsidence and levelling of the tract of country lying between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea, under the parallels of latitude separating Jeba and Rimmon; and one highly beneficial result, amongst many remarkable consequences of the earthquake, will no doubt be a literal verification of a prophecy of Isaiah (xxxv., 6, 7), that has heretofore been regarded as exclusively figurative: "In the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water." How glowingly is the prosperity of the land and nation of Israel set forth by the prophet, when Judah and Israel shall have been restored and brought in complete subjection to their Prince, David the Beloved, i. e., the Prince Messiah. (Isaiah lx.)

But the most interesting, and perhaps the most marvellous circumstance attending the millennial condition of Jerusalem, remains yet to be mentioned. We are informed by Isaiah in the fourth chapter of his prophecy, that "when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughter of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof, by the spirit of judgment and the spirit of burning . . . he will create upon every dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day and the shining of a flame of fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a covering. And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain" (verses 3–6) . . . "The Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee, and the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." [Isaiah lx., 1–3.) "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee, but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended: thy people also shall be all righteous, and they shall inherit the land forever. The branch of my planting, the work of hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation; I the Lord will hasten it in his time." (lx., 19–22.) Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold on the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people and healeth the stroke of their wound." (xxx., 26. "Then the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before thy ancients gloriously." (xxiv., 23.) From these passages it would appear that when the Lord shall again record his name in his dwelling-place in Zion, for "this is the hill which God desireth to dwell in, yea, the Lord will dwell in it forever," there will be revival, on a magnificent scale, of the "glory of the Lord," as it anciently rested over the tabernacle in the wilderness, a "pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night," such a manifestation of Deity, perhaps, as was seen in Eden! May it not be to this Shechinah, thus overshadowing the holy city as a glorious luminary canopy that the astonishing change of climate is to be ascribed? And need any more direct divine interpretation be invoked in explanation of the wonderful effects wrought on the whole vegetable and animal kingdom in relation to the fertility of the soil, the domestication of destructive members of the forest, the transmutation of poisonous reptiles into innocent creatures, and the prosperity, happiness, and longevity of its inhabitants? Should any other influence be deemed necessary, we have it without inconsiderately ascribing these wonderful changes to such an alteration of the axis of the earth as would make the ecliptic and equator coincide. Has not the Lord promised, in speaking of this very matter, as portrayed in the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, that he will make a covenant with the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven, and the creeping things of the ground? (Hos. ii., 18.) There is no calculating the wonderful consequences that would result from the alteration of electrical, thermal, and magnetic agencies. And who can divine the wonderful change that will be wrought, not only on man, but on the brute creation also, and, indeed, even on the vegetable kingdom, by the life-giving stream that flows from the oracle of God! Would it be any marvel that the carnivorous beasts should not only be herbiverous, by feeding upon the vegetation growing upon the banks of this marvellous water, but have their entire nature changed into something like what it probably was when Adam gave them names in the garden of Eden! If the juice of the grape, when fermented, is capable of producing an effect so astonishing upon man—mentally, physically, and morally—is there anything unreasonable in the supposition that the water of this river, and the vegetable production on its banks, which are not only healing but life-giving, should effect such a change even in ravenous beasts and venomous reptiles? Certainly not; "because their waters they issue out of the sanctuary," a fact to which the prophet directly ascribes their wonderful properties. If the properties of the nitrous oxide, or exhilarating gas, are so different from that of the atmosphere, though formed of the same elements, and differing only in their relative proportions, why should not a slight change in the waters of the sanctuary be adequate to the production of all the effects ascribed to this millennial "aqua vitæ?"

There is no aspect in which the millennial age can be regarded that is not richly suggestive of the most pleasing and profitable theme of contemplation. Satan being bound, and man brought into complete subjection to Jesus Emmanuel, the whole creation, which had hitherto groaned in travail on account of man's sins, is vocal with praise, "the times of the restitution of all things" having now arrived. Who that has a heart to feel can refrain from praying and laboring for a "consummation so devoutly to be wished!"

Dear Brethren and Sisters in our precious Life-giver: How my heart draws out to you. Every time I go to camp-meeting, my love increases towards you all; and when I think of your love to me and to one another, how my heart cries out—Glory to our God; for our "God is love," and they who love Him truly love each other. How many times a day the numerous little tokens of love come up to be remembered, which you showed me; and I praise the Lord at each thought of them; for I feel that it is a pure and fervent love. That is the way that Jesus loves. I cannot express the feelings I have to you all.

When I arrived home from camp-meeting, I felt as though I was in the world again, and longed for that meeting when we will never part. How my heart rejoices that our Father in heaven ever called together so many in the precious Life views, and that He called us together in the bonds of love. I praise the Lord that he lets me live in these days. When I think of all our preaching brethren, and how God has blessed their labors, I am lost in wonder, love and praise. I am encouraged to do more to help the word to run and be glorified. I brought from the camp-meeting a large basket of Campaign Documents; and with the help of the Lord, I am going out with them; and may the Holy Spirit seal the word on many hearts. We cannot tell what good may thus be accomplished.

I was invited to the Colored Methodist Love-feast, last May; and a feast of love it was. If ever the Spirit visited a people, it was there. I took a few tracts with me. As I went out, I said to the Br. at the door, I want to leave these tracts for your Minister. "Certainly," said he, "he will be pleased to receive them. Awhile after that, their Conference met here. I went to see and hear if they had any of the blessed light of the precious word; and, I tell you, they talked of the kingdom soon to be set up; and it was to be under the whole heavens, not above the earth: no going to heaven at death; but Jesus is coming, and then He will raise the dead and change the living saints, and all be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air; not to stay there; no, but they are coming down on the earth renewed; and "so ever be with the Lord."

The minister saw me there with some of the tracts, and came out of the pulpit and asked, if I had some more such as I left for him. He said, "they were blessed; and the other ministers want mine; but I cannot let them have them, except to read." So I gave them all I had, and they thanked me. I went again Monday evening, and took some of my Heralds of Life and more tracts. How I did bless God that they wanted to read them. They talked in Bible language much more than other ministers do. I feel much encouraged to distribute tracts now, and God blesses me in it.

When I look back and see the commencement of the Life views, how the Lord honors his word, (His word is truth), my heart says, Praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord."

Dear Brethren and Sisters, you who were not at the camp-meeting, you do not know what you lost: they were all so earnest; so much good done; so much love shown to all; how my heart does rejoice. I do believe the dear ones mean to be found without spot when our Life-giver appears. May I be one of the happy number. I trust Sr. Earl and myself will be there. She is not ashamed to let the world know that she is one of us. O, how she is growing in the knowledge of the word. She is strong in the faith. May the next year bring greater things yet. Brethren and Sisters, do write for the paper; it encourages me greatly. We wish to know how the truth is progressing.

Daniel Hawks, Andes, N. Y., writes: I am convinced that theology, as taught by the sects, needs remodling oftener than they are inclined to do it. It seems to me that there is so much error taught with the truth, that the unregenerated turn from the Christian religion in disgust; and what little truth there is is mixed with so much error it loses its power with them. I desire the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Yours, in hope of eternal life at the last day.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 29, 1869.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote there or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

End of This Volume.

This number ends the Sixth volume of the Herald of Life. Never had the friends of an unpopular enterprise so much cause of gratitude to God, for the mercy and favor attending their efforts to promulgate truth, as have those who have been engaged in sending abroad the Life views. A steady advance has been made, and continual accessions have encouraged our hearts to labor on in the blessed work: while we ascribe all the success to the power of truth and the blessing of the God of truth and love. Let His name have all the praise and glory.

To some of our Subscribers this may be the last number of the Herald they will receive. We would be sorry to part with any of them, and hope they may see their way open to renew their subscriptions immediately. Do not delay a day, but act at once in the matter.

No. 206 Broadway, Room 7.

During the past week we have been much occupied in the Removal of the Office of the Herald of Life to the above location, and fitting up, ready to go into our work with renewed energy and determination to urge forward the work of God in the way His providence has marked out for Life Believers. Br. Spencer is with us, and has got in our new type and materials for setting up the Herald in the best manner possible. We may be delayed a little in getting out the first number of the next volume; but trust, not much.

We have been unable to give our usual attention to the matter of the present week's issue, and our friends will excuse us, under the circumstances. We shall try to do better, hereafter, when we get over the fatigue and confusion attendant on removal.

We shall be glad to see our friends at our new office when we get all things in working order; but we especially desire that you will "work together with" us in making the Herald what its name indicates—A Herald of Life. This must be the great object we all have in view, that we may honor our blessed Life-Giver, and magnify the name of His Father, whose love has brought to our minds and understandings such glorious truths, and made us to rejoice in His love to us, that He has not left us to grope our way still, in the darkness and superstition wherein we were once bound; but has caused us to "see light in His light," even "the light of life" to those, and to those only, who have the indwelling of His Spirit, shed on us through Jesus Christ our Lord and Redeemer.

Let every lover of the truths we advocate now put forth a new effort to double our present list of subscribers in the next three months. Can it not be done? Try.

Do not forget that our expenses will be increased by this new movement; and as we never have gone backward, in the matter of the Herald, but always forward, so now let all push onward, in love and faith, fully believing that the voice of God is heard bidding us "Go Forward."

God has called us to do a great work; let us understand this, and work accordingly. All can do something, by your prayers; your contributions to our columns; your donations to the funds necessary to carry on the work; and by procuring new subscribers and stirring up old ones to make remittances immediately.

As we have to begin with the use of more funds than usual, it is desirable that such as have made pledges should redeem them as early as convenient.

Our work must be enlarged greatly. There is no necessity of the truths we promulgate being confined in a corner. Thousands on thousands of our tracts have been sent out on their mission the year past, and we ought to double, yea, treble this work the coming year, and even quadruple it. The coming struggle against the horribleness that has characterized the nominal Christianity of past centuries, is waxing hotter and hotter, and we shall prove unfaithful to God and humanity if we do not put forth all the means and power God has placed within our reach to carry on the work of purifying the waters, that the pure stream of a living Christianity may be made to flow across the deserts and wastes made by honest and dishonest theologians; for both have been engaged in the dreadful work of corrupting the word of God, and "making it void through their traditions."

Men of God, help; the work must be done. If we do it, well for us. If we do it not, God will lay us aside and raise up others who will do it, and we shall lose the reward He designs for us and offers to us. Think on these things and let no worldly schemes delude us into wasting the time, the means, and the opportunity God is giving us to carry forward the heavenly work He has called us to do. Let us arise and build the walls that shall stop the flowings of the corruptions (of our holy religion) which have so long dishonored God, and made sad sincere souls, who have lived and died under the clouds and moral pestilence brought into the Church by paganized teachers, and matured by papacy, while Protestantism has mingled, drunk, and administered to others, the poisonous cup of inherent immortality and eternal torture to the souls of men.

This abomination must be made to cease; and many Protestants in Europe and America are awaking to the importance of the work to be done to clear Christianity of these plague spots, or this leprosy which has so defiled its lovely and heavenly face.

"Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due time we shall reap, if we faint not." Let us "come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord, against the mighty;" so shall we avoid the curse denounced against Meroz (Judges v., 53) and be blessed in our deeds.

To New York City Subscribers.

Those of you who have not done it already, should call or send to our office, 206 Broadway, immediately, and let us know if you wish your papers continued; otherwise you will not receive the next, or first number of Volume VII.; as we are obliged to pay postage in advance on all your papers sent through the Post-office. Make no delay.

To all our Subscribers.

If any of you fail to receive the first numbers of Vol. VII., who are entitled to it, please let us know without delay; as in re-arranging our mail books we may have made some mistakes, notwithstanding all our care, and the intention to deal justly. We have designed to treat all liberally.

To Delinquent Subscribers.

Some have not paid up on this closing volume. We will concel all your past indebtedness if you will send us, immediately, $2 for the coming volume, and credit you in full for Vol. VII. Is not this a generous offer? We wish you to have the benefit of the paper, or we should not make it. Do not let a day pass without accepting it.

England: The Progress.

We give the following extract from a letter written to the Rainbow by Rev. Edward White, author of "Life in Christ," a work from which we made large extracts into the "Bible Examiner," some twenty years since. The extract from the "Rainbow," now given, will be read with interest. It is as follows:

To the Editor of the Rainbow.

Sir: Permit me to express my great thankfulness that God has, after so many years of expectation, raised up advocates of the doctrine of Life in Christ, who seem every way fitted to commend it to the attention of the public. It is now twenty-five years since Mr. Dobney published his work on Future Punishment, and I accompanied him in testimony in my Four Discourses on the Scripture Doctrine of Immortality. Those deliverances of an early manhood have cost us both the serious sacrifices of a lifetime in discredit, loss, and the suspicion of the orthodox churches—evils only of late years surmounted by either of us: but I believe that the gravest review of what we did aforetime, now that we are beginning to be reckoned among the elders, only leads us to the conclusion that a thousand, yes, ten thousand lifetimes of rejection and disrepute would have been a cheap price to pay for the honor of serving God and man in testimony against the errors which were at that time almost wholly unassailed among believers.

Allow me to express, Mr. Editor, my admiration of the judgment, courage, and candour, which mark the writings of some of your leading contributors. Mr. Maude's paper in your March number deserves to be reprinted and circulated by thousands. He seems never to have heard of the earlier battles fought in this cause; but I can assure him that the old soldiers look upon his mode of fighting almost with envy, wishing that in their youth they had known how to put the case as well as he puts it now. What, moreover, can be more complete, more judicial in tone, than Mr. Prebendary Constable's articles? I am sorry that necessity compels him to oppose our old friend, Mr. Henry Dunn; but although I differ from Mr. Dunn, let me mention a good deed of his which I shall never cease to remember. At the very outset of my career, when a savage and deceitful article in the Eclectic was put forth in attempt to strifle both me and my then recently published book on Life in Christ Mr. Dunn, at his own expense, printed a long, reply to this article, and had it stitched into every number of the following Eclectic with signally good effect. And whatever we may think of his doctrines now, this has been a sample of the man in real life all through.

Mr. Editor, we have seen some courageous avowals of conviction during the last few years. Mr. Minton has shown an example of all-sacrificing honesty, which is highly inspiriting and exemplary, quite apart from its bearing on this immediate controversy. During the next few years the public will be startled with other unexpected confessions of belief. Some of the very foremost men among the Congregationalists, the best scholars, the "chief priests" of that sect, will, I doubt not, before long, edify the public with their candid expressions of faith in these much-abused doctrines. It is my firm belief that the old doctrine is losing its hold on nearly all the best minds, and that many are in that transition state in which any fine morning may witness their open avowal of sympathy with the truth. What we need, and must pray for, is more "boldness." For my own part, I purpose to deliver a series of discourses on the theology of our Missionary Societies, during the present month, of which, if agreeable, I will send one to the Rainbow for July, on "The hinderance to belief in the gospel, both at home and abroad, caused by the doctrine of the endless misery of the idolatrous nations, of past and present times." [This appeared in our issue of August 18, and is worthy to be put into a tract.—Ed. of Herald of Life.] Let all who have been favored to learn the truth, in God's gift of eternal life, now work at its promulgation with a will, and we may venture to predict a material alteration of public opinion during the next ten years. I feel all Mr. Constable's persuasion that Universalism cannot stand in a fair and vigorous conflict with the doctrines to which you have addicted yourself; and that not even Mr. Jukes' fascinating Mysticism will enable it to make head against the truth.

The controversy is narrowing itself by degrees and becoming concentrated around its real centres. The question cannot be evaded much longer, whether the absolute rule of interpretation for all public documents is not—that the plain unvarnished sense of the general current of its expressions on any topic shall be taken as the ruling sense; so that all real or imagined exceptions to that sense, founded on interpretation of isolated passages, must give way before the meaning deduced from the literal interpretation of the words chiefly employed. It is this principle which we seek to apply to the language of Scripture on life and death; and orthodoxy on this question acts on the worst principles of heterodoxy; on such principles indeed, that you might undertake thereby, if leave be given, to apply them to overthrow the whole structure of Christianity.

We see what comes of departing from this rule, by observing the hermeneutical operations of the two opposed schools of Orthodoxy and Universalism. Allow Universalism to teach, with Mr. Jukes' of that death, destruction, perishing, being slain, being killed, are forms of speech to denote a moral and physical process of recreation, reformation, renewal, and then you will have little ground on which to deny to orthodoxy the gratification of making the very same words stand for endless sin and misery. Meantime, it is somewhat curious to see the same words, and those the words constantly used in Scripture to denote future punishment, by one school of interpreters made to stand for everlasting sin and torment, and by the other, the Universalist Reformers, with equal unreason, made to stand for a process resulting in eternal purity and joy. But this is, in both cases, I think, to trifle with language and with Scripture, not to interpret it.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Br. Jacob Grim has issued a tract of two pages, very neat in its appearance; the matter of which we transfer to our columns. It reads as follows:

Is It Infidelity?

Is it Infidelity to believe the soul that sinneth it shall die? Ezekiel xviii., 20.

Is it Infidelity to believe the wages of sin is death? Rom. vi., 23.

Is it Infidelity to believe the word of God when speaking of man? He says to the Adam, "For dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Genesis iii., 19.

Is it Infidelity to believe that the natural man is like the beasts which perish, when Peter says: "But these, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption?" 1 Peter ii., 12.

Is it Infidelity to believe in the mortality of man, when the word of God says: "Which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality?" 1 Timothy vi., 15, 16.

If the King of kings only hath immortality, is it Infidelity to ask where in the Scriptures it says the natural man has immortality inherent in himself?

Is it Infidelity to believe the words of Jesus when he said, "That God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life?" John iii., 16.

Is it Infidelity to ask if the word perish, in John iii., 16, and the same word in 1 Corinthians xv., 18, mean the same thing, and if it means eternal torments?

Is it Infidelity to ask if Jesus would have suffered eternal torments if he had not been raised from the dead? For the apostle affirms Jesus died, was buried, and rose again (from the dead) according to the Scriptures. 1 Corinthians xv., 1–3. "For if the dead rise not then is Christ not raised. And if Christ be not raised (from the dead) your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also (as well as Christ) who have fallen asleep in Christ, are perished." 1 Corinthians, xv., 16–18.

Is it Infidelity to believe that life and immortality were brought to light by Jesus Christ who hath abolished death (not eternal torment) and hath brought to light life and immortality through the Gospel? 1 Timothy i., 10.

Is it Infidelity to believe that, "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality: eternal life" (or incorruptibility)? Romans ii., 7.

Is it Infidelity to believe the words of Jesus, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit?" John iii., 6.

Is it Infidelity to believe the words of Jesus, "That every one that believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day?" John vi.

Reader, Will You Answer the above Questions?

Pernicious Literature.

We believe nothing is having such a pernicious influence upon society as the corrupt literature which floods the world. Thinking people may well become alarmed at this fact. The land is full of crime which the low character of our popular literature is certainly responsible for. Our Christian communities lament this; but they are powerless to effect a change. We have, truly, a large religious element in this country, which assuredly ought to have a powerful influence in regulating this evil; but they seem shorn of their strength, and their power for good seems to be buried amid the filthy trash which they eagerly seek for, to more or less extent. And the rising generation promises no change for the better, in the approximating future. As long as professed followers of the Holy One of Israel will seek the fictitious literature of our day, and bring their children up with a novel for their constant companion, we may reasonably expect that the world at large will follow the example.

That this wide-spread evil can be regulated by legislation, is doubtful. Upon mere moral grounds, it would be difficult to place the dividing line. Where good and bad are mixed up so promiscuously, would not difference of opinion render it utterly impossible to make a distinction sufficient to base an enactment upon? We have already more laws on the statute books than are enforced. Let them be carried out strenuously, coupled with the influence of that mighty giant—public opinion—and the result would be gratifying to all lovers of law and virtue.

To meet this growing evil, the combined influence of Christians should be borne against it. The novelist's corrupt influence must be met by the power of God's truth. Scriptural books and tracts should be widely circulated; and, indeed, we should seek in every manner to let the true "light shine." Many considerations urge this upon us. The time of probation is rapidly passing, and soon the just Steward will appear. The black cloud of night's closing hours is enveloping the world; but will soon be dissipated by the glory and majesty of redemption's morning. Let us, therefore, work while time is given us.

W. H. S.

The Warning Message.

Nothing is more clearly set forth in the history of the world than that God always sends forth a warning message before visiting the children of men with a judgment for their wickedness. This is consistent with His character—which is one of supreme love and justice—and with the principles upon which He deals with a fallen race. Before visiting a judgment of a universal extent upon a rebellious race, He has commissioned and sent forth faithful servants to warn the people of the coming danger, and to point out the means of escape. Such is the history of God's judgments in the past.

A warning message has never been a popular one. This could not be in the nature of things; for the means of escape which are therein set forth require submission on the part of the guilty. For example, look at the antediluvian world. Their wickedness was so great that God regretted that he had made man, and issues a decree that he will destroy man from the face of the earth. But his great love for the race of man still prompts him to offer the guilty an opportunity to escape the threatened destruction. He commissions a man of holiness and faith to promulgate his decision. This warning message presented the nature of the danger, and plainly set the means of escape. The result was lamentable. The warning cry was scoffed at, and the remedy rejected. The message was unpopular; and the delusive tide of public opinion carried the human race down to destruction.

From this we learn that it is not always safe to be on the popular side—it is not safe to heedlessly run a great risk because the majority do.

Again, in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities of the Plain the same facts are apparent. After God had decided to destroy that rebellious people, he faithfully set before them the nature of the judgment and the means of escape. But this also was followed with the same result as in the other instance—only few were saved.

From numerous portions of the New Testament we learn that the moral condition of the world in the days of Noah and Lot was a type of the generation upon which the last great judgment should be visited, when the Son of man shall be revealed "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction."

In the days of Noah and Lot they did everything in utter disregard of God's warning: every imagination of the heart was only evil continually—"Even thus shall it be when the Son of man shall be revealed." No generation, it seems to us, could more perfectly fulfil this type than the present. The depravity of mankind is of a universal nature pervading all climes and classes of society.

But Peter particularly speaks of these times when scoffers should abound; when the judgment message should be sounded forth to a godless world; for it was this message of the speedy return of the Lord of life and glory at which they were to scoff. No message has ever developed scoffers like this; and they will continue to scoff until they share the fate of the antediluvians.

Many are the signs and tokens which assure us that we are not mistaken in regard to our conclusion that the speedy consummation of all things is at hand. Not only in human language is this warning found, but nature herself gives signs of a speedy change, such as was never indicated before. In the air and skies, on sea and land, there is a remarkable fitness to the prophetic word. These things are noticed by those who have eyes to see, and ears to hear. To such they bring no gloomy apprehension; for Jesus says, "When ye see these things begin to come to pass, then lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."

Again, the Scriptures show us that in the last times, in opposition to the warning message, there would be a "peace and safety" cry. There is one class who repudiate the message of Christ's coming, and say, "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation;" and this is reiterated by another class, who say, "My Lord delayeth his coming." Under the influence of this cry the popular church is "deceiving and being deceived," "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof."

This peace cry is presented in numerous forms, among which are the mighty worldly achievements of the modern church—making large additions to its fold, of wealth, number and influence, "being increased in goods and having need of nothing." Thus the modern shepherds comfort and deceive their flocks with the Laodicean peace cry. But upon such will the Lord come "as a thief in the night."

In all ages when there has been a warning message proclaimed, there has been a peace cry which has deceived the masses. So in our day the world is again being deceived by the same cry which is so pleasing and soothing to the ears of unregenerated human nature. Surely, the fearful pages of history should warn us against following the example of past generations. We may safely trust in the words of Jesus, "Behold I come quickly."

Christ and His Kingdom.

"He came to his own, and his own received him not." John i., 11.

He came to his own dominion, and his own people "received him not; but as many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God."

Here, we perceive, are two principles. The one was the principle of dominion, upon the basis of right or ownership. He came to his own. The second was the principle of life, by which men become the sons of God, even by believing on his name.]

There is no need of proving that Jesus was the rightful heir to the throne of Israel; for none of us doubt the fact. The first question to prove is, Was it the time and purpose of God to give Jesus the possessions which of right belonged to him?

The Lord said, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown, . . . I will overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose (right it is), and I will give it to him." Ezek. xxi., 26, 27. We quote the language of Jesus in proof the time had come to establish the kingdom of David which was overturned, "saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand." Mark i., 15.

Nathaniel testified, "thou art the son of God; thou art the King of Israel." John i., 49. "Hosanna; Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord." Zech. ix., 9, describes the manner in which their King should come. "And Jesus recognizes the fact; for the record states, "And Jesus, when he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written, Fear not, daughter of Zion; behold thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt." John xii., 14, 15. As some of our advent brn. have been led away with these sayings, we thought it would be well to make some allusions to the fulfilment of them. We find another prophecy of the same import in Mal. iv., 5, 6. "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." And in fulfilment of this, we give the language of Jesus, and the angel, to Zechariah. Luke i., 17, Matt. xi., 14, and xvii., 11, and Mark xi., 11. In which the angel and Jesus testifies that Elijah has come.

We ask the following questions:

Had the time come for God to fulfil his promise to the heir of David's throne?

2. Did the heir come to receive the throne?

3. Did God send the messenger Elijah, as he promised he would?

4. Did he smite the earth with a curse?

5. And what is the present hope of the world?

The first we have already answered in the language of Jesus in Mark i., 14, 15. "The time has come."

The second question we have answered in our text, "He came to his own, and his own received him not."

The question you will ask here is, did God fulfil the promise and give him the kingdom?

Here, I apprehend, we shall differ; nevertheless the truth of God must stand, if all our theories fall. For many years I have been unable to harmonize many things which I find in the Scriptures. But as time advances, and light springs up, many things are made plain. Jesus is made known to us in a twofold view, as the Son of man, and as the Son of God. As the Son of man, he has his trials, his ambitions, and his desires for worldly honors and glory, the same as we have. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren. . . . "For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Heb. ii., 18. "But was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Heb. iv., 15.

We quote from Br. Storrs' tract, "Devil, Satan," etc. "The temptation of Jesus cannot be totally unlike that of other men. . . . He must have had all the natural appetites incident to our human constitution; for He took on him the seed of Abraham, and was made in the likeness of sinful flesh." Page 19. Again. "We are now to consider the temptation by the presentation of the kingdoms of this world; nor are we to lose sight of the fact that Jesus was tempted in our nature, not in the divine—and that he was tempted like as we are. Let us, also, understand that he was born under the promise and oath of God that, The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and that he shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." . . . all Kings shall fall down before him; "Yea, all nations shall serve him. See Luke i., 23, and Psalm lxxii., 8–11." Page 23, same tract.

The kingdoms of this world, "then, were to be possessed by Christ." Did he receive them? You answer "no." Where is the fault? John the Baptist, Jesus, and Daniel declare the time had come.

We will now look at this same Jesus in his other character for a few moments. He is set forth as "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. xiii., 8. "As a lamb without blemish and without spot." 1 Pet. i., 19. We see him set forth in the animal sacrifices; we behold him in the offering of Abraham; we behold him through all the types of the old dispensation, prefigured in their sacrifices, as the one of whom it was written, that he should do thy will, O God. "Who, in the days of his flesh, when he offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him (God), that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared. . . . And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation (life), unto all them that obey him." Heb v., 7–9.

Here we have the two purposes of God set forth. The one is the establishment of the kingdom of Israel in the flesh, of which Jesus the Son of David is the rightful King. The other is the establishment or introduction of a new principle of life into the world. All the promises of God to Israel, as far as we have been able to understand them, are in the flesh as a people. The promise to Jesus, as their King, is a promise to him in the flesh. In Psalm lxxii., the strongest in the book, is a promise to both the King and the people in the flesh. "And he shall live; and to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba; prayer also shall be made for him continually, daily shall he be praised." Prayer to be made for him? Does Jesus raised from the dead need the prayers of his subjects? "But it says, His name shall endure forever; does this not prove he is immortal?" I answer, no; for I read, in John xii., "The people answered him, We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever and how sayest thou, The son of man must be lifted up. Who is this Son of man?"

So we understand the Apostle, when he says, "Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace (favor), but of debt." Rom. iv., 4. "For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth these things shall live by them." Rom. x., 5.

Now Jesus did obey the law, or he was not the Lamb without spot or blemish; and if he did obey the law, then he was entitled to life under the law. I have been asked how could he live, being mortal and having our nature? I would say, that is God's affair, not mine. God said, he that doeth the law shall live by the law; and God is able to fulfil all he promises. Moreover, Jesus says. "No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." John x., 18.

"Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again." John x., 17.

Here is the great sacrifice, and the great temptation. Jesus having acquired the right to live, and being the heir to David's kingdom, and having the oath of God to establish it, being persecuted, ill-treated, not having where to lay his head, men despising him, and speaking all manner of evil of him, the strong temptation rises in his mind. All the kingdoms of the world are to be subject to me, and why should I be thus trampled on, and be despised and rejected of men? On the other hand, the high dignity of becoming the Son of God, and the Author of eternal life. "He who was rich for our sakes became poor that we, through his poverty, might become rich." "My Father loveth me because I lay down my life for my sheep." "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work;" both engage in the glorious work of introducing the new principle of life into the world, even by the resurrection to incorruptibility.

Well may the Apostle say, "Now if the fall of them (Israel) through the sacrifice of their King laying his kingdom on the altar for us), be the riches of the world (by the introduction of immortality into the world)' "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God; how unsearchable his judgments, and his ways past finding out." Rom. xi., 33.

To our third question, then, we answer, The heir came at the appointed time, and declared himself the King of Israel, and claimed his right to the throne, and told Pilate, He could have no power over him, except it were given him from above."

Pilate said to the Jews, "Behold your king." Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom was of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence. Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world that I should bear witness unto the truth." John xviii., 36, 37. Where then is his kingdom? It was laid on the altar for you and me; and with it the blood life of Jesus Christ, and now being quickened by the Spirit of God, He becomes heir to the dominion that God gave to Adam, Gen. i., 26, and which Adam lost; and which the seed of the woman was to recover; "whom God had constituted heir of all things." Heb. i., 1, to ii., 5–9. Which kingdom, Jesus says "Except a man be born again he cannot see." John iii., 5.

"Being born again, not of corruptible seed (blood and mortality), but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; the grass withereth, and the flower thereof fadeth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever; and this is the (word of the Lord) which by the gospel is preached unto you." The other questions we will answer at some future time. Hence the kingdom we are looking for is an everlasting one, that "shall not be left to other people." Dan. ii.

FROM DR. LEWIS WATSON.

BANGOR, ME., Sept. 21, 1869.

BR. STORRS: In justice to truth and the cause of our Master, I ought to say that our Camp-meeting, at North Herman, exceeded, in interest, Christian love and fellowship, our most sanguine expectations. It was our first united effort to present the Life views in this community; and it was a happy success. All speak well of the spirit manifested by those who believe. Such an absence of envy, jealousy and fruitless strife is not always seen; and we thank our God for it.

A Methodist Br., of blameless life, who had not before heard these truths preached was astonished at the manifest familiarity with the Bible and its doctrines, as exhibited by our brethren who preached the word. Many seemed disappointed when they learned our strength. We hope some may yet give glory to God by believing.

It may not be out of place to say the initiative was taken for a discussion of the glorious truth of "Life only in Christ," at an early day, in Bangor. Br. Rufus Wendell, whom we all love so much, and who was with us in his strength during the meeting, will take part in the discussion. Our Father knows how many desire the truth for His honor.

Br. Wendell, with a kind spirit and an appreciative love for the truth, urged the claims of the HERALD OF LIFE, with his usual success. We love its weekly visits, for the solid truth it contains, and for the glory of the Master it, so much exalts. Truly, "God is Love."

FROM O. A. PERCY.

BR. STORRS: And to the loved ones that are scattered abroad; I can say, that we prize our paper more and more. How eager did we grasp it this last week. We thought of what our dear Editor said, if we could not do without it one week, how would we feel to have it stopped entirely. That we could not well endure. And thanks be to our heavenly Father for its continuance; and for raising up lovers of the Truth, who have the means to do so nobly as many of our dear brethren have done. Father, bless them, is our prayer; and may the paper outride the storm, and onward, onward go, ever bearing with it the Truth of Life only in Christ while this Age lasts; and may our dear Editor be blessed with life and health and patience to help its onward course, and to encourage, strengthen, and to feed the scattered lambs of God. How thankful I am for the privilege we lately enjoyed, as many as there were of us, meeting together. But it is o'er, and we are gone each to our several homes. East, West, North, and South, finds us, to meet new duties, new cares and trials. Yes, dear ones, and none need to pass through more severe trial than we have since we returned to our home. It has seemed as if the powers of darkness and sin were determined to conquer. But thanks be to our God for a reliance on His blessed word. Jesus is near by. He is right in the fore part of the vessel. And when we cry unto him, he awakes, and stills the raging sea; and the many sweet, and never-failing promises that have been left us, how we cling to them! As thy day so shall thy strength be. I will not forsake my people. And whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it to you. Cast thy burden on the Lord, and he shall sustain thee; he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved. Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. O how precious are such promises to God's tried children. And then to know that a kind Father's hand is leading us, and knows best what course to take with us; just what is for our own good; and will do all things well, if we mortals will be kind and good. May we let our lights shine the brighter the more we are tried, and come nearer and more near our Saviour; and lay aside everything that is not in accordance to his word, and live for good alone.

And let us not think strange concerning these fiery trials, as though some strange thing happened to us; but rejoice inasmuch as we are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, we may be glad also with exceeding joy.

Like him on earth I wish to be,
That when he doth appear
I may rejoice his face to see,
And his kind voice to hear.

For time to come I would fulfil
The wishes of my Lord;
Obey his precepts, do his will,
And magnify his word.

We would wish to be remembered by all the loved ones in prayer. Thanks to Sister Weaver for what we heard from her last week; it has done us much good. Now let us hear from the rest of the dear ones—Sisters Campbell, Beach, Castle, Wood, Hough, Brooks, Perry, Thomas, Day, and many more we might mention. Let each and all of us exhort each other in love, and so live day by day, that we may meet when He who is our Life shall appear. Your sister, waiting for the kingdom of God.

FROM JOHN W. STOKES.

LITTLE RIVER, ME., Sept. 19, 1869.

BR. STORRS: Please find inclosed $3 20. Two dollars for the HERALD OF LIFE, and one dollar twenty cents for "Life only in Christ."

I have read the Campaign Documents, and think a great deal of them; they are in harmony with the Bible. We feel thankful that we ever embraced this glorious doctrine, "Life only in Christ." It gives God his due, which is love; and Christ, the LIFE-GIVER, what he was sent to give, viz., Life to his, at the resurrection, or end of the age.

I see in the "World's Crisis," Sept. 15, that Br. S. L. Manley has put in an article on the resurrection of the just and unjust: he has brought up many texts, but I see none to prove that the wicked dead will be made alive. Until this is proved by the word of God, let the wages of sin be death, but "the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

If God gives life, will it not be eternal life? I think it will, according to his word. I cannot find any other life mentioned in the Bible. Glory to God.

FROM A. S. K.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Sept. 20, 1869.

DEAR EDITOR: Together with other readers of the HERALD, in examining the first issue after the anniversary, we were made to feel more than ever before the privilege we have had of attending nearly all the anniversary meetings of the Life and Advent Union since its formation under the old "Chestnut Tree." We were not present at that time, but have attended five out of six of its anniversaries. When we read those precious letters from our dear brethren and sisters, especially in the far West, Sister Pitts and others, it occurred to us that we ought to feel very thankful that we have the privilege of meeting with, and listening to so many precious and melting testimonies as we were favored with this year at the "Informal Meeting." We feel no shame attached to us, to be seen weeping on such an occasion, or when reading Sister Weaver's letter relating to that event. We know one Methodist Preacher who was present, and listened with deep attention to the many harmonious and melting testimonies that were given. Let us show what the doctrine of Life only in Christ has done for us, by words of love and kindness.

FROM I. R. CASTLE.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: May thy life-beaming, life-inspiring presence never cease to cheer the hearts and homes of all the dear life-lovers, life-believers, life-hopers, and life-seekers, until He who is our LIFE shall appear, is the prayer of one who rejoices in thy life-giving precepts, and in the fair prospect of thy life-long prosperity, in the hands of our live Editor.

Please say to the Brethren and Sisters with whom we spent our happy sojourn in the dear old "Life and Advent Mission Tent" (at the late camp-meeting) that we reached our home in safety before dark, on Monday night, finding all well, and all had been well during our absence.

Tell them, too, we can never express the gratitude we feel to our heavenly Father, for granting us the privilege of attending those blessed meetings; extending and forming so many interesting acquaintances, whereby we feel strengthened and encouraged to go on our way rejoicing in the blessed hope of life, eternal life, through Jesus Christ alone.

Tell them how doubly anxious we shall be to hear from each and every one of them, through the free columns of our dear LIFE HERALD; and we will try to write occasionally, if it is nothing but our name as a believer in Jesus, and a lover of Life.

FROM W. N. GLENN.

EDITOR HERALD: I am trying, in my poor way, to advocate the doctrine of "No life out of Christ;" a doctrine which is very dear to me. It places God in his true light—a God of love, of mercy and of justice. But there is one stereotyped objection which I invariably meet; it seems to spring spontaneously from the mind when first approached upon the subject. And I well remember that it was the first objection that came up in my own mind. The sum of the argument, though variously stated, is this: "You give the wicked all the encouragement they want by teaching them that when they die that will be the end of them.

Aside from the many arguments we can bring to bear upon this groundless objection, there is one I would like to call attention to This cry of "encouragement to the wicked" throws a grave charge upon God. When Adam and Eve were placed under a test of obedience, he told them, if they disobeyed they should die; not a word about eternal torments. When they had disobeyed, He told them, "dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return:" not a word about eternal torments. Now, is not the above objection directly charging God with encouraging Adam to sin? Surely, if the same teaching is encouraging to sin now, it must have been then. But those who enjoy the liberty of the Gospel know that the choice of the wicked is not the test of doctrine. Is it truth? is the only legitimate question in regard to any doctrine.

——— ———, Dunham, C. E., writes: "It rejoices my heart and soul to know that the HERALD is to be sustained the coming year. My whole being is with you, I send $2 25 to renew my subscription; which is but a small sum; but I am an old man of 78 years, and crippled with rheumatism, and have no means to make money. I did expect I should have to discontinue my paper, for there is no money in circulation but American silver, and that I could not send by mail; but Providence provided. I am alone as to Life Believers, except my wife. I never heard a sermon from human lips on this subject, nor do I expect to; but God is with me and strengthens me on the Life views. We have Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist, Episcopalian, and a large church of Roman Catholics; seven churches for public worship; but not one that preaches the truth as it is in Jesus, as I understand it. My prayers are for you, and all the brothers and sisters scattered through the world, that they may be like leaven, till the whole is leavened. Your brother in Christ."

LORY JENKS, Danville, N. Y., writes: I rejoice to learn from the issue of the 15th inst, that the HERALD OF LIFE has been nobly sustained, and I hope and trust it will be until the LIFE-GIVER comes. I regret that I have not the means to assist in so noble a work in sending forth the truth to deluded men. Money due me, that I expected to receive, and on which I depended this summer, I have been defrauded of, and never expect to get. This makes me unable to pay in advance, but will as soon as I can. I have had of you about $8 worth of tracts, and still owe something for them.

R. CADWELL, Cortland, N. Y., sends $17 50, and writes: "I find myself in a condition to act free in regard to the support of the HERALD OF LIFE; though I thought possible its opposers, and wants, might make it my duty to act as far as I could in its support. But, as I anticipated, it has swung clear of the "Breakers," and is fairly in the field, again, to do its great and needed work for humanity and the glory of God; and may it, with all its fellow-laborers in the field of Life only in Christ, be greatly blessed of God, with his servants."

C. N. BURZELL, Spring Creek, Pa., writes: "I expect to reside at this place the year to come. The tracts sent me are abroad, at work. We have tried to interest the people here in the Life views. I spoke to an attentive audience, to-day, on the resurrection and eternal death to the wicked, all being strangers to me except one or two families. They crowded around me after service, and said, "That looks like common sense,' etc. I will try and send money soon for the HERALD. Your Br., striving to gain everlasting life."

EDWARD B. FISK, Glenn's Falls, N. Y., renews his subscription, and writes: "The HERALD OF LIFE has come to me filled with truth, knowledge and blessings, during the year past; and I feel that I cannot get along without it, it is such a help to understanding the Scriptures; and through them, by faith, to know the Christ, the resurrection and the life; and through him to be assured of pardon and adoption of the Father, by a resurrection to life at the close of this present age. That God may continue to bless you is the earnest prayer of your brother in Christ."

MARCENA A. HICKS, New Rutland, Ill., writes: "I wish to express my satisfaction with 'our paper.' It seems to grow more and more interesting as each number comes richly laden with precious truths, dug from the inexhaustible mine. May God continue to prosper it by pouring upon those who serve us through it, His holy Spirit; that they may bring out of the storehouse things new and old; and may He grant to spare its Editor until Jesus comes and the weary servants shall find rest. Your brother in Christ."

RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., under date of Sept. 22, writes: "I received last week's HERALD on Sunday morning while our Conference meeting was in progress [at the Maine Camp-meeting.] Was glad—very glad —to learn, 1. That we are to have an accessible office in New York; and 2. That Br. Spencer is to be associated with you. This latter thing is what I have many times wished might come to pass, and your announcement respecting it came to me as a very agreeable surprise."

JAMES and REBECCA HERBERT, Point Pleasant, N. J., send $2 for the HERALD, and write: "This is to pay on the present volume, and we will pay $4 on Volume VII. We have lived in this place three years; have kept a sabbath school two summers, and have been encouraged with the seeming interest shown; but alas, a "falling away" has come, and they "separate us from their company." We rejoice to know the HERALD OF LIFE will be continued: and we will do all we can for the cause it so nobly sets forth. Our little Linda sends her ten cents to the children's department. Yours in fraternal waiting for the establishing of the kingdom of God and his dear son."

WM. G. OCOBOCK, Auburn, N. Y., writes: "I have paid $5 a year for the HERALD OF LIFE for some years past, and am satisfied with it at that price; and would be glad to do more if I could. My health is failing, and all I have for income is hard labor, and when health fails, income fails. I have looked for redemption these many years, and still am hoping it may soon come."

GEO. H. DANFORTH, Norwich, Conn., writes: "Sickness and dull times in my business the past season, have cut me short of the means of doing as much as I would for the cause. But I thank and bless the Lord that so many are able and willing to support the HERALD OF LIFE. God bless them: how it makes me love them."

J. S. SMALL, Wales, Me., sends $5, and writes: "We are well satisfied with the contents of the HERALD and its management, and hope it may long continue to be published and circulated for the benefit and instruction of those who read it. Yours in the Gospel hope."

A WIFE'S INFLUENCE.

A CHRISTIAN woman gave her hand to the man on whom she had already placed her tenderest affection. He possessed almost every grace, but was destitute of the grace of God. By spending the early part of his life in a foreign land, and associating with those who had the reputation of gentlemen, he had imbibed the fashionable habit in that place of using God's name in vain in common conversation. His new and much loved wife sought to reclaim him. She knew the only way to his heart. She took advantage of his love for her to win him to Christ, and she effectually succeeded.

One day, as she was standing before him, in company with a few friends who were listening to his conversation, in order to give additional interest, as he supposed, to what he was relating, he added the name of Christ. He looked at his wife and saw her in tears. He was confused. She raised her hand and gently pressed his chin. "O!" said she, "if you knew how much I love that dear name, you would never again pain my heart by trifling with it."

His heart was touched. He was unable to to proceed. He asked her forgiveness, and soon left the room. In this way he was saved from ruin, and is now an eminent example of piety.

ITEMS.

CHRISTIANITY is the special academy of patience, wherein we are informed, inured and trained up to bear all things.

WISE men make more opportunities than they find.

BY entertaining good thoughts you will keep out evil ones.

IF disposed to be exacting, let your heaviest demands be made upon yourself.

ENTERTAIN no thoughts that you would blush at in words.

CHOOSE not a friend on a sudden, nor make any one your intimate before you have experienced his integrity.

A MAN may have a thousand intimate acquaintances, and not a friend among them all. If you have one friend, think yourself happy.

"I AM THE DOOR."

BY REV. DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

"I AM the door;"
Come in, come in,
And leave without thy load of sin.
The night is dark, the storm is wild;
O venture in, thou stranger child.

"I am the door;"
Come, gently knock,
And I will loose the heavy lock
That guards thy father's precious fold;
Come in from darkness and from cold.

"I am the door;"
No longer roam;
Here are thy treasures, here thy home;
I purchased them for thee and thine,
And paid the price in blood divine.

"I am the door;"
My Father waits
To make thee heir of rich estates;
Come, dwell with him and dwell with me,
And thou my Father's child shalt be.

"I am the door;"
Come in, come in,
And everlasting treasures win;
My Father's house was built for thee;
And thou shalt share that home with me.

TOO CERTAIN.

"FATHER, I am tired of reading the Bible. I have read it so often that I know everything in it."

"Everything, my son? Do you think you could not find one chapter that would contain something you have never yet noticed?"

"Yes, father, I think so. I am sure I know all that is in the historical parts of the Bible."

"Well, let me try you. When were a large number of men fed with a few loaves of bread, and a supply left when they had done eating?"

"Why, father, surely I remember Christ's feeding several thousand persons, at two different times, with a few loaves and fishes."

"Very well; those are two instances. Now tell me a third."

"There is no other in the Bible."

"You are perfectly sure of that, are you? Suppose you reflect a little before you answer again."

"Yes, father. I have thought, and I am certain there is no other miracle of the kind mentioned in the Bible."

"Well, my son, open your Bible at the fourth chapter of the Fourth Book of Kings."

"The Fourth Book of Kings! Father there is no such book."

"Hand me the Bible. What does this title say?"

"It is 'The Second Book of the Kings, commonly called the Fourth Book of the Kings.'"

"Well, there is one thing learned by the boy that knew the Bible so well. Now turn to the fourth chapter, and read from the forty-second verse."

"Here it is, sir: 'And there came a man from Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God—'"

"Who was the man of God?"

"I must look. It was the prophet Elisha."

"Now proceed."

"And brought the man of God bread of the first-fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the husks thereof. And he said, Give unto the people that they may eat. And his servitor said, What, should I set this before a hundred men? He said again, Give the people that they may eat: for thus saith the Lord, They shall eat, and shall leave thereof. So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the Lord.'"

"That will do for this time, my son. I have never wished to make the reading of the Scriptures tedious by requiring you to read them continually, without giving you other books to read. But I wanted to convince you how mistaken young people are apt to be in their ideas of their own knowledge. There are thousands of children—yes, and of men and women, too—who would read with great interest many passages of the Bible, if they found them in a fresh and beautiful volume, which they believed to contain nothing but what is published for the first time. Remember this, and let me advise you to read the four books of Kings, and to make a list of all the passages you will find there, which, like the one you have just read, are as new to you as if you had never heard or read them."

JOHNNY, THE NEWSBOY.

SOMETHING more than a year ago, as the writer was seated in the cars going West, a pleasant voice sung out, "Paper, sir? morning paper, lady?"

There was nothing new in the words, nothing new to see a small boy with a package of papers under his arm; but the voice, so low and musical—its clear, pure tones, mellow as a flute, and tender as only love and sorrow could make it—called up hallowed memories.

One look at the large brown eyes, the broad forehead, the mass of tangled nut-brown curls, the pinched and hollow cheeks, and his history was known.

"What is your name, my boy?" as, half blind with tears, I reached out my hand for a paper.

"Johnny ——;" the last name I did not catch.

"You can read?"

"O yes, I've been to school some," glancing out of the window to see if there was necessity for haste.

I had a little brother once whose name was Johnny. He had the same brown hair, and tender, loving eyes, and perhaps it was on this account I felt very much like throwing my arms around Johnny's neck and kissing the thin cheek. There was something pure about the child, standing modestly in his patched clothes and half-worn shoes, his collar coarse but spotlessly white, his hands clean and beautifully moulded. A long shrill whistle, with another short and peremptory, and Johnny must be off. There was nothing to choose; my little Testament, with its neat binding and pretty steel clasp, was in Johnny's hand.

"You will read it, Johnny?"

"I will, lady, I will."

There was a movement; we were off. I strained my eyes out of the window after Johnny, but I did not see him; and shutting them I thought and dreamed of what there was in store for him not forgetting to ask His love and care for this destitute, tender-voiced boy.

A month since I made the same journey, and passed over the same railroad tract. Halting for a moment's respite at one of the many places on the way, what was my surprise to see the same boy, taller, healthier, with the same calm eye and clear, pure voice.

"I've thought of you, lady. I wanted to tell you it's all the little book."

"What's all the little book, Johnny?"

"The little book has done it all. I carried it home and father read it. He was out of work then, and mother cried over it. At first I thought it was a wicked book to make them feel so badly; but the more they read it the more they cried, and it's all been different since. It's all the little book; we live in a better house now, and father don't drink, and mother says 'twill be all right again."

Dear little Johnny, he had to talk fast; but his eyes were bright and sparkling, and his brown face all aglow.

"I'm not selling many papers now, and father says, may be I can go to school this fall."

Never did I so crave a moment; of time. But no, the cars were in motion, Johnny lingered as long as prudence would allow.

"It's all the little book," sounding in my ears, the little book that told of Jesus, and of his love for poor, perishing men. What a change! A comfortable home; no more a slave to strong drink. Hope was in the hearts of the parents; health mantled the cheeks of the children. No wonder Johnny's words came brokenly! From the gloom of despair to a world of light; from being poor and friendless, the little book told them of One mighty to save, the very Friend they needed, the precious Elder Brother with a heart all love, all tenderness.

Would that all the Johnnys who sell papers, and have fathers that drink, and mothers that weep over the ruin of once happy homes, took to their wretched dwellings the little book that tells of Jesus and his love. And not only these, but all the Johnny's that have no parents, living in cellars, and sleeping in filth and wretchedness—would that they could learn from this little book what a friend they have in Jesus.—Selected.

"SATISFACTION BY CHRIST."

A WRITER on this subject, in his communication, states the following: "Our Saviour gave to the law precisely what it claimed of us;" also, "And what he gave remains under it.

These statements need a little careful looking after. As to the first: If it is true, the claims of the law have been fully met; hence, have no further demands upon us. Has it? Our debt being paid, our sins forgiven, we are now as clean as if we had never sinned, consequently, liable to no penalty, providing we believe in the atonement. To declare, I say, his righteousness: that he might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. iii., 26. The next verse asks, "By what law?" (are we justified); "by works? Nay; but by the law of faith."

If immortal soulism were true, the satisfaction contemplated would be only a compromise with the law. If the law, is made to say "I will allow the atonement of satisfaction to apply to the account of the soul; but I must have the body." That according to our idea, is the "Lion's share."

Such is the consistency of orthodoxy. It pleads for a vicarious sacrifice; yet tamely gives up the redeemed victim to take the full force of the penalty; it being death. In the case of the sinner, infinitely worse; body and soul separately damned: the body to corruption and worms, the soul to hell. And now what of our consistency?

If we say full satisfaction was made for all, as well as them; if like them, we resign every body to be dealt with according to law, and to be kept under its power always; in such case are we not the greater losers? They have immortal souls, and we have not. Alas, for us!

If that second statement is true, "what Jesus gave, justice retains;" it has, we admit, a show of reason in it; but is it sound theology? It might work that way in common law—in man's jurisprudence, and might be insisted upon in this case on the ground of principle. But principle may be limited in its power, if not in its rights.

We may acknowledge the eternal right of justice, as a principle, but may not always concede it the power to exact its claims. The extreme penalty for sin was death. Jesus took the penalty. Justice accepted; the court adjourned satisfied; the tomb was sealed, and all that. Justice had had its way, and God's justice is so far satisfied, that he gave a token of it by opening the prison of the dead; Jesus rose and led with him a multitude of captives. Justice could drive its principles no farther than the cross. "It was not possible that he should be holden of death. Acts ii., 24.

We see, though we may allow all that is asked for justice, it is too weak to "hold" what was given it, if not too just to do it. Said our Lord, "I have powerto lay down my life, and power to take it again." Justice may prevent, if it can! "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness" (justice) "and peace have kissed each other."

Further. Suppose a malefactor dies under the law of the State of New York. Dies to all intents and purposes, and comes to life again: no matter by what power. Can justice be supposed to have further claims upon him? Could the law demand another execution in violation of the Constitution, which provides that no person shall have his life put in jeopardy twice for the same offence?

Satisfaction has been made by a most competent party. The thing was tried through ages before by many offerings, but "could not make the comers thereto perfect." But Jesus has, by one offering, "perfected forever them that are sanctified." Heb. x., 14. Satisfaction! More. "But not as the offence, so also is the free gift;" "much more, etc." Rom. v., 15.

Again: "And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift; for the judgment was by one (offence); but the free gift answers for many, unto justification:" verse 16. "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners. So by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous," (just): verse 19.

Here is a man before the court of extreme justice, who has even saved the honor of the law. "He magnified the law and made it honorable." He refined it, and then kept it: kept it outward and inward; in the letter and the spirit. It is said of the law. "If a man offend in one point he is guilty of all." Now, "it's a poor rule that won't work both ways." If Jesus kept the whole law, we, if we plead his merits before the bar of the keenest justice, are clear of all. "What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us,"etc. Rom. viii., 3, 4.

It appears to me, according to the states of divine justice itself, it can justify as well as condemn. Justice can be just when it justifies him that believe in Jesus. If justified, we are clear. By applying for the full benefit of the satisfaction made we can be, we must be saved from guilt, and from any penalty. Or injustice is done to Jesus.

THE PROSPECTS OF PAPACY.

PARIS, Tuesday, Sept. 21, 1869.

The papers of this city publish a letter from the preacher-monk, Father Hyacinthe, addressed to the Father-General of his order at Rome, announcing that he abandons his convent and ceases henceforth to preach in the Church of Notre Dame of Paris. As a reason for this radical step, he declares that he cannot obey the orders of the Holy See. He protests against the Pope and the Council, and against the doctrines and practices of the Roman Church which, as he contends, are not in accordance with the principles of Christianity. The French journals regard the letter of Pere Hyacinthe as a great religious and political event.

On the foregoing the "New York Tribune" remarked as follows, which will give our readers an idea of the prospects of Romanism, or Papacy:

There is little commotion, on the whole, among the Roman Catholics of this country with regard to the great Council which is to begin on the eighth of December. But in Europe it has long been known that thousands of the most intelligent priests and laymen and millions of the masses of the people repudiate the principles of the Papal Syllabus, to which it is feared the coming Council will give further sancti on and development. As the time for the opening of the Council draws near, the opposition, at first more latent, becomes more evident, and gives proofs of a strength which will take most of the heads of the Church by surprise. We have room only to refer to a few of the most prominent among the pertinent facts of a recent date.

The most remarkable is mentioned in a cable dispatch of this morning. Father Hyacinthe, the greatest Catholic pulpit orator of France, the peer of Bossuet, Bourdaloue, and the other great lights of the French pulpits, has found it impossible to withhold any longer his public dissent from the doctrines which are in advance assured of the approval of the Council. Though a zealous priest of his Church in all points of faith, Father Hyacinthe has always been a hopeful believer in the reconcilability of Christianity with progress. He has heretofore carefully avoided any public disagreement with his ecclesiastical superiors, and, living in a diocese whose archbishop is himself classed among the semi-Liberals, he has been able to retain a good standing in the Church. Not many months ago he was represented to have had a friendly interview with the Pope. Now, as we learn by cable, he finds it impossible to leave his position with regard to the Council any longer undefined. He published a letter to the General of the Dominican Order of which he is a member, and in it announces to the whole world that he can no longer regard the views which prevail in Rome as being in accordance with Christianity, and that, therefore, he leaves the convent.

Among the Catholic laymen of France there is none whose reputation as a champion of Catholic interests can stand any comparison with that of Count Montalembert. He has long been on the point of death, but from his sick-bed he has publicly declared his entire sympathy with an address recently issued by a number of eminent German Catholics against the ultramontane theories which the promoters of the Council are determined to enforce. A similar view has been taken by the greatest living Church historian of the Catholic Church, Professor Dollinger of Munich. He has for months made no secret of his unyielding opposition to the doctrine of the majority of bishops. Whether one of the keenest pamphlets against the Council which have yet appeared is from his pen is still contested; but when officially asked by the Bavarian Prime Minister concerning the rights of the States with regard to the expected ultramontane resolutions of the Council, he, with several of his colleagues, has given an answer which will be no less distasteful to know than the expressions of Montalembert and Father Hyacinthe. For Hungary, the ablest of the Catholic bishops, Michael Horrath, is the leader of a movement which is intended to break the power of ultramontanism, to strengthen the hands of the Liberal Ministry, and to secure a participation of the laity in the administration of Church affairs.

Such are a few striking indications of the drift of public opinion among the European members of the Catholic Church. There is a great and growing dissent among the laity of Europe, but especially of Germany, to the doctrine of the Syllabus which pronounces the present civilization as fatally in error and in apostacy from Christianity. His Holiness writes to the Catholics of Austria that he hopes the Œcumenical Council will have the greatest and most fortunate results for all mankind; but these words of promise will fail to allay the distrust of Christendom excited by his organ, the Civilta Cattolica, which declares that the Council will never pronounce the separation of Church and State, and the demand for religious toleration "is, in the mouth of a Catholic, a monstrosity." The prayers of two hundred millions of Catholics will, it is believed by the Church's faithful, be an element in the evolution of the final truth of the Council's decision; but it is plain that the anticipated decisions of a Roman Council have never been so much prayed against as now, and that, too, among Catholics themselves.

HEART IN RELIGION.

FROM every quarter comes the call to Christians to work in the vineyard. The harvest is fully ripe and the reapers must thrust in the sickle, or the precious souls, all ready to be garnered, will perish. There is yet much land to be possessed and who, if not the people of God, will go up and possess it? Jesus looks with pitying eye upon the famishing and dying multitude—the poor, the maimed, the halt, the blind, in the high ways and by-ways, the streets and lanes of the city, and right in the heart of this great moving, surging throng is the Christian church. And the word of the Master is clear and audible, "compel them to come in that my house may be full!"

Oh! for this gospel compulsion, this constraining love!

All true, successful Christian work must be the fruit of a heart deeply and solemnly impressed with the value and danger of perishing souls. All true work has heart in it. Fellow-Christian, if you expect to do much for Christ—if you mean to be of real service while you stay, you must put your heart into your work. It must be heard in the tender tones of your voice, in your prayers and praises and appeals; it must be seen in the pity and compassion of your eye, and your earnest and persevering labors for the salvation of souls must bear witness that your religion is heart-work.

To go about the Master's business in a cold, formal way, as many do; to hear the preacher because it is quite proper; to go to prayer meeting because one's absence will excite comment; to live in the church and attend to all the external proprieties of a nominal believer, with no real heart in it, or sympathy with the high and glorious trusts committed to us—all this must be bondage indeed! The galley-slave at the oar is nothing to this!

But to have one's heart inflamed with the love of Christ and love of souls; to go forth with an intense and glowing desire to win the unwary and careless to the cross; to make the cause of God the chief and absorbing subject of thought and feeling—this is a joyful life—this is liberty—this is rest in action. Oh! for more heart—more fervor—more consuming zeal and devotion in our religion. Could we feel, as a few years since, a great sweeping wave of divine influence coming over the heart of the church, calling Christians to prayer and praise and labor, and awakening the dead in sin to life in Christ, how should we sing for joy! The cold, formal tone of personal piety would give place to quick and warm-hearted labors in season—out of season.

Christian brothers! there is work for you close at your hand; perhaps in your own families, your workshops, your counting houses. There are those close beside you for whom Christ died, who are yet in impenitence. They call upon you for help. They need your prayers. But alas! perhaps you have no heart to do this kind of work. You say you would like to see a revival. You think the minister ought to try to promote or rather commence such a work. But the standing fact against you is, that you have no heart for any of these things. You do not go to the prayer meeting, you neglect the culture of your own immediate field, and others do the same. And by reason of this, Zion languishes and the dead in our houses and homes and congregations and the world's great high ways are going to their dread account all unshrived.

Let it not longer be so! Pray for the spirit of the Master—pray for heart-searchings and reconsecration, and then shall we go forth to a joyful harvest of souls.

FATHER'S SHOP.

"IF father hadn't a shop, wouldn't he ask a blessing, as grandpapa does?" said a little boy to his mother one day.

We did not learn the answer, but we thought the question worth repeating. Many a father neglects reading the Bible and family prayer. Why is it? Is it the shop, or the farm, or the business, or the merchandise? What is the excuse? Have you more business than King David, who said, "Evening, and morning, and noon, will I pray, and cry aloud unto thee? Have you more cares than Daniel, who had the oversight of a hundred and twenty princes and their provinces, and yet found time to kneel upon his knees, and pray before the Lord three times a day? You have time to talk with men—why not with God? You have time for private conversation with friends and strangers—why not with the Lord? You have time to read the newspapers—why not read the Bible, which has more good news than the whole of them?

"So many cares and trials," do you say? Well, would you refuse help because you have a heavy load? Do you gain anything by such haste? Do you find the hasty plans, hasty bargains, hasty acquaintances, and hasty words cost more than they profit sometimes? Many a poor day's work comes from a wrong start. Things which go wrong usually go slow, and if they go fast so much the worse.

"If father hadn't a shop." Is that the trouble? Then it were better that father were as poor as Lazarus and could have time to pray. But perhaps the trouble lies deeper. Does father love to pray? Does he feel the need of prayer? If he does he can find a place to pray anywhere, and as for time, he can "watch and pray always."

Father's "shop" ought to lead him to pray more and more; and every care and sorrow, and trial and temptation, ought to drive us to the mercy seat and lead us to the Lord.

Reader do you pray? If not, what is the reason? Is it the "shop," or is it a wayward, sinful heart? "Watch unto prayer."—Cottager and Artizan.

REV. MATTHEW WILKS.

AN aged American minister states, that in the early part of his ministry, being in London, he called on the late Rev. Matthew Wilks. Mr. Wilks received him with courtesy, and entered into conversation, which was kept up briskly till the most important religious intelligence in possession of each had been imparted. Suddenly there was a pause—it was broken by Mr. Wilks:

"Have you anything more to communicate?"

"No, nothing of special interest."

"Any further inquiries to make?"

"None."

"Then you must leave me; I have my Master's business to attend to. Good-morning."

"Here," says the minister, "I received a lesson on the impropriety of intrusion, and on the most manly method of preventing it."

HOW HE STOPPED HIM.

AT the late meeting of the Presbytery, Brother W—— said, early in his ministry he and another brother were conducting a meeting in which there was much religious interest. An old man gave expression to his joy by shouting, and continued it until it began to interrupt the services. Brother H—— said to Brother W——, "Go stop that old man's noise." He went to him and spoke a few words, and the shouting man at once became quiet. Brother H—— asked Brother W——, "What did you say to the old man that quieted him so promptly?" Brother W—— replied: "I asked him for a dollar for foreign missions."

ITEMS.

BOAST of your treasures of grace, and you are soon robbed.

THE joy of the spirit is a delicate, sacred deposit, and must be kept in a pure casket, as an unholy breath will dim its lustre and fade its freshness.

IT is the agent and not the instrument to which responsibility attaches.

BLESSED is he who employs all his time profitably, is silent on subjects that do not concern him, and passes through this tumultuous world like one who is dumb and heareth not, for the Lord's sake.

IT was a noble sentiment that Judge Talfourd died in uttering. "That which is wanted to hold together the bursting bonds of the different classes of this country, is not kindness but sympathy.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry. Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. BY GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE RISEN MESSIAH.

BY W. H. SPENCER.

"God hath both raised up the Lord, and will raise up us by his own power. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ?"—1 Cor. vi. 14, 15.

IT would seem from Paul's writings that there was no subject which he loved to contemplate as much as the death and resurrection of Christ; and hence we often find him discussing this subject in the early churches. In presenting this truth he argues it with such wonderful clearness and force that we are unable to see how it is possible for any one to mistake his real meaning.

We can only account for this often recurrence to the Messiah's resurrection when we understand the Pauline view of a future life. The death and resurrection of Christ, according to his theology, is the grand foundation upon which the whole system of Christianity securely reposes; for "if Christ be not raised" from the dead "your faith is vain, and ye are yet in your sins." But Paul does not argue this as the only result; for if Christ be not raised, "then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18. Hence he informs the Corinthian church that he delivered unto them "first of all" that which he received, "how that Christ died for for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he rose again the third day." If Paul considers this fact of first importance in the Christian religion, surely we ought not to esteem it any less.

The passage before us, at the head of this article, states a fact, and gives the church a promise for future fulfilment. It asserts that Christ was raised from the dead, and promises a resurrection to all who are "the members of Christ." Throughout all of Paul's reasoning on the resurrection these two doctrines are clearly visible.

The declaration that God hath raised up Christ from the dead plainly proves the certainty of his death. Christ truly "died for our sins according to the Scriptures." He as certainly entered death as any of Adam's posterity ever did. Isaiah, with prophetic vision, looking down through the vista of the future, beholds him "brought as a lamb to the slaughter," and positively declares that "he was cut off from the land of the living." We refer to this testimony because a large portion of the Christian world in theory deny that Christ really died. They believe that a part of him—which they are pleased to call an "immortal soul," (though not a Bible term)—escaped death. If he really possessed an immortal entity, which we are told is the "real man," that escaped death, then we must admit that we have been wonderfully deceived by the book of inspiration. The Scriptures say that he was "cut off from the land of the living," which is not true if he did not cease to live. Whatever constituted the being called Christ truly entered a state where there is no life—for death is the opposite of life—and the prophet, as if to forever settle all caviling on this point, asserts that "his soul" was made "an offering for sin"; and again, that "he poured out his soul unto death." If we will turn our attention to a scene in "the place called Gethsemane," we can hear Jesus, in the depth of his anguish, exclaim, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death." We might follow the crucified and lifeless Son of God to the newly made tomb of Joseph—behold him wrapped in clean linen—watch the battle-worn soldiers seal the tomb with a huge stone, and take their position as sentinels over the dead—and in all this we could not doubt that Jesus surely died. Many are the inspired testimonies which positively assert this fact, thus giving us strong grounds of hope.

But a question of great importance introduces itself for our consideration. Was there any necessity for the death of Christ, as far as related to a future life? Truly, if the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the soul be true, a future life was not depending upon the great sacrifice of himself, and upon the premises of this doctrine, there appears no valid reason for his suffering and death. If at death man, as a disembodied soul, enters immediately upon his reward or punishment—either happiness or misery, without a moment's unconsciousness, as we are taught—it follows that all who had died for four thousand years of the world's history, before his Advent, have entered a future state; thus doing away with the importance of his coming to offer the race a future life. It casts serious reflection upon the wisdom of God to suppose that he would give his beloved Son to be tempted, judged and crucified by wicked men, and give him "the keys of death and the grave," for the purpose of bestowing upon man what was already in his power. We can conceive of no theory more inharmonious with the Scriptures; and we wonder not that it makes skeptics by multitudes. We are not surprised that the world at large feels such little interest in Christ when popular theology makes of no importance the work which he has done.

Paul, however, lays great stress upon the resurrection of Christ; for he argues, if Christ be not raised, "then they . . . which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Upon the premises of popular theology, can this be true? Paul argues that a future life for those who have fallen asleep depends entirely upon the resurrection of Christ; for the whole force of his reasoning is to the effect that if Christ had not been raised from the dead the whole race of Adam would have perished. This places the greatest importance upon the sacrifice which Christ made, and makes the subject of deep interest. It conclusively shows that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is a hypothesis without a shadow of foundation in the Scriptures—a theory of man's invention, which makes the plan of redemption something very different from revelation.

The apostle's position, on this sublime and important subject, is in perfect harmony with all the other inspired penmen. Even the Master Teacher himself lays the same truth before the world, in stating the great plan and purpose of God. He says, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16. This shows that without the gift of his Son the entire posterity of Adam would have perished—would never have seen a future life, or life from the dead. But now that God has made the gift, how far does this sacrifice effect the human race? Are the benefits accruing from this gracious bestowment of a universal nature? In other words, as a result of his death and resurrection, will the whole race have a future life by a resurrection from the dead? Nothing could be farther from the sense of this passage than the theory of an unconditional resurrection of the dead. It plainly shows that as a result of Christ's death and revival to life, that "whosoever believeth on him should not perish"—as would have been their fate had he not died—"but have everlasting life."

Thus, according to the plan and purpose of God, by "the workings of his mighty power," Christ has become the great LIFE-GIVER—the Redeemer. "Though he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God." 2 Cor. xiii. 4. And after his exaltation to the right hand of the Father, he says, "I am he that LIVETH and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore, . . . and have the keys of hell (hades, the grave) and of death." Rev. i. 18. This power over death and the grave was given to him by the Father; for he says, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth;" thus making a deliverance from the hopeless condition in which Adam's transgression had placed man depend upon the exercise of this power which Christ had received.

As Christ has passed through the prison-house of death, being alive by the power of an endless life, and having become the LIFE-GIVER the important questions arise, "What is the nature of the life which reposes in him to dispense? and to whom will he give life?" To answer these questions briefly we will turn to the inspired word.

Jesus says, "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." John v. 26. The Father is the great source of life, and from him the Son derived his life. But what is the nature of the life which the Son now hath in himself? Says Paul, "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." 1 Cor. xv. 44–47. Two Adams are here introduced, and also two life principles. The first Adam possessed natural, or blood life; and as this life is forfeited by sin, an immutable law would forever hold man in the chains of death were not some remedial principle interposed. Death is an effect—the destruction of life—and would forever hold man in its grasp unless divine power is interposed by the production of a new life, indestructible in its nature. We may now readily see the purpose of God in giving his Son to die. He partook of our nature, and voluntarily gave a life of innocency, upon which the law had no claims, that he might become the Second Adam—"have life in himself"—and interpose a new life principle for the recovery of man from the eternal claims of a broken law. Christ lives by virtue of a Spirit-life, and, therefore, "dieth no more." Hence this is the only life principle which the Father hath "given the Son" by which to arrest the power of death.

To the question, "To whom will he give life?" there can be but one answer in harmony with the Scriptures which we have adduced, viz., to "whosoever believeth on him." "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life," (possesses the new life principle), "and I will raise him up at the last day." "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." This is the precious promise of Jesus which his enemies cannot claim. They reject him and spurn his offer of salvation, and he declares that they "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth" on them. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Oh what simplicity and beauty there is in the plan for man's redemption! Could I but get the attention of every sinner in this broad domain, I would urge him to secure Christ as his all sufficient friend and Saviour, and thereby secure an existence beyond the grave.

"IMMORTAL EXISTENCE."

BRO. STORRS: The enclosed article was written in criticism of a sermon delivered at the Congregational Church, Middletown, N. Y., by the pastor, Rev. C. A. Harvey, in answer to Pilate's question to Christ, "What is truth?"

Mr. Harvey publishes in the Orange Co. Press, weekly, the subjects of his discourses for the ensuing Sabbath morning and evening. Noticing the advertisement, and the above named subject having been set down for the evening service, I went and listened to his discourse. Agreeing with him that truth is of paramount importance to man to know, I felt justified in examining the announcement made that "he possessed immortal existence," because I regard such an existence, instead of being his Adamic birthright, as being the very offer of the gospel; and as such, likely to be affected—yea, even to be secured or lost—by the nature of his understanding of this subject. I have sent my article to Mr. Harvey, and shall, doubtless, ere long be favored with his reply. Believing, as I most conscientiously do, that immortality is the gift of God through Jesus Christ alone, and that this is a truth so clearly taught throughout the Scriptures that wayfaring man, even, need not err concerning it; and yet, standing alone in this community in the open avowal of this truth, I find it exceedingly difficult to sit and hear those who profess to be the expounders of the word of God persistently deny it, without raising my voice in its defence. Believing that responsibility stands inseparably connected with influence, and that truth will ever sustain its defenders, I am determined to know no fear that shall dissuade me from openly professing and maintaining what I believe.

I am very respectfully, and in the true hope of the gospel, fraternally, yours.

G. E. PUTNEY.

HOWELLS, N. Y., Sept. 13, 1869.

REV. C. A. HARVEY: Dear Sir—I listened to your discourse last evening on the subject, "What is Truth?" After stating, by way of preliminary, that this question has agitated the world of mankind for nearly nineteen centuries, and still remained an unsettled one, you proceeded, saying, that the inquiry is one of paramount interest to man, because "he possesses immortal existence." Now, sir, as a careful listener to your discourse, and an anxious enquirer after truth, permit me, in all candor, to ask, where you find your warrant for this declaration? If all men possess, inherently, immortal existence, then, surely, immortality is not the hope of the gospel, or the specific gift of God through Jesus Christ. If all men are naturally immortal—"have immortal existence"—they must derive it from their natural progenitor, viz., Adam. But the Scriptures explicitly declare man to be mortal; that he is of the earth, earthy; that all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man is as the flower of grass; that that which is born of the flesh is flesh, etc. From which I understand it to be plainly taught, that in Adam we have no legacy of immortality. "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul"—not an immortal soul—"the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." "The first man is of earth, earthy." We, by nature, bear the image of this first man, and consequently are only earthy. The life and the nature which we derive from our federal head, I understand, ends in death, under the penal execution of the law announced to Adam by Jehovah himself—"in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This penalty,—pronounced by God in the Garden of Eden, subsequently repeated by the prophet Ezekiel in these words: "The soul that sinneth it shall die," and by the apostle to the Gentiles, "For the wages of sin is death," and so throughout the Scriptures where the penalty for sin is spoken of—has never, to my knowledge, been abrogated or altered. On the contrary we find Jehovah declaring, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." God's declared penalty against sin is, certainly, a part of his counsel; and his declared purpose to execute it is a part of his pleasure. Thus, according to the plain teaching of the Scriptures, I find man in Adam so far from having an "immortal existence" is doomed to inevitable death. And were there no better tidings than those which came through his natural, or Adamic constitution, found for man in the Bible, that book, to my mind, would sound the eternal death knell of the race.

But there are better tidings, not coming to us through our Adamic relation, but through the gospel of Jesus Christ. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life"—"immortal existence." Here we find light penetrating the darkness; hope beaming upon our world; immortality brought to light; not through Adam the first, but through Adam the second. Says Jesus, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead"—in consequence of his relation to the first Adam—"yet shall he live"—by virtue of his relation to me. Saith the apostle, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." How did Christ redeem us from the curse of the law? I answer, by suffering that curse, and thus satisfying the demand of the law. What was the curse, or demand of the law, which Jesus suffered? I answer, death. "Wherefore . . . sin entered into the world, and death by sin." Now, how hath Christ redeemed us from this curse? I reply, by overcoming its power, by the superior power of his divine nature. The truth as I understand it is, the man Christ Jesus, died, a sacrifice for sin; through the power of his divine nature, which was partner with his human, he subdued the power of death—for he was "put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit." Hence, says the apostle—addressing Christians—"if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." What was the particular thing which the letter of the Mosaic law, through the weakness of the flesh, could not do? I answer, it could not break the power of death to which every child of Adam stood condemned. Yet this power must be broken, or the captive, man, must eternally be held in captivity under it; for the sentence of death, by the irrevocable decree of God, hath passed upon all men. But this power has been broken. By whom? By the Son of God, who, coming in the likeness of sinful flesh, had power to lay down his life and power to take it again. Here, then, in the resurrection of Christ we see not only the fact but the manner of his bringing "life and immortality to light." He laid down his mortal life a sacrifice for sin; thus acknowledging the justice of God, and satisfying the penalty of his law. He took up from death, not his mortal life—for this would have been taking back the purchase price of redemption—but he restored his mortal body to life by the power of the Eternal Spirit, against which the law had no claim; and hence lives our justification.

Thus, for believers, hath Christ abolished death, and secured, through spiritual life, which he communicates to them, immortality. Wherefore it is written, "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." What was the captivity which Christ led captive? Not death, surely, for that, in Adam, still reigns; but the power of death to retain his believing ones. Hence the Scripture, "That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord." Death reigns universally over our mortal natures by the power of law; yet to believers the promise is, that grace shall release them from this power by a resurrection unto spiritual and eternal life. "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners," and thus brought into condemnation to death, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." Jesus also declares, "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life"—immortal existence—"and I will raise him up at the last day." But I hasten.

In what relation does the word, immortality, occur in the Scriptures? Rom. ii. 7, "To them who seek for glory, honor, immortality," God will render "eternal life." Why, "by patient continuance in well doing seek" for that which man already possesses? 1 Cor. xv. 53, "This mortal must put on immortality." If man has immortality by nature, why this talk about putting it on at the resurrection? Will he simply put on what was before a part and parcel of his original nature? If it be thus a part of his nature, how can he ever put it off?

1 Tim. vi. 16, "Who only hath immortality"—speaking of God. If God only hath immortality as an attribute, how can it be true that every human soul is possessed of it? 2 Tim. i. 10—speaking of Christ—"who hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Was it only one of man's natural attributes that Christ brought to light through the gospel?

I believe I have quoted every Scripture text in which the word immortality occurs; and in neither do I find it ascribed to man as an attribute. The word immortal occurs once, and is ascribed to God. 1 Tim. i. 17, "Now unto the King eternal, immortal," etc. The question, then, seems to recur to my mind with increased pertinency—Where is the authority guaranteeing the declaration that man is possessed of immortal existence?

I consider immortality to be the gift of God, communicated to man only by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. It is, hence, to my mind, the offer, hope, and substance of the gospel; and not a part of our original nature. As such, it can only be secured to man in the manner indicated by Christ to Nicodemus, "Ye must born again."

Without this second birth, man is but carnal, and doomed, by the specification of law to death. In the second birth he becomes spiritual; and by virtue of this spirituality of nature, an heir of eternal life. Then it is that he has dwelling in him the "life of God," which you rightly, indeed, named "Christian Truth." This is truth because it proceeds from God—not from Adam. It is, moreover, Christian truth, because it can be secured only through Christ, who is, to man, the author of this kind of life. Agreeably herewith Christ declares, speaking of believers, "I give unto them eternal life." And again, "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son hath not life," declares the Scripture; for "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

Failing myself to discover any Scriptural authority for the declaration that man, by nature, "possesses immortal existence," I respectfully request that you will refer me to the authority from which you feel warranted in making it.

Pardon the length of my communication, and believe me to be, in the honest pursuit of truth and in the bonds of Christian fraternity,

Yours, truly.

G. E. PUTNEY.

FEW SAVED.

AN INQUIRY BY ELD. L. F. MOORE.

"THEN said one unto him, Lord are there few that be saved?" Luke xiii. 23. The answer given in Matthew seems to imply that such will be the case; and our own brethren, by analogous reasoning and statistical reports, prove that the saved, in point of numbers, will be far inferior to the number lost.

We wish to inquire about the salvation of the few, and see if possible how it is, and would begin our our inquiry by asking—Is it necessary, in order to save a few, to effect the whole race of man?

God having formed man of the dust of the ground and given him life, formed the woman; then placed them in the garden of Eden, leaving them with a nature, although mortal, yet susceptible of becoming immortal; or, in other words, with a life capable of being prolonged without limit, to choose for themselves which course to pursue, whether of obedience to enjoy the blessings accruing thereby, or of disobedience to suffer its fearful consequences. Surrounded by everything beautiful and delicious, with the bright prospect of an eternal existence before him; with no one to question his sovereignty, this "lord of creation" sees fit to repudiate all, simply to gratify a desire, the gratification of which would inevitably result in his entire dissolution.

We find the record of the death of the man; thus fulfllling the decree, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." Turning to Paul, in Rom. v. 12, we read, "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Without further argument, that is enough to show that all men are under sentence of death; and the sentence coming from Divinity will surely be carried into execution, except in the case of the changed when the Lord comes. We inquire—Is the sentence and execution perfectly just? The answer will be given, we think, unanimously, it is! We inquire once more. Have they upon whom the sentence has been executed any right to or claim upon life?—that is to live again? Why, of course not, if the sentence and execution is perfectly just. Then, if they live again, it must be either because justice demands it, or else because there is merit in the executed. That the former position is not true, is evident from the fact that justice demanded their life once; and having obtained it, is satisfied, and knows of no possible way to again restore the forfeited life. In fact, to restore them to life would only be to question the justness of justice.

That the second position is not true, is obvious from the fact that, where merit is, justice has no demand to make; and the apostle shows plainly that there is no merit in man when he says, "Death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned;" leaving them without merit.

There is but one way by which men can live again; that is, by favor. This we understand to be the gift of God, as the apostle declares in Eph. ii. 8, "For by grace (unmerited favor) are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." The Scriptures represent all as being dead because of sin; and doomed to remain so, unless provision is made for their salvation. There is but one who has the power to make such provision; that is God, whose character is represented by "Love;" and if He should make such provision, we have every reason to expect that it will be in perfect keeping with his character.

We are informed by some, that there is to be an "unconditional resurrection to life, of the whole posterity of Adam," because of a certain plan of redemption, said to have been formed, "to be effected through Jesus Christ." Let us look at this. If we turn to John iii. 17, we read, "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world." Why not? Because the world is already condemned: "He that believeth not is already condemned." But, "He that believeth is not condemned." Why? "Because he is passed from death to life." John v. 24.

It would seem from this that the world is already under condemnation to death without Christ—that is, without hope. If we turn to 1 Cor. xv. 17, we read, "And if Christ be not raised . . . . then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." It would seem from this that the resurrection depended altogether upon the resurrection of Christ; and if this be true—which it is—it entirely destroys the theory of an unconditional resurrection, and makes it a conditional one, depending altogether upon Christ's resurrection.

We consider all men under sentence of death, justly so; and when dead, it is justice that accomplished the whole. And when the whole human family are dead, there is not one of them that has any kind of right, of himself, to live again; and without Christ, the whole of them must remain forever and ever dead. This is sad to contemplate. Truly, their condition is awful! While we consider it, we are led to inquire, if all these are placed in such a state justly, what did Christ come for? Did he come to make their condition better or worse? We at once say, He came to make it better. Well, will he make it worse by affecting all who are justly in death, who did not believe, by giving them life of any kind? No, no! Why do "ye make the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthen the hands of the wicked by promising him life?" Ezek. xiii. 22. Love placed them in the state of death. It did it justly; and love can only take them out again.

Out of the whole race only a few comparatively will be saved. The high priest once said, "It is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." John ii. 50. We agree with him; for if in order to save eight or ten men out of a hundred it is necessary to bring pain and suffering upon ninety, we think as long as the ten are justly dead, it were far better and more in keeping with the character of love to let them remain dead, than to affect the whole in such a way. Love formed the plan of redemption. Love carries it into effect, through Jesus Christ. Love has said of the wicked, "He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they (fathers and all) shall never see light." Psa. xlix. 19. Love has said, "Drought and heat consume snow waters, so doth the grave those that have sinned. The womb shall forget him; the worm shall sweetly feed on him; he shall be no more remembered." Job xxiv. 19, 20. Love has said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 53, 54. Love has also declared, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible"; which cannot mean the wicked dead; hence we firmly believe that LOVE formed the plan of redemption, which carried into effect will only affect those few who accept of it. That plan is Christ Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER.

CONSTANCY IN HOLY DUTIES MAKES THE PERFORMANCE OF THEM EASY.—It is easy to keep that armor bright which is daily used, but hanging by the walls till it be rusty it will take some time and pains to furbish it over again. If an instrument be daily played upon, it is easily kept in tune, but let it be awhile neglected, and cast in a corner, the strings and frets break, the bridge flies off, and no small labor is required to bring it into order again. And thus also it is in things spiritual, in the performance of holy duties; if we continue them with a settled constancy, they will be easy, familiar, and delightful to us; but if once broken off, and intermitted, it is a new work to begin again, and will not be reduced to the former estate, but with much endeavor and great difficulty.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter. must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

FROM M. M. EASTMAN.

BRO. STORRS: I like the HERALD much. Rich, indeed, with sound arguments, and I think a good spirit seems to be manifested in those that write for it. I regretted very much not being able to be at Springfield, but had a blessed meeting at Alton Bay. Heard Bro. Grant try to show that the wicked dead would be raised to life, and it convinced me more than anything I had ever heard, that the wicked could not be raised; had no life out of Christ, could never see it, but must abide under the wrath of God; under the sentence of death: "The wages of sin is death." I can't see how that can be made to mean two deaths. The righteous die surely, but their reward is life, eternal life. Blessed be God for that promise. Death cannot hold them, but the word says the wicked "shall remain in the congregation of the dead;" that is their doom or punishment. If that is God's design, I am sure I am willing. Should an enemy come to our dwelling and kill a loved one for us, and the law says, hang the man till he is dead, we might look on and see him hung; but could we possess a heart hard enough to wish him to be brought to life and see him die again? I think we would be satisfied. And it looks clear to me that a God of infinite goodness, love, and compassion, could from the beginning devise the way for man's best good. Thus He so surely "guarded the Tree of Life, lest man should put forth his hand and eat and live forever." He must return to the dust from whence he was taken. But how plainly has Jesus shown us how we can obtain life. In John vi., the Saviour said so many times, concerning the righteous, "I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40, 44, 54; but not an intimation about raising up the wicked. John v. 28 would seem to show that the wicked would live again; but verse 25 says, "they that hear shall live," as though some might be raised that would not hear, and they would not live. And then he says, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

Now, this verse alone would look as though they must have life; but the word does not say come forth to life, but in the 25th verse says, "They that hear shall live." But in this chapter it seems Jesus was talking to the multitude; "and without a parable spake he not unto them." When he went up into a mountain and sat with his disciples, also, when the disciples sought for him and found him on the other side of the sea, it seems he entered into a conclusive argument with his dear disciples about laboring for "that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." "Labor not for that meat which perisheth." John vi. 27. Jesus said, "I am the bread of life; and he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." John vi. 35. Blessed promise to those who believe. I don't see how we can get any future life out of Christ. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. But whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 53, 54.

But, my dear brother, I sat down to write for some tracts; I did not think to write as I have. I thought I did not fully agree with you upon this subject; but I see by following the Master's words, it leads us together; and may we bless God for the great and wonderful plan of salvation for poor fallen humanity; how we can obtain life if we choose it; but remain in the congregation of the dead if we refuse it.

I think we should see the truth much quicker if we had no prejudice. But what we have been taught for years is hard to give up. When I read your tracts last spring, I am sure I was prejudiced; it could not possibly be so; and yet I saw you had an abundance of Scripture on your side; but there was the strong text, John v. 28; that must be harmonized with the many, the same that we do with the text, "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." And "to die is gain," and "the spirit return to God who gave it," etc. I see there were more texts to show a man went to heaven when he died, than there is for the wicked dead to be raised to life; so I see no way but to harmonize the few passages with the many, as we do on the life and death question; and search the Scriptures with an unprejudiced mind, and pray God to guide us into all truth, and save us from disbelieving his word.

Yours, in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

LANDAFF, N. H., Sept. 29, 1869.

ELD. J. LEWIS, Grafton, Ills., writes: I have just returned from Jerseyville, rejoicing in the Lord that the seed sown in years past is beginning to produce fruit, which we trust will be unto eternal life. Our good Bro. Lane is doing all in his power to get the people to read the HERALD OF LIFE; and many who once thought it wicked to read anything on the Life views are beginning to see men as trees walking, and are desirous to hear preaching on the subject; and even the old one-armed man is invited to preach to them. Praise the Lord that our labor is not lost in that city. Some preachers, there, seem disposed not to preach the old theological notion of eternal torments any more. We feel to take new courage and fight on for the truth of Life only in Christ. We would express our thanks to the Sister in Jersey City for the box of clothing, which came just in time of need, and praise the Lord for the five dollars from our dear Bro. L. C. Thorne. May the Lord reward him.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 6, 1869.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

"OUR PAPER" appears before you this week with an entire new dress and on a quality of paper much improved. We doubt not all will be pleased with its smiling face, presenting itself to you as a youth just entered upon its seventh year. Though young, we trust it will not only look nicely, but speak manly, and in the spirit of a maturing Christian, if not a matured one. But we leave our readers to judge of all these matters.

It comes out from a new location, directly on Broadway, and you have to ascend but two flights of stairs to reach our office. This, of itself, is a great improvement to us and our friends who visit us; for which we are thankful, and know you will be if you call upon us at any time.

The multitude of matters to be attended to, in thus revolutionizing all things pertaining to the office, have so engrossed our time and strength that we have written but little for our columns this week. Bro. SPENCER has, in part, supplied our deficiency; but he has also labored incessently in putting things in order for the paper.

Our friends abroad may labor under a wrong impression as to this brother's position in this office. He takes the whole responsibility in the paper, doing a large part of the composition (or type-setting) with his own hands, reading proof, etc. With this labor he cannot be expected to do much else, except by overwork at other times than office hours. His heart is in the work, and he spares no labor or pains to have the paper come out in time and in order.

Our friends will wait patiently till we get all things in order about the office; which cannot be done in one week; yet the work, thus far, has progressed rapidly, and trust will soon go on smoothly; though we do not anticipate perfection. We shall do the best we can, and as fast as possible.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

THIS, the first number of our new volume, we send to all, or nearly all, our old subscribers, though many of them have not yet renewed their subscription. We wish them to see the renewed face and dress of the HERALD, believing that the sight will have a favorable effect on their hearts, and cause them to hurry forward the funds necessary to secure the continuance of its visits. To such as have paid up, in full, for the last volume, we shall continue to send it, unless they order otherwise; taking it for granted that such mean to renew their subscriptions.

To such as are in arrears, on the last volume, we shall send no more except a remittance is made; and to encourage such, we renew our offer, made last week, if you will send us $2, immediately, we will cancel your past indebtedness, and credit you in full for volume vii., on which we have now entered. Do not delay.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

SHALL our subscription be doubled in the next three months? Will not every one of our friends see what they can do to this end? Now is the time. Show "our paper" to your neighbors and invite them to give it a trial. If they can be induced to read it a few times, they may soon feel as did one who heard of it and sent for it for three months, and now writes that he cannot do without it. So it will be with many others so soon as fairly acquainted with it. Show it, then; and though it is not desirable to get three month's subscribers, yet as a trial let them have it that time, if they cannot be induced to take it for six or twelve months.

Determine, before you lay this number down, to make an effort to double the subscription list of the HERALD OF LIFE by the first of January, 1870; a united effort can do it: it is only one new subscriber to each of the old. Work quickly, and make a return.

THE ENTRANCE to our Office is at 208 Broadway: go up two flights of stairs and turn to the left. We give this notice because there is no direct entrance to the upper stories of 206; you go in at 208, but be sure to go up as we here direct.

---

A CHRISTIAN will find his parenthesis for prayer even in his busiest hours.

"THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE."

Just as we were about to go to press, ex-Chancellor HALSTED called at our office and pledged to the "Life and Advent Union" twenty-five copies of the above named work; a work of immense labor and value; of which he is the author. It is a large octavo volume, sold at retail for $3. Those who wish to study the Bible on the Life theme should not fail to possess it. Any person sending us four new subscribers, with $8, shall receive the above work without further charge. If any choose to purchase it of us, they shall have a copy for $2, adding, for postage, 32 cents.

We have neither time or space to say more about the above work this week.

PRE-PAID MAIL, ETC.

WE cannot undertake to pre-pay postage on any papers, to subscribers, except where the law obliges us to do it; and it does not do this anywhere in the United States except to subscribers in this city. On all such, who receive them through the mail, we are obliged to pre-pay; but to none others. City subscribers must remit us $2,20 for the volume; which covers all the postage; and no "Carrier" has a right to demand anything of you for the delivery. If such should happen, report him to the Postmaster: it is a fraud.

Persons out of this city, in any part of the United States, should pay at the office where they receive their paper five cents quarterly, in advance; which is all any Postmaster has any legal right to demand. But be sure you pay it in advance, beginning with this number. Please do not overlook these matters; it will save you and us trouble.

RESPONSIBILITY.

WILL our readers carefully note what is said every week at the head of this column on "Responsibilities?" In addition to that, we now add: "The Life and Advent Union" is not responsible for anything the Editor writes or publishes, doctrinally, outside of the statement of its "Constitution," thus expressed:

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

It will be seen that nothing is found here to make the Union responsible for the sentiments of any writer for the paper who goes beyond the plain statement of its first "Article." The writers may differ from each other on any other points; but on the main points, expressed in the leading article above, they are supposed to be in agreement. The Editor's articles are no exception. If he introduces any other topic, not embraced in that first "Article," he alone is responsible for it, and not the Union.

Communications are admitted, some times, which neither the Editor or the Union indorse; and if they pass without a reply, it is not to be concluded that he or the Union agree with the matter contained in them. The responsibility rests only on the writer, whether he is a member of the Union or not.

The object and design of the paper is distinctly stated as above. All outside of that is only individual expression of sentiments. Let all understand this, and read accordingly.

INTOLERANCE.

Some ten years since, we prepared for the "Bible Examiner" the following Dialogue on the above subject, which we think is so appropriate to the present time that we place it in this first number of Vol. VII, of the HERALD OF LIFE, and hope it will help to keep ourself and all others in the spirit of true toleration; which is not a spirit of indifference as to truth, but a spirit of forbearance and kindness towards those, who, though they may be in error, are sincerely seeking after truth.

B.—NOTHING is plainer than that all the wicked dead will be made alive again. Such is clearly the doctrine of the Bible.

S.—I suppose you mean, nothing is plainer to you. It is plain to me, the general tenor of Scripture is opposed to the revival into life of the wicked dead. You have no right to conclude, because their revival seems plain to you it must seem plain to everybody else, any more than I have a right to conclude, because it seems plain to me the Bible teaches no future life, except to those in Christ, it should be plain to every other person. You have no more right to conclude, because I do not see as you do, therefore, I am blind or wicked, than I have to conclude you are so, because you do not see as I do on this subject.

B.—You set at naught Christ's plain words, and thus deny his authority as a teacher, in holding the wicked dead will not live again.

S.—It is wrong to charge me with setting at naught the authority of Christ, when the truth is, I only differ with you in opinion in regard to what Christ did teach. Would it be right for me to charge you with taking Christ's place, and holding his authority in contempt, because you happen to believe something is taught by him, which I am confident he never did teach? No more can it be right in you, to charge me with disregarding the teaching of Christ because I happen to believe some things are not taught by him which you believe are. You ought to study the subject of mutual forbearance. It is a small matter to err on questions of difference of opinion, let the error be on which side it may; but to be intolerant—to refuse fellowship with those whose Christian character is unimpeachable, because they differ in opinion on what the Scriptures do actually teach, is not a small matter. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

B.—How is it possible for a man to be a Christian, and yet deny Christ's plain doctrine, that the wicked dead shall live again?

S.—It is not possible for a man to be such who denies any of the teaching of Christ; but it is possible for him to be a Christian, and yet think some things not to be "Christ's plain doctrine," which you may think is. I believe every word Christ uttered; though I do not interpret all His sayings as you do. You ought to distinguish between the doctrines of our Lord, and your construction of them. A man may reject your interpretation, without rejecting Christ's doctrines at all; he may reverence Christ's words, but not your views of their meaning: he may most reverently bow to Christ's authority, but have little or no reverence for yours. I reject your authority, unhesitatingly; but can you prove that by doing so, I reject Christ's? You must go to Rome for such a conclusion.

B.—A man that denies clear, essential truths of the Bible is not a Christian.

S.—That is true: but, does every one deny essential Bible truth, who differs from you in opinion as to what are the clear, essential truths of the Bible? It is one thing for a man to deny what to him is truth, and another to deny what you may think truth. You seem to take it for granted, that all such are in wilful or inexcusable error! But such a position ought not to be taken for granted.

B.—A man should understand the fundamental doctrines of the religion of Jesus Christ.

S.—There is but one fundamental doctrine, viz., Jesus is the CHRIST, the LIFE-GIVER. This is the foundation doctrine: all others are but the superstructure.

B.—It takes more than the simple belief you speak of to make a perfect Christian.

S.—Yes, but men may have both our toleration and love, who are imperfect Christians. They are to be received to our sympathy as soon as they are Christians at all. He whom Christ has received, we are bound to receive and honor for Christ's sake; and not denounce and cast him off, because he does not see certain doctrines as we see them. Christ's disciples are Christ's scholars—learners of Christ. Shall they be shut out of his assembly—his school—the fellowship of his other scholars—because they have not yet learned every thing? or, because they have not learned to say their lessons as you think is right?

B.—Truth is clear to rightly disposed minds.

S.—Is all truth clear to such minds? Is it always so at once? Do men see all truth clear as soon as they become rightly disposed? Are all such minds of the same opinion on all things? Do you mean to say, when two persons differ in opinion about the living again of all the dead, or any other doctrine, one of them is always wickedly disposed in mind? No doubt a rightly disposed mind will be more likely to embrace truth, when he sees it, than one not rightly disposed; yet it would be folly to say, the rightly disposed see all truth clearly at once. Out of a hundred such minds there may not be two that are perfectly agreed on all points, beyond the fundamental one which brought them together.

B.—No man can be rightly disposed that rejects what Christ says of the revival of the wicked dead.

S.—Very true; but may not a man be rightly disposed, and yet differ in opinion from me as to what Christ does say on that subject, or others? If he may be rightly disposed and differ from me; may he not be rightly disposed and differ from you? Are you infallible? Is your infallibility unquestionable? If so, when did you attain to that state? When I first announced my disbelief in the theological dogma of an immortal soul in man, and of the endless misery of sinners, you were not with me, but on the old dogma, while I had to stand and fight the battle nearly alone. Since then, you have changed on several points—at which point did you attain infallibility? If you have ever been mistaken may you not find yourself so again, even on the "Life from the Dead" question?

B.—That all the dead will be made alive again, is perfectly clear and plain, and I can give no countenance to those who teach otherwise.

S.—Do you mean to say, it is clear and plain to yourself? Or, that it is clear and plain to every honest, and candid believer? Do you mean to say, it is clear and plain to those who have not thoroughly studied the subject? or, to those who have? Will you not find yourself among the imperfect Christians, to say the least, if this spirit to judge others is not more perfectly subdued? Are we not all bound to cultivate a more brotherly disposition towards those who acknowledge Christ as the head of the new creation, which God will have, by and by when "all things are made new?" Life in Christ, and in him alone, is a doctrine on which many of us are agreed: on the details relating to its full development we may, and probably shall, more or less, differ, till we come into its full possession. Then shall we "see eye to eye." The Lord hasten that day.

L. C. THORNE.

OUR friends will all be glad to learn that this beloved brother is somewhat improved in health, and has returned from the North to his home in Bloomfield, N. J. He needs great caution and rest to become invigorated; and at best can hope only for imperfect health till the LIFE-GIVER comes to give the undying life, for which our brother is looking. May it please our covenant God to restore and sustain him, so far and so long as His infinite wisdom and love shall see best for all concerned. Our hope, for all things needed for this life and that to come, is in Him who doeth all things well. Here we can safely trust, whether He gives or takes away. Let us all learn the lesson of unwavering trust in, and reliance on "Our Father, which art in heaven." Blessed be His heavenly name for every mercy; and He will cause all things to work together for our good, if we love him. Blessed thought.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED.

A PERIOD has been reached in the history of the Life views when systematic and earnest work would produce wonderful results for God's glory. All Life Believers have reason to praise the Lord for the divine favor which has manifested its promulgation; but we should not stop here in the contemplation of what has been done. In all parts of the land, among all classes of Christians, it has made its way, causing the blind to see, the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak; and like the luminary of heaven, before its glorious rays, the darkness of error and tradition has yielded. Much of this has been accomplished through the circulation of the HERALD OF LIFE. Through its influence and the power of truth prejudice has been giving way, until now, on all sides, broad fields are opened for the reception of the crowning doctrine of "Life only in Christ." The masses are perishing for the want of light; shall we neglect to do our duty to let our "light shine?" Nay, verily! The HERALD floods a world of light wherever it goes; and it seems to us, in the present prosperous condition of the Life cause, that its circulation should be doubled, to say the least, and thus double its influence and power. This can be easily done. If every subscriber will immediately enroll in a volunteer army for this purpose, and send one new subscriber, but a brief period will elapse before hundreds of firesides, now enveloped in the darkness of tradition, will be illuminated with the glorious and God-honoring truth of life in the future as a gift bestowed only upon the righteous.

Reader, will you enlist? Will you present the claims of the HERALD to your friends and neighbors, and add their names to its subscription book? Let all resolve in the strength of the Lord to do what they can for the cause of truth. Now is the favorable time for work, as another year's campaign is opened by this number. Who will volunteer? Who will be first? And who will send the largest number of new subscribers?

WM. H. SPENCER.

NEW YORK, October 6, 1869.

"THE NON-RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED."

UNDER this caption a correspondent of the "Voice of the West"—a "New man"—is out with an attack upon the advocates of "Life only in Christ." It seems strange that a professed Christian should so far depart from the spirit of Christ as to use such language and make the assumptions which he has done. But, in seeking cover under an assumed name, does it not indicate a lack of moral courage? Perhaps, whoever the writer may be, he knew his utter inability to meet, on scriptural grounds, those whom he is pleased to denominate as "the servants and effectually doing the bidding of their master the Devil." He may consider such epithets good argument, but he may yet learn that "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Jas. i. 20. In this age of abounding light on the Scriptures, hard names and censorious language will not supply the place of sound scriptural logic. Therefore, when any one wishes to oppose the doctrine that the righteous only will live again, let them meet it on Bible grounds, otherwise their labor is lost; and on these premises they will always find us ready to meet them in Christian love. We make the following extract from the article in question. He says:

It is no more than just for us to respond to their demands to show wherein their doctrine is unscriptural. The Scriptures plainly declare that the DEAD shall live again. If you say that those only who are in Christ shall live again, then I reply that (1.) All men are in Christ so far as to be embraced in the call to a resurrection from the dead. (2.) For he is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe. 1 Tim. 4, 10. (3.) The dead, small and great, shall stand before God. Rev. xx. 12. (4.) "For as in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 22. (5.) "All that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John v. 28, 29. . . . We believe that this much is well established.—"The dead shall live again." We understand by this, that the whole human race, from Adam to the last and least of his posterity, will be brought up from the state of death.

(1.) If the assumption is true that "all men are in Christ," then the conclusion cannot be fairly evaded by our brother that all men will be saved. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature," and there is not a single instance where Paul uses this phrase when it does not have this meaning. Dr. Berg says that "the phrase (en Christo), in Christ, is a technical term in Paul's writings, and always denotes the state of a believer." If the wicked are "in Christ" in any sense so as "to be embraced in the call to a resurrection from the dead," they would be the "children of the resurrection," who, Christ declares, can die no more, "being equal unto the angels." Luke xx. 35, 36. In harmony with this Paul says: "the dead shall be raised incorruptible." 1 Cor. xv. 52. We believe the words of Jesus that the wicked dead "shall not see life," which is in harmony with the entire Scriptures that they "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Therefore, Universalism has no foundation in the Scriptures.

(2.) 1 Tim. iv. 10 does not affirm that Christ is the "Saviour of all men," and when thus applied is a great perversion of Scripture. The passage makes no reference to Christ, but plainly declares that "the living God" is "the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe." John iii. 17, shows the sense of this passage. God has opened a way, by the gift of his Son, making it possible for all men to be saved. But the wicked will not come to him that they may have life. John v. 40. Of the righteous he says, "I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40.

(3.) "The dead" spoken of in Rev. xx. 12, does not embrace the wicked, as can easily be shown. The dead are represented as standing "before God." None will deny that this is proof of their being in the presence of God; but the inspired word informs us that without holiness "no man shall see the Lord." Heb. xii. 14. This clearly shows that none will be ushered into the presence of God but the "pure in heart," as is intimated by the words of Jesus in his memorable sermon on the Mount. Matt. v. 8. With this testimony before us, we of necessity conclude that Rev. xx. 12 speaks of a class—the righteous—and not of the entire posterity of Adam.

Again, in our English version the words "before God," Greek critics inform us should read "before the throne," according to the oldest manuscripts. Samuel Treggelles, LL. D., says this reading is guaranteed by manuscript authority of at least twelve hundred years old. The Emphatic Diaglott and American Bible Union translations give the same rendering. In Rev. iv. 2, 6, the Revelator locates the throne in heaven, and the wicked could not "stand before the throne," unless they are "caught up to meet the Lord in the air" at his coming. But Christ speaking of the two classes of the human race, at his coming, says, "one shall be taken and the other left;" and we believe Christ's arrangement is about right. However, John, in Rev. vii. 9, decides the character of those who shall stand "before the throne." He says they are a "great multitude which no man could number," who "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Other overwhelming facts, which at present are omitted, clearly shows that Rev. xx. 12 does not include the wicked dead.

(4.) To appropriate 1 Cor. xv. 22 to prove a re-living of the wicked dead is to prove their final salvation. All of Adam's posterity die by virtue of a connection to him—by having his mortal nature; and Paul's argument is, that all who shall be made alive will be by virtue of being "in Christ," in like manner as they were in Adam. But this is a conditional relationship to the Second Adam, and excludes his enemies from the gracious gift accruing from this relationship, viz., life from the dead.

(5.) John v. 28, 29 seems to be the great corner-stone upon which the theory of the resurrection of the wicked rests. But many things are to be taken into consideration in making such an application of this passage. Are any justified in interpreting that passage in direct conflict with the whole tenor of the Scriptures? Such, however, is the case when it is applied to the re-living of the wicked dead. The testimony of the Old Testament is, that they "shall not see light," but "shall remain in the congregation of the dead;" and the New Testament, in perfect harmony, declares that they "shall not see life." But take the passage as it stands, in connection with the context, and it does not teach a re-living of the wicked dead. We are prepared to show, and shall at some future time, that the passage does not refer to a future resurrection, but is a prediction which has already had its literal fulfilment. The wicked dead are in hades (the Greek for grave); but the word hades does not occur in the whole passage, and therefore cannot prove that the wicked will come out of hades. But the context shows that Christ was trying to impress upon the minds of the Jews and the disciples the great change that awaited the whole race, viz., passing over into the New Covenant dispensation, where "life and immortality" would be "brought to light" by the gospel, which to the one class is "the savor of life unto life," and to the other of "death unto death." But no future life is brought to view in the gospel for the wicked, though in this dispensation the offer of eternal life is held forth to every one, through Jesus Christ.

"The dead shall live again," we verily believe; but all who do live again will be the "children of the resurrection" who, Christ declares, can "die no more," being "equal unto the angels." Therefore, as "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," the re-living of the wicked can only be sustained upon the premises of Universalism; and to this ground our opponents must eventually drift, in their opposition to "life only in Christ."

NOTE.—Since the above was written the last issue of the "Voice" has come to hand, in which the editor clears himself from the responsibility of admitting the article, signed "Newman," into its columns. He says:

> While absent at the late camp-meetings an article by "Newman" was inserted in "The Voice," in reference to those called Non-resurrectionists, which we deeply regret. While we regard them in error, we esteem them as brethren, and wish to treat them as Christians. And while we may give our reasons for the resurrection of the wicked dead, we cannot publish any article that seems to cast a slur upon honest inquirers after truth.

As the editor of the "Voice" relieves himself of the responsibility of the publication of said article, and as the author is unknown to the public, clearly the responsibility falls upon the "Publishing Committee."

THE CURSE.

"Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."—Mal. iv. 6.

This threat follows the promise of God to "send Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord."

Did God smite the earth with a curse? is the question we promised to answer in our next. We gave our reasons in our last for believing that God had fulfilled his promise in sending Elijah, the prophet. It now remains to be shown that the great and dreadful day of the Lord has come, and the Lord has smitten the earth with a curse.

We are too apt to assume positions, and then reason from our assumed points, as though they were proven. For instance: we have assumed that the dreadful day of the (world) or earth is at the consummation of all things, and refers to the second coming of our Lord. This has never been proved, but has been assumed. Now we are like Dr. Macknight, we do not believe in looking in heaven above, nor in hell beneath, for the fulment of things which belong to our earth. So we do not believe in looking for the fulfilment of prophecies in our own day, if they belong to the past. In the first place, then, to whom was the Lord speaking when he uttered these words? The key is found in the 4th verse: "Remember ye the law of Moses, my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments." "But," says one, "does not the language, I will smite the earth with a curse have a broader signification? You will certainly not confine this to the land of Israel?" The word is Erets, and signifies land in all places; and may well mean the land of Israel and not the habitable globe.

John the Baptist was the Elijah who was to come, which we think we have fully shown from the language of his father Zechariah, and the testimony of Jesus. John came preaching in the wilderness of Judea, "And saying, repent for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand. For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, the voice," etc. . . . "Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea." Matt. iii. 1-5. Here the Elijah message is given to the people who had the law of Moses and the statues thereof. "Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in: behold he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts."

I know that many place this at the second coming of the Lord; but where is the evidence? Surely it is not found in the words of our text. He "shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant." "Surely," says one, "you will not say this prediction was fulfilled at the first advent?" I find in John ii. 15, that Jesus did come suddenly and unexpectedly to the temple, and used some authority at the time. The fulfilment may not suit some minds, but many things do not take place as we expect them.

I wish now to examine some predictions, and see if we can trace the connections, and the fulfilment with this of Malachi. In Daniel ix. I shall use Charles Thompson's translation, made fifty years ago. Daniel in this chapter is asking and praying for information for his own people. "Because we apostatised and did not hearken to the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in his laws, which he set before us by the ministry the prophets, and all Israel transgressed the law. Now whilst I was still speaking and praying, and confessing mine own sins and the sins of my people Israel." The angel said, "At the beginning of thy supplication a word went forth, and I am come to tell thee: for thou art a man greatly beloved. Be instructed, therefore, by the decree, and understand by the vision, seventy weeks are set apart for thy people (Israel) and for the holy city; (Jerusalem) for finishing sin offerings, and for sealing up sin offerings, and blotting out iniquities, (under the Mosaic covenant) and making atonement for iniquities; and for bringing in an everlasting righteousness; (under the new covenant) and for sealing vision and prophet; and for anointing the Holy of Holies. Therefore thou art to know and understand, that from the going forth of a word for returning an answer, and for building Jerusalem until the Anointed ruler are seven weeks, and sixty and two weeks. They shall indeed return, and a street shall be built and a wall, and these times shall be emptied out, and after the sixty-two weeks, the Messiah shall be cut off, though there is no crime in him; and he, with the ruler who is coming, will destroy the city and the sanctuary. They shall be destroyed with a deluge, and even to the end of the war determined on in course, with desolations. Now one week shall confirm a covenant for many, and in the half of that week my sacrifice and libation shall be taken away; and upon the temple shall be an abomination of the desolations, and at the end of a time an end shall be put to that desolation."

Here Daniel agrees with Malachi that upon the land of Israel God was going to visit a curse.

Our next question is, Did it take place? In fulfilment of the above I will give the language of Jesus: "Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains. . . . For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written (by the prophets) may be fulfilled. But woe unto (certain classes named) for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people." Luke xxi. 23, 24. Now if all that was written was to have its accomplishment at the overthrow of Jerusalem, and there was to be great distress upon the land and people, what right have I to look for and expect another fulfilment of the prophecies above named?

Again, Peter, 2d Epistle iii., refers to the end of the world or the end of the Jewish polity, or age. He begins this epistle by saying, "I now write unto you; in which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour." Peter makes use of the flood to illustrate an important fact which he is about bringing before them, that scoffers would say, "all things continue from the creation as they were; of this they are willingly ignorant; the world that then was being overflowed with water perished. But the heavens and the earth that now are, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." In Isaiah xxiv. we read of the earth being made empty and turned upside down; and in the 3d verse it says, "The land shall be utterly emptied." Verse 5 describes the people. "The earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof: because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant; therefore the inhabitants are burned and few men left." Here is language spoken by the prophet of which Peter reminds his brethren. In Jeremiah iv. 20 it reads, "Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled." . . . "I beheld the earth (land), and lo it was without form and void, and the heavens, and they had no light." Jeremiah vii. 20. "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man and beast, and upon the trees, . . . and it shall burn, and shall not be quenched." In Jer. xvii. 27, "If ye will not hearken to me to hallow the Sabbath day; . . . then will I kindle a fire in the gates of Jerusalem, and it shall devour the palaces, and it shall not be quenched." In Zephaniah i. 2, "I will utterly consume all from off the land, saith the Lord. I will consume man and beast: I will consume the fowls of heaven, and the fishes of the sea and the stumbling blocks with the wicked." Verse 14 says, "The great day of the Lord is at hand and hasteth greatly. . . . That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble, of darkness and gloominess."

Now, we think that Peter and Malachi are speaking of the same day of wrath, and upon the same land. But says Peter, "the Lord is not slack concerning his promise as some men count slackness, but is long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." "There," says one, "does that not mean the end of the world and second coming of Christ; and do you suppose Peter made all this ado about the destruction of Jerusalem? Why, it was only an insignificant place compared with the world." I know, my friends, it was only an insignificant place, and we are apt at the present time, when reading the Scriptures, to bring everything down to ourselves when nearly everything in the Scriptures, after the first twelve chapters, relates to Israel and the Jewish people.

But, says one, "Peter was looking for new heavens and new earth, when the present passed away." I am aware that Peter expected the kingdom of God would speedily come. In his first Epistle, chap. iv. 7, he says, "The end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." V. 12, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto us." "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?"

Peter, in his Second Epistle, iii. 2, reminds his brethren of the words which were spoken by the Prophets, which we here give; and then the commandment of our Lord and Saviour (Jesus) by the Apostles. Now the commandment of Jesus was: "And because inquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end shall be saved. When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel, the Prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand) then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened," Math. xxiv. Think it not strange, brethren, as though some strange thing during this fiery trial was going to happen to you. But remember our Lord has foretold us of these things before they come to pass. Peter tells us in his Epis. ii. 3, of this same class, "whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." Think you that Peter supposed it was two thousand years off when he wrote, and was looking down to our day, when the most terrible of all judgments was just before them? We think not.

In our next we will answer our last question: What is the present hope of the world? or, what is the promise set before us?

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM W. H. H. MCALLISTER.

BR. STORRS: It is the desire of Br. Lewis and some others of our friends, that I should give you some account of the Camp-meeting at Bethel, Vt. Br. Lewis must report the first of the meeting, till Friday evening, as I was not able to attend till that time. This was the first State Camp-meeting of Adventists, I believe, that has been called in this State; and the number in attendance was not as large as it will be in future; but it was estimated that on Sunday, and it was a rainy day, too, that there were fifteen hundred persons in attendance. Had it been pleasant, double that number would probably have come out. There was a good attendance through the week.

Eld. J. A. Cleavland, of Marshfield, Vt., had charge of the meeting as committee, and Eld. S. G. Matthewson, of Castleton, Vt., and J. Couch, of Concord, N. H., supplied the preaching in the latter part of the meeting. The N. H. Mission Tent was engaged for the occasion, and did good service for the evening meeting, and especially in the rain of Sunday, under the charge of Br. J. C. Shorey, of East Rochester, N. H. There was nothing worthy of special note in the preaching, except that the sermons were earnest and practical, and upon such topics as one would naturally expect at such a meeting. Br. Shorey was an invaluable assistant in the social meetings, both from his great experience and his fine musical powers. When the interest of the meeting flagged in the least, or when the sentiment required, he was ready with an appropriate verse to help. He is better than most ministers to sustain the interest in social meetings.

An organization was perfected at this meeting called the VERMONT ADVENT CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. The objects of the Association are the promulgation of Gospel truth; the setting in gospel order of the churches in our midst, and the saving of the perishing by all gospel means. All those who love God and wait for his Son from heaven, who are willing to co-operate for the accomplishment of the above objects, may become members of the Association. It is the intention of the Association to hold one annual meeting at some convenient place, and such other meetings as shall best subserve the cause of truth. Eld. S. G. Matthewson was chosen President; Eld. J. A. Cleavland Vice-President; Br. R. N. Stetson, of Pomfret, Secretary; Elds. S. G. Matthewson, J. A. Cleavland, and W. H. Dow, Ministerial Committee; Eld. J. A. Cleavland, Brs. James Wiswell, of Castleton, Jona. Washburn, of Bethel, W. H. H. McAllister, of St. Albans, and Wm. C. Bugbee, of Bridgewater, Camp-meeting Committee. No location has been selected for future meetings of the Association; but it is the desire of the Committee to secure a location in some central place, and fit it up as a permanent ground. It was also thought best to put a tent into the field next year, and about $135 were pledged for that purpose on the ground. There is no question but that the tent will be secured, and Br. Shorey has promised to come to Vermont next year and run it. Delegates were chosen to the General Conference at Rochester, N. Y.

We had no preaching of the Life views except what Br. Matthewson was logically forced into, in one of his sermons; and the views were not opposed at all except by the same brother, in a small portion of one sermon. There were about a dozen Life believers on the ground, including Brs. Washburn and Lewis, of the Camp-meeting Committee, Br. S. C. Castle and daughter, of Hinesburg, Br. Togert and a sister of Shelburn.

Before I went I had the assurance that I should have all the liberty I wanted; and in the absence of any of our preachers it was understood that I should speak for our friends; but when on the ground it was feared that I should mar the harmony of the meeting if I spoke untrammelled, and I would speak in no other way; yet I think if some of our preaching brethren had been there a hearing could have been obtained. As it was, there was a strong pressure for a chance for me, among those who do not believe as we do, on the ground, that it was our due as a friendly recognition; and all the feeling I had in the matter was as an officer of the Life and Advent Union. I thought that if an opportunity was given me to speak for the Life Believers, it would greatly improve the tone of feeling, and unite all Adventists in the State in support of the meetings. But there seemed to be some fear that harm would be done, and the question was not pressed. As it is, we have two members on the Committee, and one who is friendly, and thinks we ought to have had a hearing this year, and we have a promise that next year our preachers shall have a chance with the rest. I labored for this in the business meetings and in the committee, and have this promise.

Br. Cleavland seemed to think we were a little jealous, and unnecessarily so, perhaps; but I told him I wanted to know what our status was to be, for we had occupied the position of side-show long enough. I succeeded in getting the Constitution modified somewhat from the original report of the Committee.

On the whole, I think we have reason to thank God and take courage. We have enough Life Believers in the State to leaven the mass. One could tell them by their talk in social meetings, and by their looks almost. There was a disposition to hear, so far as we had opportunity to ascertain, and the tracts were thankfully received. May they not return void, but accomplish that whereunto they are sent. Of course we found prejudice and ignorance of what we believe; but I think most of those present would have given a ready ear to the truth.

One brother on the ground told me of a lady who attended the Springfield Camp-meeting, and, among others, heard Brother Storrs. She said Br. Storrs made God appear the most lovely of all.

I close this already too long letter, but I must say, in conclusion, that I am confident that good seed was sown, and it will spring up and bear fruit unto everlasting life.

Yours, for the truth.

ST. ALBANS, VT., Oct. 1, 1869.

FROM JOHN R. SCOTT.

BRO. STORRS: Enclosed is the amount of my subscription for another year. I rejoice at the bright prospect of its continuance. I have never doubted but the paper would be sustained, although it would have much to contend with in consequence of the prejudice and the limited knowledge possessed by the great portion of believers of the truths contained in the Bible. My heart is made glad as I read the letters of the brethren published in the HERALD. My memory very naturally goes back a few years when a few of the believers in Jesus and his word were put out of the church in which they were members for no other cause than that they would read the Bible and think for themselves, and talk of what they believed to be truth; and after being cast out as heathens, despised and rejected by those who were formerly known as brethren in Christ, and having no where to go to hear the word of Life, were forced, like the disciples, to meet, if not in "an upper room," one equally private to comfort, and strengthen one another; and in that room those truths were first uttered which are now embraced by the learned men of the church; and are agitating the whole Christian world. How can I help saying in the fulness of my joy, Glory be to our God for this manifestation of his love. I rejoice, Bro. Storrs, that you are to have some relief; for you have had to bear the heat and burden of the day. But you are rejoicing that God has thus far sustained you, and that you are now seeing the seed, which you have been scattering for many years, taking deep root in the hearts of believers, and bringing forth fruit to the honor and glory of our God and his Christ.

My prayer is, that God will keep you and bless you and yours.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 4, 1869.

G. W. EVANS, Greenfield, Mo., writes: I have been a subscriber for the HERALD OF LIFE only three months. At first the paper did not meet my expectations; but it grew better and more interesting to me; and now I do not feel as if I could do without it; it contains so many good articles from able brethren on the Life theme. I have been a full believer in Life in Christ alone. I have circulated all, but the last two numbers, among the brethren; they speak well of it. If you have good tracts for gratuitous distribution, send me some; I will put them in the hands of those who will read. Yours, in hope of eternal life through Christ at his appearing and kingdom.

FROM WALTER PATTERSON.

BRO. STORRS: I suppose I am amongst some of your oldest subscribers. I do not wish to be deprived of the help I receive from the HERALD OF LIFE; so please continue it and I will try to send you something to help maintain its existence shortly.

I recently had a letter from my cousin in Scotland. I will give an extract; it will be cheering to you. He says: "Every day I live the conviction grows stronger, that to live for Jesus and make his name known among our fellow men, is the only thing worth living for; and for these convictions I feel deeply indebted to you, for your kindness in sending us the HERALD OF LIFE. Isabel and myself do enjoy its contents; and we have both come up to the point to see that every connecting link with Adam is condemned to death; that unless we are linked to Jesus by faith and walk in him we will not have a resurrection, but "remain in the congregation of the dead." Then they both unite in expressing thanks to me. It is certainly a pleasant satisfaction to know one is doing good; but shall I accept and retain their thanks? No; roll them up higher. Shall I present them to Ephraim Smith, who presented me with "Storrs' Six Sermons?" Bro. Smith sleeps in Jesus; and I think Bro. Storrs will say, Let it go back to the writer of that anonymous tract; while he in his modesty will send them to the prophets and apostles; they will lay them on the chief Corner Stone; as Jesus does all to the glory of God the Father. Then let all our thanks and gratitude ascend like grateful incense up through Christ to the throne of the Eternal; to him who "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

FERGUSONVILLE, N. Y.

THOMAS BOARDMAN, Phenix, R. I., writes: I have been a reader of the HERALD OF LIFE for the past year. It has been the means of my reading the Bible. I am sorry to say, I did not read it much before; being under the impression that it taught a "fire-hell" under the charge of one great "fire-angel," to carry on the work of eternal torture to the wicked; but I never believed that, and did not wish to read such a Bible. I now find a future life is the gift of God, through a resurrection from the dead, in harmony with your views, and with nature too, as I understand it. I am only a young man, and need to learn; but I am in search of knowledge, and think the HERALD contains more than any paper I ever saw. I send $3 for its continuance. Mother says you talk just like the Apostles of Christ, and you must feel very happy. I think so too. May you live long to defend the truth. God bless you, is my prayer.

A. B. SAGE, Rockport, Mo., writes: We have settled on the Big Prairie, sixteen miles northeast from Rockport. There are four families of us, all believers in "No Life out of Christ." We do not know of any Life Believers within a hundred miles of us; yet we are looking to the Saviour for salvation, and not to man. If any of the friends of Jesus come this way, we will welcome them.

May the Master prosper you and the HERALD. Yours, in hope of eternal Life.

Note by the Editor.

We send three papers to Rockport, including one to yourself, not being clear whether you intended yours to be continued or not. Please inform us if we send wrong.

DR. E. PERKINS, Rome, N. Y., writes: We are much pleased with the HERALD, and thankful that your health is so good. I am in my 72d year, not very far behind you. The last four years I have grown old fast, but had hoped to see the great change without falling asleep, always trusting in the good Lord to bless us, to keep us, to be gracious unto us, causing His face to shine upon us to give us peace. I would say, for encouragement to your undertaking, there are more people examining and embracing the Life views than you have any idea of. I often meet inquirers after your success.

WM. CHAPIN, Orrington, Me., writes: I would say that our camp-meeting at Herman was a good one. Many of the '43 brethren and sisters were out to hear, strong in faith, giving glory to God for what He has done and is still doing. It seems that the Life views never had such a hold on the people before, and many were anxious to hear more. May the Great Head of the Church give to his servants that wisdom which is pure and peaceable, so that we may do His will now, that when the LIFE-GIVER comes we may participate in the reward, and have it said to us, "Well done." That will be blessed. Amen.

E. D. STONE, Boston, Mass., writes: I have no disposition to discontinue the HERALD OF LIFE, and send you $5 for two copies. To me, it is a great light shining in a dark place. I believe this truth, as advocated in the HERALD, is growing in interest, and I hope it will continue to do so till He whose right it is shall come to reign. Then we shall see eye to eye, and know Him who now is invisible, and who only hath immortality. Your brother, looking for the great King.

JOSEPH LACIAR, Mauch Chunk, Pa., sends his pledge of $50, and writes: I rejoice that the prospects are good for another year. May the Lord strengthen the hearts of all who feel an interest in His glorious cause. Though we may appear insignificant to some, we can all do something in proclaiming the Life views that will encourage the work and those who are engaged in it.

L. F. MOORE, Somersville, Conn., writes: I have visited Square Pond, and send you a new subscriber. "Uncle Bill Slater," as they call him, in that place, said, "Tell Br. Storrs that Br. Slater is as firm as a mountain—he can't be moved, and do not be discouraged, for this glorious doctrine must be preached in the Square Pond." It has, for the present, been shut out, but Br. Slater is the owner of the house, and gives the use of it. He has offered to pay for the paper for any one who will read it, and is soon going to work to see how many will take it. The leaven is working, and you may expect more subscribers soon.

A. L. HOUGHTON, Forida, Mass, writes: I am happy to see how well the HERALD is sustained. May it ever go on in its path of good. There is some strong prejudice manifested against our views in this place; but still truth is advancing, and they are obliged to give way on many points. It is strange to me that men who read the Bible will cling to the tradition of inherent immortality, instead of taking the truth of Life future only to those in Christ. But let us pray that the scales may fall from their eyes and they be brought to see things in their true light.

JAMES W. SMITH, Chester, Pa., writes: I am poor indeed; but please do me the favor to keep my name on your list, and I will try soon to send a little money. I am quite rejoiced to see the paper is to be sustained; but I am sorry to hear that Br. L. C. Thorne is sick. I sincerely hope that he may soon recover. I hope the Lord will have compassion on us all at this time, and not allow any of our chief friends to be removed when they are so much needed.

Yours, in hope of eternal life in Jesus Christ.

OBITUARY.

Died in Moretown, Vt., Sept. 4, FRANCIS MERTON, youngest son of N. S. and LOUISA BOWMAN, aged two years and eight months.

There's a vacant place at the table,
A little empty chair,
A fair little face is missing,
Little Frankie is not there.

Two little feet are resting
That pattered o'er the floor;
Two little hands lie listless
That played around the door.

There's grief within the household;
A gloom that's like a pall,
Is resting on those parent's hearts,
But death minds not at all.

And brothers, too, and sisters,
Are mourning them to-day;
For the "pet" among their number
Cruel death has torn away.

But Oh! the Saviour's coming
To take His throne and reign;
And then the loved one sleeping
He'll bring to them again.

D. J. VARNEY.

A Little While.

"A little while," our Lord shall come,
And we shall wander here no more;
He'll take us to our Father's home,
Where he has for us gone before—
To dwell with him, to see his face,
And sing the glories of his grace.

"A little while,"—he'll come again:
Let us the precious hours redeem;
Our only grief, to give him pain,
Our joy, to serve and and follow him.
Watching and ready may we be,
As those that long their Lord to see.

"A little while,"—'twill soon be past;
Why should we shun the promised cross?
Oh, let us in his footsteps haste,
Counting for him all else but loss:
For how will recompense his smile
The sufferings of this "little while!"

"A little while,"—come, Saviour, come!
For thee thy bride has tarried long;
Take thy poor wearied pilgrims home,
To sing the new eternal song—
To see thy glory, and to be
In everything conformed to thee!

Confession of the King.

A great number of Englishmen—dukes, earls, barons, merchants, mechanics, and peasants—were at one time out of harmony with the existing rule, and looking for another monarch in whose divine right they believed most devoutly.

Their position was false and dangerous, the claims of their saintly hero to the throne were very questionable, and the grace and glory with which they invested him purely imaginary. But still the worship was profound, and the aspiration fervent; they nourished an intense though an unholy and devouring fire, by speaking to each other of the grand time, when the king would have his own again.

We would have a better standing, a loftier hope, which nourishes a finer fire and a nobler enthusiasm; for the King, whose presence we desire, has in his person and character all the elements and attributes which are beautiful or sublime, which are saintly, heroic, or Godlike. The righteousness of his claim to the throne is beyond controversy, and the power in reserve for enforcing such claim beyond all limits.

The present visible kingdom is the kingdom of darkness, where the god of this world bears rule. Men do not perceive this, because there is a veil spread over all nations. It is, however, the dread and sober certainty; the purple, gold, and linen, the diplomacy, war and commerce, the art, science, and philosophy, the power, majesty, and glory, are all at present of the world, and of that evil spirit, who rules for a season its destinies.

But "there is another King, one Jesus," supposed by some to be dead in a "lone Syrian town," affirmed by others to be alive, yea, Prince of Life, righteous claimant of David's throne, and true Lord of all thrones, forces, and dominions. We are among those who believe in the ringing words which peal so clear, so audible, so solemn, and so inspiring, through the halls of time, and the abyss of eternity, "Fear not; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

A rapid glance at a few passages in which the King was confessed, may occupy us profitably for a season. "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judæa, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him." (Matt. ii. 1, 2.) The wise men were Gentiles. Their insight and their journey growing out of it indicated that the King whom they came to reverence, though born King of the Jews, would have a dominion wiser than Palestine, and gather under the wings of his regality princes and subjects with other blood than Hebrew. We get a glimpse of the comprehensiveness of the salvation provided, and the breadth of the descending empire, and the glory of the golden gates of the true holy city, beginning to shine forth. While the entranced shepherds, amid celestial radiance and song, receive with gladness the new-born King—on the Jewish side—the wise men receive him as representatives of Gentilism. We see the walls of partition falling down, and a new temple rising where men of all races and languages may worship with one consent the Ancient of days, and the Father of all spirits.

The wise men were astrologers. The knowledge of the period, though wonderfully various, and far more inspiring than the present, had not assumed methodic or scientific shape. It cannot, however, be reasonably questioned, that the prevalent faith of that time, that all fields of information had connections with the mystical and the spiritual, gave grace and glory, charm and rapture, to the study of plants or stars, which we miss in modern days.

While the magi were busy in their sublime work of midnight meditation, travelling on wings of wonder and ecstacy among the countless worlds of light, there shines forth a new luminary. The calculations of Ideler and Kepler render it probable that in connection with the conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn, a new star was actually visible to observing eyes, about the time of our Lord's birth.

But it matters little. We could perhaps as easily prove that there was a natural eclipse when our Lord was crucified. It seems to me we are in a region where Kepler and and Newton have no more light than the rest of us, unless the insight of the spirit be deeper. The new star belongs to spiritual astronomy. Whether it burn out, or shine in some higher heavens, or whither it may be wandering, we cannot tell. The star is gone, but the Lord remains, in undiminished brightness. He is Lord of all the stars; all things were made by him, all things were made for him, and in him all things consist, or stand together.

After our Lord had fed the Jewish people by miracle, which revealed creative power, they wanted to take him by force and make him a king. But he departed and hid himself. He would not be made a king; he was a born one. "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" It is easy to clothe a person with Tyrian purple, to give him a throne of gold blazing with precious stones, to blow trumpets before him in solemn and imposing procession. But it is no easy matter to find royalty in the spirit. In the last bad days of the Roman empire, the throne was several times sold to the highest bidder by the degenerate prætorian guards; but the wretches who bought the name were never kings, for they could buy no inward glory, and there was no regnancy of soul to shine forth in outward majesty.

Strauss, and others among the devil's advocates, have urged that it was wrong to enlist fiction in the cause of truth, to make astrology subservient to Christianity. This is passing strange. What would become of the world, if all its moral scenery and circumstances were not continually made subservient to something higher? The birds of prey consume the carrion, the scavengers remove the uncleanness. Sennacherib may blaspheme, and Pilate sneer, and Julian fling dust in the air, but all are in some way laborers for God. The most tremendous crime of Jerusalem and its rulers opens a fountain of life, and the saintly blood of martyrs running in rivers nourishes the church.

It seems to be one of the laws of human nature, that love shall be testified by gifts. The law has operated in all ages, in all places, and among all races of mankind. Each true man can speak of some dear one for whom, or to whom, he would give his heart and his life. If power were equal to good-will, whither would we not wander to find things rare and costly for the beloved one? The secret treasures of the deep, the shells and jewels from Indian shores, the silk in purple of Tyre, the gold and rubies from the mine, would all be gathered and laid down in secret joy at the feet of the beloved one. The same powerful love, with like spontaneity, works in the higher and deeper region, and the magians were under its inspiring potency. It was equally made manifest in the journey and the offering. Owing to the immense distance, and the nature of the roads in the remote east, such a pilgrimage was no slight matter. It has been considered probable that they began their journey about the time of the conception of our Lord, and only arrived at Bethlehem to find the young child lying by his mother. But no distance, or danger in the path, or weariness of the flesh, could daunt the eastern travellers. It was not scientific ardor, or political interest. Victorious love was there, and so they gather the richest things which their country could produce, and resolutely travel on laden with their treasures; for the service is one of love, profound and absorbing, and all labor is sweetened on the road, and rewarded at the end with fulness of content.

We need not be discouraged if we have no frankincense or gold, or anything very costly or glorious, to bring into the service of the Lord. The poorest can bring their whole nature, body, soul, and spirit, and what richer offering can be presented? Only let us feel, whatever our circumstances may be, that all we are, and all we have, are his. Give him freely in love, being, property, and time, and receive his fulness in return.

The offering of the wise men was homage rendered to a king. Such homage was customary among the people of the earth when they drew near to a sovereign power, and so the magians testified their allegiance to a monarch high above all the kings and princes of the earth. It was predicted, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." The wise men knew that he was born King of the Jews, and he himself, when he witnessed his good confession before Pontius Pilate, acknowledged that such monarchy was his. It is indeed true, and precious truth, that the rule of Christ begins in the inward man; he lays the deep foundations of his sublime kingdom in willing, human souls; but it is equally true, that his empire would be wanting in one essential point, if it failed in subordinating to itself the external world, and becoming finally realized in the glory of perfect transfiuration and visible dominion.

It is quite possible that there was more in the nature of the offering than the worshippers were able to perceive. The informing and guiding Spirit of God was in the matter from first to last. In the composition of the holy anointing oil, pure myrrh was the principle ingredient. With that holy oil, the tabernacle, the ark of the testimony, the table and all the vessels, the altar, the laver, the priest, and all his helpers, were to be anointed, that all might be sanctified as most holy. Frankincense, pure, was the chief ingredient in that confection, which was beaten into ashes or powder, and which, from the altar of incense, rose up in clouds morning and evening, as prayer and worship would arise on prevailing wings, in a nobler dispensation. As to gold, we find that almost everything about the mercy-seat was made of pure gold. "And he made the mercy-seat of pure gold;" "and he made two cherubims of gold, beaten out of one piece, made he them, on the two ends of the mercy-seat. These golden cherubims spread out their wings on high and covered over the mercy-seat, with their faces one toward another, and both gazing down toward the mercy-seat." (Ex. xxxvi.) The church in Laodicea is counselled to buy of the Lord pure gold, tried by fire, that she may have the true riches. The streets of the Holy City is to be pure gold. It seems from these and kindred passages that gold, in the natural world, symbolizes truth in the spiritual. All the glorious work of pure gold in the ancient time anticipated Him who was truth absolute and truth essential, and to hold fast the truth as it is in Jesus is the crowning glory of man.

If, then, we consider gold as symbolizing truth, frankincense as representing worship, and myrrh as setting forth holiness, we catch the living spirit of the transaction. The magians were led by the Spirit of God to present an acceptable and significant offering before the Great King. Into a world where the murderer of human souls was deceiving by his corrupting lies the Great One had come, who was himself truth—divine, perfect, unchangeable; who would give himself as the food of famishing humanity, that the new life might ascend on triumphal wings of worship to the throne of God, and flow out in the beauty of holiness before men.

We have another remarkable confession of the King on record in the first chapter of John. "Jesus saw Nathaniel coming to him, and saith of him, Behold, an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile. Nathaniel saith unto him, Whence knowest thou me? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee. Nathaniel answered and said unto him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel!" In reply to this explicit and solemn confession, the promise is made by the Lord, "Verily, verily I say unto you, hereafter, ye shall see heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." The men of guile in the midst of opulent revelation of power and goodness were inclined to give Satan the honor, though a little more thought and a little less wickedness, would have shown them that the Anarch, the spirit of evil, would surely not shake his own kingdom, and cast out his own retainers. But the man without guile has eyes for the signet ring of the King—for the sign manual of the Lord—a scintillation of evidence is sufficient to flash conviction into his open heart. "Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel." We are irresistibly led back to the memorable vision of the patriarch Jacob. He lighted on a certain place and tarried there all night, because the sun was set, and took the stones of that place for pillows, and lay down to sleep. "And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven, and behold the angels of God, ascending and descending on it." (Gen. xxviii.) After the patriarch awoke he exclaimed reverentially, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." "How dreadful is this place, this is none other than the house of God, and this the gate of heaven." We are better pleased now with pillows of down or feathers, but some of us would be willing to try the stones, if in compensation we could have visions so glorious. It was quite time for Jacob to learn that God was in all places, and that the connection between heaven and earth was certain and well established. Man in league with the evil spirit had done his utmost to destroy such connexion, but God in the promise of the life-restorer had reserved the earth unto mercy. But we reach the true Jacob's ladder when we come to the Life indeed made manifest in visible glory. As Son of God he touches heaven, which is his native place, for he was in glory with the Father before the worlds were; as King of Israel he touched the earth which will be his territory when he cometh to reign. Then and not till then shall we see the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man. He is the one who substantially unites heaven and earth with golden chains, and brings the divine and the human into rich and indissoluble union.

As the chestnut tree is wrapped up in the nut, or the oak tree in the acorn, so all offices were wrapped up in our Lord when on earth. A man might say with the nut in his hand, potentially this is a magnificent chestnut tree, but it wants development by contact with sun and soil, and all the auxiliary ordinances of nature. In regard to Jesus, the Anointed, or Christed, there were comprehended the prophetic, the priestly, and the kingly functions to be successively developed. It is true, an objector might say, was there not royalty revealed in the stupendous works of the Lord, in the very splendor of power, and in the perfectness of beneficence? And was his sacrifice not at least a priestly work, and even the intercessory prayer, in which he held up the apostles, and in them, all Christian humanity, before the throne of God? All this may be granted, and yet it remains in substance true, that the offices were to have successive development, to be unfolded in fine stages. He was revealed as a Prophet or Teacher in Judæa, and his great works were mainly to show forth his authority to expound. He could not have been a Priest had he remained on the earth, for there were priests who offered sacrifice according to the law. He has had development as a Priest at God's right hand by the golden altar, pleading the value of his own most precious blood.

He will be revealed as a King, when he bows the heavens and comes down, when we see him as he is, with his eyes like lamps of fire, and many crowns on his head. There is a blessed and only Potentate, King of kings, and Lord of lords, and the time comes for the revelation of his august power and his eternal glory.

Oh, how we yearn and long for the brightness of his appearing! "For our life is hid with Christ in God; and when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory."

Come, Lord, for darkness gathers round us, which like that of Egypt may be felt. The supreme leaders of human thought are all drifting into godless regions, where there is neither light nor life. The Church visible has no sublime unity, but is a discordant rabble of warring sects, not much above the world in either faith or holiness.

Anointed and holy One! descend in thy chariot of light and power, revealing that kingdom for which we continually pray.—The Rainbow.

Israel's Future.

The American press have seized upon the idea started in the "Messenger" a fortnight ago, attributing to the Suez Canal additional importance in view of the probable consequences upon Palestine, as a suggestion of striking significance, and we recur to the subject with a desire to consider it in its varied phases.

The proposed inauguration, on the 7th of November, will be an occurrence of international interest. The eyes of the civilized world are upon that little connecting link between the Mediterranean and Red Seas, and imperial combinations are on foot to divert the trade there concentrating into the channels which England and France respectively seek to control. Palestine appears to be regarded as of such slight consequence in this connection, as in all other relations, save those of archæological concern, that its claims to consideration have been entirely overlooked.

The contests of the Middle Ages between the Christian and Saracen forces looked to the possession of the Holy Sepulchre; Napoleon exulted in his memorable campaign under the shadow of the Pyramids as the most brilliant epoch in his military career. It would seem that here is to be the theatre of another conflict; the grand victory of peace is to be won on the field once stained by the blood of avenging hosts. "The swords are to be beaten into ploughshares."

What are the Israelites to hope from this great triumph of patient skill, and this international strife for the mastery? The projector of the Suez Canal, M. Lessens, lately addressed the company at its Paris office, demonstrating the extraordinary commercial success of the work, and predicted that the receipts would be limited during the ensuing year, simply by the means of transportation, and that the facilities would speedily be multiplied so as to realize the most sanguine expectations. There can be no doubt that Palestine will sympathize with the regeneration of Egypt, and that the seaports of the Holy Land will be transformed again into busy marts, and the products of the soil be sent forth in their ancient abundance in exchange for the commodities of distant countries.

The beautiful and memorable words of the prophet Isaiah cannot be forgotten by the Israelites to-day, however light the yearning for their immediate fulfilment:

> Fear not, for I am with thee. I will bring thy seed from the East and gather them from the West; I will say to the North give up, and to the South keep not back; bring my sons from far, my daughters from the extremity of the earth." "Ye are my witnesses; I will work, and who shall hinder it?" "Thus saith the Eternal, who maketh a way in the sea and a path in the mighty waters. . . . Behold, I will do a new thing. Now it shall spring forth, shall ye not know it? I will even make a way in the desert and waters in a waste." "Thy children shall make haste; thy destroyers and they that make thee waste shall go forth from thee. Lift up thine eyes about and behold: all these gather themselves together and come to thee. For thy ruins and thy desolate places, they shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away. . . . Thus saith the Eternal God: Behold I will lift up my hand to nations and raise my standard to peoples; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried on their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers and princesses thy nursing mothers; they shall prostrate themselves to thee with their face toward the earth and lick up the dust of thy feet, and thou shalt know that I am the Eternal; for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

Equally significant is the glorious prophecy of Ezekiel:

> Thus saith the Lord—Although I have cast them far off among the nations, and although I have scattered them in the countries, yet I will be to them as a minor sanctuary in the countries where they have come. Therefore, thus saith the Lord; I will even gather you from the people and assemble you out of the countries where you have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel; and they shall come thither, and they shall remove all the detestable things thereof, and all the abominations thereof from thence; and I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within them.

The language of the prophecies is explicit—the confidence of Israel in their fulfilment is almost universal. Our uncertainty as to the time implies no doubt as to the ultimate realization of these hopes.

The rehabilitation of Palestine, the commencement of commercial relations with the world at large, will once more introduce as a momentous question "the right to the Holy Sepulchre," involving the right to the government of the Holy Land. But the decision will not depend on the arbitrament of helmeted knights, wild enthusiasts or the indomitable Guard. The weapons of peace will be wielded and the reopening of commercial activity in and about Jerusalem will be the manifestation of this great change.

Will the Israelites consent to return to Palestine?

That remains to be determined. It is not unreasonable, though, to anticipate that when this field for business activity actually presents itself there will be thousands of Hebrew pioneers to avail themselves of the prospect.

There are hundreds of thousands whose love and attachment for the Holy Land time has not dimmed, who will embrace with avidity the opportunity of emigration. Their condition as individuals and as communities would be materially bettered.—Jewish Messenger.

Every uncommon evil is the trumpet of God, blown in that place where it comes, that the people may take warning.

True Stories, No. 2.

FOR OUR LITTLE ONES, BY SISTER MARIA.

Permit me to tell you one more story about "Ria"; for if my stories are to be true ones, they must be about some one with whom I am acquainted.

Ria lived in Canada. Don't shiver, now; for that country isn't half so cold as reported to be. Don't turn pale, either, because bears and Indians are not very plenty there now. I am not going to tell you of wild animals, or tomahawks; but of something so sweet. Only think of the great forest of maples that surrounded her father's house. Within half a mile they had builded a shanty, or surgar house, where they boiled sap and made it into sugar.

One noon-time Ria's brothers started for the "sugar place," and she asked to go too. But it was a cold April day, and her mother told her she must not go. Her shoes and stockings were off, her brothers were going, the sweet sugar was so tempting—alas! Ria disregarded her mother's command, and followed after the three brothers.

In vain they urged her to go back. At last they thought to frighten her back by running away from her. But on she trudged, though but three years of age; on, down by the swift waters, away under the long hill and dark woods that hid home from view. Alas! She had wandered too far away, and could not find home or the path to it. All the afternoon she wandered, calling in vain for some one to guide her home. Hungry, and almost perished with cold, she fell asleep. At night the boys hastened home, and with the first breath inquired, "Where's Ria?" They felt a little guilty for running away from her. "Where's Ria?" went from lip to lip, and brothers, sisters and neighbors hasten to find her. Barn and brook, house and shed are searched in vain. At last a neighbor mounts an old superannuated war-horse, and with horn to his mouth goes to the village, crying, "child lost!" His horn and confusion reminded the old horse of war times, rnd made her frisk as a colt. After borrowing lanterns from the stores, nearly every male in the village started to look for the lost girl. Torches and lanterns were so numerous that the villagers said "the farm looked like a great blaze of fire."

The field was searched and re-searched, and the multitude moved on, determined to search it no longer, but to look in the opposite field. A little insignificant dog had, all the evening, followed the men, whining and wagging his tail—now trotting before them, then whining by their side. When they were about to quit the field, doggie whined piteously. At last one of the men resolved to follow the dog and see what he wanted. To his great joy he was led directly to the lost girl. She was quietly sleeping, on her face behind an old black stump, and when they took her up, her first words were, "put me in ma's bed!"

Barefooted, bareheaded, no wonder the little girl took a severe cold. From that day to this she has been a great sufferer. Not once has she breathed a free natural breath since that night, and until fifteen years old life was a burden. Asthma, that distressing disease, has followed her all the days of her life. She always has hungered and thirsted for knowledge; but poor health has prevented her from being of much use in the world. Even now, her best days are spent in pain, consumption sometimes threatening her. It is not likely that lungs that have been so oppressed for twenty-six years can be very strong now. But, children, she often has exhorted little ones to obey their parents.

Love for Mother and Jesus.

A little boy once had a canary bird which he loved very much. His mother was taken ill, and the singing of the pretty bird gave her great annoyance in her weakness. The boy was told by her that his little bird gave her great pain by its singing. He went at once and gave the bird away to his cousin, and then came home and told his mother that the canary would disturb her no more, for he had given it to his cousin.

"But did you not love it very much?" said the mother to him; "how could you part with it?"

"It is true I loved the bird, mother," he replied, "but I love you much more. I could not really love anything that gave you pain."

Now, you must love God as this little boy loved his mother, more than you love anything else; and also everything that grieves him you must give up, however much you may like it.

"You love me," said a mother to her little child, as she leaned over her in her bed, "don't you?"

"Yes," said the half sleeping child, "but I love God much more."

So we are to love parents, brothers, sisters and friends, and everything that God has made; but we must love him much more, supremely, with all our heart.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE MODERN PARADOX.

BR. STORRS: I enclose a few ideas, which, if you see fit, may be published for the readers of the HERALD. I have lately embraced the Scriptural view of life in Christ (through whom I am at an agreement with God and his law), and am disposed to proclaim the truth. Your brother in Christ,

ALFRED H. CLEAVFS.

BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 1, 1869.

THERE is no objection, that we are aware of, to employing terms not found in the Scriptures, in expressing scriptural ideas; but when the atonement is spoken of as unconditional, we think the objection remains with the idea itself; while if the atonement be divided or two-fold in its nature, as some have asserted, we suggest that it be appropriately called the compulsory, or coercive atonement, or the inexorable reconciliation; since men are made to be at peace with God, even though they will to be otherwise. A paradox, indeed!

It is generally conceded that the Scriptures represent Adam as capable, originally, of benefitting, or injuring the race, as a result of his action. The privileges resting upon him were of a chartered or patent nature, to be retained upon condition; failing to observe the condition, he forfeited these Divine favors; his posterity, as a result of his action, partake of his loss in a manner similar to that observed in the children of a disinherited nobleman. Adam was taken from the ground; placed in the garden; failed, and was driven thence to the ground, from whence he was taken. His posterity as a result are of "the earth earthy;" "without God, and without hope in the world."

We think the exposition of our loss in Adam and gain in Christ, which secures an unconditional restoration in the latter, of what we lost in the former, while at the same time it fails to mention, among our losses, the right to the "Tree of Life," together with the privilege of dressing and keeping the garden of Eden, is very superficial at best.

Circumstances alter cases! That which at first affects us as a consequence (upon our coming to years of knowledge and transgressing law), may affect us as a penalty; see Ezek. xviii. 18. "As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall die in his iniquity." Here we have an express statement of cause and effect; effectually disproving the idea maintained by some, that the 26th verse of the same chapter teaches, that, for dying in his iniquity a man shall die again; for they have even quoted the first word of verse 27, to prove this conclusion.

So a persistent practice of sin, with a knowledge of law, together with a provision for obedience to that law, provided in Christ, (accomplished through faith in him) is the best evidence of consent to sin; so, that in imputing their sin to them (the wicked), God will be clear when he speaks, and just when he judges." "For knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death;" if they have pleasure in them, and those that do such things, they really consent to sin, and virtually convert their calamity into punishment. The doctrine which charges God with imputing Adam's sin to his children, in a sense which makss them guilty without their consent, is opposed to every principle of justice and mercy; while the theory that God transmits evil, in the form of an essence, from Adam to the race, makes God the author of sin, at the same time establishing the report that all evil is good.

Guilt with respect to an individual, is connected with blameworthiness on his part; which implies law violated, necessitating freedom of will, with knowledge on the part of the offender; for where there is no law revealed, sin is not imputed. Infants and imbeciles may be treated as sovereign power dictates, seeing they have no voice in their condition; but the mission of Christ is to personal offenders; "he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." By wilfully sinning we become a party to the Adamic failure, by consent, choosing death rather than life. Christ is not the minister of sin, neither does he excuse it, for "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin;" but he dies that actual sinners, being in him by faith, may partake of his death, (for, "as many as are baptized into Christ, are baptized into his death") that, being reconciled to God by his death, we may be saved by his life; and of a truth exclaim, "because he lives we shall live also." Thousands have left the Saviour in Joseph's tomb to seek another Jesus; infidels have talked of the claims of nature; others have preached of death and glory, until the resurrection has become a sort of theological spare wheel; but when the disciples left the tomb they lost their hope, to be begotten again, only by a resurrection of Jesus from the dead.

The commercial view of the atonement, which looks upon the reconciliation connected with Christ's death as justifying all men to live again, is foreign to the teaching of the Bible. The death of Christ does not finish the work, nor secure a resurrection of the dead; "for if Christ be not raised, your faith is in vain; ye are yet in your sins." "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept;" and "because he lives, we shall live also."

While the broad grant of redemption extends to the whole world, it is based upon condition, and becomes an actual benefit alone to those who exercise faith in Christ.

DEATH BED EXPERIENCE.

BY L. C. THORNE.

VERY many, even Christian people, fall into the error, it seems to us, of attaching undue importance to the manner in which death is met—whether the mind in that trying hour is clear and confident, or whether gloomy and questioning. There is little doubt that God sometimes favors his death-stricken children with bright conceptions of future glory—foretastes of what will be enjoyed in the kingdom of God, but we believe that what very generally passes for these are nearly always wholly attributable to the peculiar physical condition of the subject. It happens that when these so-called visions, that are regarded as evidences of extraordinarily triumphant death, are had, they always accord with the individual's notions respecting the future. For instance, they who believe that at death a part of them, called the soul, the assumed real person, is taken up to heaven, they see angels waiting or coming to bear them in triumph to the celestial city; they who have learned that the earth is to be the inheritance of the saints see some of the beauties and glories of the renewed earth; the Indian sees his happy hunting grounds, etc. On the other hand, the dying sinner, who believes in a hell of never-ending torments, sees the confusion and darkness and dispair of that cursed abode. Hence, what is thus in fancy seen, its character always corresponding to the person's faith, affords no proof that it either exists or will exist.

By a not unnatural association in the common mind of suffering with death the act of dying is generally supposed to necessarily involve violence and suffering, hence the frequent use of the expressions, "pangs of death," and "last struggle." However painful the fatal disease, there are excellent reasons for believing that a short period preceding death is one of quietness and freedom from pain. That insensibility supervenes, as life approaches extinction, is shown by the subject's disposition to repose, a condition which precludes the idea of suffering. It doubtless often occurs that when pain has ceased, and the much dreaded hour has brought ease and comparative comfort, a happy feeling ensues, and this is eagerly siezed upon by tearful friends as evidence of spiritual triumph in death. Said the celebrated William Hunter, during his last moments, "If I had strength enough to hold a pen, I would write, how easy and delightful it is to die." Louis XIV is recorded to have exclaimed with his last breath: "I thought dying had been more difficult." "If this be dying, it is a pleasant thing to die," has been substantially uttered by many a dying person who cared little or nothing for religion.—Montaigne, in one of his essays, gives an account of an accident to himself from the effect of which he was thought be dying. On being restored, however, he says, "Methought my life only hung upon my lips; and I shut my eyes to help to thrust it out, and took a pleasure in languishing and letting myself go.

But such experiences are not always had, and it not unfrequently happens that the disease so operates as to produce dullness and stupor and dark forebodings even in cases of persons of the largest religious experience and spiritual development.

How did he die? or, how did she die? is frequently among the first questions asked upon hearing of the death of a friend; as though that settled the matter.

How did he live? is a question of infinitely greater importance. All through life, people are, by their own actions, determining their future condition, and though it sometimes occurs that sinners are converted upon their death bed, yet we nevertheless think that instances of genuine, saving conversion, under such circumstances, are rare indeed. Suppose a man of eminent piety should be afflicted with a disease that so affected him as to produce feelings of uncertainty and doubt respecting his salvation; what reasonable person would attach any importance to the circumstance of his doubting condition? The opposite is sometimes with dying sinners. Prayer and hymn-singing, operating in conjunction with physical debility, are well calculated to produce in some minds feelings of a nature quite liable to impress the subject with the idea of conversion and forgiveness; an impression little more likely to be well founded and real, when at such times made, than is the danger to the pious man in the case supposed. The indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and consequent development of a spiritual nature are set forth in the gospel message as conditions precedent to salvation; and these are not the work of a moment. They who "put on Christ" and live in holiness, live to God, will have their names written in the "book of life" ere any death bed experience is had.

When soldiers of the cross have unto the end waged a valiant warfare, and lived a life of faith and trust, they have, we are well aware, little to recommend them to that measure of divine goodness and love and mercy that offers eternal life, but they have at least conformed to the conditions of salvation; and these conditions are so simple, so easily complied with, that when we contemplate the wonderful sacrifices and sufferings of Jesus, what shameful abuses and insults he meekly bore, what ignomy he patiently endured, and all for others; when we think how his people have been agonized and persecuted, but have labored in defiance of all that they might bear aloft the bright banner of our dear, glorified Redeemer, we confess to a feeling that we would well nigh as soon not have eternal life as take it upon the easy terms so many fain would get it, since thus with it must come the ever attending reflection that, while others did so much for Christ, we did our all against him and his glorious cause, until disease laid its heavy hand upon us and snatched us from our wicked work only to give us over to death. No, no; it is not religion obtained upon a death bed that we want, nor yet that which is idolized under the appellation of "triumphant death." These are not what the church, the cause of truth and righteousness need in order to their extension, but a religion for life. A religion that will lead us to consecrate all our energies to God's service, and to long for more to thus direct. A religion that will enable us to forget self in whatever the glory of God and of Christ is gained at, and that in all our studies of truth will make us "let God be true" though every man be wrong. Then will truth triumph. Then will not reproach be brought upon Christianity by heartless self-seeking professors, but error will be cast down, truth exalted, and Christ "be magnified, whether it be by life or by death."

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., October, 1869.

THE RESURRECTION STATE.

"How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?"—1 Cor. xv. 35.

THIS has ever been a question of great importance and interest to those who believe in a resurrection of the dead, and a query in the minds of those who doubt there being a resurrection. If the dead are to be raised, how is it to be done? The body that is laid in the grave returns to dust, and now with what body shall they come? Will they cease to be flesh, and become spirit, as some affirm? Will they be spirit beings that can enter closed rooms without opening the doors, as it is said Jesus did when he appeared in the midst of his disciples? If this be their nature, why not have a little more faith in their immateriality, and let them enter brickbats and throw them about your head, or let them enter into your table and walk that about the room, or into some good medium and give you a communication from the spirit land? I cannot see why it is not all the same doctrine; it seems like nonsense to me to affirm that material beings can do all these things; and it is nowhere said in God's word they will ever become spirit beings, or that they cease to be flesh when they are made immortal, This is all guess work, and contrary to the word of God; for after Jesus was born from the dead he appeared in the midst of his disciples, and they were terrified, and supposed they had seen a spirit, or phantom; but Jesus said unto them, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." And the promise is, that "we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is;" and again, "He shall fashion our vile bodies like unto his glorious body."

Well, says one, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." All very true, but flesh and bone can. If it cannot, we shall never get there; for this mortal that is to put on immortality, and this corruptible that is to put on incorruption, is this vile body that is to be fashioned like unto his glorious body, and Christ's glorious body is flesh and bone. But did not our Lord appear in the midst of his disciples when the doors were shut? The Bible says so, but it does not say that he dissolved himself into nothingness and went through the wall or down the chimney, or that he did not open the door and walk in like any other man, but it merely states that the doors were shut for fear of the Jews. It is our education, and the training of our minds from infancy that makes it so easy for us to believe anything mysterious or supernatural. But did not Jesus vanish out of their sight? Yes, but not by making any change in himself. It was probably in this case as it was with the disciples who went to Emmas; their eyes were holden that they should not know him. Jesus says, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Well, do you imagine that the wind penetrated through the massive stone walls of those ancient buildings in the Holy land where Jesus was when he appeared in the midst of his disciples? Certainly not; for do we not effectually shut it out of wooden buildings? but "they shall mount up on wings as do eagles; they shall run and not get weary; they shall walk and not faint." This seems to be the idea that Jesus wished to convey: that they should soar through the air as do eagles, or like the wind which bloweth where it listeth, or where it will. Their powers of locomotion will be such that they can go where they will with great speed, for immortal beings can never tire.

If it is raised a body of flesh and bone, how can it be called a spiritual body? Let us see if we can find what it is to be spiritually minded and perhaps we can form an opinion as to what the spirit body will be; but take notice, it is not a spirit being, but a spiritual body; not all spirit, but a body of flesh and bone made spiritual. Paul says, "to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace; for the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye, brethren, are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." So we see that to be carnally minded is to be at enmity against God, and to be spiritually minded is to have the Spirit of God dwelling in us; and "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." There is nothing at all offensive here. If all mankind would live so as to enjoy the Spirit, what a happy world this would be! The spiritual minded person must keep the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, all under subjection. His mind must be fllled with holy thoughts, his mouth must speak forth holy words. And now let me ask, what more is needed to form a spiritual body, than to change our organization, and to exclude all things which cause sin and discord? Then we shall have no passions or lusts to overcome, no anger to quell, no hatred to uproot, for we shall be so organized that these things will have no place in our beings, and our life may roll on through eternal ages, and none of these things shall trouble us. Surely they had no place in Christ's body, and the promise is that we shall be like him. Oh happy thought! to be made like Jesus, so pure and holy that not one stain of sin shall mar our glorious bodies, or disturb our peaceful minds.—Selected.

A CONFIRMED GRUMBLER.

SOMETIME ago there lived in Edinburgh a a well-known grumbler named Sandy Black, whose often recurring fits of spleen or indigestion produced some amusing scenes of senseless irritability, which were highly relished by all except the brute's good, patient little wife. One morning Sandy rose bent on a quarrel; the haddies and eggs were excellent, done to a turn, and had been ordered by himself the previous evening; and breakfast passed without the looked-for cause of complaint.

"What will you have for dinner, Sandy?" said Mrs. Black.

"A chicken," said the husband.

"Roast or boiled?" asked the wife.

"Confound it! if you had been a good and considerate wife, you'd have known before this what I liked," Sandy growled out, and slamming the door behind him, left the house. It was in spring, and a friend who was present heard the little wife say, "Sandy's bent on a disturbance to-day; I shall not please him, do what I can."

The dinner time came, and Sandy and his friend sat down to dinner; the fish was eaten in silence, and on raising the cover of the dish before him, in a towering passion he called out, "Boiled chicken! I hate it! A chicken boiled is a chicken spoiled."

Immediately the cover was raised for another chicken, roasted to a turn.

"I won't eat roast chicken!" roared Sandy, "you know how it should have been cooked!"

At that instant a broiled chicken, with mushrooms, was placed on the table.

"Without green peas!" roared the grumbler.

"Here they are, dear!" said Mrs. Black.

"How dare you spend my money in that way!"

"They were a present," said the wife, interrupting him.

Rising from his chair, and rushing from the room, amidst a roar of laughter from his friend, he clenched his fist and shouted—"How dare you receive a present without my consent!"

MARRIAGE.

BY D. G. WEAVER.

I THOUGHT I would write a few thoughts on the subject of marriage. Says the apostle, "Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled; but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge." The law of the land does not recognize but one wife at a time; and the Bible gives us but one cause for divorce, and that is recognized by law. Now, as we are to have but one wife at a time, without violating the law of God and man, in order to be in harmony with God's will, we must be obedient to his requirements.

In order to have a wife or husband there must be a ceremony performed, in order to have it lawful; and as they cannot have two wives at a time, if they would have another, they must get a divorce from the first, or they will be fornicators. The Bible is plain on this point.

As no wife will recognize two husbands at a time, or no true husband two wives, the law being against it, will Christ recognize the church as his wife, when she has another head, or husband? "O," says one, "you are hard, to say such things about the church, for it is right to have a protector." Let me ask you one question: What made John the Revelator speak about the "Mother of harlots," if she was not a harlot? What made her a harlot? O, say you, she was married to the government or kings of the earth. How was it brought about? You say, it was by a union with them. Did all this take place without an understanding between them? Certainly not.

If the old lady was the "Mother of harlots," her daughters will be no better than herself. They have taken the same course that their mother has. Says one, "The Adventists have not taken such a course." I think they have, and will tell you why. All that have organized according to law are connected with the government of earth. All this without any ceremony? No, never! What next? "Now we are recognized as a body, and can do things lawfully." Now is this not being recognized by the government? Is this not being united with another? Is Christ, the Head, well pleased with it? He says, John xv. 19, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." I think if Jesus has chosen us out of the world, he means to have us stay out, instead of going back to the world, and getting married to it. I have been instructed from the Bible that "beasts" represent governments, and I will believe it. I think Christ does not want us to be connected with them, neither will the true Church desire to be.

If the course pursued by the mother was wrong, the same is wrong for the daughters. The Lord has given a rule to govern the church, and it is safe to follow it, and lean on the Lord for protection and "recognition," too.

WESTFIELD, MASS., Sept. 19, 1869.

THE SUEZ CANAL AND THE ISRAELITES.—We publish to-day from the "Jewish Messenger" a remarkable article on the Suez Canal, looking to the restoration of the Israelites to the land of their fathers, in fulfilment of the prophecies of Isaiah and Ezekiel, and others of the "old masters." Nor do we regard this "rehabitation of Palestine" as an idle dream. The revival of trade in and across that country will attract the faithful Hebrews from all quarters to the "sacred soil" of his kings and prophets; and the extension of religious freedom over Asia Minor, which is sure to follow the opening of the Suez Canal, will be apt to create a general emigration of the Jews to that land which is their holy land as well as the Christian's—emigration which may before long restore the line of David in the city of Zion, under the protection of the great powers of Europe and the United States. Who knows?—N. Y. Herald.

FAMILIARITY WITH GOD.—I shall observe one circumstance, that familiarity with God is nothing else but an admission to be of God's family, the admission of a servant or a son in minority, and implies obedience, duty, and fear on our part; care and providence, and love on God's part; and it is not the familiarity of sons, but the impudence of proud equals to express this pretended privilege in even unmannerly and unrevent addresses and discourses; and it is a sure rule, that whatsoever heights of piety, union, or familiarity any man prtends to, it is of the devil, unless the greater the pretence be, the greater also be the humility of the man. The highest flames are the most tremulous; and so are the most holy and eminent religious persons more full of awfulness, and fear, and modesty and humility.—Jeremy Taylor.

PRAY FOR PETER.

WHEN Peter, a church member, was thrust into prison, all the church prayed for him, the chains dropped off, the doors opened, and Peter knocked at the door of the room where they prayed.

Reader, is there no member of our churches bound in prison, lying useless to the church, absent from the place of prayer? Let all the church, then, intercede with God for him, making unceasing prayer till God open the doors, knock off his chains, bid him rise and go to the room where prayer is made.

Peter was a headstrong man, had denied his Lord, and uttered oaths, yet through the interceding prayer of Christ he escaped an utter loss of himself, and through the interceding prayer of the church he was brought out of the dark dungeon to the prayer-meeting. Is there not hope, then, that those whose denial of Christ is not worse than that of Peter may be yet saved through the interceding prayer of one Christ-like man? And is there not hope that those, whose chains are not heavier than those Peter wore, may yet be released through the interceding prayer of the church?

How surprised shall we be when we see them coming one after another from the dungeon to the place of prayer! We shall see them coming if we pray with the faith those had who prayed for Peter. Peter is here; the prisons are here; the Christians are here; if now the prayers were here, we should soon see Peter coming out. Let us pray till he comes. The people in that prayer-meeting did not complain of Peter and say: "We wonder why he does not come." They knew that he was chained and could not come; they prayed then that God would take off his chains, and God did it, and, when he was unchained, he naturally went to the prayer-meeting the first thing. Let us then cease complaining of those who do not attend prayer-meetings, and let us begin to pray for them and they will attend, if our faith fail not. Those people who prayed for Peter, prayed through stone walls and through iron chains; and the prayer penetrated the stone, and cut the iron and released the prisoner. Do not then despair though iron chains and barred gates seem to shut off those we pray for. Keep praying, never mind the obstacles. God's angel, some night, will remove them, and bring to our doors the mighty Peter in his original strength, ready to go to work for God. Come now, there are enough to do it; a few praying men and women, and God to answer them! We cannot afford to lose Peter; let us then stoutly pray for him till God answer us.—Boston Recorder.

THE SECRET OF SYMPATHY.

SOME great sorrow is surely essential to the humanizing of every soul. Never till then can it offer anything but lip-sympathy to those who have gasped through the sea of trouble. How can he who has known only days of comparative prosperity interpret the despairing sigh of the friendless? How can he who has never dropped tears into the open grave of his own dead, measure the agony of that last lingering look, as they are hidden forever from human sight? Till a vacant chair stands by his own hearth, how can he ever understand why one should still keep on grieving for that which can never be recalled. Till his heart turns sickening away from some festive anniversary in which a missing voice once made music, how can he see why one need be doleful on such a day as that! Till he has closed his ears to some familiar strain which evoked associations too painful to bear, how can he tell why you cannot forget all that, since it makes you so miserable! To answer such, is to talk to the blind of colors, to the deaf of sounds, to the dead of life and motion. Never till his own house is darkened, till the badge of desolation flutters from his own door, till sunshiny days return merciless in their brightness, and stormy ones send his thoughts shuddering to a shelterless grave; never till he has tried changing the place, but still always only to keep the old pain, can he understand the desperation with which at last one sits helplessly down, to face that which it can neither look upon nor flee from.

A CHEERFUL DISPOSITION.—In this world of trial and perplexity, of change and uncertainty, what is to be more desired than an abiding spirit of cheerfulness? that turn of mind which will lead one to look upon the bright side of every picture?—or, if it seems to have no bright side, at least forbear gazing upon the dark side? Do you possess by nature a cheerful disposition? Thank God for an inestimable blessing. Do you possess it not? He has given you the power, and made it your duty to cultivate it. Laugh at the annoyances of life, and rise superior to its weightiest calamities. Heaven never yet lengthened out a life that it might be spent in sighing and complaining.

PRACTICAL PREACHING.

THOSE who oppose the "Life views" are loudly calling on us for "practical sermons." Say they "give us salvation and let your non-essential hobbies alone." Now, it must be through ignorance as to what salvation is that they so speak. And if we are to "live by every word that proceedeth from God," how can we justly term any part of that word "non-essential." Again, it is possible to make a "hobby" of even practical ideas.

I claim that "salvation" is a practical doctrine. It cannot be obtained separated from its practical parts. And as for the so-called "practical sermons" we can hear them in any of our most orthodox pulpits. Any number of Pharisees are loudly preaching about our religious obligations. We do need to know how we ought to "behave in the Church of God," but we need as an incentive to know why we are to differ in our department from people of the world. Preach man in his perishing condition, and Christ as a Saviour, and when these truths fasten upon a man's reasoning faculties, his cry has ever been, "Lord, what must I do to be saved?"

Did sinners of old come to Christ for life, before they knew they needed it, and that He could bestow it?

"Well, preach Christ and him crucified, then, without so much 'resurrection' doctrine. If you must believe the wicked will not be raised there's no use of harping on it continually." "Christ, and him crucified?" Crucified for what? Tell the whole story. Say that "those who believe on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life." Then you must of necessity tell them what "perish" means, and also what will be the condition of those who do not "believe" on Christ. This would lead you to say, that if the "crucified" Christ "be not risen, then they also that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." So here, for man's salvation, comes in as a great necessity and merciful plan, the resurrection. Whom will it benefit? Simply those that are in Christ; hence, "counted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead." "Preach salvation?" Indeed we do. We see men and women, made in the image of God, with beauty of frame and mind, heedlessly rushing down to eternal death, and we cry out, "Whosoever will, may come and take of waters of life freely." We tell them that, out of Christ, their existence must cease; but connected with the Lord of Life they may live forevermore. Amen.

It is lamentable to see how people try to remodel God's plan of salvation. They seem to think God has failed in making the story pleasing, and it falls to learned men (unlearned ones sometimes try their hand at it too) to "amend the constitution" of the Gospel. But how much less consistent and inviting is the message made. A God of love is changed to a tyrant, and useless threats of future torture are dealt out to sinners till what little sense of kindness and justice and mercy they possess is clean gone forever! This is true.

If ever I own a house, and it gets on fire while I am asleep, I have no fears of any one calling a "conference" to pass resolutions as to the best mode of saving my life. Cry with all your might, whether your voice be smooth or rough, "your house is on fire!" Wake me up, and I'll instantly know a practical duty remains for me to perform. So wake up the sinner to a sense of his dying condition, and he will at once set himself to working out his salvation by obedience to the Lord.

The gospel, as Christ and his commissioned Apostles preached it, is good enough. If that will not save sinners, nothing will, and certainly, nothing can.

Some who cringe most under this kind of preaching, and cry loudest for "practical preaching," no doubt see the need of a closer walk in their own experiences. Most certainly their neighbors do. As a general thing those who practice most criticize others least.

Of course the professed church greatly needs to be told of Satan's snares, and rebuked for sin, but the best way to make men love purity is to show them the beauty of purity and perfection. The best way to make men set their "affections on things above" is to convince them that they are superior to things beneath.

Sinner, if one should read these lines, before you is life and death. Which will you have? Be persuaded to have eternal life in a world of rest and peace. Be persuaded with Christ to "inherit all things," rather than to go down into death, a blot, a failure, to be as though you had never been. Be wise. Be dignified enough to escape death, and humble enough to accept life on God's conditions. Your nature is sensible of its perishing condition and earnestly seeks after life. It is for you, and with it every desire for grandeur and pleasure shall be gratified in the world to come. Seek the Lord while he may be found. Call on him while he is near, and have His great salvation.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 13, 1869.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

NOTICE TO WRITERS.

No article can receive our attention which is not accompanied with the name of the writer. Whether we publish the name or not we must have it. We cannot puzzle our brain over articles with no name, or a fictitious one attached to them. Nor can we destroy our eyes (which are none too good) by trying to decypher the words of communications written with lead pencil or pale ink. We have had severe taxation in both these ways, but it must cease.

Again, let all writers, especially on business, give us your post office address, and not be satisfied with giving the name of the town you live in. It often happens the name of the town gives no clue to the name of your post office, and it gives us much trouble. Write the name of your post office and the State plain. It may be a small matter in your eyes, but we assure you it is no such thing in ours, so mind what we say.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We have designed to send this week's paper to all subscribers who paid $2 or more on the last volume, whether they had sent pay in advance on this volume or not, trusting all such desired its continuance. Some may have been overlooked. If so, please inform us immediately and we will restore your name on our mail book. To those who had not paid $2 on the last volume we do not send this number, though we did send them No. 1, of this volume, that they might see what they were likely to lose by not accepting our offer to cancel their past indebtedness if they would send us immediately $2 for the present volume. You have seen the beautiful impression of the new type, and the paper on which this volume is to be printed; and we ask you if you can afford to do without it? If you cannot send us $2 now, write, assuring us you will send it by the first of January, and we will accept that, and restore your name as subscriber on our books; but this assurance must be given at once, or we may not be able to give you the intervening numbers.

If any of our subscribers have failed to receive the first number of this volume, we will be glad to forward it on being informed, but make no delay.

Let no one receiving these two numbers, of Vol. VII., think, because we have been so generous as to send them before you have sent the money to renew, that, therefore, you need not be in a hurry to send $2 for the volume. Please let us hear from you with the least possible delay; so you will strengthen our hands.

A BLOT ON ADVENTISM.

If believers in the second personal advent of Christ allow themselves to give currency to the fancies of some fanatical or distempered brain, they bring reproach and a stain on the fair face of the glorious truth of Christ's personal return to reign on earth.

Such a blot has been made by the admission into the columns of some papers of the mad ravings of a man in Alabama, who pretends that Jesus Christ is continually talking to him, and directing him to write night and day to various men or ministers, all over the land; and that, by a voice, when he could see no man, he was bid go to a certain place where he would find the figures 1870 on a stone; which he is said to have found, and now has in his house or shop; which figures are not artificial, but must have grown with the rock, and indicate the end in 1870.

The whole story shows the man to be a monomaniac. For truth's sake, let us be rid of all such raving pretenders. No countenance or publicity should be given to such trash, unless it be to rebuke it. It is a shame and a blot on any cause to employ such ravings as if they had any relation to truth. It is a virtual confession that the Bible fails to sustain our views.

Let our opponents use all the "ghost stories" they can rake together; but let us keep to the "law and the testimony" of the living God, and not go after "lying vanities," or men who like "Simon the sorcerer giving out that himself was some great one;" thus "bewitched the people." Let the monomaniacs take their way; but let sane men and women cleave to the Lord and his word. Remember that our Lord has said, "There shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." It is no time to go after these pretenders to marvellous manifestations.

"THE SIGN OF THE SON OF MAN."

"Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn."—Matt. xxiv. 30.

What this sign is, has caused much inquiry at different times. It is not our design to state anything with positiveness on the subject, but to suggest thoughts which may afford matter for reflection. The sign spoken of must some time appear, and is designed to be for the benefit of such as "watch and pray."

As an opinion—we have long entertained—we are disposed to believe "the seven last plagues" of Rev. constitute that sign. Under them "all the tribes of the" old Roman "earth mourn." There is where the prophetic Scriptures have had, or will have a large share of their fulfilment.

The Revelator introduces these plagues to our attention thus—"I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvelous." What was this sign? "Seven angels having the seven last plagues." What is that a sign of? Is it not of the near approach of the Son of man? Why so? Because, "in them is filled up the wrath of God." Must we not then be near the end of this age when those plagues are seen? The sign of the Son of man cannot be something that comes afterward, for the tribes of the earth mourn under the sign; but the wrath is filled up by the plagues; and hence no wrath beyond for another period.

Have these plagues commenced, or are they all yet in the future? To our mind it seems highly probable they commenced eighty years since, with the French revolution of 1789. The first vial of the plagues produced a "noisome and grievous sore on the men that had the mark of the beast." The beast is likely to represent the fourth, or Roman kingdom and its image, papacy. In the French revolution of 1789 the nobility of France had the "mark of the beast;" and the clergy worshipped its image. Then there were about 400,000 clergy in France. Against these two classes—the nobility and clergy—the wrath of the revolutionists was specially directed. They were put to death without mercy. The horrors of those days we need not dwell on: we design only hints for the reader's consideration.

Second Vial.—"And the second angel poured out his vial on the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea." In 1794 began a series of the most bloody naval conflicts the world ever knew. Not only the eastern seas but the Atlantic and Pacific were dyed in blood from wars growing out of the French revolution. The navy of England seemed to delight in shedding blood on the sea.

Third Vial.—"The third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of water, and they became blood." This vial may denote the general pollutions of infidelity, and also the devastations of the lesser States of Europe during the revolutionary wars from 1794 to 1801. "Rivers and fountains of waters" seem to indicate the same locality as those ravaged by Attila, prophecied of chapter viii. 10, viz: the river Po and its tributaries descending from the Alpine mountains. This was the region of the horrible wars and massacres of the Papal power on the Waldenses. Napoleon I. seems to have been the instrument of God to accomplish the judgments of this vial. After three years of bloody war, Napoleon was completely victorious over Austrians and Russians, triumphed in Italy, and made the Pope a captive. Is it a wonder, in view of these judgments on the Popedom, that "the angel of the waters" said—"Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because Thou hast judged thus: for they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and Thou hast given them blood to drink, for they are worthy. And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy judgments."

Fourth Vial.—"The fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun: and power was given him to scorch men with fire: and men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and repented not to give Him glory."

"The sun" is a symbol of the Imperial power of Rome, chapter viii. 12. Napoleon I. assumed that power, and compelled Pope Pius VII. to travel from Rome to France to perform the coronation service. Napoleon took the coronation oath; but, when the Pope had blessed the crown, the Emperor took it from the altar with his own hands and placed it on his head, instead of receiving it from the "holy father." After this, the Italians sent him a request that he would do them the favor to be crowned their king at Milan. To this he assented; and on the 26th of May, 1805, he placed on his own head the old iron crown of the Lombard kings, uttering the words, "God hath given it to me; beware who toucheth it." The prophecy said—"Power was given unto him"—to do what?—"to scorch men with fire." The history of Napoleon I. and his wars, was a striking illustration, if not fulfilment of this prophecy. It is also true that under those desolating wars—the scourge of a wicked people—they "repented not to give" God "glory." Napoleon had at this time supreme control of a vast empire. The seat of his power was then "the seat of the beast," or fourth kingdom. This leads us to speak of the Fifth Vial.—"And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds."

The seat of the beast was at that time Paris. Napoleon had crouched so far to the Papacy as to reinstate the Pope in part, and had restored the papal worship in his dominions. This base bowing to that power made him and his kingdom the subject of the fifth vial. Whoever supports that power, whether France, England, the United States, or any other power, will have to drink of some of these vials: see Rev. xiv. 9–11; and remember the "seventh vial" is heaviest charged with wrath, and is yet future, or in the incipient stages of its course of wrath. Napoleon had hitherto been almost universally triumphant; but now the scene changes; and from 1812, when he commenced the invasion of Russia, "his kingdom was full of darkness," and disaster followed him, till the imperial "sun" set at the battle of Waterloo, 1815. Then the "fourth beast," or seventh head of that beast, went into "the bottomless pit."—Truly "his kingdom was full of darkness, and they gnawed their tongues for pain," and we have the fullest evidence, they "repented not of their deeds."

Sixth Vial.—"The sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet: for they are spirits of devils"—daimonon, knowing ones—"working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. (Behold I come as a thief: blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame.) And he" ("these spirits"—so reads the French Testament) "gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."

"The great river Euphrates," in this text, in our judgment, is a symbol of the "peoples" on which the "harlot woman"—"Babylon the Great"—sat for centuries. This vial dries up "the water," or withdraws the people from her support, and "prepares the way for the kings of the east"—literally, the sun rising, or of the morning, viz: the morning "of that great day of God Almighty," when His wrath on the wicked nations and their ungodly rulers will culminate to its finale, and mark the end of this age.

While these things are going on, under the sixth vial, a note of warning is to be given of the coming of Christ. Has this not already occurred? though many errors may have been mixed with that warning. But we have no design to go into details in these remarks, and pass to the Seventh Vial.—"And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done." Following this, "There were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great."

This vial, then, symbolizes revolutions and convulsions such as were never before witnessed, and will cause such mourning as is to be when the sign of the Son of Man is seen in heaven. Is it not highly probable, then, that the seven last plagues are that sign? So we confess it appears to us; and it seems evident the return of Christ from heaven is an event nigh; but we have no sympathy for any attempts to fix on a definite day or year for the event to occur; and we are satisfied all such attempts are useless, and often highly pernicious; as failures of accuracy tend to weaken faith in Scripture prophecy, and give occasion to just reproach, and thus injure the cause of truth. Let all watch and pray, and "keep their garments, lest they walk naked" and their shame appear in that day.

The events of the past twenty years, or commencing with the revolutions in Europe in 1848, and especially the events of still more recent occurrence in Europe, indicate that we may be living under the outpouring of the seventh vial. "The beast that was, is not, and yet is"—or the "scarlet colored beast," of Rev. xvii.—is to do his work under this vial, it seems likely. We judge the time is near when the smoke of the mystic Babylon—Papal Rome—will go up from her burning, ending with her sinking in "the sea like a mill-stone, to be found no more at all," (Rev. xviii.), and connected with that event will be the great tribulation of the last days of this age, which will only end with the appearance and reign of Christ, "the Lord from heaven." The events to fill up the prophecy under the seventh vial are those embraced in the latter part of Rev. xvi., the xvii., xviii., xix., and part of the xxith chapters.

"THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES."

MANY of the readers of the HERALD will doubtless be surprised to learn that the "voice of the West," published at Buchanan, Michigan, is now numbered among the things of the past. We have before us, however, "The Advent Christian Times," which, in fact, is but a new name for the same paper. We can discern no improvement in the paper, either in name or typographical appearance.

To the majority of its readers the change may seem of no importance—a matter of small account; but to those who considerately weigh the motive which prompted this change, there is a significant meaning. It is clearly apparent that certain leaders are desirous of having a church organization which, like all sectarian bodies, must have a worldly-formed name, and thus in fact become a daughter of "the old harlot," which they have so severely condemned in times past. As a strategic movement towards perfecting such a church organization, they fling the name to the world in the shape of a paper, and thus bring it into popularity for adoption.

Let all the children of God, who are truly united to Christ, keep clear of such a movement, that when "the cities of the nations" shall fall, and "great Babylon" shall come into remembrance before God, we may not be partakers in her overthrow, for then will all the great achievements of man be as the dross in the refiner's fire. CHRIST is our Head—our Leader—and if we are truly members of His body we belong to the "Church of the first born," and at last our names will be found written in "Lamb's Book of Life."

THE GUARDED HOUSE.

"WHEN the year 1814 began, troops of Swedes, Cossacks, Germans and Russians were within half an hour's march of Sleswick, and new and fearful reports of the behavior of the soldiers was brought from the country every day. There had been a truce, which was to come to an end at midnight on the 5th of January, which was drawing near.

On the outskirts of the town, on the side where the enemy lay, there was a house standing alone, and in it there was an old, pious woman, who was earnestly praying, in the words of an ancient hymn, that God would raise up a wall around them, so that the enemy might fear to attack them.

In the same house dwelt her daughter, a widow, and her grandson, a youth of twenty years. He heard the prayer of his grandmother, and said, he did not understand how she could ask for anything so impossible as that a wall should be built around them, which could keep the enemy away from their house. The grandmother explained that she had but prayed in general for protection for themselves and their own people. "However," she added, "do you think that if it were the will of God to build a wall around, it would be impossible to him?"

And now came the dreaded time, and about midnight the troops began to enter on all sides. The house we were speaking of stood close by the road, and was larger than the dwellings near it, which were only small cottages. Its inhabitants looked out with anxious fear, as parties of the soldiers entered one after another, and even went to the neighboring houses to ask for what they wanted; but all rode past their dwelling. Throughout the whole day there had been a heavy fall of snow, and towards evening the storm became violent to a degree seldom known. At length came four parties of Cossacks, who had been hindered by the snow from entering the town by another road. This part of the outskirts was at some distance from the town itself, and, therefore, they would not go further; so that all the houses around that where the old woman lived, were filled with these soldiers, who quartered themselves in them; in some of the houses there were from fifty to sixty of these half savage men. It was a terrible night for those who dwelt in this part of the town, filled to overflowing with the troops of the enemy. But not a single soldier came into the grandmother's house; and amidst the loud noises and wild sounds all around, not even a knock at the door was heard. The next morning, as it grew light, they saw the cause. The storm had drifted a mass of snow to such a height, between the roadside and the house, that to approach it was impossible. "Do you not now see, my son," said the grandmother, "that it was possible for God to raise a wall around us?"

Did not God cause the snow to form a defence for that house where one dwelt who thus feared Him and trusted in Him? "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them!" God both hears and answers the prayers of His humble, faithful, trusting ones.

THE PRESENT HOPE OF THE WORLD:

WHAT IS IT? AN INQUIRY BY JACOB GRIM.

PAUL had a hope in his day; it was "the hope of the resurrection of the dead." Acts xxiii. 6.

Again, Paul says, "We are saved by hope." Rom. viii. 24. Some men hope to go to heaven when they die; but they give us no reliable evidence of the fact.

Now, we are told in Hebrew xi., "Faith is the substance (reliable evidence or ground of confidence) of things not seen." There are at the present time many things held up as the present hope of the world; some in politics, some in societies of reform; but of all these reform movements we have no faith in either to make man or the world any better. Our inquiry is, what is the present faith required? or what is the hope that is offered to the child of God?

In past ages men were called upon to exercise faith; some in one thing, and some in another. Noah was commanded to build an ark for the saving of himself and family. Noah believed God, and his faith set him to work to build an ark; and it was counted to him for righteousness. But Noah's faith was not the faith that Abraham was commanded to exercise. And yet Abraham believed God, and acted upon the command God gave him; and it was counted to him for righteousness; and so with the children of Israel. God gave them the law of circumcision as a sign. What was it the sign of? That Abraham should have an heir that should be the heir of the world; and the children of Israel were to keep up this sign through all generations. It was the visible sign of their faith in the promise of God to give them the promised Messiah. Now, what was accounted righteousness under the Jewish dispensation, would be no faith or righteousness in me, for Paul says, even to the Jews in his day, "Behold I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing." Gal. v. 2. Now why did Paul utter these words, when Abraham was commanded to circumcise all the male children throughout all his generations? I answer, it was a sign of the coming heir, Christ. The promised child having come, circumcision ceased; and the individual who still practices the rite signifies that he has no faith in the present Christ, but still is looking for one to come; hence Paul's language, This Christ profiteth you nothing. Our faith, then, is different from those under the law. They, the Jews, are looking for a coming Saviour, and we are to exercise faith in the one already come.

And what are we to believe of the Saviour already come? and what is the hope or salvation of the world?

I find in a tract, called "The Breaking Stone of Israel," "From Joseph is the breaking stone of Israel," was not understood. The breaking stone was to be the breaking stone of reconstructed Israel; but the Jews proposed to build the nation without it. When Jesus came, and asserted the divine principle, which was to constitute the coming nationality, they became enraged and killed him.

Now, I like this; it seems to me to embrace some truth. But the whole is spoiled on page 10 of the same tract, for the writer there says, "The stone is the United States of America." On page 7 it says, "The breaking stone was to be the corner stone of reconstructed Israel; and Jesus was put to death for predicting this fact." Peter says, "If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. To whom coming as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious. Wherefore, also, it is contained in the Scriptures, Behold, I lay in Zion, a chief corner stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded." This tract seems to ignore Jesus as the corner stone, and make him but the instrument who predicted the United States was to be the corner stone of God's reconstructed kingdom. I find nowhere in the Scriptures that I am to exercise faith in the United States as the corner stone of my salvation, or the present hope of the world. But I do find the whole truth embodied in the language of Jesus to his disciples, when he taught them to pray, saying, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven."

Now, how the will of God can be done on earth as it is in heaven, until men are changed from mortality, I cannot comprehend. Peter says, "Who by him do believe in God, that raised him from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God." . . . "Being born again; not of corruptible seed, (flesh and blood) but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. For (or because) all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass." There is not much hope for man in his natural state; and when we take the account of man, given us in the Scriptures, we find one, and only one, that did the will of God; and yet, when the prayer of Jesus is answered, the will of God will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

The foundation of this kingdom, as we understand it, is found in the promise of God to the woman, the incorruptible seed, individualized in the promise to Abraham, that the seed should inherit the land for an everlasting possession; embodied in the individual at the birth of Jesus; perfected and completed in the Son of God by his resurrection from the dead; and the glorification of the Son of God, when he received power over all flesh to give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." John xvii. 2.

Jesus says, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." John iii. 3. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." "Ye must be born again." What for? In order to enter the kingdom of heaven. Paul says, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." 1 Cor. xv. 50. Paul's argument is, that corruptible man cannot inherit an incorruptible kingdom. But, says one, they may be subjects of the kingdom, while the saints are to be rulers in the kingdom. In Jesus' sermon on the mount we find him teaching, "Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of God. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." And in Matt. xxi. 43, Jesus says, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Peter, in commenting upon this stone which the builders rejected, says it was a "stone of stumbling and a Rock of offence." But to the believers, he says, "A chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for a purpose, that you may declare the perfections of him who called you from darkness into his wonderful light." What is this wonderful light? Peter informs us in the first chapter, "Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope, might be in God." What is this hope, Peter? "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit. . . . Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Pet. i. 21–23.

Now we sum up our faith and hope, and the hope of the world, in the language of the Saviour, "Ye must be born again," by the Spirit of God, from the dead; for without which birth a man cannot see the kingdom of God; which kingdom is the same kingdom which Christ taught his disciples to pray for; in which kingdom God's will shall be done as it is now done in heaven; which kingdom is yet in the future, for the reason that the will of man is done on the earth at present, instead of the will of God; and into which no man can enter unless he is partaker of the divine nature. "Why," says some one, "I have heard it said, Br. Grim does not believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ, and now he is talking of the divine nature of believers," Yes, my friends, Br. Grim believes that if Jesus Christ did not partake of the divine nature he would have remained in the tomb, and perished; and Br. Grim believes that unless a man is a partaker of the divine nature he will remain in the congregation of the dead. What is the divine nature? It is partaking of the Spirit of God. Peter says, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these (promises) ye might be partakers of the divine nature." It is the indwelling of this divine nature that quickens a man from the dead. It is the living principle that unites Jesus to the Father, and unites us to him. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth of me, even he shall live by me." John vi. 57. "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," and the great principle for which the Father worked, and for which Jesus worked was, to introduce man to the divine nature, without which no man can see the kingdom of heaven. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Here is the divine nature, the indwelling spirit of God; and there is no hope for any man, unless he is a partaker of the divine nature, "The incorruptible seed."

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM DR. J. F. LEE.

BRO. STORRS: This morning I gave to a Methodist preacher "Bible vs. Tradition," and "Life only in Christ"—the only copies I have had for years. I heard him preach in 1855, and visited him then as a young man of very promising talents. He has since married and now located, or rather resides in York county, S. C. I conversed with him at least half an hour—found him an attentive hearer—a believer in Life only in Christ Jesus, and anxious to be thoroughly instructed in the truth of revelation. He was on his way to Anson county, N. C., where his father-in-law, Mr. Henry, resides. He will, I think be apt to write you shortly and become a subscriber. I have conversed with several who, though they still continue in their respective churches, are convinced that the doctrine of the various sects is erroneous, and, in essential points, exceedingly mischievious, if not blasphemous, misrepresenting the character of God and the destiny of the wicked. And still they keep silent! I sincerely believe they are wrong in being silent, and hope they may be able to come out boldly, firmly—proclaiming the truth as it is revealed, so far as they know it. But "Weak and irresolute is man"—in a natural state, and such is the condition of many professors of religion. "Strangers to superior strength," "they vainly trust their own." It requires a divine magnanimity to rise above sectarian prejudices and sympathies, firmly to sustain the truth, and publicly to confess and proclaim it. No child of God can hear any D. D. misrepresent the character of his heavenly Father, and be silent. I cannot admire such silence. The most highly gifted man, in point of literary, scientific attainments, and eloquence, who adheres to heathen and human traditions, though he surpass Benson, Milton and Pollock in description of hell and the torture of the lost, as well as other judgments of error, is but a pigmy in the hands of a babe in Christ who is rightly instructed and taught of God. How any adopted son of God, who knows and feels the power, the unction of the Holy Ghost, can be silent and never open his mouth that God may fill it, I am unable to comprehend. Oh, such silence is a fearful cause of dread that the man who hears the God of the Bible misrepresented and blasphemed (ignorantly it may be,) must be in gross darkness, or captivated by the fear of man. The fear of man! what a reproach to a Christian!

And after all, what is the roproach cast upon the Christian by the sects or the world? What harm does it do? Why, it works together for good to him who walks uprightly. Twenty-two years of persecution and reproach, though mountains high, cast upon an adopted child of God, instead of harming him, makes him stronger, firmer, and establishes him in the full assurance of faith, that God will never leave or forsake him, and that no weapon formed against him shall prosper. Blessed be God! There is some Christians of this character who know that I speak the truth and lie not, in this instance.

FROM ABBY A. PERRY.

BRO. STORRS.—I feel so thankful to hear from the dear ones who are looking for and expecting eternal life at the coming of the LIFE-GIVER, that I thought it might be a source of comfort to some of the little ones to hear a few words from their poor unworthy sister Perry. To all such, I would say, that through the mercy of our Covenant-keeping God, and the intercessions of His dear Son, I reached home in safety, though nearly sick with a cold; but I was soon restored to my usual health.

Dear brethren and sisters, whom I had the pleasure of meeting at Springfield, I shall never forget you while memory lasts. My mind often wanders away to your homes, and I think, if I had "wings," how I would visit you often, but then I am reminded that we are not immortal yet; cannot "mount up on wings as eagles, run and not be weary, walk and not faint;" so I will keep on praying for you, dear ones, and for the Kingdom to come, and God's will to be done on earth as it is in heaven. O, how I love to hear about "the Kingdom." I must confess that I was grieved that I did not hear any more about it at the camp-meeting. The theme of Life is blessed, and I rejoice in the hope of Life, but, I want to know, like Peter, what the inheritance is to be, and where it is to be. I am not ashamed of my hope, for it is the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. "Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tents with Isaac and Jacob, heirs (not inheritors) with him of the same promise. For he looked for a City (where, but in that promised land) whose builder and maker is God." How I enjoy searching the Scriptures of the Prophets because they say so much about Abraham's seed, and that land. Are we not the literal seed of Abraham, here in these U. S. of America? I believe we are.

Then turn to Isa xi. and begin to read and rejoice. O, what promises! Read the prophecies, and remember to be literalists then, as well as when you are talking about the "Life Doctrine." Remember that none of the prophecies concerning Messiah's kingdom has yet been fulfilled, and all will be as literally fulfilled on this earth as were those concerning his humiliation and death. I am afraid Christ will say to many, when he comes, as he said to some after he arose from the dead. "O, fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." O, let us believe and enter into "his rest." Psa. cxxxii. "For the Lord had chosen Zion. He had desired it for his habitation. This is my rest; here will I dwell, for I have desired it." The land promised to Abraham, that Israel did not enter into, "because they believed not." Heb. iii. and iv. chapters. Now please do not talk of a "new earth," while God has given us what he has promised in this earth.

God told David, chap. vii. 27, "that his kingdom should break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and stand for ever.

Little children, believe God, and "love one another."

O, such blessed peace as I have in believing God's word.

O, the prophecies! What glorious things are spoken of in them, which are about to be fulfilled. O, let us keep humble and not look to high.

"Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment. Seek righteousness; seek meekness, it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Zept. ii. 3.

I enjoyed much in reading J. Y. Barclay's writings concerning Jerusalem's future glory. It is a subject I have been interested in for sixteen or eighteen years. It is the language of all the prophecies, and, O, how many hours I have read them since the camp-meeting, when all in the house were asleep but myself.

Let me exhort you, again, to "Search the Scriptures." The Old Testament is too much neglected.

Bro. Grim, we think we comprehend your articles. Thank God for light and life. Amen. In hope of life, your sister.

SCOTLAND, CONN., Oct., 1869.

FROM DR. J. K. FINLEY.

BRO. STORRS: I was glad to see the extracts from Doctor I. W. Nevin's sermon on the death of President James Buchannan. Doctor Nevin is a brother-in-law of mine, a brother of my wife. He is a man of undoubted and active piety; was formerly one of the Professors in the Western Theological Seminary, (Presbyterian) in Alleghany City. Some twenty-five years ago he was called by the German Reformed Church to the Presidency of their College, and also placed at the head of their Theological Seminary, both located then in Mercersburg, Pa. The College, some twelve or fifteen years ago, was removed to Lancaster, Pa., and he went with it. He has since resided at Lancaster, and was nearest neighbor to Mr. Buchanan.

There are few men in our country equal, and none perhaps superior to him in profound scholarship and extensive learning. He has shown himself to, in a number of instances, superior to the prejudices and requirements of orthodoxy. I was not aware until I met with the extracts in the HERALD from his sermon, that he acknowledged the doctrine of inherent immortality rested upon Platonic Philosophy, and not upon the Bible. Of course, the Scribes and Pharisees will abuse him; but if they think to swerve him from what he believes is the truth, they will find themselves greatly mistaken.

Can you send me a full set of my articles taken from the "Niles Republican." I have given away all that I had, and have had many applications for them which I could not supply I am sorry I did not have at least a hundred of them printed for my own use, I could have disposed of them with great advantage to the cause. I don't like to be without set a for myself, and if you can send them to me, I will pay whatever is proper for them.

I remain very truly yours, in the best of bonds.

NILES, MICH., Oct. 6th, 1869.

Note by the Editor.

We are sorry to say, we have not a set of those articles left. A movement was made some months since to issue them in a pamphlet, but was not quite successful then. We propose now to revive the effort. The cost of the first edition will not fall much short of one hundred and fifty dollars; but the work should be done, and it can be done. Who will help now?

FROM T. F. HALL.

BRO. STORRS: I finish this day my 57th year. A "Brethren" preacher recently undertook to preach against our doctrines at a little place called Robtown, so I went to hear him. He did not know what he was talking about. It was, as usual, against Universalism. I wanted to make a few remarks, but his "bell-sheep" would not allow it. I asked him, Who it was that gave him that authority to shut the gate on me? He said, "It is none of your business." Well, said I, go ahead, then, and he did, to singing as hard as he could. When they had dismissed, I gave out an appointment for last Sabbath at 10 o'clock. When I went they had got a man to preach a funeral discourse of a young man that died last March. So I had to defer my meeting until 3 o'clock, P. M. I held it then in the school-house, and had a very good turn out. When I was through, and had dismissed, the directors wished to know if I could not come again. I said, yes, if I could get a house. "Well, you can have this." All right. So I go again on the first Sunday in October. I want tracts. I think they will pay for them.

I hope the HERALD will be sustained. I shall do this year all I can. I have been deferring preaching on account of the expenses. I was not able, as I thought. But now my brother's son, Samuel, takes me in the buggy when I go long distances, and I get help now. I do not charge for preaching.

May the Lord sustain you to do battle for the truth. I do not say how much I value the HERALD OF LIFE, but I think as much of it as any other man, and would not let it die if I was able to sustain it; no, not if it cost me $10,000 per year. What are riches, if we hoard them? Just nothing.

Yours, in the Lord.

CIRCLEVILLE, OHIO, Sept. 17, 1869.

FROM ELD. J. PARRY.

BRO. STORRS: Things are going on here much as usual—nothing to boast of. There are some orthodox believers in the personal reign of Christ; but they are shy of being identified with "materialism"—it is a shocking heresy, and (according to their views) is a great injury to the cause, making it so unpopular, so degrading to the dignity of human nature to deny the immortality of the soul. Those who are waiting for the truth to be popular will, most likely, have a tedious time of it; it has not been so for six thousand years, and however other things may progress, the gospel of the kingdom is dispised and rejected by the great mass of professors in all the churches. Nor is it to be wondered at—if people are going to heaven at death, to be with Christ, his return to the earth is of no importance. If Mahomed can go the mountain, the mountain need not go to him. Orthodoxy can see the mote of materialism in his brother's eye, and is anxious to pluck it out; but he is blind to the beam of eternal torture in his own eyes, that is in reality doing the mischief in the minds of all thinking men. They are asking the question, Is that religion good or true that consigns so many of God's creatures to endless woe? Would it not be more like a God of love and mercy to blot out of existence those who are not fit to live? For my part, I choose to take God at his word—"the wages of sin is death;" if he did not mean what he said, and repeated so many times, and what my judgment and common sense tells me is just and right, I certainly shall not look back again to orthodoxy to get out of the dilemma. The remedy would be much worse than the disease. I make my choice, then, once for all; I renounce for allegiance and worship the cruel god of "orthody;" if this is infidelity, so let be. I humbly desire to worship and obey the true and gracious God of the Bible, who "retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy."

SANDY HILL, N. Y., Oct. 3, 1869.

FROM EMELINE WOOD.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS: I awoke this morning, at 5 o'clock, with strong impressions that I must ask you all to pray for precious Bro. E. Wolcott, for God to heal him. I felt just as I did when I was losing my eyesight; and I do believe that God will heal him in answer to our prayers. I feel as though you all want him made every whit whole. If we ask God to do it for him. He says he would be enquired of to do the things we stand in need of; and we need Bro. Wolcott, and God needs him in the vineyard; for he says, "The harvest is great and the laborers few;" and I feel as if he wants to go out in the field to win souls to Christ; and the word says, "Whatsoever we ask in prayer, believing we receive it, we shall receive it." The love of Christ constrains me, and his words are true. I wish some brethren holding Life views were only here awhile, so that we could get together a band. for our Albany church is so opposed to the Life views, and I feel as though I am almost alone; but I had a Bible class at my house this afternoon, and we had a precious season examining the Life and Death question; but I am glad that we can have one general gathering once a year. It has lifted me up more above the world than ever before; and then our precious paper, so full of cheer and comfort; it is blessed this week. Now, you dear ones, let us try to see which of us can do the most to make it interesting; and may our blessed Editor give us some of those Sermons; and Bros. Pile, Moore, and others of those young brethren give us some of their good letters, or expositions of Scripture, so we can see how they progress in this good cause, to strengthen those who do not have preaching.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1869.

FROM R. E. LADD.

BRO. STORRS: With this I hand you $2 to renew my subscription for the HERALD, for the coming year. I am still unwell in my nervous system, physically I am able to do a good days work; but mentally I am prostrated: cannot read but a few minutes; perhaps I ought not to read any; cannot fix my thoughts on any subject only a brief period without confusing my mind and causing terrible pain to my head. I have heard no preaching for six months excepting two or three times; and then to my injury. I am not sure but my work is done. Still I hope that relief will come from the Lord. "Vain is the help of man." I am certain that I have no "immortal soul" dwelling in this "clayey tabernacle:" or else the "casket" is a great deal better than the "jewel" which it contains. I am looking and longing for "One LIFE-GIVER" to appear; not only to give me immortality, but also to change this vile body and fashion it after His most glorious body."

May the Lord help us my dear brother to steadfastly contend for the faith, and be ready to "put on immortality" at the appearing of the Lord. Your waiting brother,

SPRINGFIELD, Oct. 10, 1869.

DR. J. W. BECHTLE, Harrisburg, Pa., sends us three new subscribers, and writes: They are all good and reliable men. If God spares you and me, and the rest of the good working brethren, I hope we shall make a good year's work for the Lord in the way of scattering light and truth, and life only in the blessed Redeemer. Oh, how I rejoice in the glorious doctrine of immortality only in Christ. The light is breaking. May God hasten the day when it shall break over all the earth, and the redeemed of the Lord shall come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. I watch for the dear HERALD as one that watcheth for morning. O, how welcome it is to me. I am now beginning to reap some fruit of my last year's labor. Thank the Lord that I see some fruit of my toil, May God bless you and the cause of Life only in Christ.

In an earlier communication, DR. BECKTLE says: I am scattering the Documents I received from you. I took a hurried trip to Hagerstown, Md., last week, and took a number of Documents with me. I succeeded in interesting a number of the passengers in these tracts, and they received them with the promise that they would attentively read them. May God bless them to the everlasting welfare of all who received them.

It is not a year since this brother subscribed for the HERALD OF LIFE; and his name now appears for the first time to our readers. It is evident he means work. If all our other friends will take hold with a like determination, we shall not lack for help, and the HERALD OF LIFE will have from five to ten thousand subscribers shortly. The work must be done; and let every one resolve to do his or her part. "Onward, Onward," is our cry.

LOUISE R. MOREY, East Canaan, N. H., writes: Many thanks to you for continuing my paper so long; and now I will send you my mite.

The Lord is very good and merciful to me, and continually I am securing blessings, for which to bless and praise His dear name.

I love the cause of truth, and only regret that I can do no more for its advancement. When I hear our Advent preachers quote John v, 28, 29, and then add, "If there was no other text in the Bible on the resurrection of the wicked dead, that would be enough for me," I feel just like asking God to open their eyes that they may see the truth as it is in Jesus. I dare not question their honesty; but would they deal thus with some other questions of doctrine?

Would they not search to know if these things were so, yea or nay?

The Lord bless you, and all the dear ones who have so nobly sustained our precious paper; and may He soon gather the scattering flock of Israel, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

A SISTER writes: I am very poor and sick now; so, I shall have to part with the HERALD OF LIFE for the present, which I am sorry to do, as there are precious truths brought to light in it. It does my soul good to hear that truth is prospering. Although I have not the pleasure of hearing preaching often, yet it is good preaching to me to read your sermons and the precious tracts. I shall feel lost without the paper, but I believe God will open the way yet so that I can subscribe for it again. Remember me when it goes well with you. Yours, hoping for eternal life through Christ our LIFE-GIVER.

The paper will continue to go to you: so, fear not, but trust in the Lord always and for all things.

JULINE FRENCH, East Providence, R. I., writes: I praise the Lord that the HERALD OF LIFE is to be sustained the coming year. It is all the preaching I have. It comes laden richly with the glorious truths of the gospel of the kingdom. Oh how it did rejoice my heart to read the letters from the brethren and sisters after they came from camp-meeting. I would like to have been there; it would have been a feast to me. I thank the Lord he has raised up such a host to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom and its kindred truths.

MRS. L. JOHNSON, Hartford, Conn., writes: I desire to acknowledge myself a believer of Life only in Christ; and also, that reading the HERALD OF LIFE affords me much joy. I do and will circulate the tracts and papers, and defend the truth to the best of my ability. I love the truth above everything else, and it makes me rejoice and feel strong to see it brought out so clear.

It is written, "Whosoever will, let him take of the waters of life freely." I never did or could believe the doctrine of endless misery. I do love to have his word harmonized. I love him with all my mind, might and strength.

My sympathy is with the noble band that are patiently and firmly seeking the truth; and I believe that their labor will not be in vain, in the Lord.

GEO. FLINT, Central Falls, R. I., writes: The Bible and the HERALD OF LIFE, are my spiritual "meat and drink," I study them as well as I am able. It is all the preaching I have; for I am 77 years old and feeble, cannot walk but little, and am dependent in no small degree. In the HERALD of July 21st, I read an article on Paradise, in which the writer says; "If I had the time I would prove that the thief did not die the same day that Christ did." I believe he did not. I want more light on this subject, and wish the writer of the article would find time to give us the benefit of the light he has. The next day was the preparation day; and the thief, I believe died that day. But I want to know at what particular time he died on that day. All the information I can get on that point will be thankfully received. Yours in love of the truth.

MRS. M. C. CONVERSE, Ettie, Iowa, writes: I prize the HERALD more and more, as it is the only preaching I get on the second coming of Christ. Many of the people here do not believe in Christ's personal coming again to earth; but think he comes at death; and the preaching that I hear, when I attend church, does not afford much nourishment to a believer in the mortality of man and the Life-giving power of Jesus Christ, the blessed Son of God. I do feel thankful indeed that my eyes have been opened to see the blessed truths of the gospel; and my prayer is, that you may be spared to labor for the truth.

I have often wished that I could live where I might hear some preaching on the coming of Christ; and perhaps some good brother may travel through here and break the bread of life to us yet, if time remains a year or two longer.

MERCY A, COUILLARD, Swansville, Me., sends $1 for the HERALD OF LIFE, and writes: I love the doctrine it contains, and believe it firmly. It is all preaching I have; and I thank the Lord for that. I have some good friends that can't believe as I do; but I wish not to have doctrine separate us where the true spirit is manifested. Pray for me that I may be restored to health; for the prayer of the righteous availeth much.

Reminiscence of the Past.

BY MRS. L. R. K. BISHOP.

Father! I am gazing at the stars to-night,
Those sparkling gems set by a master-hand
In Evening's cornet: and as their soft,
Subdued and mellow light falls soothingly
On leaf and flower, the slumb'ring memories
Of the shadowy past awake—and with a sweet,
But mournful voice, they whisper to the heart
Of Home, and thee! Home—there's something
In that sacred word, that stirs the fountains
Of the heart's great deep; and sends the crimson
Blood circling the veins with quicker flow,—
No other—falls so softly on the ear,
Or hath such music in it.

The fairest flower that gems the robe of Spring,
With all its wealth of gorgeous, rainbow hues,
Hath been concealed in one sweet em'rald bud:
E'en so, that word that infant lips might speak,
Infolds the treasured sweets of a whole life.
All that is loved or lovely on the earth,
All that commands the homage of the heart,
Or is enshrined within its holy place—
Father and mother, husband, brother, friend,
Daughter and sister, wife and little ones,
And e'en our hopes and prospects of a life
To come—(for home would scarce be home, without The altar and the sacrifice;) all, all
Are there—and all contained in that one word;
There's not another word of earthly mould,
So fraught with love, or so allied to heaven!

Father!
My pulse beats wildly when I think of thee,
As I beheld thee in the morn of life;
That cloudless morn—when all around was fair;
And earth seemed bright, and beautiful, and good.
Age had not bowed thy venerable form,
Nor deeply laid the furrows on thy cheek;
And thy strong arm—that since such weary months
Has palsied lain, and helpless by thy side—
Was powerful to shield thy little ones.
Ah! then I wept, in that glad morn of life,
As weeps the fair young Spring—her April clouds
Bathed in the sun's glad beams, yield showers of pearls!
So tears, falling in childhood's sunny hours,
Are draped with smiles.

Father! not thus,
Are failing the sad tears I'm weeping now
For thou art gone! yon softly beaming stars
Shine on thy grave—and ne'er again shall greet
Thy daughter's ear, or Father's welcome!
Oh, I remember with a throbbing heart
When last we met—when last from 'neath that dear
Parental roof, our prayers went up mingling
With thine! 'twas in thy sick room, round thy bed
Of pain, we knelt that morn the last of our Brief stay; and poured our prayers for the last time
With thine, into the kind and listening ears of Heaven.
Fresh in my mem'ry too, as fresh as morn,
Is lingering the last sad farewell scene.
Blessings were murmured—and the fond adieu
Was breathed mid choking sighs—and on my cheek
Tear-bathed, seems burning still that parting kiss!
Nor knew I then, that it would be the last!

* * * * * * *

Months had flown past since last my lips pressed thine;
And to my breast I'd clasped a little one—
And felt the beatings of a mother's heart—
And gazed, with all a mother's tenderness,
On her fair form, and kissed her lily brow.
And brought to view fresh buds of lovliness,
That gave the future greater promise still;
Affection pictured oft the meeting scene,
When breathing once again the air of Home,
My precious flower should on thy bosom rest—
And thus the pleasure coveted be thine.
Methinks it would have smoothed the bed of pain,
And sent new life through all thy palsied limbs;
To have gazed into the depths of her young eyes,
But thou wast gone—ere thou hadst held her in Thy fond embrace or called down blessings on Her little golden head! And when they laid
Thee in the quiet grave, and placed the sod
Above thy peaceful breast; thy daughter in
Her wave washed home was calm—and on her cheek,
Fanned by the Ocean's breath, lingered no tears—
Nor did she know that she was Fatherless!

The Nations of the Earth. Who are They?

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

"In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."—Gen. xxii. 18.

In my article "On the Gospel" I showed that there are two leading propositions contained in it:

1. That all the nations of the earth shall be blessed, as a final result.

2. That the seed of Abraham shall bless all nations, as the means.

Both of these propositions are essential to the gospel.

They must always sustain the relation to each other of means to ends. They comprehend the whole system. As much as the nations need to be blessed, so much the kingdom needs to be improved.

If to bless all the nations of the earth is the final end of the gospel, it is of great importance for us to understand this fact distinctly, as it is this end that suggests and adapts the means necessary to its accomplishment, and which gives character to the whole purpose.

My present object is, to show who the nations of the earth are; the position they occupy in the kingdom, and the character of the blessings promised to them.

1. Who are the nations of the earth?

They are not the seed. The seed will become the heavenly by a resurrection from the dead. They will be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye, and become immortal so that they can die no more. They will have spiritual bodies, like the angels.

These things are never affirmed of the nations. But it is said, that God formed man of the dust of the ground, that he was to live by breathing the breath of life, and by eating of the fruits of the earth; that he was to have dominion over the animals below him, and over all the earth; that he was to multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it. He was made subject to God's law. Such was the man who was a sample of the inhabitants of the earth. Adam begat a son in his own likeness; and Paul said, "As is the earthy such are they also that are earthy." God made the earth to be inhabited; and such are the people he made to inhabit it. These people will inhabit the earth forever; for God made it for this purpose, and he did not make it in vain. The inhabitants of the earth, then, will always be earthy; they will always have dominion over the animals; and their business will always be the cultivation of the earth. These people may be called by different names, but these names always designate the same earthy people.

In Gen. xii. 3, these people are called, "all the families of the earth." In chap. xxii. 18, they are called "all the nations of the earth." In Psa. ii. 8, "the heathen." In Isa., lxvi. 23, "all flesh." In Dan. ii. 38, "the children of men," and in chap. vii. 14, they are called "all people, nations and languages." These several descriptions are used interchangeably and apply to the same people.

Then, the nations of the earth are composed of earthy inhabitants; they are in fact just what the promise describes them to be, "the nations of the earth." They are earthy nations; the only nations of which we have any account, in the Bible, or out of it. The promise made to Abraham, and which is called the gospel, spends its whole force on "the nations of the earth" as its ultimate end. The promise is just as broad as the nations of the earth, and just as perpetual. It knows nothing outside of them, nor beyond them. If men die out of the nations before the time comes for them to be blessed, the promise cannot reach them, for they are not of the nations. If the nations should ever be changed into heavenly or spiritual beings, as the saints will be at the resurrection, the promise cannot reach them; for they are no longer of the nations of the earth, and the promise is limited to such.

The nations of the earth, then, are earthy people, such as God prepared for the kingdom when he made the world, and they must remain such while the promise is of force, and while the kingdom continues.

2. What position do the nations occupy in the kingdom?

They occupy the position of subjects. Psa. xxii. 27, 28, "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him." Why do they do this? Because "the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governor among the nations." The Lord rules. For what object? That the nations may worship before him.

Psa. vi. 7, "O let the nations be glad and sing for joy; let all the people praise thee." What is to be the occasion for such joy and gladness? "The Lord shall judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth." For what object will he do this? He will do it to bless them, and "that his way may be known upon earth, and his saving health among all nations, and that all the ends of the earth may fear him." This is the end to be sought. The means are the governing the people righteously.

Psa., lxxii, "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. His name shall endure forever, his name shall be continued as long as the sun." What is all this for? What end will be reached by it? This will be done, "that men may be blessed in him, that all nations may serve him, and call him blessed as long as the sun and moon endure;" and that in this way "the whole earth may be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen." What position do the nations occupy in this Psalm? They are subjects in the kingdom. They serve him, and are blessed in him, and call him blessed.

Isa. ii. 1–5, "And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." In this passage the Lord judges the nations. For what? That they may learn war no more; that the same nations that practiced war when he began to judge them, may enjoy the blessing of perpetual peace. The end to be sought here is their blessing; the means used is judging them.

Isa. vi. 7, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." In this passage, the government which is to be without end, is the means of securing judgment and justice to the nations, or the subjects in the kingdom forever.

Isa. xi. 9, "A Branch shall grow out of the roots of the stem of Jesse, and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, and he shall be of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither shall he reprove after the hearing of his ears, but he shall judge righteously." The result of this judgment will be, "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." The means used in this passage are, the righteous judgment of the people by the Branch. The end secured is the blessing all the nations of the earth, with such a knowledge of the Lord that none are left to hurt or destroy.

Isa. lxvi. 15–24, "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots, like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many. . . . And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord."

The means used in this passage are, the coming of the Lord, and the things done in connection with that coming. The end reached by the use of these means is, that all flesh (not slain in verse 15) shall come and worship before the Lord.

Dan. vii. 14, "And there was given him (who came with the clouds of heaven) dominion, glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

The end to be secured by the transaction recorded in this passage, is, that all people, nations, and languages should serve God; and that they should serve him forever, so that their service shall not pass away, but be perpetual. To secure this end, the everlasting rulership over all people, nations, and languages was given to him who came in the clouds of heaven. The nations are subjects in this passage.

Zech. xiv., "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth. . . . And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." The end to be secured in this passage, is, that all nations shall worship before the King, the Lord of hosts at Jerusalem from year to year. In order to secure this result, "The Lord shall be King over all the earth." The nations are the subjects.

Rev. ii. 26, "And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." The nations are the subjects here.

Rev. v. 9, 10, "And hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth (over all nations). These nations are the only recognized subjects in the kingdom, as all the saints are to be the rulers.

Rev. xi. 15, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever" (over the inhabitants of the earth). In this place, the nations are again assigned to the position of subjects.

Rev. xv. 4, "For all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest." The judgments of God were here manifested to secure the worship of all nations before him. They are still subject to him who is styled the King of nations.

Rev. xxi. 24, 26, "And the nations shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it; and they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it." The nations still exist, and are subject to the government which has its seat in the New Jerusalem.

Rev. xxii. 1–5, "In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bear twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him. . . . And they shall reign forever and ever." Over whom? Over the nations who are to be healed by the leaves of the tree of life. The nations of the earth have always been, and will always be the subjects in the kingdom which God prepared when he made the world. They are the only subjects recognized in the Bible. The inhabitants of the earth being subjects in the kingdom of God are one of its elements; and the kingdom being in rebellion is in disorder, and needs the gospel. The final end of the gospel is to so bless the nations of the earth that there may be no more curse in the kingdom. This will put the kingdom in order. Everything in the gospel must be to secure this end. The object of all government is to bless those who are its subjects.

3. The blessings. In what will the prosperity of the nations consist?

It will consist in things which are adapted to earthy inhabitants. They will be blessed with a righteous government. "The Lord shall be King over all the earth." Zech. xiv. 9. "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor." Psa. lxxii. 4. "He shall judge the earth in righteousness." Isa. xi. 4. "The government shall be upon his shoulders, . . . and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice forever." Isa. ix. 6, 7.

This government is adapted to an earthy people, and only to an earthy people; and for such a people it is to have no end. This government will be the means of all the blessings, promised in the pospel to the nations of the earth.

Under this government the nations will cease to learn war. Isa. ii. 4, They will learn to fear the Lord. They will prosper, and enjoy an "abundance of peace as long as the sun and moon endure." Psa. lxxii, They shall go up to Jerusalem from year to year to worship the Lord. Isa. lxvi. 23, They shall be of one judgment; they shall speak the same thing, and shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall restore Zion. Isa. lii. 8, "The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth, as the waters do the sea." The wolf and the lamb shall lie down together, and there shall be none to destroy or make afraid in all the earth. Isa. xi. 9. Justice and judgment shall be executed in all the earth. Jer. xxiii. 5. They shall not plant and another eat; build houses and another inhabit them. But they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them; they shall build houses and inhabit them. They shall not bring forth for trouble. Jerusalem shall be created a rejoicing, and her people a joy; and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying. Isa. lxv. 17. Every man shall die only for his own sins. Ezek. xviii. The time will come under this government when the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick. Isa. xxxiii. 24. For the leaves of the tree of life will be for the healing of the nations. Rev. xxii. 2. And there shall be no more pain, nor death nor curse. Rev. xxi. 5.

Then shall the earth yield her increase. Psa. lxvii. 6. The parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water, and the desert shall blossom as the rose. Isa. xxxv. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree; and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree. Isa. lv. 13. The shower shall come down in his season. Ezek. xxxiv. 26. And I will call for the corn and will increase it: and I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, and the land that was desolate shall become as the garden of Eden. Ezek. xxxvi. 29. The tree of life will grow on either side of the river of life, and the leaves of the tree will be for the healing of the nations, and there shall be no more curse. Rev. xxii. 2–5.

These are some of the blessings promised to the nations of the earth. They are adapted to earthy people, and only to earthy people.

These blessings will secure to the nations of the earth, to which they are applied, the highest possible prosperity. These blessings are in fulfilment of the promise in our text, that all the nations of the earth shall be blessed. The things I have named will bless the nations of the earth in the highest sense of blessing. These blessings are not for the seed, but for the nations. They are not for the heavenly, but for the earthy. They are not for the rulers, but for the subjects. They are not to supersede the kingdom prepared when the world was made, but to restore it. They are the glad tidings of the kingdom which have been spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began.

I will close this article by recapitulating the points made.

1. The nations of the earth, are earthy nations, the only nations known. To them the promise is always to be applied.

2. These nations always occupy the position of subjects in the kingdom promised to the saints. To affect the condition of these nations so that the curse will be no longer needed, is the ultimate object of the gospel.

3. All the blessings promised to the nations are adapted to earthy people, and to no other. They belong to the subjects in the kingdom and not to the rulers.

In my next I will consider the seed in the promise.

The Ecumenical Council.

The Greek word from which "ecumenical" is derived means the inhabited world, so that we readily see the pretensions to universality implied in the composition of the Ecumenical Council which is called by the Pope to meet at Rome on the 8th of December next. There are more pretensions, however. Dr. Cumming deserves some credit for his persistence in getting light thrown upon one branch of this subject. The whole Protestant church is debarred from coming to the Council, except as individual penitents. This announcement probably troubles Dr. Cumming very little, but it seems that the English ritualists take it rather hardly. They had flattered themselves that they were the true sons of The Church, and would be recognized as such by the "Holy Father." But he seems to regard their half-way demonstrations as of no value; they must either come over to Rome, body and soul, or continue to be lumped together with other heretics. The Pope is right enough from his point of view. If a man wants to be a Catholic, let him be one; but this playing with the baubles of one creed while standing in the ranks of another is an absurdity to men of sense the world over.

The Ecumenical Council, then, will be an exclusive, old-fashioned Roman Catholic affair. A short time ago the prospect was that its deliberations would be of the most quiet, hum-drum character. Recently, however, a new turn has been given to the situation. Dr. Dollinger, one of the leading Catholic prelates of Germany, has protested in advance against the authority the Council is expected to assume. And now comes the sudden defection of Father Hyacinthe, the great Carmelite monk and most eloquent orator of the whole Roman Church, as well as member of the French Academy, an intrepid assailant of the vices of modern society. Such a secession as this has not so astonished Rome since the days of Luther.

The extent, however, to which Father Hyacinthe takes exception to the Papacy or to the Roman Catholic doctrines, and the amount of his following, remain to be seen. The defection cannot but produce a deep impression upon the Council, particularly if it has been the design, as alleged, to preclaim the new doctrines of the Pope's encyclical letter as binding on all Catholic States as well as upon the individual adherents of the church. The leaders of the movement will pause and make sure of their ground before they advance to new pretensions, especially as the old dogmas seem to be giving way under their feet.—Boston Journal.

To persevere in one's duty, and to be silent, is the best answer to calumny.

True Stories, No. 3.

THOUGHTS FOR OUR LITTLE ONES, BY SISTER MARIA.

Pardon me for relating another story about Ria. If you believe me, she ran away again! Oh how naughty we can be sometimes.

Mother said: "Ria mustn't go to school today. Father calls it the coldest day we have had this winter."

So the little asthmatic girl, now nine years of age, sat down, and thought of being contented at home. Then she mused thus: "My health is so poor it is but a few days that I can attend school, so few that I seldom get to the head of our large class. If I am absent to-night I must go from next to the head to the foot." And then she cried. Another moment and she was out in the frosty air, bound to reach school in season, though it was three quarters of a mile. In her haste she could not get her mittens. Presently jack-frost nibbled her fingers. She put them under her cape, but Jack found them there. Then she put them up under her arms; but Jack followed. At last they felt so curious! "Like needles pricking," she thought. Then on looking, her fingers stood out like candles, looking very white. But they did not pain her now, and she let them dangle by her side.

"Wait for me; do wait for me!" she cried, as she heard a sleigh before her. The oxen and sled and frost nearly prevented her agonized cries from being heard, but, at length, the neigbor went back and took the little run-away upon his back, just as though she had been a bag of salt. He put his great double mittens unto her hands, and carried her to the next house. As soon as she got in the man held her hands in a pail of cold water. "Oh dear! Oh dear! such awful pain. Do let me take my hands out; please do." "No, Ria, your hands are frozen, and cold water will take out all the frost." Likely it did, for when at last her hands came out of the pail they were covered with thick ice to her wrists.

"Go for her father," said one. "Oh don't," she said; "he'll whip me." But after him they went. The woman made her a little bed by the fire, on the floor; for the pain made her very sick and faint.

"Won't you lie down here with me, on the fireside? Then when father comes he won't whip me," said Ria. So down she got, like a good grandmother.

By and by the old big bells were heard, and poor Ria didn't know which to dread most—her father or the "whisky" he was to bring to put on her hands.

"So much for not minding your mother," said her father. "You ought to be whipped," but the old woman, by her side, pleaded—"whipped enough."

Muffled and completely rolled in a blanket they took her home. For long days she was confined to the house, nor did she go to school again that winter.

Did she learn obedience? We think she never got into much serious trouble after this.

How much better it would be if all children would be obedient. How much trouble they would escape, and how exceeding pleasant it would be for their parents.

Ria has children of her own now, and once in a while tells them her punishment for disobedience.

Let us pray the Lord to help us to be obedient, for this is our duty.

Boorish Boys and Girls.

Did you ever see a well-dressed boy or girl compel a poor woman carrying a big basket or bundle to step off the sidewalk? I have, and I have also seen a glossy-coated boy or a silk clad miss give such poor persons a look of scorn which seemed to say:

"I am china, you are delf. Get out of my way! How dare you presume to stand in my path."

"You civilized little boor," I say to myself at such a sight, "you haven't a particle of politeness in you, If you had, you would pity that poor burdened woman, and get out of her way.

If I have such an impolite boy or girl among my readers, I wish he would take a lesson from the life of Napoleon. When he was on the island of St. Helena he walked out with a lady one day. The lady kept straight on, but the ex-emperor gently waved her on one side, saying:

"Respect the burden, madam."

Respect the burden! That's a good motto. You will find that most of your schoolmates and friends carry burdens of some sort. Not one on their backs, perhaps, but in their hearts. Little Maggie, for example, carries a burden of bashfulness. Respect it by being kind and gentle to the little dearie. Your friend Robert, whom you call a "slow coach," carries a burden of dulness. Respect it by explaining his lessons to him. Your mother carries a burden of sickness and your father of care and work. Respect their burdens by giving them love, and obedience, and help. In short, you must respect everybody's burden whom you know, and thus help make the world happier. Do you understand? Very good. Then mind you respect the burden.—Selected.

Truthfulness is a corner-stone in character, and if it is not firmly laid in youth, there will ever after be a weak spot in the foundation.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CALIFORNIA: THE LIFE VIEWS.

BR. STORRS: The accompanying manuscript was written for "The Advocate," a Methodist paper, published in San Francisco. I send it, and the article rejecting it, to you, as a specimen of the honesty of our Pacific Coast Orthodoxy. I do not ask you to publish it, as it would take too much of your valuable space, for which you never seem to lack good matter. However, I submit it to you to do as you please with. The original article in the "Advocate" covered so much ground, that it was impossible to more than merely touch all the points in a newspaper article, and my reply was necessarily far short of justice to the subject.

Here is the article rejecting the communication to the "Advocate":

"ANNIHILATION."—We have received a communication under the above caption, in which an effort is made to prove the dogma that the soul is material and perishes with the body at death, unless rendered immortal through faith in Jesus Christ before death. It is a gross form of materialism, which the writer cannot teach in our columns. A Christian paper must not become a channel through which to send forth sophistries that are calculated to mislead the simple minded and the unstable. It is asking too much of the ADVOCATE—so much that it cannot be granted. There are mediums in abundance through which infidelity may be propagated outside of religious newspapers.

The communication, now before us, is written in respectful language, and we think it probable that the writer is sincere in his statements. He has been led astray, and is stumbling in the dark. He should not be ambitious to draw others into the mazes of error.

Seducers wax worse and worse—deceiving and being deceived.

Don't you think the first paragraph fully substantiates the last?

Yours, in hope of the resurrection.

WM. N. GLENN.

STOCKTON, CAL., Sept. 28, 1869.

EDITOR ADVOCATE: I have just noticed a communication in your issue of August 12th, over the signature of "Stability," containing a "summary of things" which Annihilationists "believe and teach," as "gathered up by the writer from several different books and tracts published by themselves." He further intimates that "it requires an endless wresting and perverting of opposing Scripture to substantiate these doctrines." And, he has endeavored therein to give an exact knowledge of the fundamental principles upon which their system of doctrines is built, just as he understands their books to teach them.

Now, Mr. Editor, as a Christian brother, you will doubt no agree that the only legitiment question regarding any doctrine is comprised in this inquiry — Is it true? not whose faith does it "subvert?" nor whose mind will it "unsettle?"

The first of the "summary of things," as "gathered up" by your correspondent, is as follows:

(a.) Man is a single material body, being, or entity, formed from the dust of the ground and nothing else. This single living entity; or body, constitutes the whole personality, manhood and being of man."

That statement is correct; but what "opposing Scripture" is "wrested and perverted?" We have no account of the manner of man's creation, but that given by Moses in Gen. ii. 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." It will be noticed that he was man before the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils; and that man was made of the ground—"and nothing else," so far as the record informs us as the forming of man. It will also be noticed that it was not a living soul that was breathed into his nostrils, but the breath of life; and man became a living soul. And with this account of man being formed of the dust of the ground "and nothing else," agree the words of God in pronouncing the curse upon Adam for his disobedience, Gen. iii. 19, "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Also, Psa. ciii. 8, "For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." Also, 1 Cor. xv. 45, "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." (Mark the distinction.) And in 47th verse, "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven."

The second finding of your correspondent is:

(b.) When his body dies, the whole man is dead; his lifeless organization and being perish and return to dust; the whole man is annihilated; he is as though he had not been."

The first clause of the above paragraph is correctly stated. The remainder is what "Annihilationists" believe respecting the wicked. They believe just what the Scripture saith. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." The last clause is the language of Obadiah in relation the heathen opposers of God's people; to which may be added the testimony of David in Psa. xxxvii., "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Also, the testimony of Solomon, Prov. xxi. 16, "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." John says they "shall not see life;" Jesus tells us plainly, in John vi, whom he will "raise up at the last day;" and also in Luke xx what class shall be "accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead."

I pass the next paragraph in the "summary," as the merit or substance thereof is absorbed in other parts of the article. But the following demands attention:

(e.) The blood is the life of the body, or the life principle of the body; and the live body is the whole man. [It follows therefore as a necessary conclusion from the foregoing, that it is the presence and circulation of the blood in the body—as it exists before birth—and not "The breath of the Almighty" that made man a living soul.]

The statement in this paragraph is correct, and Scriptural; but the "necessary conclusion" of "Stability," contained in the brackets, is not quite so clear. In Leviticus xvii. 11, it is recorded, "for the life of the flesh is in the blood; and in the 14 verse: "For it is the life of all flesh, the blood of it is for the life thereof; therefore, I said unto the children of Israel, ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh; for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof; whosoever eateth it shall be cut off."

The air or breath that we and all animals breathe may well be called "the breath of the Almighty," for surely it belongs to him. But how did God "breathe into" man's "nostrils the breath of life" when "he became a living soul?" Turn to the 37th chapter of Ezekiel, and, after the resurrection of the dry bones, we read "there was no breath in them;" and the 9th verse reads,—"Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live."

(f.) The doctrine, derived in the manner following by other Christians, from God's revealed word of truth, that man has a soul which can and does live after the body has been killed and is dead, (Matt. x. 28) that he has dwelling within his physical body, the outward man, perishing tabernacle of clay, (Job iv. 19; 2 Peter i. 13, 14; 2 Cor. iv. 16 and v. 1; Eph. iii. 16,) an inward man that is a quickening spirit, (1 Cor. xv. 45; John vi. 63,) a spirit that giveth life to the body, and without which indwelling spirit the body is dead, (Jas. ii. 17 and 26) is denounced by annihilationists as a Pagan fable, attired in a theological dress by a priesthood of blind guides, and by them baptized Christian doctrine. [If light be darkness, how great is that darkness! Matt. vi. 23.]

Not one of the above texts affirm "that man has a soul which can and does live after the body;" much less do they or any other Scriptures affirm "that he has dwelling within his physical body an inward man that is a quickening spirit." No; "that which is born of the flesh is flesh." It was the last Adam that "was made a quickening Spirit (2 Cor. xv. 45); and he "quickeneth whom he will," (John v. 21,) on these conditions: "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 11. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," (Rom. vi. 23,) not through Adam, as the above paragraph would seem to teach. It must be a "Pagan fable," to say the least of it, that would teach the natural man as inherently possessing what the spiritual man, Jesus Christ, died to give him.

But I pass to the next finding, which might have been given a little more lucidly with a little less of sarcasm:

(g.) That dreadful place of torment for the wicked is annihilated; in other words, it is discovered to be a theological hoax, perpetrated upon the ignorant followers of blind guides who not knowing the Scriptures themselves are continually leading others into the ditch. But under the skillful manipulations of the sacred Scriptures, by these clever experts in theology and Biblical criticism, that frightful place loses its terror, its sulphur, its fervor, and dwindles down to a very quiet, harmless, inoffensive hole in the ground. It is merely the burial place and abode of the dead, both the righteous and the wicked. It is not a place of punishment. That harsh, uncouth old Saxon word Hell, is, to say the least of it, a very distasteful, unhappy translation of the Hebrew word sheol and the Greek equivalent word hades. The true and scriptural signification of sheol and hades (according to Annihilationists,) is conveyed to the mind by the more agreeable English words grave, grave-yard, burial place, cemetery. [Thus, for instance, "The wicked shall be turned into the cemetery, (or shoel) and all the nations that forget God." Pas. ix. 17.] Without any discrimination whatever in regard to character or moral fitness, the righteous and the wicked, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the noble and the ignoble, the young and the old, are all turned into shoel (or the cemetery) and are there annihilated together by being returned to dust and so becoming as though they had never been. The only difference between them after they get there is this: all the righteous will ultimately be revived into life, or raised from a state of annihilation in death and taken out of sheol (or the grave) while the dust of the wicked is simply passed by, and they are left, there to remain forever annihilated within it. And this is all the punishment the wicked have, or ever will have. His death is made perpetual. The wages (a servant of) sin is not suffering, it is not dying, it is not death; it is an interminable continuance in death, or sheol, beyond the day when the righteous are raised up and taken out of it. [This is encouragement to the wicked to be as wicked as they possibly can be.]

The "Annihilationists" have no objection to "that harsh, uncouth old Saxon word Hell," if it will be allowed its "old Saxon" meaning; but we do think its modern definition "a very distasteful, unhappy translation of the Hebrew word sheol and the Greek equivalent word hades." God has placed death as the ultimatum of sin. "Thou shalt surely die;" "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" "The wages of sin is death;" and many like expressions indicate, in plain terms, that death is the extreme penalty of the law. All actual death is of itself eternal, except it be conquered by the Spirit of him who conquered death for those who believe in him. There is a great mistake made by those who confound the "quickening Spirit" of our Redeemer with the spirit of the natural man. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36. Look, too, at the very destructible materials with which the wicked are compared—chaff, stubble, thorns, briers, tares, etc.,—which are "utterly consumed" in their burning. Only those who are "made partakers" of the Spirit of Jesus can sing, "Oh death, where is thy sting? Oh grave, where is thy victory?" If the wicked can see any "encouragement" in choosing death rather than life, that is no reason for withholding the truth from others. It is "whosoever will," that Jesus died to redeem from "sin and death." They who faithfully preach the truth are in no way responsible for the choice of the wicked.

But to proceed with the "Summary":

(h.) The theological heaven of most Christians is ignored and discarded. What the Scriptural heaven of Annihilationists is, or is to be—if they admit there is or will be one—the writer has not been able to determine, so little is there said about it in language that is direct, or in terms that are positive.

Had your correspondent omitted this paragraph I should have been inclined to think him pretty well read up in the "different books and tracts," of which he speaks. But the "Scriptural heaven of the Annihilationists" is such a prominent feature of all their books and tracts, that any one who "has not been able to determine" what it is, has certainly read but little of them. But let us see what is the "Scriptural heaven" for those "which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead." Please refer to the following passages, and by means of a reference Bible many others may be found of like import: Luke i. 3–33; Psa. xxxii. 10, 11, 22, 29; Prov. ii. 21, 22; Isa. ix. 6, 7; Jer. xxiii. 5–8; Dan. ii. 44, 45; and vii. 13–28; Matt. v. 5; 2 Pet. iii. 13.

(i.) Adam was not created in the image of God as most Christians have supposed and ignorantly understood the Bible to teach. (Gen. i. 26, 27.) He was created simply and merely an animal, but with a capacity to attain to the image of God. He did attain to, or acquire that image in a way the Lord did not intend, that is, by developing in the wrong direction; which, being interpreted, means, by committing sin.

(j.) Neither did Adam lose the image of God by committing sin, as our false and blinded teachers have always instructed us. On the contrary, that is the very way he obtained it! Such is their doctrine.

There is further evidence that "Stability's" reading of those "different books and tracts" has not been sufficient to warrant him in undertaking to "give an exact knowledge" of their fundamental principles. "Annihilationists" believe that man was made just as God's word says he was made; that God gave him a simple animal test—to eat or not to eat a certain fruit—to try him, whether he would be obedient or not; at the same time telling him that if he ate thereof he should surely die; that man did eat, and became subject to death. "By man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." "The first man is of the earth, earthy." "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy." "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God," and "Death has passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." What a mournful spectacle poor man presents at this stage! But a brighter day dawns! "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "The second man is the Lord from heaven," and "as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life." "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

Yours, in Christ, desiring truth. G.

THE COMING ECUMENICAL COUNCIL.

THE following is the letter which "Father Hyacinthe" addressed to the general of his order at Rome, on the subject of his present attitude toward the "Holy See:"

MY VERY REVEREND FATHER: During the five years of my ministry at Notre Dame de Paris, despite the open attacks and secret accusations of which I have been the object, your esteem and confidence have never failed me for a moment. I preserve numerous testimonials of them written by your own hand, and which were addressed as much to my preaching as to myself. Whatever may happen, I shall hold them in grateful remembrance. To-day, however, by a sudden change, the cause of which I do not seek in your heart, but in the intrigues of a party all powerful at Rome, you arraign what you encouraged, you censure what you approved, and you require that I should speak a language or preserve a silence which would no longer be the entire and loyal expression of my conscience. I do not hesitate an instant. With language perverted by a command or mutilated by reticence I shall not ascend the pulpit of Notre Dame. I express my regret for this to the intelligent and courageous Archbishop who has given his pulpit to me, and sustained me there against the bad will of men of whom I shall speak at the proper time. I express my regrets to the imposing auditory who surrounded me there with its attendance, its sympathies—I was nearly going to say its friendship. I would not be worthy of the auditory of the Archbishop, or of my conscience, nor of God, if I would consent to act before them in such a role. I separate myself at the same time from the convent in which I have resided, and which under the new circumstances that have happened to me renders it for me a prison of the soul. In acting thus I am not unfaithful to my vows. I have promised monastic obedience, but limited by the honesty of conscience, the dignity of my person and my ministry. I have promised under the benefit of that superior law of justice and of royal liberty which is, according to the Apostle St. James, the proper law of the Christian.

It is for the more perfect practice of this holy liberty that I came to ask at the cloister, now more than ten years ago, in the elan of an enthusiasm free of all human calculation—I shall not venture to add free of all the illusion of youth—if, in exchange for my sacrifices, I am to-day offered chains, I have not only the right but the duty to reject them? The present hour is solemn. The Church passes through one of the most violent, dark and decisive crises of its existence here below. For the first time in 300 years an Ecumenical Council is not only convoked, but declared necessary; such is the expression of the Holy Father. It is not in such a moment that a preacher of the gospel, were he the last of all, can consent to remain as the mute dogs of Israel, unfaithful guardians, whom the prophet reproaches as unable to bark. Canes muti, non valentes, tatrare. The saints were never silent. I am not one of them, but nevertheless I belong to their race, fitil sanctorum sumus, and I have always been ambitious to place my steps, my tears, and, if necessary, my blood, in the tracks which they have left. I raise, therefore, before the Holy Father and the Council my protestation as Christian and preacher against these doctrines and practices, calling themselves Roman, but which are not Christian, and which in their encroachments, always most audacious, tend to change the constitution of the Church, the basis as well as the form of her teaching, and even the spirit of her piety. I protest against the divorce, as impious as it is insane, which it is sought to accomplish between the Church, who is our mother according to eternity, and the society of the nineteenth century, of whom we are the sons according to the times, and toward whom we have also some duties and attachments. I protest against this more radical and dreadful opposition to human nature, which is attacked and made to revolt by these false doctrines in its most indestructible and holiest aspirations. I protest above all against the sacriligious perversion of the Word of the Son of God himself, the spirit and the letter of which are equally trodden under foot by the pharisaism of the new law. It is my most profound conviction that if France in particular and the Latin races in general are delivered over to social, moral and religious anarchy, the principal cause is without doubt not in Catholicism itself, but in the manner which Catholicism has during a long time been understood and practised. I appeal to the Council about to meet to seek for remedies for the excess of our evils, and to apply them with as much force as gentleness. But if fears in which I do not wish to share come to be realized, if the august assembly has not more liberty in its deliberations than it has already in its preparation; if, in a word, it is deprived of the essential characters of an Ecumenical Council, I will cry to God and men to call another truly united in the Holy Spirit, not the spirit of party, and representing really the Universal Church, not the silence of some men, the oppression of others. "For the heart of the daughter of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me. Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" Jer. viii. In fine, I appeal to your tribunal, O Lord Jesus! Ad tuum Domine Jesu tribunal appello. It is in in your presence that I write these lines; it is at your feet, after having prayed much, reflected, suffered and waited much, that I sign them. I have confidence that if men condemn them on earth you approve them in heaven. That is sufficient for me living and dying.

FR. HYACINTHE,

PARIS-PASSY, Sept. 20, 1869.

Shall such a noble example of faithfulness and independence in a minister of high standing in the Romish Church not be an admonition to timid Protestants, who are convinced of the corruptions of the truth by their own churches, and yet keep silent; not daring to lift their voices openly against the God-dishonoring doctrines which have so long passed for the teachings of His word. The Lord give strength to such timid souls.

CONVERSION.

IT is said that the "Life views never make any converts, because, if when a man is dead that is the last of him, he will not take the trouble to repent, and wicked men will be perfectly satisfied with such a disposition, and will continue in their sins."

This is the language of our Advent brethren to "Life believers," with reference to the effect of their doctrines upon wicked men.

It is said, by the orthodox, that the Advent doctrines, or, in other words, the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked—in popular language, "Annihilation"—after their (supposed) resurrection, has no terror at all in it for the wicked. "For," say they, "if that is all there is for them to suffer, they will not take the trouble to repent, for it will soon be over." "O" say they, "this is a comforting doctrine to them."

It is urged that "Life believers only tear the Advent churches to pieces and make diversion:" and that "they never have any accessions from the world to their numbers; only receiving additions from the churches."

In reply to the latter charge, although not strictly true, we have to say, that the brethren and sisters in the churches, who accept the "Life views" are men and women of experience in Christian life, and are acquainted with the Scriptures by study, and fully able to judge of the truth of the doctrines presented, and, seeing them, embrace them.

It is said by the orthodox, that Advent preachers only "tear our churches to pieces and cause division; and take away our members;" and that "Adventists only come out from the churches, while scarcely an addition is made from the world."

"The orthodox have shut up their churches against us; calling us 'heretics' and 'infidels,' and circulate false reports about us, calculated to disparage us," is the lament of "Advent preachers.

Some of our Advent churches have voted "Life believers" out, and will not allow them to preach; and report them as "infidels preaching 'damnable heresy;'" and have circulated false reports, calculated to disparage them.

If the above changes are diligently compared, one with the other, there will be discovered a remarkable similarity between them. Although our brethren have many times been weighed down with grief and discouragement under the charges of orthodoxy, and have felt that they were terribly abused and persecuted, and that orthodoxy was unchristian in her actions and denunciations, yet all this schooling teaches them nothing, for even now, after such severe experience, we find them like parrots repeating word for word the identical changes which caused them so much pain and sadness, and acting over the same performances, in the same manner, and for the same end, and in the same spirit, toward "Life believers" that orthodoxy has toward them.

We have to say, that there is as much truth and justness in the charges made against "Life believers" by their brethren in the Advent, as there is truth and justness in the charges made against Adventists by the orthodox, and no more.

Say some, "Your protracted meetings never result as ours do;" that is, in making converts. O yes, I see; you mean to say that, because we do not preach to men's sympathies, and create a sort of mesmeric influence, and thus get the control of them, that we are not "good" or "righteous;" or, as one said, "See how God blesses my labors," referring to revivals. O what a delusion. Without casting any reflections, or making insinuations, we say, that this is a miserable criterion by which to judge of goodness; for the men who have made the greatest stir in a religious community, and been the means of revivals, have in some cases turned out to be anything but good men. Three such men are in our mind now; and besides, we might refer to Justinian, Mohammed, and Brigham Young.

If men are converted it is by the truth; not excitement, but by a deep meditation; not in feelings, but in heart; not by enthusiasm, but by sober, cool argument, which carries conviction with it; or, as the Psalmist says, "stand in awe, and sin not; commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still." Psa. iv. 4. "I thought on my ways and turned my feet unto thy testimonies." Psa. cxix. 59. It is when men are convinced of their sins that they are led to abandon them. One such convert is worth one hundred made by being frightened. It is related of Mr. Judson that he labored twenty years before one was converted. Upon being told of it by way of reproach, said he, "Then here is twenty years more for another." So we say, We will continue to labor if none are converted, for the "gospel must be preached as a witness," whether to convert or condemn.

Yours, in Christ.

L. F. MOORE.

MAN'S DESTINY.

BRO. STORRS: I wish to give a few extracts from Charles Thompson's translation of the Bible, made 61 years ago.

I find in 1 Kings xvii: 19, "And Elias said to the woman, Give me thy son. So he took him out of her bosom and carried him up into the upper chamber where he lodged; and laid him on his bed. Then Elias cried and said, Wo is me! O Lord! Here is the witness of the woman with whom I dwell. Thou hast afflicted her in causing her son to die. And when he had breathed on the child three times, and called on the Lord, he said, O Lord, my God, I beseech thee let this child's life be restored to him. And so it came to pass, and the child cried. Then Elias brought it down from the upper chamber, and delivered him to his mother, said, See thy son liveth." There is no soul coming back in this translation.

Ecclesiastes iii: 18. "I communed with my heart concerning a saying of the sons of men That God distinguisheth them. Now in order to show that they themselves are beasts, that at least which befalleth man, befalleth them; and that which befalleth the beast, befalleth man. The same event happeneth to both; as the one dieth, so doth the other: they have all one breath. What advantage then hath man over the beast? None: for all are vanity. They are all for one place. They were all from dust: and to dust they shall all return; who hath seen the breath of the sons of men, whether it ascendeth upwards; and the breath of the beast, whether it descendeth downward into the earth?"

Job xiv, "He who is born of a woman waxeth old like a leathern bag: or like a garment which is moth eaten; for he is mortal, short lived and full of disquiet; or like a flower which fell while in bloom. He glideth away indeed like a shadow and can make no stay. And is it not such an one thou hast called to acccount, and caused such a one to come to trial before thee? For who can be free from stain? Surely none, whether the course of his life on earth be one day; or months be numbered to him. He cometh to the term thou hast set, but cannot pass it. Turn away from him, that he may take rest, and comfort his life like an hireling. For there is hope for a tree; for if lopped, it may sprout again, and the tender branch may not fail. And if its root become old in the earth, or die on a rock; its stem by the scent of water may blossom; and produce a crop like a tree lately planted. But man when he dieth is gone: when a mortal falleth he is no more. For in a course of time a sea is spent; and a river when unsupplied is dried up; and man when composed in the grave cannot rise again—until the heaven be folded up: they shall not be awakened out from their sleep. Oh that thou hadst kept me in the mansion of the dead; and hid me till thine indignation should cease, and that thou wouldst set me a time when thou wouldst remember me, (for though a man die he may be revived, after finishing the days of this life of his). I would wait patiently until I come again into existence. Then call and I will answer; but reject not the works of thy hands."

A proverb in the land, "God distinguisheth them." JACOB GRIM.

"Now, Do not Write on that Hobby."

What hobby do you mean? "That awful heresy called the non-resurrection of the wicked." You call it awful, do you? "Yes," says one, "I do." Do you call the old eternal torment theory awful? "Yes," says one. Why? "Because it is not true." How do you know that? "Because it is not Bible." How did you find that out? "By searching the Scriptures; and besides all that, it looks like making God a savage tyrant, and the sinner no better, by being eternally tormented; for there is no reprieve for him."

Well, now, if that looks awful, I think you had better look at your own theory and see if that is any better. "Yes, I can see that it is a good deal better, because there is an end of their sufferings." Well, what did it amount to in the end? "Death." Now, was their condition bettered by being put to death the second time? Can you tell me what they know about it after they die the second time any more than they would if they never had a resurrection? "O, yes, they knew they were dying the second death." But that is not the question. What do they know about it after death the second time? "Well, I do not believe they do know any thing about it." If they do not know anything about the suffering or pains of dying after the second death, as you term it, why raise them at all? "Why, they must be raised to suffer the penalty of the law." What law? "The second death." Is the second death the penalty of the law? "O, yes." Where do you find it? "In Revelation." Then Paul's statement cannot be true when he says "It is appointed unto men once to die," and "the wages of sin is death." I would have supposed that Paul would have said something about the second death if he had believed it. "Well, you have not given all of the texts you referred to." What is it? "But after this the judgment." You mean that after man is dead he is is to have a judgment? "Yes, that is what I mean." Well, if that is the case, we will have the text all together: Hebrews ix. 27, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die (not twice) but after this the judgment." Where was the appointment of death given? To the law and to the testimony. I find it recorded in Genesis where God appointed it to Adam; and if you can find another appointment of death I would like to know where it is to be found. Adam being the head of the race, and a mortal being could not impart a different life than he was in possession of. So we see the appointment was back in the Garden of Eden. I think your mistake is in not understanding the text. "Well, don't you think wicked men will have a judgment?" Yes. "How will the wicked have a judgment if they are not raised?" The judgment they will have is not to live again. "How can they die the second death then?" That is not a part of the penalty." But I can't help believing they will be raised, for the Bible says so; and Paul believed it; and you will find it in Acts xxiv. 15. How will you have me quote the text? "Why, Paul says, there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and unjust." Why did you not quote the whole of it, and not a part of the verse. "Why, that is enough." I think not. We will commence the 14th verse, and see how it reads. "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets. And have hope toward God which they themselves allow that there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and the unjust." "Now isn't that proof that they will be raised?" I think not. "Why not?" Because you try to make Paul contradict his own statement. Paul says he believes "all things written in the law and the prophets;" and in the law you cannot find a single promise of a resurrection to the unjust, nor in the prophets; but to the contrary.

What says the prophets? "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." Why is Paul called in question for preaching heresy, if he believed and taught the same that you say he does? I can see why they call it heresy. Those of us that do not believe in the wicked ever living again from the dead are called heretics, or accused of preaching an awful heresy. I know Paul did not believe it, for in Acts xxvi he tells just what he does believe; for he says, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers." Now, does the promise embrace the wicked dead? No, never. Paul says, "They that are Christ's are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Are the wicked dead embraced in the same promise? You would not admit that.

"Well, I suppose you will keep harping away upon that subject." Yes, I shall keep preaching the gospel, and the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." "Then you want I should believe that the power of God will not reach the wicked dead." Certainly; for I believe Paul told the truth. The gospel promises life to believers, and that on conditions, and to none others. D. J. Weaver.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Dr. Finley's Articles on Immortality.

The articles, which were copied into the Herald of Life from the "Niles (Mich.) Republican," in the early part of Vol. vi., should have been put in a pamphlet before now. Other matters have interfered with this design; but the time has come to renew the effort and the work must be done. We made the following statement, last March, in relation to publishing these articles, and it is substantially correct at this time. We said: "The whole series would make a pamphlet near the size of 'Life from the Dead,' or from seventy-five to ninety-six pages. The cost of getting stereotype plates would not be less than $100; perhaps more. Paper, printing, folding and stitching, fifty dollars more per 1,000. Hence the first 1,000 will cost in the vicinity of $150. After that, fifty dollars per 1,000.

"These are not pretended to be exact estimates: but will not vary, we think, much from the actual cost. We make this statement that our friends may know how the matter stands, and that they may understand what is to be done if the articles are to be issued in a pamphlet.

"We are determined not to go in debt for any of these matters; or to go foward in the printing business any faster than the funds are supplied to meet the demands for printing materials.

"The sum, then, necessary to do the work on this one enterprise is $150 for the first thousand. Are there friends who are willing to donate that amount for this one object? You can have back all you donate in the work at fifteen cents per copy, for the first thousand. After those are thus disposed of, you can have any amount you desire at five dollars per 100."

In response to this statement the following pledges were received:

|---|---|
| Thomas R. Crocker, | $10 |
| Wm. Roworth, | 5 |
| Wm. Floyd, | 5 |
| Friends at Niles, Mich., | 30 |
| Esther G. McCullough, | 5 |

| R. D. Chase, | 1 |
| Geo. T. Collins, | 1 |
| D. B. Salter, | 30 |
| D. B. Salter (additional), | 25 |

If the above persons are disposed to renew these pledges (some of them have paid), the sum, in addition to it, necessary to be raised, will be seen to be a little over $30. Can this not be done at once, and thus a very valuable and important work will be added to the Life literature? What say you?

Toleration and Investigation.

All men desire toleration: why then should they not tolerate others? Why abuse a man for giving up an old theory or opinion? He might as well abuse us for retaining it. If this be unjustifiable in him, it is equally so for us to treat him in that way. The man who seeks after truth, and is led to alter his opinion, and tries to give others part in his joys, by making known his discoveries, deserves our thanks instead of our censure. He who is really deserving censure is the man who will not take pains to find truth; or having found it, will not impart to others lest he should suffer reproach or loss. It has often been the case that men kill their benefactors and reward their plunderers. The Jews killed Jesus and released a robber. Many do the same in some form or other. They blame the Jews, but act out the same spirit; it was an intolerant spirit. They would not bear to have Jesus disturb their customs, creeds, and traditions: it was bringing in causes of division, and lessening the reputation of those who wished to be thought wise and learned. He was regardless of the effects of His teaching on the established order of which the Scribes and Pharisees were so tenacious, and on which their popularity depended. He sought to make men wise and holy, though it might overturn all the schemes of the popular leaders of that age, and break down all their doctrinal theories. He proclaimed the selfishness, hypocrisy, and pride of those leaders in such a manner as roused all these unholy principles into action. They would not tolerate him, and hence put him to death. They would not endure one who boldly denounced their corruptions of truth, and sent the people direct to "search the Scriptures." That would be admitting the people to some sort of independence in their theological investigations which might lessen the popular estimation of the usefulness of the Scribes and Pharisees.

We hardly need a stronger proof of the truth of the Gospel history, than the fact that men now, who attempt to follow truth wheresoever it may lead—regardless of its effects on themselves among men—are treated as Jesus and his followers were by the popular leaders in their day. The treatment He met with is so perfectly like what men now manifest toward any who do not sustain their traditions or doctrines, that we cannot doubt the truth of the whole Gospel history—it is natural as life: men in general never did give up their old opinions and customs without first persecuting those who have tried to bless them by showing a better and more truthful way. Jesus was a real person—He was from God—He was a teacher and regenerator of mankind—He was treated as the gospels say—He could not have been treated otherwise in such a world as this: and the Gospel is as certainly true and divine as that light and truth exists in the universe. If any one would wish further proof of this, let them follow out their convictions of truth; boldly utter them, and live them out as did Jesus: let them sit at Jesus' feet and learn of Him in this matter, regardless of the opinions and traditions of popular leaders and popular applause, and see if they do not become satisfied of the truth of the history of Jesus.

We do not ask you to deal in fancies, excitement, or fanaticism in any form. Be thoroughly concerned to know the truth, and soberly, but decisively make it manifest in your utterances and in your life, regardless of its consequences on your reputation and worldly prospects—make truth, the truth relating to the kingdom of God, and life only through Christ, the controlling theme, and act accordingly, and see if you are not satisfied, that whatever else may be false, the Gospel of Christ is true. Live Christ-like—labor for the same objects in the same unvarying, steady, persevering course—live simply to learn and to practice the truth, and thus honor God and bless men, and you will soon find yourself in circumstances not unlike those Christ was in—you will drink of His cup, and be a partaker of His sufferings, and share in His lack of reputation.

A clear knowledge of truth and duty, will always be the result of a hearty, thorough, persevering obedience to the light already given—to the dictates of our judgments—to the revelations of truth and duty made known to us by God.

Some people are afraid to inquire after truth lest they should fall into infidelity. Such persons are already in effect infidels: i. e., they are blind believers; and what are such better than infidels? He only is a true believer who is convinced of the truth of Christianity in such a manner that he can give a reason, to every man that asks him, of the hope that is in him. Let our faith be founded in the wisdom and word of God, and let it go out in living action, and all the errors that have ever cursed the world will not shake it—it is founded on a rock. But if our belief stands only in the wisdom and traditions of men, the farther we keep from the light of investigation the more sure we may be of an easy down-hill journey; but it may land us into perdition. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." "Search the Scriptures." Eternal life is therein revealed; and that most of all things concerns us, who find ourselves dying creatures.

An Eulogy on Death.

Rev. H. G. Mason (a Baptist minister), recently preached a funeral sermon at West Meriden, Conn., a copy of which has come into our hands. It eulogizes death to such an extent that we wish to place some portions of it before the readers of the Herald, for the purpose of showing how completely the popular theology of the day is opposed to the Scriptures; and also to show into what strange absurdity tradition leads its votaries. He says:

> What we call death is not a cessation of being, not an extinction of life, but simply a change in the mode of life—a mysterious lifting of the ransomed soul to better realms and brighter spheres. Man's conscious being is perpetual. Not a single link of the endless chain is broken in dying. The chain passes out of sight through the vail, but the undying spirit, with ethereal hand traces it, link by link, all the dark and mysterious way. The light of mental perception never goes out. No, not for a moment.

We are not informed from whence this wonderful information was obtained; for not one utterance in the Bible can be found to sustain such theological nonsense as the above. In vain we search the pages of inspiration for a single declaration that death is "not an extinction of being," and Mr. Mason does not offer a particle of proof to sustain this assumption. The Divine Word throughout we find in direct conflict with this system of theology which had its birth-place in the schools of heathen philosophy.

In Eccl. ix. 5, we are informed that "the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything." Again, in Psa. cxlvi. 4, we read of man that "his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." How can a man's thoughts be said to "perish" unless they cease to exist? And yet, in the face of this plain testimony of Scripture, Mr. Mason, with a great flourish of eloquence, tells us that "man's conscious being is perpetual," and that "the light of mental perception never goes out—no, not for a moment." If at death, as the Scriptures tell us, man's thoughts perish—cease to be—does not man lose "conscious being?" Thus, in the face of the Scriptures, Mr. Mason's assumption is like the mist before the morning sun.

But man's "mental perception" goes out even in this life, which completely overthrows Mr. Mason's claim that it "never goes out"—"no, not for a moment." Instances are not uncommon where, by a mere fracture of the skull, a person has been rendered wholly unconscious for a long period. Now, if man is possessed of an immortal soul, which is the thinking part of man, it is difficult to conceive how a physical injury to the tenement which it inhabits could affect its immaterial nature so as to deprive it of consciousness. Can an immortal soul be deprived of consciousness? If it can be rendered unconscious in one instance, may it not in another? And thus it might fail of an endless existence. But as a slight injury to the brain renders man completely unconscious, what shall we think of that theology which assumes that if we were only to blow his brains out he would know more than he ever did before? If an injury to the human machinery can deprive man of conscious being temporarily, we earnestly inquire, if his dissolution would not forever render him unconscious, unless brought into life again by a superior power? This seems reasonable, and is in harmony with the revealed purpose of God.

But we call attention to another extract from Mr. Mason's discourse. He says:

> Julius Pratt is not in that coffin, nor can we put him into yonder grave—the immortal can neither be compressed into the one nor retained in the other. Nor is his disembodied spirit so far removed from this mourning circle as we shall carry his body an hour hence. He dwells about us. He witnesses these mournful services. He fills this room with his spiritual presence. When the gale struck the old tenement, he quietly stepped out, and looked back, exultingly, upon the debris He saw, with undiminished spiritual eyes, the hand of affection when it closed his mortal eyes. He brooded lovingly over the corpse and the couch, when those saddest of all earthly words were uttered—"he is dead!"

"How long shall this be in the hearts of the prophets (teachers) that prophesy (teach) lies?" "They speak a vision of their own heart and not out of the mouth of the Lord." When we find such rank Spiritualism as the above uttered from the Christian pulpit, can we wonder that this anti-christian system has got a widespread and deep hold upon the people? But such wild and absurd fanaticism is but the legitimate fruit of that anti-scriptural doctrine of man's inherent immortality. Let this be swept away by the divine doctrine of "Life only in Christ," and the Christian religion commends itself to all reasoning minds; God appears in all his loveliness of character, and the Scriptures as a grand luminary of truth. W. H. S.

Miscellaneous News, Comment, Etc.

In the last issue of the "World's Crisis" a correspondent gives its readers another rehash on John v. 28, 29. It would seem from the manner in which this passage is constantly paraded before the public, in certain papers, by the opponents of "Life only in Christ," that it is the only text in which they had any confidence as sustaining their cherished theory of the re-living of the wicked dead. But the peculiarity of this last production is the strange manner in which the writer tries to make it sustain his preconceived opinion. He enumerates some half a dozen interpretations of the passage, which he condemns by saying that it "needs rather to be believed than interpreted;" but he forthwith proceeds to offer his interpretation of it, seemingly fearful that reasoning minds will believe that it does not teach the re-living of the wicked dead in the face of the plain declarations to the contrary. The "record of God" says: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." We might say, Brother, this "needs rather to be believed than interpreted." If the rule is good in one case, it certainly is in this.

A National Advent Conference will convene at Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 17th, to be composed of delegates from the several Advent Conferences of the States and Canada. We also learn that a Western Ministerial Council of Advent Preachers is to be held, probably in Brodhead, Wis., some time in January. What certain would-be leaders propose to accomplish by these conventions time will fully develop. We want no part or lot in them, for we believe such conventions bear little fruit for the glory of God, as their work is usually more of a sectarian character than otherwise.

The coming Ecumenical Council seems to be the exciting topic generally throughout the world. Late advices from Europe announce, at this early date, the assembling of Catholic Prelates at Rome. The "Civilta Cattolica," the admitted organ of his Holiness Pius IX, announces, with an authoritive tone, that the Council has been "summoned not to deliberate on and decide questions by the vote of the majority, but to ratify decisions already resolved upon by the sovereign and infallible Pontiff."

A deep feeling seems to be gaining ground, both in this country and in Europe that great events are at hand. Can it be less than the downfall of that doomed city, Rome? Rev. xviii warns the church of the sudden overthrow of Rome in an hour when the world would be unexpecting it. A writer in the "Rock," (an English publication,) remarks that "the church of Christ ought to be aware that 'the times of the Gentiles' are now nearly fulfilled, and the blessed release of the church from her bondage and wilderness condition is near at hand." At best, it is eminently our duty to watch and pray "lest coming suddenly" the Bridegroom will find us sleeping. Mark xiii. 35, 36. W. H. S.

Faithful Dogs.

> A friend of mine in Central Michigan went to California in 1856, taking with him a large and fine hunting dog. This animal was my friend's faithful and useful companion in the mines during six months, when the man sickened and died. The dog followed his master's body to the grave, remained there almost a week and then disappeared. About one hundred and twenty days after the death of the man in California, there came crawling and staggering into the yard of the old home in Central Michigan, a poor famished, sore-footed and dying dog. A few feeble wags of his tail, lickings of his old mistress' hands and face, a few expressions of affection and joy, and poor Sam sunk with pitious and feeble moanings into a long, deep sleep, from which, when he awoke, he found himself with his old master, let us hope, in another and better world.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

I clip the above sentimental extract from one of our local papers. Such lasting affection, such unerring topographical knowledge, such a persistent execution of a well defined purpose, are too much to predicate upon mere blind brute instinct. It shows high qualities of mind, the more remarkable because manifested by the brute creation. This much it is safe to say, but to go further and predicate inherent immortality and going to his master "in another and a better world" at death, on such qualities, and make this, too, a ground of hope, is not only ludicrous, but shows to what extremes fancy will indulge itself when once it is let loose in such ærial flights.

But after all, if we admit inherent immortality for man, and that the reasoning, thinking, essential man is the immortal soul, are we not logically forced to admit that the same mental powers in the brute creation must be based on the same immortal principle? On the other hand, if organized matter can manifest mind in the brute, why not in man? as the mind of man differs not so much in kind as in degree, and complexity of action. In some of its powers the mind of the brute creation puts to shame the mightest acts of human reason. And finally, if the immortal souls of good men, as so many believe, go to heaven at death why not the immortal souls of good dogs who show such love, faithfulness and intelligence? What a cheering hope this must be to one who has had a faithful dog!

Our Blessed Hope.

BY MRS. J. R. CASTLE.

Brethren and Sisters in the Lord:—What a blessed hope is ours! Would we have the will changed if we could? Isn't the resurrection state, as set forth in the word of God, sufficient? "A crown of glory that fadeth not away"—"eternal glory"—"A far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Immortality, incorruptibility, victory over death and the grave. Sinless, tearless, spotless, pure, blessed, holy, "forever with the Lord." Is not this enough, even though we sleep a little, and are laid away in the cold, dark, dusty beds of earth? If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in us, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken our mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in us. Yes, and Jesus says, so many times, "I will raise him up at the last day," and "I will give unto them (my sheep) eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them to me is greater than all, and no man shall be able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my Father are one." Do we want any better title? Any better surety? Can we ask for plainer promises?

Surely, ours is a glorious hope; and I never realized it more fully than yesterday while listening to a funeral sermon, wherein no mention was made of the resurrection, and nothing attempted, but to show that there may be, and probably is consciousness and happiness in the presence of the Saviour independent of and separate from the body. The text was 2 Cor. v. 8, "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and be present with the Lord."

Never before have I felt more like praising God for the light of the glorious truth of "Life only in Christ," which makes the promises so plain on which "our hope" so firmly stands. "Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life."

Shall we not then, let our light shine, that others, seeing our good works, shall be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven? We must not sleep as do others, but keep our lamps trimmed and burning, that we may be ready when the Bridegroom cometh. Our "God is Love." Bless his holy name!

From Eld. S. L. Walter.

Br. Storrs: To-day the Herald of Life, of the 15th inst., was received, and I rejoiced that God's servants had said, not in words only, but deeds that speak unmistakingly, that they love God's word, and that the Herald shall live and herald the glorious gospel of God, that life only is promised to the believer in the Life-giving Lord—in the noble manner in which they contributed the means needful to keep it alive. May God bless them an hundred-fold in this world, and in the world to come with life everlasting. O how I should have rejoiced to have been with you, and look on that God-honored company who are "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints," and are heralding to God's dear children the words of Enoch, "Behold the Lord cometh . . . to execute judgment upon all, and convince all . . . of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him" (God). Jude, verse 16, describes those speakers against God as "murmurers;" those who mutter, or speak low, and grumble about God, and complain of his laws and deny his right to punish, and also their accountability to him; and this because they walk after "their own lusts, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage." They are all for self. Self is their God. He then exhorts them to "remember the words of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ," because they said "there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts" (or desires). They do not rise above the animal with all their boasted immortality and progression, because they are "sensual, having not the Spirit." And Peter says they "Speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall perish in their own corruption." "But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith," that "faith which was once delivered to the saints," which embraces life from the dead, in order to "inherit the earth," and to "be recompensed upon the earth," (not "beyond the bounds of time and space," quite out of God creation; where Prof. Hudson says, "the rights of sin are, if they have any rights") when the new heaven and a new earth, which is promised, shall be created, and "the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven," shall be heralded by "voices out of heaven, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." The "most holy faith," upon which we must build, embraces all these promises; and when we "pray in the holy Ghost," we pray for an increased knowledge of God's plan; also an unshaken confidence in the immutability of his promises. And this is necessary in order to our "keeping ourselves in the love of God, and in looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." O that men could see that life is a gift, in all its forms; and that God only has it in himself. So our Life-giver has said: "For, as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." The Son had life given to him, not only mortal, but unending life, so that he could say, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forever more; amen, and have the keys of hell and of death."

Thank God that we have such a Life-giver, who is loved of the Father, who showeth the Son all things that himself doeth; that ye may marvel, because, as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. Hence he said, "The world (or wicked) see me no more; but ye see (or shall see) me." Why? "Because I live, ye shall live also." He will use "the keys" in the last day, when "he raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth," or giveth life "more abundant" to whom he will. Who will be quickened? "Whosoever believeth on him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." Here Paul gets the promise of life, which he says, "Is in Christ Jesus." So we see that his hope of eternal life rests on the promise of "God," who "cannot lie." God has promised, "I will swallow up death in victory." Also, "Thy dead men shall live," etc., but no life promised to the wicked lords that had dominion over God's people.

He says, "They are dead, they shall not live." The promise cannot fail. Life future and deathless; because "faithful is he who has promised, who will also do it." It is enough; life comes through the risen Life-giving Christ. Amen.

O how glad I am that all over the States, and in England, the glorious gospel of life from the dead, only in Christ, is being heralded by strong men; and that the goddess of natural immortality is trembling from centre to circumference, and that every effort to prop it up only shows its weakness and causes the death-throes to be more apparent. Hence, the ministers in this place will not have any controversy with me on our differences. The fact is, one of them told me we ought not to try to prove each other in error. O no, they are afraid of losing their standing with the people; so they carry out the principle of the religion of the Bible, which is, love to all that they consider are God's children. I think, sometimes, that this kindness shuts up my way to get the truth as plainly before the people as I wish it; but I trust that by the means they use, I may gain the confidence of the people, and so get access to them. I have preached for the Congregationalist. I presented reconciliation through Christ's death, and life only through the risen Christ; that life was only bestowed upon the believers, and God's wrath abideth on the unbelieving, because they had not eaten of his flesh and drank his blood they had no life, or life-giving principle in them; but he that eat his flesh and drank his blood hath or shall have eternal life, because they have "the Spirit of him that raised Jesus." I have heard of no complaints from minister or people. The Methodist minister came out to hear. He has invited me to close his Sabbath services and speak in the prayer-meeting. I thank God for the privilege of presenting life to them, and I hope that good will be the result.

I had the privilege of meeting with a minister of the United Baptists, fully out on life only in Christ, to whom I gave the Six Sermons, Watch Tower, and some tracts; also some numbers of the HERALD. He would like to have the HERALD, but has not the means to subscribe for it. If you can send it to him I should be glad, and think he might get subscribers for it.

The seed is springing up all over the country. I shall go about one hundred miles from here to preach on the 24th at Keensville, Wayne Co. I hope that good will come of my going. They have promised to pay my expenses; that looks favorable. May the Lord bless them and the truth, and me with power to proclaim it. I feel encouraged to go out this fall, trusting in the Lord for all things. His promise cannot fail. I shall not lack any good thing. Praise the Lord. If the people are too poor to do anything for us, I believe there will be something to do at my business. I can work yet, if I am 70 years old; praise the Lord, and I am not ashamed to do it. This may answer Br. Lewis' question, "Where is Br. Walter?" Here, yet, doing just what he has been doing—to work for my Master and myself.

Yours, in hope of life only in Christ.

BUNKER HILL, ILL., Sept. 21, 1869.

FROM ALBERT K. MORSE.

BR. STORRS: Some six months ago I enclosed one dollar, and sent it to you, requesting you to send me the HERALD OF LIFE, stating that I did not believe in the non-resurrection of the wicked. I confess that after a six month's reading of the HERALD, in connection with the study of the Scriptures, I am not only almost but altogether persuaded that there is "No life out of Christ." In him was life, and the life was the light of men. Precious thought; without him all is dark; without him there can be no life beyond the grave; hence we hear the great Apostle saying, "What things were gain those I counted loss for Christ; yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but nothing that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ; the righteousness which is of God by faith, that I may know him and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death, if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." If we would attain unto the resurrection of the dead, the Apostle makes it necessary that we be found in him. If we would know the power of his resurrection, we must be in Christ. Death comes to us through Adam the first; and if we ever get out of it, it must be through Adam the second. Adam the first went into death, and we have no account that he ever came out, or ever will. Adam the second went into death, but, God be praised, he liveth again. On this blessed truth rests our hope of a future life. Language must fail to do justice to the doctrine of a resurrected Christ. God be praised that he has made this truth so clear and so strong in his holy word, "In him was life, and the life was the light of men."

We hear the great Apostle Paul saying, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Have the wicked dead any claim to this promise? I think not. Will they come from the dead? I think not. What saith the Scriptures? Isa. xxvi. 14. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Truly may it be said, "The wicked is drawn away in his wickedness, but the righteous hath hope in his death." God grant that we may be found in Christ, that when his glory shall be revealed we may rejoice with exceeding joy; and in the language of the prophet of God say, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us."

STAFFORD SPRINGS, CONN, Oct. 4, 1869.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BR. STORRS: Again I take my pen to let you and the dear people of God know that I am glad in the Lord, and rejoicing in hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. O how glad my heart has been made by reading God's messenger, the blessed HERALD OF LIFE, since the camp-meeting. O I bless God for his living truth; how bright it shines. Blessed be his holy name forever, and let all holy beings say, "Amen." While contemplating your coming anniversary, I could see by the eye of faith the great captain of our salvation marshaling your hosts, and bringing them up to the help of the Lord against the mighty; and I can say to-day, "How are the mighty fallen, and the carnal weapons of their warfare are perishing." Amen; let them perish; but let his eternal truth go forth as the sun shining in his seven-fold strength. I have come, or been brought to this conclusion, my brother, that everything that is taught us from God's word, if it will not harmonize with this great eternal truth, "God is love," is error. I have been long in coming to a just conclusion, that there is no personal spirit devil in the universe of God. I have tried the doctrine of a personal spirit devil by this infallible test, "God is love;" then every act of God, to saint and sinner, must flow from the great fountain, which is God himself, "LOVE." I said like this, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." God so loved the world that he put the devil into paradise, or the garden of Eden, to tempt our first parents to disobey his (God's) command, and to make God a liar! Will these two sayings harmonize? O may God forgive us for our sins, and ignorance in this matter, and lead us into all truth.

Again: God so loved the world that he has kept the devil in being about six thousand years, almost (i. e., from the beginning), to go about like a roaring lion, tempting all mankind at once, ruling in the hearts of the majority of mankind, leading them down to death! Will this harmonize with the living truth, "God is Love?" I cannot do it; no, never. Well, some say there must be a personal spirit devil, there is so much said in the Bible about him. Then he must be a self-existent being, for no one can harmonize God's keeping such a being in existence to mar his works, and destroy the creatures he has made, and at the same time so love the sinner, as to pay so great a price to deliver him from death, as the life of his only begotten son, a lamb without spot or blemish. If there is a self-existent devil in the world, having lived six thousand years, he may live six million for aught we know, and six million to the end of that: yes, forever and ever, without end. Suppose he will ever die himself? No, never. And death must forever reign, for he has the power of it; an eternal war must prevail in the universe of God. Can any sane mind believe that there is a self-existent evil being? I do not see how they can and believe the word of God; and as we cannot harmonize God's keeping such a being in existence to work continually against himself, and yet by all his acts declare himself the God of love, not willing that any should perish, but that all may come to repentance; I think I have come to a just conclusion that there is no spirit devil. I feel that my sins are my own; sin is the transgression of the law, and the wages of sin is death; and Christ bare our sins in his own body on the tree. Think you that our God would hold a wicked being in life so long, and allow him to tempt us to sin, and then lay on the spotless Lamb of God the iniquity or sin of us all? No, never. It was the love of God that put away sin by the sacrifice of his Son, raising him from the dead by his Spirit, thereby giving to all that believe on him a living hope of a glorious resurrection to eternal life through his unspeakable gift, Jesus Christ our Lord. It is the love of God that lets the incorrigible sinner remain in the congregation of the dead; he having sown to the flesh and of the flesh has reaped corruption; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. O may God grant us his Spirit, which is love, that we may sow to the Spirit, that of the Spirit we may reap life everlasting.

May God give us wisdom from above, that we may walk in this spirit of love before a gainsaying world. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor. May the love of Jesus constrain us to love one another with a pure heart fervently, and to love the coming of our blessed Master, and so love the sinner that our daily life may woo them to Jesus. May grace, mercy and truth be and abide with you and the whole Israel of God, henceforth and forever.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Oct. 10, 1869.

O. F. YALE, Ferryville, Conn., writes: I love the HERALD OF LIFE. Each paper is perfect, and each "last one" better than the preceding. How did I get along without it, in this dark corner, all those years in which I knew not of its existence. I could easier dispense with one meal a day, then with its weekly visits. May God bless its Editor and those who having the means so freely and generously furnish them for its support.

FROM W. H. H. McALISTER.

BR. STORRS: I am certain that our dear HERALD, in its new dress, will be welcome to all of its readers; and as it goes out on its journey to reach its friends, scattered here and there all over our country, it will be the herald not only of good news in its truths, but of light and joy in its personal appearance. It surely should retain all its old friends, and gain many new ones with its bright, sunny face.

It has ever been a welcome visitor at my house, and I could not think of parting with it at any price. One sister asked me at Springfield, if I was not going to write more for it, and tried to make me promise that I would. I declined to promise, saying that I had made more promises than I had fulfilled, but inwardly I was resolving that I would let my name appear oftener in the future if I could send but a word; and I hope that all of our brethren and sisters will do the same.

How much good it did us all to see a line from Br. Ladd, telling us of his condition; how he is strong in spirit, though prostrate in mind. From your two articles over the initials "L. C. T.," we draw the joyful inference that that dear brother is better. It causes us sorrow to know that Br. Wolcott is suffering from the ills to which flesh is heir; yet it calls out Sr. Wood in one of her warm-hearted letters, and he shall have my prayers for his recovery. We are glad, too, to hear from all the rest, and especially to know that Sr. Bishop has struck her harp again; and we hope it may be brought into more constant requisition, for the profit of believers in the glorious truths it sings.

We have been having terrible freshets in this State, doing immense damage to the roads, carrying away bridges, interrupting travel and destroying property and life. We are living in perilous times indeed, but let us wait and watch and pray, and soon he, who bade the raging sea be still, will come and calm all the commotions of the elements.

Yours, waiting for this hope.

ST. ALBANS, VT., Oct. 15, 1869.

FROM W. H. WHITMAN.

BR. STORRS: We feel to thank and praise our Father in heaven for the continuation of the HERALD OF LIFE; and also for the communications from the dear loved ones in the different parts of the country, living as pilgrims and strangers here in this vale of tears. Our heart goes out to them in sympathy and love. Dear loved ones, let us all keep a firm hold on the cable rope of faith; then our Captain will soon land us all on Canaan's happy shore, where saints will meet to part no more.

Although despised by men,
  A little feeble band,
Protection we obtain
  From the Redeemer's hand.
Though oft our foes would us devour,
We stand upheld by Jesus' power.

Our Shepherd leads us on,
  While we obey his voice;
He guides us to his throne,
  And in him we'll rejoice;
Though straight the way, we need not fear.
If to the end we persevere.

Lord, when our hearts shall fail,
  And earthly comforts die,
May thy rich grace prevail,
  And give us victory;
And when perfected, may we praise
Thy name through everlasting days.

Those choice spirits whom God has raised up among us, and who are the cause of our having a weekly communication with each other, are a blessing bestowed on us, lonely ones, that we can never repay only by our thanks and prayers. May God bless them with all needed blessings in this life, and at last save them in his heavenly kingdom. Amen.

GALESBURG, ILL., Oct. 10, 1869.

FROM JACOB SHAFER.

BR. STORRS: I read you Six Sermons and Life only through Christ, which I have for thirty years believed, and in my weak way endeavored to teach others. Seeing men as trees walking, in some respects, and not being satisfied with the doctrine as taught of the resurrection of all the wicked in order to punish them for their transgressions, as the orthodox teach, by a second death, and having seen relatives and friends pass into death, of whom I had no hope that they will have eternal life; then finding it revealed that God is Love, that his mercy endureth forever; looking at the whole plan of salvation, I could discern no reason why God should give them a resurrection to life in order to remand them back to death again. I could see no good result that could follow. I commenced talking to my brethren about this matter, telling them that it would meet my most hearty approbation if it could or would be the will of God that the wicked dead should be left in unconscious dust; for surely it would be my wish, if I should miss of eternal life; and furthermore, if a few texts could be reconciled with the general tenor of the Scriptures, I should embrace the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked with all my heart. This caused me to seek aid from others, and for light upon that precious book of God's revelation. I have long been satisfied that none would be resurrected immortal but the righteous; as eternal life is never promised to the wicked. I am much pleased with your expositions of Dan. xii. 2; John v. 28, 29; Rev. xx., and others on which some build the theory of the resurrection of the wicked dead.

Yours, in hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ alone.

P. S.—I am in my 67th year.

KEWANNA, Ind., October 2, 1869.

FROM CHARLES H. SUTTON.

BR. STORRS: Circumstances of which I had no control prevented me from writing sooner, as I was desirous of knowing positively how much I could do towards helping the HERALD OF LIFE through Vol. VII. Please find enclosed $5 for one copy; also, put me down for $10 as a contribution for the present volume.

I was greatly pleased at the earnest and lively interest manifested by the Life brethren at the Springfield Camp-meeting. Surely the HERALD will live. How gratifying it is to know that our paper grows in interest as well as in the things pertaining to Bible truth and holiness. It was my intention to have met the friends of like precious faith, but was prevented by untoward circumstances.

How anxiously I looked for the HERALD after the Camp-meeting; it did not come at the time promised. I wondered if anything was wrong; but on the 20th ult., it was received; since then none have come. I thought perhaps moving the office was the cause of the delay. Don't throw me off. I love our paper and keep it "clean" to lend when opportunity affords.

MANAYUNK, Pa., Oct. 14, 1869.

Note by the Editor.

We do the best we can to have our papers properly mailed to all our subscribers, and we regret to hear of the failure of so many to receive them. Where the fault is we cannot determine. Sometimes we know it has been at the subscriber's Post Office, by a failure to deliver the paper when called for. Whatever may be the cause, we would always be glad to have you inform us of the failure, at once, so we may mail you another, as we can generally do if informed within a week or so after the failure. True, it costs you three cents to give us the information; but any of our papers is worth much more than that.

FROM O. O. ROGERS.

BR. STORRS: You have had a report of the camp-meeting in this place; so I will not enter into details as to the different parts of the proceedings, but will say, their boasted "liberty" was the liberty to agree with their notions or else keep silence, that they (of the "Crisis" school) might have no check, but seem to show that they were all right in their views and teachings. Thursday Br. McAllister, of St. Albans, came on the ground, and was evidently a marked man; and although there were but few preachers present, yet it would not do to have the Life views represented, so Cleavland, Matthewson and Couch did the preaching with the exception of one sermon by a Br. Walker, On Friday they held a conference, and framed a Constitution for the Adventists of the "Crisis" school, and none others; for when Br. McAllister questioned about the liberty of the brethren, and mentioned Brs. Roworth, Storrs, Wendell, and others, if they should be present next year, whether they would have liberty with the others, he was answered by looks that spoke volumes, so that words were not needed, and all acts went to keep them from the stand, if not from the meeting; yet their meeting seemed to call the attention of the people, and some, for the time being, became favorable, and time must determine how lasting is the impression. The most singular feature was, most who were benefitted were from other places, yet some were residents of this place. Time will show how much any were benefitted.

BETHEL, VT., Oct. 11, 1869.

LEVI BOUGHTON, Victor, N. Y., writes: I believe God has called you to the special business of breaking the spell of religious darkness that has enveloped the world, and which must be driven away or destruction is inevitable. But we are made to rejoice that the clouds are dispersing before the light of truth. May all believers in Life only in Christ be united in pushing the battle to the gate. When I see how ready the men of means are to sustain the HERALD it speaks volumes for the cause of truth. He who is to come, will come and show to the world that He is King of kings and Lord of lords; and the earth is His by purchase, and no one is able to wrest it from Him whose right it is reign. Many, like Nicodemus, come to Christ secretly for fear of the Jews, and are not willing to bear the reproach. May God, by some means, cause so much light to shine as to drive them from their hiding places to honor Him indeed.

J. C. WHEELER, North Turner Bridge, Me., writes: I feel a great interest in behalf of the HERALD, and shall endeavor to do what I can in getting subscribers for it, and hope to be very successful in so glorious an enterprise. I have ever acted as an agent since I became interested in the Life views; interesting myself in this direction, not knowing whether agreeable or not, but supposing you would like an increase of subscribers. I can truly say, the Lord speed you on in the promulgation of this theme.

Your brother, in hope of Life only in Christ.

T. T. HALSTEAD, Franklin, Ind., writes: We are living in a glorious time, when the children will be manifested by being steadfast in the word of the Lord, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, disseminating the light and knowledge of the loving kindness of God our Saviour; distributing Campaign Documents and soliciting subscribers to the HERALD, and winning men to the LIFE-GIVER, in whom alone is life for dying men.

FROM MRS. D. C. CORWIN.

BR. STORRS: Enclosed find $2 for the HERALD in its new dress. My spirit is always refreshed in reading it, and the communications from dear brethren and sisters are very welcome.

The late Camp-meeting at Springfield was truly a feast of fat things to my soul. I feel its invigorating influence all the while. It is much easier holding up the cross and speaking a word for our dear LIFE-GIVER, for having seen and communed with so many who had the deep things of God in their hearts.

But to worship with those who have such different views upon immortality from what we have is a continual drag upon our spirits. Still we must do it. We must go and let our light shine, as we have opportunity, trusting to the Lord that the arrows of truth may find a lodgment in some heart.

God help us; and he does. He owns his own truth. What a few there were at first of the Life views; and what a great army he has raised up since we dared to come out and believe and speak the things within his word.

I wish to send my kindest love to all the dear brethren and sisters, hoping to meet you again, if time continues, at the next Camp-meeting; and, oh, let us live faithful; endeavoring by all means to win souls to Christ. Since my return I have had many inquiries after truth, and calls for tracts. I wish I had more tracts.

Truly, your sister, waiting for Jesus.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 1869.

FROM JAMES CRAWFORD.

"Why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right." Luke xii. 57. It is not only a privilege, but a right and duty for every child of God to speak that which to him is truth. Anything less than this is to deny the right to worship God according to the dictates of a conscience enlightened by the Spirit and word of God. Let the difference be what it may in receiving truth from different points of progress, there can be no just cause for disfellowship or cold hints, looks or shoulders, on account of a difference of understanding. You have been a mark at which all kinds of missiles have been hurled. I have taken the HERALD OF LIFE from its commencement until now; and although it has not, as I think, been perfect in every respect, it has been a channel of instruction, of truth, and consequently of joy to all lovers of truth who have been able to read its columns. May sectarianism, which is the consolidation of all evils, be shunned by all the writers of the same; and may the Spirit of Christ, which causes all the disciples of Christ to be one, be the motive power of all that have anything to do in presenting what each thinks to be truth.

ROXBURY, Mass., Oct. 10, 1869.

DR. J. K. FINLEY, Niles, Mich., sends us two new subscribers. Of the first, he writes: He is one of our most prominent Physicians. He told me that he was now fully satisfied of the destruction of the wicked, but was not clear as to the intermediate condition and resurrection. I asked him to subscribe for our paper, as it would help him to investigate these points. He has been a good many months coming to see that "all the wicked will God destroy."

Of the other subscriber, Dr. Finley writes: He has been reading lately some of our tracts, and is delighted with the Life views. He says, he has for a long time felt the importance of religion and has examined the creeds of the various denominations, but could not make them harmonize with reason, justice, or the Bible. These views do all that, and are so clearly the plain teaching of the Bible, that he yields them his full and hearty belief.

Such facts are cheering to the hearts of our friends, and should stimulate us to greater exertions to scatter our tracts and papers in all quarters: such labor will not be lost, even though we do not see the fruit immediately. Let us thank God and take courage.

SERRIL CORNELL, Centralia, Ill., writes: Life only in Christ is, to me, the correct teaching of the Bible, though some passages in the New Testament may seem difficult to harmonize; yet were we to ask the question, How can the wicked be raised from the dead, not having the Spirit of Christ by which the righteous have hope of living again? what answer can be given? Whatever the resurrection may be spoken of John v. 28, 29, it is not to live again; for that is the special promise to the faithful in Christ. Our heavenly Father is merciful, even in the final end of the wicked. May we so live by grace, as to have a resurrection, or be changed, when Christ comes, and have eternal life in his kingdom.

MRS. R. W. PIERCE, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: I have just returned from the funeral of an old gentleman, 79 years old. He died very suddenly; dropped dead without a moment's warning. The minister said that, "He was not, for God had took him." There he was, right before him, nevertheless.

How good it would seem, if they would talk of the resurrection as the time when they will receive their crown, and give Christ the glory of conferring it and not death. I feel to take courage, for I do believe that God's truth will triumph over the traditions of men; and if there ever was a time when we should let the glorious doctrine of Life only Christ shine it is now. And for one I am willing to bear all the reproach that the world can heap upon me; for I know in whom I believe, and that he is able to keep and take care of me; and that eternal life is to be the reward,

HENRY H. TYSON, Brooklyn, (E. D.) N. Y., writes: I send you fifteen dollars and will send $25 more in a short time. I am doing the best I can, with what I have, to spread the truth as it is in the Bible.

ELD. L. F. MOORE, writes from Haddam, Conn.: The battle goes well. Yesterday I preached to some of our Methodist brethren the word of Life. One of them thought it was the truth.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THOSE who live on the border lines of the dominion of evil, constantly trying to smuggle contraband articles across, are no more fit to judge of the joy of life and the goodness of God than those who dwell in the Arabian desert or under an Arctic snow bank know of the glory of the world. Nine-tenths of mankind walk on the perilous edge of evil, and are constantly torn and pained by the penalties with which a good God has hedged the way to keep them from self-destruction, and wonder all the while that life is such a hard road to travel and affords so few compensations.

No man ought to enjoy what is too good for him; he should make himself worthy of it, and rise to its level.

If an author's writings are lampoons upon his neighbors, his life is probably a lampoon upon himself.

APPOINTMENTS.

WATERBURY, Conn., evenings, Nov. 10, 11, 12, and Sunday 14th.

OBITUARY.

PERRY.—Died, in Springfield, Mass, Oct. 2, 1869, Mary E., daughter of Wm. R. and Eliza E. Perry, aged 20 years and 5 months.

The fell destroyer respects neither person nor age. The young and lovely, together with the aged and fading, are alike his prey. A knowledge of this fact should serve to keep us momentarily ready for any change. May this affliction be sanctified to the good of the bereaved.

Funeral attended by the writer.

W. N. PILE.

BARKER.—Died, in Woodbury, Conn., Aug. 20, 1869, Nattie, only Son of Chas. C. and Eliza Grover Barker, aged four years, three and a half months.

Their only boy has been taken, but they sorrow not as those which have no hope; but wait with desire the day that shall bring again from the land of the enemy their loved one.

Words of hope were spoken by the writer.

W. N. PILE.

RATHBUN.—Fell asleep in Jesus, at Elkhart, Ind., August 7, 1869, Ida M. Rathbun, aged 10 years, 8 months and 9 days.

She was only child of George and Sally S. Rathbun. She sleeps in Jesus; blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep.

Young as she was, she confessed her faith in the resurrection. She said, the good would live again when the Lord comes. She also selected the hymn to be sung at her funeral.

We have laid her away to await the last trump; "for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." And all those who have sought life and immortality through Jesus, our Redeemer, will live forever in his kingdom.

She's gone, our household treasure,
  Our dearest earthly prize;
She whom we fondly cherished,
  The sunlight of our eyes.

O, how intense the anguish,
  How bitter was the hour,
When we beheld her wither
  Beneath death's fearful power.

On the Death of Emma F. Kaharl.

DEDICATED TO HER PARENTS.

In the river of death a dear one sleeps,
Calmly, unconsciously now;
Nothing disturbs her quietude there,
Pain can no more press her brow.

Sadly we wept when the wild billows roared
And furiously bore her away;
Heedless of tears they have closed o'er her form,
And in their embrace she must stay.

Stay till the morning comes, then, ruthless foe,
Jesus will sunder thy cords,
Ransom thy captives and bid them go free,
All who are truly the Lord's.

Sleep, gentle Emma, take rest while we toil;
Angels will guard thee, we know,
Soon as the Saviour calls, thou shalt arise
With immortality's glow.

Thou can'st not know how we miss thee and mourn;
Thou wast our love and our light,
Home seemeth desolate since thou art gone,
And day is as gloomy as night.

Yet the sweet hope that the Saviour hath given,
Comforts our hearts while we weep;
For Jesus doth love thee in death as in life,
As if on his bosom asleep.

Soon, gloomy river, thy surgings shall cease,
Jesus shall calm thy mad waves,
Rescue his people from under thy power,
For he hath numbered their graves.

Some Harvest Thoughts.

The months are again bringing round to us the night season of the natural year—the time when, having gathered up her fruits, the earth folds her garments of greenness and softly lays her down to her winter's rest. It is meant that we should listen to the voices which speak to us when the year is growing ripe, and think the solemn thoughts which arise in one at sight of its ripeness passing so swiftly to decay. God has used this season of reaping and ingathering to teach men many things, and from the field of his Book we may glean for ourselves a sheaf of autumnal lessons. In plain words has the Lord of Harvest interpreted to his children the meaning of his own silent providence.

The first lesson ought to be one of thankfulness. He who feeds the ravens, which neither sow nor reap, has much more been feeding us. Though our corn is not "rained down" upon us from heaven's open door, yet in its uprising from the clods it is as much the gift of God as if it were. That process by which the dead earth gives us back manifold what we have lent it, and foul and noxious things are reconstructed by the chemistry of vegetation into nourishment for men, is the yearly wonder of God. It is but a slower form of what His hands wrought in instant miracle, who added to the loaves beside the Sea of Galilee. There is indeed no other branch of labor in which the return is so plainly, though in all labor it is as truly, a gift from God; for, while the merchant gets his profit in round-about ways through the operation of economical laws, which are intri cate or concealed, and the artisan draws his wages directly from his employer, no farmer can help seeing every day he lives that it is God Himself alone who is making his crop to grow. Nor can those fail to see it who eat of the fruit of his fields. Of course, however we get our livelihood, we owe both strength for work, and the wages which repay it, to Him in whom we live; but men see that more simply in the culture of the soil from which is reaped the people's bread than in anything else. Therefore a nation's harvest has always been taken as that sample of its general prosperity for which most naturally the nation gives thanks. Were it not so, a commercial nation like this, which lives by trade more than it lives by agriculture, might offer solemn thanks to God for its annual trade returns as appropriately as others do for their harvest-fields. But when we say grace over that part of our national wealth which comes most plainly once a year from God's own hand, we do in effect acknowledge Him as the giver of all our wealth. Among us, therefore, as among all peoples, harvest is a natural time for sacred joy. It tells of Heaven's favor on the land, and of rewarded toil, and of peace and household plentry.

With songs and shouting the Hebrews used to cut down their fields, when they dwelt in the old fruitful land; and among us quieter Western people, harvest-home is almost the only merry-making on which no one frowns. When the corn-clad valleys "shout for joy" as they lie in sunshine and ripple merrily to the autumn breeze, while "the little hills" stand round "rejoicing on every side," in those golden days when heaven and earth wear brighter smiles, and the late year, goodness-crowned, gathers into her lap the heritage of her youth, his must be a cold heart who will not be glad with "the joy of harvest." Only this is very far from the giddy, foolish revelry, and only half-decent jesting, which pollute many a harvest-field and make some harvest-homes an offence to the chaste moon. Such mirth as this should be pure and innocent, at least. It should be more—it should be pious. Harvest is a holy time. The world waits then at the table af its God, and "gets its meat from Him." "What He gives we gather;" and it is a shame not to be glad before Him with godly, grateful fear. When God settled his Hebrew people in their land, He took their agriculture under special care. He did not wish them to have much to do with idolatrous nations round; and therefore He discouraged commerce. They never had any manufactures to speak of, and, except in Solomon's reign, they never had a navy. So they lived on their fat land—their God's gift; and their wealth lay in its staple crops of corn and wine. God guarded and blessed their husbandry, directed farm operations by minute legislation, and mixed up the labors of the field with the most sacred parts of the year's worship. For it is well worth noting that of the three chief festivals, one opened the harvest, a second marked a stage in it, the third closed it. All three had to do with it. In early April, on the second day of the Passover, the earliest handful of ripe ears was waved before the Lord as a thank-offering of first-fruits, and harvest began. Seven weeks were allowed for getting the corn crop cut and threshed and garnered—first the barley, then the wheat; and on the fiftieth day began the second festival of Pentecost, or of the harvest, at which each man brought his tribute of a freewill offering as the Lord had blessed him, and the nation presented its first meat-offering of loaves made of the new flour before the Lord. This was a thanksgiving feast, marking the close of the grain harvest, which is ripe in Palestine, in early summer. The green crop and vintage, however, are not ripe till autumn; and their harvest could not be said to be complete till about the month of October. Then, at the year's end, followed the last and most glad solemnity of all—the Feast of Ingathering, during which Israel lived in booths, and gave God thanks for one other year's safely-stored produce of the good land to which He had led their fathers. Thus carefully God marked the spirit in which we ought to reap our fields by entwining every great religious festival with harvest work, and teaching his people to consecrate their ingatherings with thanksgiving at the beginning, the middle, and the end of them. We give God thanks when we remember the poor; and Hebrew law, always merciful, was specially mindful of the poor man in its harvest statutes. With us, greed is apt to rule both in getting and in keeping God's fruits; but in the Hebrew land the field corners were left unreaped for the poor, the gleanings fell ungathered to the poor, and whatever the generous earth might yield of itself when it lay fallow in its seventh year of rest was open to the poor. As if our bounteous Father, who Himself opens his own hand to feed us unworthy children, and loads with wealth the fields of the unthankful and evil, would have us not be niggardly when He is lavish, but imitate his own bounty then most of all when our hearts are full and our year crowned with his abundant goodness.

The harvest-field preaches to us the faithfulness as well as the goodness of God. There are thanks to God for his goodness; there is trust in God for his faithfulness. Earth's fruit-bearing is matter of promise. We travel far back to find it, to our race's second genesis, and to the head of the spared world that outlived the flood we hear God guarantees a perpetual "continuing of all things as they were from the beginning." No more catastrophes emperilling the earth's population, till the end comes and decisive catastrophe; no seasons of utter barrenness, therefore, and death, but, "while the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter. and day and night shall not cease." Our old earth has seen now many fulfilments of this promise; she has not seen one breach. Local and partial exceptions have been seen. The same weather may ripen your field which leaves mine green, if they were sown at different times; seasons may suit one crop, but drench or scorch another; on a wider scale—prevailing winds may wither one side of the hills, or floods lodge the low grounds in an adjoining dale; wider still—God keeps in his own hand his "evil arrow of famine," and as He "consumed Egypt by seven empty years till the land fainted," so He may make the population of a vast tract pine for hunger by blasting the crops, shutting up the heavens, and leaving "the harvest a heap in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow." The promise is not to one field, nor to any land, but to the earth, and God so varies his fulfilment of it as to work judgment upon some, show bounty to others, and be a discipline to all. Yet the earth hangs where she hung of old, revolves unvarying, receives in their order sun and rain, nor fails any year to yield her unlessened strength in giving food unto all flesh. This year our abundance may be a supply for others' want; next, their abundance for ours; but every year the great mother's harvest ripens somewhere for her children's bread. Every year, therefore, by its "rain from heaven and fruitful seasons," is witnessing for the faithfulness of Him who promised. And if so faithful in what touches the food and life of our flesh, how much more surely will God keep his better promises to our spirits, and the words on which He causes them to hope! Standing on the stubble-fields after the risks of a year's most changeable and often disastrous weather; looking back at the faithless forebodings which used to make men's faces dark beneath streaming or brazen skies; then looking round on the ordered ranks of ripe and waiting sheaves; may one not grow strong enough to hope that, though the inner life of goodness seems to ripen hardly at all, and this unwholesome and tearful climate threatens to kill within us the good seed, we also may one day stand on eternal fields, ready to be garnered, all ripe and golden, into God's golden storehouse?

Yet the promise is to him who believes it, and the faith which inherits the promise is a faith which works. Nowhere can one better see the practical solution of this difficulty in religion—I mean, how man's trustful labors and the faithful grace of God work together—than in husbandry. If the farmer walked by sight instead of faith he would never sow at all. For he never can see his harvest in spring; and if he even waited till all the conditions were at their best and hopefullest, he might wait the whole season round. The wise preacher tells us to cast our bread seed on the waters, when it falls and lies we know not where. He bids us also sow in the morning, nor withhold our hand in the evening, for "we cannot tell whether shall prosper, this or that, or whether both shall be alike good." And he warns us that "he that observeth the wind shall not sow, and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap." (Eccl. xi. 1–6.) It is from first to last, this husbandry, a thing of trust, to be done blindly, or in spite of foresight, on the strength of a word from God. But he who works, and works with utmost diligence and skill, noting the facts, that he may obey the laws of God's world, shall receive the blessing of the promise. Patient, tearful toil at sowing, patient waiting in trust for harvest, do inherit the joy of increase. But the slothful cultivator, or the trustless who will risk nothing, or the negligent who gives no heed to learn God's will, or the remiss, who, knowing God's will, does not do it; for them is no harvest, or a harvest poor in proportion to their want of faith, or skill, or pains, or enterprise. It is exactly so with that other husbandry, of which men are the subjects. Some of us know what thankless toil it is, and how hopeless to our eyes, to cast the truth of God upon the hearts of men. It looks wilder folly in the case of many surface-beaten, or rocky-hearted, or thorn-cumbered natures, than it would be to scatter corn on the waters of a flood, or fling it on frozen soil at dead of winter. When it is done, and no good comes of it, and, after long waiting, the good word seems dead out of memory, and the man looks harder than ever, it comes to be pitiful and heartless work. Long years of sowing pass with some of us; words of teaching or of warning go all past the ears of men as the idle wind does; the sower weeps as he sows, and the longer, aye the bitterer; he has long patience, but harvest never comes, till, so weeping, sowing on, he rests from his labor. Is all over? Ah, did not that tearful sower lean on his promise from eternal lips—"My word shall not return unto Me void?" All is not over; for in God's fields this is true, that "one soweth and another reapeth." After the faithful weeping sower is forgotten out of the land, the incorruptible seed springeth into life, divine breath warmeth it, and God finds harvesters to bring home his sheaves rejoicing. No seed of God is wasted.

I have spoken of the joy of harvest, the type of all peaceful, thankful rest in the reward of finished and successful labor. But there is a deep sadness, too, which mingles in true harvest gladness at its best, and by degrees comes quite to swallow it up. These are the tears, of which the Laureate has sung to us, that fill the eyes that look on "happy autumn fields." This ingathering is the result and end of all the twelvemonth's outdoor labor; for this men have wrought, have watched, have hoped, all the weary season through: and when at last one sees it come and got, the first feeling is to rejoice. Labor of the year crowned with goodness deserved a triumph! But the second feeling, the after-thought? Is it not to be sad? For, harvest got, the year is done; and there remains no more to look for or to work at, for this present. Attainment is the death of hope, and joys, plucked, wither. It is always the way on earth. When things come to their best, they are ready to change. Whilst we are active, full of desire, working toward an end, our joy grows as we near it, till we reap our labor;—then come satiety, reaction, disappointment, weariness. Mark what follows harvest. Ere the last sheaf is off the ground, the lime-tree is growing yellow, and the beech leaf reddens; the brackens turn to russet on the hill-side; sereneness is fallen upon all the green of earth; the latest flowers are blackening in early frost; the winds sigh with a wintry sound through the thinning boughs, and toss leaf after leaf away; the very stubble-fields look stripped for the storm, and the desolate heavens make ready for the rotting of the bravery which summer wore in her prime. Winter will be upon us before we know it. For earth has done her annual work; we have borne off her produce: and now must come rest, inaction, repair of wasted strength, and long silent preparation through wintry death for the resurrection of next spring. This is nothing strange if one thinks of it. It is the plan on which we and all this earth are made. We are not incorruptible; cannot work on unre newed. All things must wear down by labor; therefore on work, must follow rest; on waste, repair; on daytime, night; on summer, winter; on manhood, old age and death. As the day's work pulls us down into a slight, partial decay and exhaustion of life, which the rest of night builds up again; so the year's work at corn and grass-growing exhausts the life of the earth, which winter's rest must restore. Even so, as the corn seed, after coming to ripeness this year, must die and decay beneath the clod in order to leap into newness of life and inconceivable power of growth next spring; so our bodies, worn quite down at last and gathered to the grave, "like a shock of corn fully ripe," must sleep their time in corruption till the spring of eternity awake them into newness of beauty, power, and life. Is not this the reason why autumn and harvest-fields are sad to look upon? Because they are the crown of the year, its ripe result; after which it has nothing to do but fold its hands to sleep and be buried under withered leaves in the grave of winter. But why must this be the law of the world? Why must all life begin to perish at its height; and all work, "when it is finished, bring forth death," and perfection to be the triumph of an hour? I think this is nothing else but "the bondage of corruption" under which creation is groaning now because of sin. I feel in my soul a melancholy sympathy with the wail of the dying year, and the autumn feeling which confesses that the fruits of the earth, being ripe, must rot now. And I accuse myself for having brought vanity and unprofitable repetition of death upon all the things that God hath made. And I do sorrowfully see, in the passing away so swiftly of the golden glory of the year's crown, a type, a presage, of my passing swiftly away. Why should I dream of abiding here? The very leaves abide not. The clusters of autumn vintage, the sheaves of autumn wheat, are reaped by death. Full and ripe, they are ready for their grave. I, too, grow and come to full strength and mellow and ripen—and then? Then comes the reaper, and the earth opens for me. Why should it not? For me, the deserver and bringer of death on all, for me it will open gladly. Blessed if I know Him whose words to Martha were, "I am the Resurrection and the Life!" Gathered to sleep in Him, the Christian carries to his grave with him the imperishable seed which cannot die, but even in the grave lies, like corn in the earth, waiting the voice of spring. In the Christian's ear, this autumnal decay, prophetic of death indeed, but of death in hope, does but sadly, sweetly sing of rest from sinful labor, and of change into the likeness of a glory unrevealed.

The Last Trumpet.

"The mighty sound of this loud trumpet will be heard at once, in the deepest depths of the sea, and in the remotest corners of the earth. Above the stormy winds, the roaring waves, the rumbling volcanoes, and the loudest thunders, the last trumpet, "the trump of God," shall sound. And all the dead, whether in the dust of the earth, or in the depths of the ocean, shall hear and come forth."

From the above extract, which I make from a recent number of an excellent paper, it would appear that never has there been heard on earth, so loud a sound as the last trumpet will make. We would be led to suppose that all earthly noises will be low in comparison to it—hushed as it were into stillness by it—that perhaps it will be as much louder than the volcanoes, or earthquakes, which threw up the Andean range of mountains, as they are louder than ordinary noises—that it will be in comparison to ordinary sounds as "the shaking leaf, while rattling thunders round us roar." Though that mountain range extends almost from pole to pole, and the igneous action must have seemed as if it would rend the earth, yet we have no reason to believe that it was audible in all parts of the earth; but here will be a sound, it would seem, that will not only be audible everywhere on earth, and sound out to the distant throne of God; but the dead in all parts of the earth and the sea, and in hell, will hear it. That it will awake all of them, and, perhaps, some of them in a fright.

In somewhat similar strain, an ancient poet has very beautifully and sublimely written:

"Tuba mirum spargens sonum
Per sepulchra regionum,
Coget omnes ante thronum.
Moro stupchit, et natura
Cum resurgit creatura,
Judicanti responsura."

Indeed, it seems to be the idea of many, that that unearthly trumpet, "the trump of God," will be the means of waking the dead of all climes, and of all ages. But, because men have written elegantly, sublimely, and eloquently, are their writings therefore true? May not error be beautifully arrayed? May it not be, that the above extracts are more beautiful than true? Does the word of God inform us that the last trumpet will be heard on earth? That a single mere mortal, dead or alive, will hear it? I admit that much traditional theology will say, yes; but traditional theology was not always true in the days of our Saviour, neither is it now. It is a "thus saith the Lord," and not tradition, that makes any theory true. A last, always implies that there are more than one. There cannot be a last, unless there are more than one. To deny this, is to contradict all our ideas of correct language. If then there is a last trumpet, there must be also trumpets which are not the last. How many trumpets are to be sounded? Different passages of the word of God tell us seven. Rev. viii. 2, 6–8, 10, 12; ix. 6–13; xi. 13; 1 Cor. xv. 52; 1 Thess. iv. 16. If the last trumpet is not the last of the seven, pray tell us what trumpets are mentioned in the Bible, of which it is the last? Indeed, I read of no unearthly trumpets that are to be blown, except the seven.

There is no passage which would lead us to suppose that there will be any pecular difference in the trumpets, or that one will sound any louder than the others. As we have said, the word of God tells us of seven, but certainly, it would not lead us to infer that there are any more than seven to be blown; and to say there are less, is to contradict the inspired word. The last trumpet then is the last of the seven. We have no warrant from the word of God to believe the last will be any louder than the other six trumpets. Certainly the plain import of the language would lead us to infer that as was the loudness of the first six, so will be that of the seventh—that if the first six are to be, or have been heard by mere mortals, then the seventh will be; and vice versa.

I believe that many expositors are of the opinion that at least a part of the six have sounded. Do any of them believe that any man in the flesh, any mere mortal, has ever heard any of them? Does any expositor that ever has written, believe that any one of the six, will ever be heard by a mere mortal? If none of the six have been, or will be heard, why should any one believe that the seventh will be an exception? Does the Bible ever speak of it as such? Certainly not.

It is true that Rev. xi. 15–18, speaks of the judgment of the dead, of the reward of the prophets and the saints, and of the destruction of those that destroy the earth; and consequently the resurrection must then take place. And Rev. x. 7 informs us that when the seventh angel begins to sound, the mystery of God will be finished. When the mystery of God shall be finished, much that is now dark, will be made plain. But though these things come in connection with the sounding, or after the sounding of the seventh trumpet, yet they are not a consequence of the sounding, any more than the things which come at the sounding of the other trumpets are consequents. It is God who awakes the dead, and not a mere sound. Whatever may be said of the sounding of the trumpets, or what may be God's object in them, yet it would appear that they are not for the benefit of men in the flesh—not to alarm, instruct nor awake them. Their objects may be one of the mysteries which shall be finished.—Prophetic Times.

Children's Department.

For a Child who is Ill.

In my little bed I'm lying,
Weary, weary all day long;
And I cannot keep from crying,
Though I know its very wrong.

Jesus, thou canst see and hear me,
Sleepless and alone I lie;
But I know that thou art near me,
When no other friend is nigh.

Thou canst comfort me and make me
Very patient, very still,
For thou never wilt forsake me,
While I am so very ill.

Bless the doctor, who so gladly
Tries to make me well again;
Bless my mother, while she sadly
Grieves to see me suffer pain.

Bless thy little child, and make her
Better, purer, every way;
And if she dies, then give her
Life again "at the last day."

Tired of Myself.

Nellie Hall was seated very comfortable on the lounge in her aunt's sitting room, reading, when her brother George came in.

"Ah, Nell!" he exclaimed, "you're the very one I've been looking for. I do believe I have been in every room in the house, and here you are, at last! Come, I want you to do something for me. Will you, Nell?"

"Not just now, George. Don't trouble me. I'm busy!"

"O yes, Nell, you're only reading; and the book won't run off. Come, I want you to cover this ball. It won't take you long."

"Do go away, George. I can't read while you are talking. Go to Jane; perhaps she will cover it for you."

Nellie settled herself again to read, but somehow she seemed to have lost her interest in her book. She turned over leaf after leaf, and then, with a very unhappy look she glanced at her aunt who was seated near her work-table at the opposite side of the room.

"What's the matter, Nellie? Does'nt your book please you?"

"O yes, aunt; it is very pretty, indeed, It was so kind in uncle to get it for me."

"I thought you looked as though you felt dissatisfied about something."

"Why, yes—I do feel a little so. I believe I'm tired of reading."

"Are you sure you are tired of reading?"

"I don't quite understand you, aunt."

"Is it the reading that has tired you or are you tired of yourself?"

Nellie looked at her aunt for a minute or two in silence.

"Tired of myself! Aunt, how could I be tired of myself?"

"Forgetting everything but ourselves, I think is the easiest way to become tired of ourselves."

"Well, I do that pretty often, Aunt Mary."

"And did you never notice, my dear Nellie, that when you are unwilling to do a kind act for any one, you feel just as you do now? Especially if the kindness would have required a little self-denial on your own part? Have you ever thought of that, Nellie?"

"I don't know that I ever have, aunt."

"What was it that your brother George wanted of you a little while ago, Nellie?"

"Why," said Nellie, blushing deeply, "he wanted me to put a new cover on his ball, but—"

"But what?"

"I was only going to say, I was busy reading just then, and didn't want to stop."

"And you refused to do it for him?"

"Yes, aunt, I told him to ask Jane. I see now," she added, "why my book did not interest me. I'll go and look for George right away, dear aunt. I think that will rest me, after being tired of myself."

It was about an hour afterward when Nellie again made her appearance in the sitting-room.

"O, Aunt Mary, you can't think how glad I am that I went after George. I found him down stairs, trying with all his might to cover his ball himself. Only think of it, aunt! And then I told him I'd do it for him. And I told him, too, that I was very sorry I'd been so selfish. He was so glad when it was all finished, and it did look as nice as a new one. The next time when I feel tired of myself, I think I shall know where the fault is. Thanks to you, dear Aunt Mary."

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE IDEA OF TWO TRANSLATIONS.

THE position taken by some Advent believers that there will be two translations of the saints; one immediately at the descent of our Lord from heaven, and the other at a later period, has been advocated, so far as we know, by only a few in this country; so few that we have given it no public notice. It seems it is advocated by some in England; how extensively we do not know. To our mind it is a mischievous and unscriptural doctrine, and savors strongly of Phariseeism, or self-righteousness. The notion is well met in England by a writer in "The Rainbow" of October, inst. We give our readers the following extracts from the article.

Admitting the doctrine of the Translation of the Saints—both "quick and dead"—at the approaching advent of the great Bridegroom, a question of intense and absorbing interest arises, namely, Of whom will that blessed company be composed? Will it embrace all who have, or had whilst in the flesh, the grace of God in their hearts, as symbolized by the "oil" in the "vessels" of the wise virgins? Or, will it consist of an election out of the whole body of those, all of whom are "elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ," i. e., of an election out of an election? of those only, in brief, who, like Enoch, are pre-eminent in holiness and good works?

Mr. Maude, in his interesting paper on "Enoch a type of the translated saints," in the "Rainbow" for September, 1868, has adopted the latter supposition, and maintained it with his wonted ability. But it appears to us that this "elective doctrine" (as for brevity we shall term it throughout this paper) is, in the first place, most discouraging; and in the second, most dangerous as well as unscriptural.

We shall now proceed to give our reasons for this strong opinion as concisely as we can, studying simplicity as well as brevity, and remembering that we are writing for the "babes" in Christ, unto whom are revealed those divine mysteries which are hidden from "the wise and prudent." We are more and more persuaded daily that the truths of Scripture—all at least which concern the peace of God's saints (as this question does most intimately)—lie upon its surface, and are most easily discernible by those who most habitually cultivate a child-like spirit. To what profound depths of error has not the opposite spirit led even the best of men? In what mazes of perpexity has not the habit of suspecting a mystic sense even in the plainest texts involved them!

Oh let us all beware of "mysticism"—that subtle poison of the mind—and be content to sit as little children at the feet of Jesus; to become babes that we may be truly wise!

Approaching now our present subject in that child-like spirit, and discarding all mystic and recondite theories and baseless imaginations, we say—

First, that the "elective doctrine," as maintained by Mr. Maude, is most discouraging to the true disciples of the Lord Jesus, and the truer he is—the closer he may be copying the meek and lowly spirit of his divine Master—the more discouraging must it prove. It is obviously and evidently so much so as to send an immediate chill through the heart! For, if those only are to participate in that exalted destiny who are pre-eminent in holiness and good works, who then could dare to indulge even the faintest hope of being found amongst the number? Who would venture to esteem himself worthy of so great an honor? With what feelings, therefore, must the true Christian (and the truest are ever those who have the lowliest thought of themselves) look forward to the advent of the great Bridegroom? Surely not with exultation, not with joy, not with longing desire—as the Scriptures everywhere and indiscriminately exhort the saints to anticipate that event—but with feelings of deepest depression and despondency! Such a one would reason thus, and we see not how the justice of his reasoning can be denied: None but those pre-eminent in holiness and good works shall enter with the Bridegroom into the "marriage supper." I, therefore, at all events must be excluded. The "outer darkness" must be my portion, whatever may be that of others. Alas! for all my hopes are perished in a moment! They have vanished like the transient sunshine of a winter's day; and dark clouds of fear and terror have overshadowed my soul! I had cherished the entrancing hope that at the coming of our dear Lord and Master, a "crown of righteousness"—small it might be and of but dim radiance, yet still a crown—was "reserved" not only for pre-eminently holy Paul, but for "all them that love his appearing." I am conscious to myself that I did so "love his appearing." It has been hitherto my dearest hope by day, animating my feeble efforts in the Lord's vineyard, and strengthening me against the wiles of the devil. It was my sweet thoughts by night and by day (alas! that it should have proved but a dream!) that when he "who is our life" should "descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God," that I also, though the meanest of his servants, the "last of the least of all saints," should be of those who shall be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air," to be "forever with the Lord;" and that when he in the fulness of time shall come with "the armies of heaven," I should "appear with him in glory." Not so, however, as it now appears, but to me—should I then be amongst the living—will be addressed those direful words, "I know you not." It must be so; for I, at least, can see no alternative between admission and final exclusion.

This doctrine, hence, not only excludes me from the marriage feast, but actually unchristianizes me altogether! Those whom Christ doest not know, cannot be his. For is it not written, "The Lord knoweth them that are his?" 'Tis true that the teachers of this exclusive doctrine speak of the foolish virgins as being "virgins still," and hold out the distant hope of admission at some future time, after passing through the fiery furnance of tribulation seven times heated. But what consolation is that to me, even could I receive it as truth? I cannot indulge that hope, any more than I can accept that doctrine. For, to my mind, the answer of Christ to the foolish virgins, "I know you not," is fatal to their recovery at any future period, however remote: unless indeed we adopt the baseless theory of Origen and his followers. Now the "elective doctrine" of Mr. Maude ranks me at once among the "foolish;" for too well I know that I am pre-eminent in nothing but unfaithfulness and imperfection. Farewell then, a long farewell to all those sweet dreams and blissful visions! The midnight cry, "Behlod, the Bridegroom cometh," for which I was wont to watch with ears intent and on the stretch to catch its first sound, will only now strike terror and dismay to my soul."

We should deeply regret in any way to misrepresent the opinions of one so highly and justly esteemed as Mr. Maude, and who, by his bold and able defence of the grand doctrine of "immortality only through Christ," has done such eminent service to the cause of truth. But there is no room for mistake or misapprehension. His doctrine is enunciated with all his usual clearness and precision. He speaks of the "Translation of saints" as a very special reward, "for which a special meetness" is required, and to which "none shall attain," "without some special readiness."

Again he adopts as his own the words of a recent writer, "from whose views on the subject of unfulfilled prophecy" he, nevertheless, "totally dissents," who asks, "Have we any ground from Scripture to expect that any of God's children, now or hereafter, shall be caught up in the air, without their having been previously and pre-eminently sanctified by the Spirit of the Lord, in order to render them meet for such an exalted honor?"

This is quite sufficient to show that we have not misrepresented Mr. Maude's views, with which we must say, in the most emphatic terms, we are at issue on every point. We maintain, in direct opposition thereto, that "Translation" is not a "special reward," distinguishing one true believer from another less "pre-eminently sanctified;" but that, on the contrary, "such honor have all his saints," and that no "special meetness" or special readiness is required of any one, other than that he be found in Christ at his appearing, united to him by a living faith as a branch in the true vine, and having the "oil" of grace in his heart, as well as the lamp of profession in his hand.

We lay it therefore as a first charge against the doctrine of Mr. Maude and all who side with him on this subject, that its inevitable tendency is to "make the heart of the righteous sad," whom the Lord hath not made sad. And what makes the charge the heavier, is that the degree of sadness, and depression, and despondency, will ever be in direct proportion to the progress of the individual in humility, the first of all Christian graces, that is, in fact, to his advance in the divine life! Surely that cannot be true which has such an effect.

We affirm now, in the second place, and that confidently, that the "elective doctrine" of Mr. Maude's is dangerous. It is so because it contradicts and makes void the doctrines of grace. The crowning issue of salvation is admission to the marriage feast—"Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." Now that the whole of our salvation, from first to last, is of grace only will not be denied, we apprehend, by any reader of the "Rainbow," so that of that point we have no need to offer proof. If wholly of grace, then is boasting excluded, as it is written, "Where is boasting, then? It is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay, but by the law of faith?" But according to Mr. Maude's doctrine, "boasting" is not and cannot be excluded. For if those only are admitted to the honor of "Translation," or (what we maintain is one and the same thing,) "to the marriage supper," who are "pre-eminently sanctified by the Spirit of the Lord," then all such have cause for boasting over those who are not so distinguished. They may not be disposed to do so, but, assuredly, they have cause, and good cause for glorying over those less "sanctified" brethren.

The parable of the pounds or talents may be alleged as showing that different degrees of diligence in the Lord's servants will be differently rewarded—some being appointed to rule over "ten cities," others over "five cities," and so on. This is not for a moment denied. But it should be remembered that the distribution of rewards takes place in the kingdom, after the "nobleman has returned, having received the kingdom," and has, therefore, nothing to do with admission to the kingdom, or what is the same thing, to the marriage supper of the Lamb. All who have made a good use of their talents, whether more or less, are graciously received, and to all alike are these cheering words addressed, "Well done, good and faithful servant," etc.; "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," But when admitted, some are stationed in a higher rank than others.

The simple fact of "admission" is the subject of another parable; that, viz., of the laborers in the vineyard, in which the reward is the same precisely to all—the same to those who came at the eleventh hour, as to those who had borne the "heat and burden of the day." The "penny" seems to be, in general, "eternal life," (or immortality,) which is the common boon of all the saved. Now eternal life is the "gift of God," conditional only on possession of the Son." "He that hath the Son hath life;" or, what is evidently the same thing, only under a different emblem, on having "oil" (the true grace of God) in their vessels, (i. e., hearts,) together with the lighted lamps of profession. But not a word is said in the parable as to the amount of oil possessed by each; though it is only natural to suppose that some, having more forethought, or perchance, more capacious vessels, may have stored up more oil than others. All the wise had, at least, sufficient to trim their lamps at the sudden call, and all such were, without either question or delay, at once admitted.

Passing over much the writer has said, we come to what we regard as the main Scripture argument against the doctrine he opposes, and which we oppose. He says:

If the question as to the universality, or otherwise of the "Translation," were to be decided only by the apostle's description of the scene, it alone, we contend, would be sufficient to compel an affirmative answer. For (1 Thess. iv. 13–18) when giving his Thessalonian converts the true comfort under bereavement, that they might not sorrow as others "which have no hope," he says: "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus (surely the whole body of them) will God bring with him." By what authority does any one venture to narrow the number to a select few only? Or what comfort would it have conveyed to the Thessalonians to be told that some of their friends who slept might chance to be among the number; but that the rest would have to abide in their graves for an indefinite period? Strange consolation that would be when each individual would be exposed to the chilling fear that his own beloved one would be amongst the latter portion? We hold it as evident that this description relates to the ingathering or harvest of the saints at the coming of the Bridegroom, and is therefore directly in point to our present enquiry.

Again, the apostle says, "We which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (go before) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." "The dead in Christ"—surely that implies all the dead in Christ, or words have no meaning. Let the reader now, who is anxious for the truth, attend carefully to what follows—for here is the actual "Translation of the saints"—and let him judge for himself whether the narrow and exclusive doctrine has any, the least atom, of foundation in this inspired prophecy. "Then we which are alive and remain"—surely that means all which are alive and remain. The apostle speaks in the person (as it were) of the whole collective body of the saints who shall be still abiding in the flesh at the appearing of the Bridegroom. And we confidently affirm that if so much as one were omitted; if but one—though he were the meanest child, the most ignorant peasant in whom shall be found, were it but a spark, of true, living, genuine faith—be left out, the apostles words would not be true. But he goes on, "We which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them (the risen dead) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." This now is the "Translation of the saints," and we leave it to our readers to judge whether there be one atom of foundation for the assertion that it is a very special reward for which very special meetness is required, or whether it be not true what we affirmed in the beginning, that "this honor have all his saints."

The same observation will hold good of 1 Cor. xv. 40–52, where the same apostle speaking on the same subject, supplies what was omitted in his epistle to the Thessalonians, namely, that those which "are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord" are transformed before their "translation." "We shall not all sleep," he says, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, etc., and we (i. e., we which are alive and remain) shall be changed," i. e., we ALL as he says in the previous verse. Here again is no room for exclusiveness, no foundation for Mr. Maude's "elective doctrine." but, combining the two statements (that in Thessalonians and the present,) the apostle affirms, as positively and as plainly as words can affirm anything, that at his coming, i. e., when he shall next come as the Bridegroom, ALL the sleeping saints shall be raised incorruptible, glorious, powerful, spiritual and immortal: and ALL the living saints shall be changed instantaneously, and, being clothed upon with immortality, both together shall be "caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so to be forever with him."

Once more, and only once, we consider 2 Tim. iv. 8, to be a very strong—indeed, unanswerable—proof of the doctrine for which we are contending. "Henceforth," the apostle says, "there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but to ALL them also that love his appearing." As all true Christians—however mistaken they may be as to the time and mode—must love Christ's appearing, we see not how the "elective doctrine" can be sustained.

The question is one of intense interest as well as vital importance. For, to say nothing of its injurious bearing upon the doctrines of grace, if the narrow and elective view of the saints' translation be maintained, we see not how Christ's ministers can any longer hold out to their people the advent as an object of desire and love. They very naturally say to us, "if the translation be a special reward for which a 'special meetness' is required; if only those shall participate therein, or in the blessedness of those who are called to the 'marriage supper of the Lamb,' who are 'pre-eminent' saints, and of the type of Enoch, then it is clearly not for us. We can have no part nor lot in the matter, for, alas! we are pre-eminent only in weakness, infirmity an imperfection! Why exhort us to look for the 'appearing of the great God, even our Saviour, Jesus Christ,' when we can only expect to be left out in the 'outer darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth'? For we clearly see that the fate of the man who intruded into the marriage feast, not having on a "wedding garment.' is identical with that of the 'foolish virgins;' the time and parties being the same. Alas! then, for us, that day will be to us evermore an object of dire dread and terror!" So they would reply, and most justly. Indeed, we cannot see how any true Christian—holding the views of Mr. Maude—can look forward to the advent otherwise than with apprehension and alarm. He must be very differently constituted from ordinary Christians, if he can view it otherwise. Oh! it is a cold, disheartening doctrine! one calculated at once to mystify the judgment, upset the faith, and chill the heart of every humble believer. God forbid it had any, even one grain of truth, or one atom of foundation in the word of God! as we fully believe it has not.

RESURRECTION.

BY L. F. MOORE.

"AND you hath he quickened who, were dead in trespasses and sins." Eph. ii. 1. The conditionof these brethren is clearly defined—"DEAD"—not physically, but morally, before their conversion to Christ. If they were dead they must live by some means or other.

In Rom. vi. we read of being "buried with him by baptism into death." This is the believer. Then at verse eleven we read, "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ." Here is a difference. "Dead IN sins," and dead UNTO sin. Both take place in this life. Then there must be a resurrection or quickening somewhere in this life.

He who is declared to be "dead unto sin," is represented as being "alive unto God, through Jesus Christ; while he who is "dead in sins," is represented as being under condemnation, because he does not believe; that is, he is "dead." Turn now to John v. 24, and read, "Verily . . . I say unto you, he that heareth my word . . . is passed from death unto life." What kind of death? Moral death, which will result in physical death. The Master is now talking of death in this life, and says, "Verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the (morally) dead" (for that is what he is talking about) "shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." That is, pass from under condemnation, or death in sins, to "Live unto God, through Jesus Christ." Rom. vi. 11. But, "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves (not hades) shall hear his voice," etc. While Christ was on earth his disciples and others did hear his voice and lived from the sins, or their moral death; but there was a greater work to be accomplished than this, for, says he, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw ALL men unto me." John xii. 32. When that was accomplished, and he was raised again to live forever, there was given to his disciples a commission, wider in extent than their first commission, which was confined to the cities of Judah. That extended to "all the world" and "every creature," who is "dead in sins;" and Christ knowing the extent of his work, says, "Marvel not because I say that they who now hear my voice and believe shall live; for when I, the 'Resurrection and the Life,' shall have accomplished all, then my voice or gospel shall be heard in all the secret places, and they that (hear) do good, 'shall come forth (from moral death) to the resurrection of life,'" i. e., pass from condemnation to life; while they who do evil shall come forth to hear the word, but do evil (not believe) and shall only be condemned by the voice of the Resurrection and Life; therefore come forth to damnation (not life). This is the work of the gospel (voice, Heb. i. 2) of the Son of God, either to justify or condemn; and the resurrection spoken of here takes place in this life, when we are "buried with him by baptism into his death;" dying to sin, at conversion, and "alive unto God (in this life) through Jesus Christ." In proof that the above takes place now, in this life, we quote Rom. vi. 13. "But yield ye yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead." Here is a command that relates to our duty here; and all who have been "dead in sins," but "quickened to life," should obey it. For the resurrection of physically dead men, see 1 Cor. xv.

A few weeks ago a preacher, who said in private conversation, that he had read all of "Geo. Storrs' works or tracts, "declared from the pulpit that the "non-resurrectionists" got their doctrines from the book of Maccabees. A more palpable mistake could not well have been made; and if the preacher will again read the works he claims he has read, he will only convict himself of the mistake; for I have never seen one quotation in "Geo. Storrs'" works from the book in question, and I am sure there is none. Please keep within the bounds of truth, and it will appear more honorable. "God is love."

THE ATONEMENT.

BY CHARLES H. HASTINGS.

THIS word is used but once in the New Testament; Rom. v. 11, and in the margin it is rendered "reconciliation." The same word in the Greek is found twice in 2 Cor. v. 18, 19, and is also rendered reconciliation. It is found frequently in the Pentateuch of the Old Testament, and in many instances used as a type, conveying the same meaning as reconciliation, satisfaction, harmony, at-one with God; hence the term at-one-ment.

The popular, or orthodox view of atonement is that of paying a debt; which we readily admit; but not in the room or stead of another; not that an innocent person should suffer instead of the guilty, which would appear unjust; yet, in many instances, this idea might be conveyed. Let us illustrate. For instance: Suppose A owes B a note of a hundred dollars. A has nothing wherewith to pay: the law demands that A shall be put in jail till the utmost farthing is paid. C, in sympathy for A, comes forward and pays the debt, and A is set free. B, in justice, has no further demand on him.

Now for the application. If Christ paid the debt due from the sinner, as thus brought to view, vicariously, the sinner, believer or unbeliever, is free; else there is no justice in the law.

But the Apostle saith, "The law is holy, and just, and good;" and so we believe. Now, a question: Did Christ suffer the penalty due to the law? We answer, yes. But what is the penalty?

Some tell us it is eternal, everlasting suffering. Did Christ endure everlasting suffering? Did he go down into eternal torment? Is that the penal claim of the law? Some tell us, He being Divine in his nature, endured that which was equivalent. But can Divinity suffer? Can the Godhead die? His sufferings had an end; they fell vastly short of eternal; for death had him in its dominion only three days and three night.

Some say the penalty is, to be cut off from the source of spiritual life and happiness. Was Christ thus cut off?

Others say, It is to die the second death, in the sense of dying twice. Did Christ die twice? Hear the testimony of the Apostle, Rom. vi. 9, 10. "Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him: for in that he died, he died unto sin once." Then he did not die twice; therefore, twice dying is not the penalty of the law, else Christ did not suffer the penalty.

From this, it would seem, Christ did not not pay the debt in the manner so many imagine else they do not understand what is due the law.

But if Christ did pay the debt in the manner we have attempted to illustrate i, e., vicariously, then why, in justice, is not every soul set free? Must the law be satisfied with an equivalent and yet claim its victim?

Again. It is said that Christ came to restore what was lost in Adam; that he pays the debt due for Adam's transgression; which transgression is the cause of all the human family, old and young, being brought into what is called "natural death." If this be true, and Christ paid the debt vicariously, there has been no atonement made for any sin but the sin of Adam. Therefore, all who have sinned since Adam, are under the penalty of the law of a second death, in the sense of dying twice; first, for Adam's sin, second, for our own sins; for which no atonement has been made; for "He (Christ) died unto sin once;" and this for Adam's transgression on purpose to restore the whole human family out of death and place them on the same footing Adam was before he sinned.

Now, as there has been atonement made for the "second death," where is our hope? What pays the debt for our sins? There has been no equivalent provided. Is not the law just, and equally good? Am I told that through faith in Jesus' blood I can somehow have forgiveness for my sins? But that blood, I am also told, is the vicarious atonement for Adam's sin. Yet, if I can obtain pardon for my sins, through faith, without such an atonement; is it necessary that a vicarious atonement be made for Adam's sin? I see no necessity for it; there can be none.

Again. If Christ paid the debt due for Adam's transgression, which was "natural death," vicariously, then I perceive injustice in the law, for it accepted of an equivalent, eighteen hundred years ago, and ever since it has been dragging its lawful victim, also into the dust of death and the grave.

Another view (if I understand it) is this: That "the wages of sin is death," signifying the "second death." Not this natural or common death: and although Christ died unto sin but once, it was a substitute for this second death; and, also, that suffering is part of the penalty due the law; for Christ suffered; "He was made perfect through suffering;" and the person who accepts Christ, believes in Christ, becomes in reality a Christian, is exempt from this suffering and death; the wicked who have not accepted Christ must all be raised up, live again, be judged, and pass into this state of suffering and death.

In looking over the Scriptures, I find the punishment due for sin, after the final judgment, is an everlasting punishment; see Math. xxv. 46; therefore, if suffering is a part of this punishment, it must be an everlasting suffering. Thus eternal, everlasting torment is proved. But if the suffering, which is a part of the penalty, can cease, why may not the remaining part also cease? And in fact, the suffering in the substitute did cease, so also the death ceased; for He was holden only three days and nights; and was made alive to die no more, "death hath no more dominion over him." Does the law demand less of the substitute than it does of its lawful victim? If Christ, as a substitute, was made perfect through this suffering and death, and this suffering and death had an end, and Christ went to the extent of the law, who can say, it will not have the same effect on its lawful victim? and in fact it must, if the law be just; and thus universal restoration is proved true.

But to return, we again ask, What is the law, and what does it claim? This is what we should first understand; not for any selfish motive, or to sustain a theory; but for the truth's sake, and that the glory of that law, which we believe is holy, and just, and good, should be given to him who hath instituted that law, and in whom is all wisdom, who, hath declared, and knew the end from the beginning; whose plans and purposes were laid in wisdom, and none of them have, or ever will fail.

We read in Gen. ii. 8. 16, 17, "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed. And the Lord God commanded the man saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." The marginal reading is, "Dying, thou shalt die."

Here, then, we find the first law on record with a penalty, given to the first man, Adam; and this before he had any offspring.

The simple understanding of this, is, If he obeyed, there is no intimation but what he might have lived forever; if he disobeyed, he forfeited his life, and should surely die.

Now, what followed? The woman had an interview with the serpent. Who or what this serpent was, is not our pupose here to explain; but the word saith, he was more subtle than any beast of the field. In this interview, the woman said, "Of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, "ye shall not eat of it, lest ye die," The serpent replied, ye shall not surely die; but shall be as gods knowing good and evil." This atonement was believed; and so it has been, and is believed by a vast majority of people to the present day. "And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise;" through this temptation, "she took of the fruit thereof and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat." Thus the law was violated, set aside, trampled under foot. What followed?

The Lord met them in the garden and stated to Adam the nature of the penalty of this law, which he had violated. Hear it:

"And unto Adam he said, because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return; and the Lord sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken; and placed cherubims and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life; lest he should put forth his hand and take and eat and live forever."

Thus, we see, Adam forfeited his life, and was cut off from the source of life which God had instituted to prolong it, if he had been obedient: hence the Apostle saith, "By sin, came death;" and "sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." The wages of sin is death." "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned." Therefore we need not be at a loss to know what is the penalty of the law.

The question may here arise, How have all sinned? We answer, in the person of the first man; for as yet he had no child; hence all that spring from him, after this, are under the same condemnation; for it is not possible for "men to gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles:" "a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." "A bitter fountain cannot send forth sweet water; neither can a clean thing come out of an unclean." Adam was condemned and all that pertained to him. Therefore the force of this law is resting on all his posterity, demanding their life.

[To be concluded.]

From Joseph Brown.

Br. Storrs: I can't think of being deprived of the Herald, for I take much comfort in reading it. It is next to the Book of God in its teachings. May the Lord bless the Editor with health and energy to continue the paper, that the great truths of God's word, which have been veiled for centuries, may be unveiled, that the world may see and embrace them, as they stand and will stand when Christ comes. There are many in our day who think it an awful doctrine to believe the wicked dead will always remain in an unbroken state of death, where the Bible plainly teaches they will remain. For Christ never taught two doctrines in direct opposition. The word does plainly say, in John iii. 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." In John vi. 52, 54, "Jesus said unto them, verily, verily I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." What is it to eat his flesh and drink his blood? It is to do the will of God that sent him. Then he that doeth the will of God hath eternal life, and he that doeth it not hath no life in him. I believe it is truth, and rejoice that I have learned some of the truths of the Bible; and I never felt, in all my life, so much like giving God glory as when seeing this truth, that the wicked will "remain in the congregation of the dead." It looks like a God of love.

Yours, in hope of redemption through Christ when HE comes.

Edward Kelly, Burlington, Vt., writes: My heavenly Father hath blessed me with good health, for which I cease not to give thanks; and I do bless God for the hope of the gospel; for, although I can say with the poet,

"No foot of land do I possess,
Or cottage in this wilderness,"

I have, through my Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, an indisputable claim to a portion of that inheritance that fadeth not away. Love, in Christ, to all the brethren and sisters. I shall do what I can to sustain the precious Herald of Life.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 27, 1869.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Zions' Herald.

In our issue of Sept. 22, five weeks since, we noticed an article which appeared in the above named paper over the signature of "R. Atkinson," dated "Cape Elizabeth, Me." We did not regard "Zion's Herald" as indorsing some of the sentiments it expressed, nor count its Editor responsible for them so long as he did not indorse them; though that paper has no standing statement to that effect; while the Herald of Life has, and expressly saith, every week at the head of the Editorial Department, that "The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of correspondents." There is a liberty of expression allowed in this paper which is unknown to any of the sectarian papers; and some of our correspondents utter sentiments, occasionally, with which we are at variance as much as we are with some of the utterances we find in any of our exchanges.

We have been led to the foregoing remarks by an editorial notice in "Zion's Herald," of the 21st inst, of our remarks on the article on "Annihilation," which appeared in that paper some little time previously. We give below the entire editorial of "Zion's Herald," and shall append notes.

The Herald of Life devotes several columns to an article in our Social Meeting, against Annihilation. (1). Only one point in it is is especially noticeable. It says that "the Millerite excitement '42, did more to increase the membership of the M. E. Church than any effort that Church ever put forth; the minutes of their Conferences show an increase of 150,000 during that 'unwholesome excitement.'"

This is true. (2). But it is also true that the reaction was greater than the revival; the falling off greater than the addition. (3). It is true that some then converted staid so; but multitudes coming to Christ because they expected Christ was coming in the visible heavens, left Him when they found this expectation groundless. (4). It should be remembered that Mr. Miller and his associates in '42, preached no annihilation, nor sleep of the dead, nor material soul, nor non-divinity of Jesus Christ prior to his resurrection. (5). He only proclaimed the coming of our Lord; a Scripture doctrine, erroneous only in his location of the time of His coming. All the absurdities of the Adventists have grown up since that hour. The excitement was "unwholesome" but it was to a certain degree legitimate, every one at every hour being under obligation to be as those who wait for their Lord; to look and long for His appearing. (6). It is a long ways from his wrong figuring of the prophecies, to the late declarations of The Herald of Life as to Christ's mere humanity before He arose from the dead. (7). It claims to be evangelical. So it is in some features. So even is Unitarianism in its declaration of the unity of God and Universalism in its assertion of the love of God. It is the relation of these truths to others equally vital, and their application to the state and needs of the human soul, that make up orthodoxy. The Annihilationists preach Christ Crucified the only Saviour. In that they are orthodox.(8). And no doub one can be saved through their creed and some are saved without going into the grave and turning to dust, as they now preach and fear. But they endanger and corrupt the faith with this pile of hay, wood, and stubble. (9). They debase Christian minds with their materialism, and terrifg them with their greves of souls(10) "For God hath not given us the spirir of fear but of power and of love and sound mind!"(11). These last our brethren need a littlle of.(12). Perfect love casteth out fear. Fear hath torment and nothing is more fearful to a Christish than such a faith. (12). May these believers soon be emancipated from this belief. (14).

(1.) Does not our Br. Editor overdo a little, at the outset? He says we "devoted several columns," etc. "Several" signifies "over two, but not many." Whoever will look at our article, of Sept. 22, will see that we did not devote "over two" columns to that review. Doubtless it seemed long to our cotemporary, and we excuse the mistake. What he says of "our social meeting" we do not understand: we supposd the article we criticised was the production of one man, "R. Atkinson."

(2.) Thank you Br., for that admission.

(3.) And did our Br. ever see a great and exciting revival among the Methodists, or any other denomination which goes in for sensasional preaching, but what the "reaction was" great? The Methodists do not exactly "hold to falling from grace," but they used to believe it possible. Have they become converts to the Calvinistic view that, it is "impossible to fall from grace;" and if a man does fall away, it is a sign he never had any special grace? It would seem so from this sentence.

(4.) Here our Br. rights up again, and indorses the old Methodist idea of "falling from grace." "Some converted staid so," saith Br. Haven; but "multitudes coming to Christ," etc., "left Him," etc. This is "falling from grace" with a vengeance.

(5.) If our Br. ranks "Geo. Storrs" among "Mr. Miller's associates" we can tell him the "Six Sermons" on the Immortality question were preached in Albany, N. Y., before we ever had anything to do or say of Mr. Miller's view of the advent; and those Sermons were in print previous to that time, and were circulated by thousands and tens of thousands at the outset of Storrs' advent preaching.

Mr. Miller, personally, never favored the views, but multitudes of others did, and preached them, too, so that thousands had embraced the doctrine of the "Six Sermons" on the end of the wicked before Mr. Miller's time of the advent had expired.

As to "non-divinity of Jesus Christ prior to His resurrection," no such doctrine has been promulgated by any body of believers in the literal destruction of the wicked. But more on this point directly.

(6.) A very charitable confession; and the backsliding, or "leaving Christ," resulted from leaving the doctrine of Christ's soon return from heaven; yes, and instead of "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." (Titus ii. 13), they turned to the gospel corrupting doctrine of "going to heaven at death," or by death, rather than "looking for Christ from heaven" to "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." (Phil. iii. 20, 21.) No wonder "the falling off was greater than the addition" in the Methodist Church under such teaching

(7.) Is this statement a candid one? We ask our Br. Haven to review it. Is not the impression here made (whether designed or not, we will not judge), that the Herald of Life, and of course its Editor, holds the idea that Christ possessed nothing but "mere humanity before he arose from the dead?" If the statement had gone no further than to say some of its correspondents seem to hold that view, we would not have complained; but that its Editor has uttered any such sentiments, we deny. "Zion's Herald" has before labored hard to fix upon us the denial of our Lord's divinity; but has hitherto utterly failed in the attempt; and the above insinuation, to say the least, is not in good taste. So far as we are concerned, we deny and repudiate the charge, and call upon Br. Haven, as a Christian man, to retract it, and not act as the Catholics are accused of doing, "Do evil that good may come." Truth needs no such supports. When Br. Haven, or any one else, can do away with the force of Christ's words, "No man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father," (Lk. x. 22, and Math. xi. 27), then we will discuss the question of our Lord's divinity with them: till then, let sectarians fight each other to their heart's content, and shed each other's blood, as they have done for long centuries past; we will have no part in their attempts to disprove the truth of our Lord's words, "No man knoweth who the Son is but the Father." Trinitarians, Arians, Unitarians, and Socinians have all labored to make void these words, and tell us just who the Son is. The controversy has bred little else than hatred, strife and bloodshed, and a bitterness towards each other which is anything but Christian; and after all, they are all profoundly ignorant of "who the Son is." Pride, arrogance and every evil work has grown up from that discussion, till brotherly love has become a scarce grace in the nominal church, much to the reproach of genuine christian charity. Let us be content with what is "revealed," and let "secret things," which belong to "the Father," alone. "The Lord Jesus Christ" is "out hope;" (1 Tim. i. 1); let us mind that, and let useless speculations alone. Christ is our Redeemer and Life-giver; and that to the glory of God the Father and by His appointment. Whoever rejects him, as such, will "utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. ii. 12. Here we leave those "who speak evil of the things they understand not."

(8). We wish we could say as much of those who claim to be "orthodox." To them Christ is no Saviour from death: the "essential man," in their theology, they affirm "never dies;" consequently is never saved from death; Christ is no Saviour in that sense to any man; and so has that notion corrupted the truth of God that the resurrection of "the dead" has no importance in their theology, and it well might left out of their teaching; if mentioned now and then it is manifest it has no importance, for it is only the resurrection of the body, "the shell" of the man, which they teach has always been a hindrance to knowledge and holiness, and when the "mortal coil" is dropped off the man soars away, knowing "more than all the world."

Thus Christ is robbed of His glory as "the resurrection and the life," and death, "the wages of sin," is glorified as the deliverer of of the saints from the prison-house of the body. Indeed, it is not unfrequently the case that these exclusive "orthodox" teachers talk of death as a "translation," and use the language of inspiration concerning Enoch—"he was not, for God took him"—as if it were applicable to the case of a man's dying; when that language explicitly states that, "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death." Heb. xi. 5. Let self-styled orthodoxists be careful of their "glass houses."

(9). We do not believe anyone can be saved by a creed;" we are saved by faith in Christ. That "some are saved without going into the grave and turning to dust," may be asserted, but assertions are not proof. Give us the proof, from the Bible, that any are saved, except Enoch and Elijah, without "going into the grave." Where is it? Even our Lord Jesus Christ went "into the grave." True, He did not "turn to dust," for He was promised and received an early resurrection. Not so his friends: to them the promise is, "I will raise him up at the last day." Till then, they "sleep in the dust of the earth" Dan. xii. 2: and when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . the dead in Christ shall rise." 1 Thes. iv. 16.

As to our preaching, we preach "Christ the resurrection and the life;" and we do not "fear" going "into the grave and turning to dust," because we rely on our Lord's promise, "I will raise him up at the last day;" It seems, self-styled orthodoxy cannot trust that promise, and so has invented an immortal soul to make sure of an after life. Which has the most trust in Christ, they or we? They will not trust Him to bring them into life from "the dust of the earth:" we can and will, and "fear" not that our Lord will leave us there; and we reject, as the traditions of men, the fable of an immortal soul in man, and that "pile of hay, wood and stubble" which that "corrupt" doctrine has brought into the church to the dishonor of God and the rejection of Christ as the Life-giver.

(10). The uniform testimony of Christians who embrace our views of "Life only in Christ" is, that it produces a joy to which they were strangers previous to that time. We do not "terrify them with the graves of souls," but fill them with joy that though they die they shall live again. It is true, we preach the graves of sinful souls will hold them eternally —"the grave being the habitation to every one of them," margin of Psa. xlix. 14. Surely "orthodoxy" will not say this is more calculated to "terrify Christian minds" than its hell of eternal torture! Can it "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel?" A terrible thing for souls to go "into the grave," but an exceeding pleasant thought for the good to go off into a company of ghosts, and the bad into eternal torments! Such thoughts are enough to "debase" the "Christian minds," if they possess minds that can think. It is to be feared that too many of them have such "material" minds that their thinking is all done by some other instrumentality.

(11). A most unfortunate text for orthodoxy. Take away fear and terror from their theory and it is dead so far as producing what they call revivals.

(12). We are quite willing to have the soundness of our minds compared with that of our opponents. The manner in which they generally meet our arguments may satisfy the candid on this poiut.

(13). That is a matter of opinion. We have tried, thoroughly, both sides of the question, and never did we know deliverance from tormenting fear till we embraced our present views. There may be a transcient deliverance from tormenting fears with the "orthodox" notions of immortal souls and eternal torture; but a permanent deliverance from the fear that hath torment is impossible with their views. To be satisfied of this, let anyone read Saurin's Sermon, published by the American Tract Society, on "The Eternal misery of Hell." He says:

> I sink under the weight of this subject; and I declare, when I see any friends, my relations, the people of my charge—when I think that I, that you, that we all are threatened with these torments—when I see, in the lukewarmness of my devotions, in the langor of my love, in the faintness of my resolutions and designs, the least evidence though it be only probable or presumptive, of my future misery, yet I find in the thought a mortal poison, which diffuses itself into every period of my life, rendering society tiresome, nourishment insipid, pleasure disgustful, and life itself a cruel bitter—I cease to wonder that a fear of hell has made some melancholy, and others mad; that it has inclined some to expose themselves to a living martyrdom by fleeing from all commerce with the rest of mankind, and others to suffer the most violent and terrible torments."

Such is the natural influence of the "orthodox" doctrine on the mind of every sincere and honest believer of that theory which teaches inherent immortality and eternal torture; and we are asked to return to it, to be delivered from the "fear that hath torment!" Please excuse us Br. "Zion's Herald" from such felicity!

(14) Pray spare us this last wish. For all the honors of Episcopacy, all the wealth of the Methodist Church, and all the gold in the United States' Treasury we would not exchange our "belief" for that of orthodoxy, from which God has emancipated our mind, so far as relates to immortality being inherent. The daily joy and peace we now enjoy cannot be bartered away for the mental and moral bondage from which we have been delivered. We sincerely wish Br. Haven and his Methodist brethren, and all other Christians, only knew the peace of mind and joy in the Holy Spirit with which we are blessed by day and by night; and the blessed hope of immortality, eternal life in Jesus our Lord and Deliverer, at His coming and kingdom.

If any person who wishes to send these Nos. to friends, that they may see them, with the hope that they may be induced to ask for more, will send us the name and address, with a two cent stamp to pay the postage, we will forward those numbers without further charge.

Again we say, if any of our subscribers who are entitled to numbers which they have not received, please let us know immediately, and we will forward them. Some Post Masters, or their Clerks, take the liberty to retain or withhold our papers from the subscriber. A case occurred the past week in which the Post Master, in a neighboring city, sent us notice that our paper was "refused" by the subscriber. It happened that that subscriber came into our office the same day, and pronounced the statement false; and said he always looked for his paper with desire for its appearance. We trust such Post Masters are scarce. They certainly ought to be. We shall continue to supply all new subscribers with the back numbers of this volume till we give notice to the contrary.

Dr. Finley on the "Constitution of Man."—Who will help to make up the funds necessary to issue this pamphlet? It should be done now with the least possible delay. Send us your pledges in cash, or in promises to be paid when the work is out. We wish to commence it immediately, and it must and shall be done, "if the Lord will." So, do not delay to help at once. We must work while it is day. Let the truth fly on the wings of the wind. Truth must outrun error, and error runs swiftly; hence, let us put truth on wings in the race.

"The Rainbow."

It is but a few months since we knew of the existence of this English Monthly. It has now reached No. 70, of course has been published nearly as long as the Herald of Life; it did not however open its columns to the discussion of the immortality question till some time after it begun its career. By taking that stand, Dr. Leask, its editor, it seems, has brought down upon himself the indignation of some or many of his former supporters, who treat him just as all bigoted sectarians do, who can only cry as did the Ephesian idolaters, "Great is Diana" (Immortal-soulism), of the "Orthodoxy." Hence he is threatened with desertion and every evil that such Traditionists can inflict on his enterprise. Some there are who prize "The Rainbow" much more since Dr. Leask opened his magazine to the discussion of the subject of immortality; but still the pressure is so great on him that it has become a matter of doubt if he will be able to continue its regular issue. Though "The Rainbow" has not advanced to our position of "No future life out Christ," yet we should much regret to see it fail for want of support; and we trust God may raise up some noble minded men in England to sustain it, as He has in this country to sustain the Herald of Life.

Dr. Leask makes a statement in his October number, of his situation under the head of "Very Important"—"To the Readers of the Rainbow," in which he opens its past history and present prospects. We give his editorial in part. May his statement and appeal not be in vain. He speaks as follows:

Christian Friends! Shall the Rainbow cease to exist at the close of the present year, or will you by generous contributions to its cost during the next few months enable the Editor to continue his earnest testimony to glorious truths, should life be spared? He trusts the deep importance of the subject will be a sufficient excuse for his earnestness in the matter, and a sufficient apology for a plain statement of facts which otherwise would not have seen the light.

It is now nearly six years since the first number of this magazine was published. It was undertaken from a solemn conviction that certain momentous truths of Scripture had either ceased to exercise their proper influence in modern theology, or had altogether disappeared from what is usually understood by orthodox religious literature. Time and facts have only strengthened that conviction; and it is absolutely certain that at the present moment, considering the distracted state of Christendom, a journal which owes no allegiance to any church or party, as such, but accepts the word of God as its creed, and reverently lays all the sanctified intelligence it can command at the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ, ought to be prized and heartily sustained by all who feel that the only hope of the church is the second coming of her glorious Head, and the only hope of the world the return of its rightful King. Persistently and in many forms, with argument and proof unanswered and unanswerable, the Rainbow has taught this from the first number until now. It has done this in the face of opposition, misrepresentation, and obloquy; and under a constant load of care pressing on the mind of the Editor, who from the first hour until now, has had the entire pecuniary as well as literary responsibility of a work, which from its very nature can never become a commercial success. The Rainbow speaks to the thoughtful and the devout; and though we should have been grateful had there been a margin of profit to enable us to testify more adequately our appreciation of the labors of able brethren who have been our fellow workers, yet we felt certain from the beginning that a "popular," in other words a paying journal, the Rainbow was not likely to become. By the generosity of a valued Christian brother its first expenses were met; and by occasional help from other Christian friends it has been carried on, with the sincere desire to render some service to the church amidst her manifold perplexities. To all who have helped, from the gift of a few postage stamps upward, we this day render once more our most cordial thanks. If they had any idea of the number of letters that have reached us expressing gratitude to God for the teachings of the Rainbow, they would feel that their co-operation has been richly rewarded.

But a few months ago, at the bidding of conscience and in the fear and love of God, we did a thing which greatly offended many of our old friends. They have deserted us because the great truth, after years of earnest study, has come like the light of a glorious sun upon our mind, that there is no immortality out of Christ, and that therefore the dogma of endless torment to the unsaved is not, and cannot be true. Hundreds—thousands of persons have thanked us for the existence of the Rainbow; shall its services be dispensed with now that its value as an exponent of Scripture is so greatly enhanced? Shall it disappear because certain Christian men, hitherto its supporters, have not yet seen what they will as certainly see some day, as that to-morrow's sun will rise, that the punishment of the ungodly is "everlasting destruction?" Shall its testimony be silenced because its editor has with conscious loyalty and love to God, lifted up his voice against a dogma that fearfully dishonors him whose wondrous name is Love, and shocks and horrifies every man that tries to think what it really means?

A clergyman of eminent ability writes:

"Increasingly precious to me and several of my friends are the contents of the Rainbow, and let me add, greatly enhanced is my affectionate esteem for its Editor. There are not a few old-fashioned ideas from which we require to be disestablished and disendowed, that our preaching and thinking may be free and pure, because more scriptural and less conventional. I have always felt a repugnance to the eternity of penal torments, that it was unwarranted, even by the exceeding sinfulness of sin; but, especially, do I feel that the gift of immortality, which was never inherent in man, is the blessed prerogative of Jesus. This, I feel, honors the Son with his due honor."

A gentleman in Dundee writes:

"Permit a stranger to express his thanks to you for the noble and fearless manner in which you have of late opened your columns for the discussion of the great themes of immortality, and of the fate of the wicked. Though, for the moment, it may militate against you, yet I do not think it will do so long. If some cease their patronage in a fit of anger at seeing their monstrous dogma of endless torments assailed—the most detestable and God-insulting of all heresies that ever yet were vamped up—never mind it, but go courageously forward in the path of duty, as you have done hitherto, and, doubtless, many new friends will be raised up to take the place of those lost. For there are many whose minds are being stirred up to thoughtful inquiry on these solemn topics, and whose research will increase the tide of disgust that is rising against these corrupt sectarian theologies, and will one day sweep them away. Such periodicals as yours will serve a most beneficent end, in showing many inquirers after truth—'the right way,' into which they should turn, and thus save them from infidelity, or from its half sister, indifferentism, as in the case of 'C. T., Liverpool,' on cover of July number. Do not be discouraged, then, dear sir, but fling your banner to the breeze, and fight manfully the battles of the Lord, and he will sustain you."

Christian brethren and sisters, I need say no more. The case is in your hands. Will you heartily sustain the Rainbow by sending me donations for the purpose, before the close of the present year? If you do, my path of duty will be clear, and our mutual service in the cause of truth, under our Father's blessing, may be highly honored in honoring him. If you do not see it a duty and a privilege thus to respond, my path will be equally clear, although to bid farewell to the Rainbow and its will be exceedingly painful—a trial I would fain be spared.

The price of his magazine is $2 50 in gold, or its equivalent. It is an octavo of 48 pages.

Editor of Herald of Life.

"Rest is for the kingdom of God, toil is for earth." We often speak of being "settled in life." We might as well think of casting anchor in the midst of the Atlantic Ocean, or talk of the permanent situation of a stone that is rolling down hill!

SIGNS OF THE END.

A SHORT time since we gave notice of a pamphlet by Eld. D. T. Taylor, of Rouse's Point, N. Y., on "The Coming Earthquake; and the Signs that Betoken its Approach." We now give an extract from the work, which goes to show the fact that we are nearing the end of this wicked world's career, when the new dispensation, under the personal administration of the earth's rightful King shall be ushered in, and the incorrigibly wicked will all be cut off from the earth and rooted out of it. Our extract is taken from Chap. vii. of Eld. Taylor's pamphlet, as follows:

THE INCREASE OF EARTHQUAKES.

Earthquakes in divers places.—Matt. xxiv. 7.

In entering upon an investigation of this question, we invite attention to a work entitled "Earthquakes and Volcanoes; Their History," etc., by Mungo Ponton, Fellow of the Royal Society at Edinburgh, published at London, 1868. The author opens his interesting volume by observing that nothing is more remarkable than the extreme fewness of earthquakes on record before the beginning of the Christian Era, in comparison with those which have been registered since that time; and he allows that this fact is so striking as to fairly admit a physical interpretation of our Saviour's prophecy in Luke xxi. 11. He further declares that so far as our knowledge extends, such convulsions did begin to be more frequent after the utterance of our Lord's prediction, and have continued since; and while yet admitting that the ancients perhaps failed to register many such occurrences, or were ignorant of their transpiring in other and unknown regions of the globe, in comparison with whom our means for obtaining information from all parts of the world are greatly enhanced; nevertheless, he observes, that while previous to A. D. 79 Vesuvius had been in repose for ages, but since then has been active at brief intervals, there are certainly also more earthquakes in Italy than before the Christian Era, and he concludes that before that Era the Roman world (then principally known) was seldom convulsed. "And it seems hard to believe," says our learned author, "that, had there been as many great earthquakes before the Christian Era, as there have been since its commencement, so few of them should have been recorded, or even transmitted by tradition.

Mr. Ponton then proceeds to demonstrate his position as follows: "Commencing with the age before the birth of Christ it is found that according to the researches of Robert Mallet (with whom we believe agree Messrs. Austed and Perry) there can be counted during the seventeen hundred years B. C. but fifty-eight earthquakes, only four of which were disastrous, i. e., those that overthrew buildings and destroyed life largely, being properly 'great earthquakes:' these four all occurring within the sixty-five years preceding the birth of Christ. Then omitting entirely those unknown portions of the globe outside the Roman Empire, there is found on record during the sixty-five years that elapsed preceding our Lord's prediction, the occurrence of only nine earthquakes in all, distributed as follows, viz., three in Asia Minor, one in Palestine, one in Upper Egypt, one in Cyprus, one in the Greek Islands and one in Italy. As we have said, four of these nine were great earthquakes. On the other hand, as exhibiting the large increase in modern times, in the sixty-five years that elapsed between A. D. 1800 and A. D. 1865, there occurred within the same limits, that is the old Roman Empire, no less than thirty-five great and disastrous earthquakes arresting the attention of the historian. These last were distributed thus: eleven in Italy, eight in Asia Minor, five in Greece, three in Persia, two in Syria, two in Candia, two in Sicily, one in Egypt, and one in Spain.

"Now it is scarcely credible that had there been so many as thirty-five destructive earthquakes in the earlier of these two periods, only four of them should have arrested the attention of the historians of the time, while they registered other five of minor importance. There is thus established a strong probability that the number was in reality much smaller in the earlier than in the later interval. This probability will be strengthened when it is borne in mind that the Ancient Greeks and Romans viewed earthquakes with superstitious dread—regarding them not only as evidences of the present anger of their gods, but also in the more important aspect of prognostics of calamities that were to follow.

"Thus Herodotus, in reference to the earthquake that happened at Delos, after the visit of the Persian fleet, says: 'But after he, (the Persian leader,) had put to sea from thence, Delos was shaken with an earthquake, as the Delians say, the first and last time that it was so affected to my time. And the Deity assuredly by this portent intimated to men the evils that were about to befall them. For during the reigns of Darius, son of Hystaspes, of Xerxes, son of Darius, and of Artaxerxes—during these three successive generations, more disasters befell Greece than during the twenty generations that preceded the time of Darius—partly brought upon it by the Persians, and partly by the chief men among them contending for power. So that it is nothing improbable that Delos should be moved at that time, having been until then unmoved. And in an oracle respecting it had thus been written: 'I will move even Delos, although hitherto unmoved.'

"Such a view as this was more likely to attract the attention of mankind to earthquakes, than had they been regarded simply as natural phenomena. The idea of a portent was dear to the heathen mind, and this circumstance tends to establish the greater likelihood, that all the really important earthquakes of the period in question were registered, than that only so small a proportion of them attracted the attention of any contemporaneous or later historian."

"The comparative fewness of the earthquakes recorded during the sixty-five years that preceded our Lord's prediction, may have therefore had quite as much foundation in fact as in historical negligence. It may be really true that the number of earthquakes within the limits of the old Roman Empire may have greatly increased since that time, and that our Saviour may have foreseen this increase when he said that among the signs —'There should be earthquakes in divers places.'"

Mr. Ponton then sums up the whole number of earthquakes given in the tables of Mr. Mallet, as follows: "Regarding them chronologically, Mr. Mallet distinguishes the registered earthquakes into five periods, thus:

| | Total. | Disastrous. | No of Years. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Those recorded before A. D., | 58 | 4 | 1,700 |
| Thence to end of 9th century, | 197 | 15 | 900 |
| Thence to end of 15th century, | 532 | 44 | 600 |
| Thence to end of 18th century, | 2,804 | 100 | 300 |
| Thence to 1850, | 3,240 | 53 | 50 |
| | 5831 | 216 | |

"It will thus be perceived how very great has been the increase since the beginning of the Christian era; and although much of this increase is due partly to more perfect registration, and partly to there being a larger portion of the earth's surface comprehended in the records, still there are good reasons, as already indicated, for suspecting that there has been a gradual augmentation in the number of earthquakes themselves, more especially of the more disastrous kinds."

It is seen that Mallet records less than seven thousand down to the year 1850, but it is believed that Mr. Ansted, the English geologist, and M. Alexis Perrey of France, have by later researches tabulated over seven thousand previous to that date. The immense number on record since the epoch of the Reformation, about A. D. 1500, is very striking and challenges solemn attention. The occurrence of three thousand two hundred and forty in a period of only fifty years gives an average of nearly sixty-five each year. Supposing this to be the number annually occurring, we have then in the sixteen years elapsing between 1850 and 1866 over one thousand more, which added to those previously recorded would swell the whole number from B. C. 1700 to A. D. 1866 to over eight thousand earthquakes. "Of destructive, or great, earthquakes," writes Ponton, "such as have overthrown cities and destroyed many lives, the total number registered up to 1850 is two hundred and sixteen, and other fifteen have happened up to the end of 1865—making in all two hundred and thirty-one, and of these only four occurred before the birth of Christ. To this number of destructive earthquakes must be added at least fifteen more which have occurred during the past three years, registered in the following order, viz., Algiers in Northern Africa, Mitylene, West India Islands, Formosa, Sandwich Islands, Northern Ecuador, California, Ialisco in Mexico, Tebrees in Persia, Bengal in Asia, and Santander in South America, all of which were destructive of cities, villages, and human life, with numerous ships.

How fearful is the thought of so many of these awful calamities transpiring on man's earth, his native home! Eight thousand, and doubtless very many more, in less than six thousand years since man lost Eden, since the curse fell crushingly upon our world. So many spasmodic beats—so many convulsive throbs—so many deep shudderings of poor "Old Mother Earth," since the sin and fall of man, and at man's perpetual and persistent rebellion against his Maker. So many signals of sure and of final dissolution. So many audible, agonizing groans for the promised redemption. So many throes and pangs presaging the birth of a new and better world. And oh, how many hundreds, and thousands, and hundreds of thousands of stately dwellings, and lovely villas, and fair green fields, and brave men, and beautiful women, and sweet babes—and how much of human splendor, wealth, and pride have been rocked to ruin or gone down to Sheol, when the earth like some angry demon shook its ponderous sides, belched out its deadly, sulphurous gases, lashed its gigantic inward forces, and vomited forth its volcanic fires, that far beneath our feet burn, and burn unceasingly! And who can but shudder at the bare thought of the possibility that the four hundred burning mountains on the surface, that emit two thousand eruptions every hundred years, which is twenty each year, or nearly one every fortnight, might—should Deity so will it—at once cease to flow, and the pent-up Titanic forces, finding no vent, angrily shake the whole globe, occasioning that "Great earthquake such as never was since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great!" causing the vast planet, in the Scripture language of the ancient prophet, to "reel to and fro like a drunkard, and be removed out of its place like a cottage!" That such an event is possible, nay, highly probable, is the admission and opinion of the wisest divines, philosophers, geologists, and men of science.

POLLY G. PITTS writes: May God bless you all in your undertakings. I feel that light on God's eternal truth is spreading, and therein do I rejoice. May grace, mercy and truth be and abide with the whole Israel of God, henceforth and forever. I know the whole lump will be leavened, for God's word is for it. Amen; so be it. Your sister, waiting for life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

THEORY OF INHERENT IMMORTALITY RESPONSIBLE.

BY L. C. THORNE.

PAPACY holds that by the words of consecration, pronounced by the priest over the bread and the wine, these elements are changed into the body and blood of Christ. The sacrifice of the mass is considered practically the same as the sacrifice offered by Christ on the cross, Christ offering himself again through the hands of the priest.—Through this ceremony the merits of Christ are believed to be made available to men. Christ is believed to be really present as a victim, asking pardon for sinners as he did on the cross. As the church maintains that those of her members who leave this world without having sufficiently expiated their sins, are at death subjected to the infliction of a temporary penalty in a disembodied state, it is claimed that the sacrifice of mass renders the merits of Christ available to those suffering ones on whose behalf it is offered, and secures from God a remission of the penalty. So masses are sometimes offered specially for the dead, or rather that part of the dead which is held to be more alive than ever. To what extent the ceremony of offering masses for the dead is really practiced, the world will probably never know, but to what extent the hollow-hearted profession of the church in this direction is carried, recent developments in France afford us some knowledge. The exposure was brought about by a singular case of swindling tried before a French court. All may not be aware of the fact that it is customary for surviving relatives of Roman Catholics to have masses said on behalf of deceased persons. The demand for these masses is so great in the city of Paris, that the resident priests are not able to meet it. In order to satisfy the requirements of the public in this matter, there are houses in Paris which, for a commission, agree to send the fees and the orders to priests in the provinces.

The case of swindling, which we quote from a New York journal, is this: "Two rogues, one of them a priest, issued circulars, which they sent to rural priests, offering to act as agents for them and to negotiate what may be termed their bills for masses. So specious were these circulars that some priests fell into the trap, and sent undertakings to repeat the masses, leaving the number in blank. As the signatures were genuine, the two persons referred to were able to discount these with the funeral furnishers or publishers, who were entrusted with the fees and orders. But instead of sending the vestments, or books, or whatever the priests desired to have, in return for their promisory notes, they appropriated them to their own uses. They were also open to receive orders direct from the public, and there was no guarantee that they did not pocket the fees without making any return, as the only prisoner who remained to take his trial, declared that his was a ready-money business, and that he kept no books. It was no easy matter to get evidence in a matter which, though it was affirmed to be in accordance with canonical rules, they felt was not creditable to them."

Such was the case, and the trial revealed that one priest had placed himself under obligations to repeat 1,200 masses—a work he would have to labor early and late for a considerable time to perform. Another priest had bills in the market to the amount of 11,265 masses; another for about 5,000; another 7,000; another 3,000; another 9,000, and another 28,000. But these were moderate compared to one ambitious, dashing clerical gentleman who had contracted, upon the basis of the current price, one franc each, to offer 100,000 masses.

Now the gross absurdity of all this, and its extent, provokes a smile and a few comments from the casual reader; but few pause to reflect that it does not exist without cause, and fewer still that that cause is a system of popular theology which he who dares to question is branded with infidelity. Orthodoxy, so called, asserts that the essential man is immortal, and that they who die in impenitence are thrust into hell torments. So harrowing is this to the better feelings of even those who strenuously insist upon it, that we have seen parents, years after the death of some of their loved ones, seek relief to their agonized minds in the gush of hot and bitter tears, when they contemplated the bare possibility that those loved ones might be suffering tortures in hell. It is plain to all minds, that eternal torment is a punishment to which the offence can bear no reasonable proportion. To escape this difficulty, immortal soulists resort to various schemes. Universalists send none there, or only for a short time at the worst; each advocate of popular theology sends every wicked person there, except such as each feel some special interest for; while Papacy, for the relief of her children, has invented a scheme, inducements to abuse, which are too glittering to be withstood by its reverend dependents. Although both the Catholic church and modern theology are brimful of errors and inconsistencies, there are among them all few indeed that the doctrine of inherent immortality is not directly or indirectly accountable for. We would say to Universalists, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him;" and "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Holiness is not a quality susceptible of impartation, but is developed by obedience to divine law, therefore there is no foundation upon which to rest a reasonable hope for the salvation of such as die impenitent. To prejudiced defenders of the torment theory we would say, "All the wicked will He (the Lord) destroy," not preserve in misery. To the professed offerers of the sacrifice of mass we would say, "Every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins; but this man (Jesus) after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God. . . . For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." And to all, we would say, no longer teach for "doctrine the commandments of men," nor attempt to libel the character of the God of infinite love and goodness; but in both word and deed seek to honor and glorify Him "who only hath immortality." May the Lord help them to know and love the truth.

UNCLOTHED AND CLOTHED UPON.

"We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.—2 Cor. v. 4.

IN the previous chapter the apostle refers to his constant exposure to death (verses 10, 11), yet rejoiced in the thought of the resurrection through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (verse 14); and it is the subject matter of this fourteenth verse, which is continued and expanded from the commencement of this fifth chapter. In the verses intervening he refers to the spiritual joy and soul-growth of those who are lifting their eyes above the things seen and temporal to those which are unseen, yet eternal—who are really looking for the "blessed hope," the "exceeding and eternal weight of glory"—and thus consistently prepare themselves for the coming of their Lord. Of this chapter may not the apostle's meaning, in the first few verses, be as follows: We know that if we, believers, fall asleep in death, we shall be raised again, and surely join the living watching ones, who will be suddenly changed at the time of the Lord's coming into the air? Whilst we are in this body on earth we groan, being burdened; and earnestly desire that new body which shall be given at the period of the resurrection from among the dead, or at the instantaneous change of the living; for if we be "clothed we shall not be found naked," we shall not be left behind at the Lord's parousia, and men will not see us shamed.

This fourth verse implies something put off, and something put on, and for this the apostle expresses his anxious desire.

1. That unclothing—what is it? The dissolution of the man, under the illustration of the taking down of a tabernacle; the body a wonderful structure, reared by the great Artificer of all things—a house, but unstable building; tabernacle, like a shepherd's tent, capable of removal from place to place.

Destined to be taken down; subject to the law of decay; the law of dissolution is operating on us every moment; to a certain period of life this law is to some extent counteracted, but the time comes when the frame is reduced to its primitive elements.

An event certain; as proved in the departure of all past generations, and declared in Scripture; and even the sudden change, to those ready at the Saviour's coming, will be equivalent to death; the old body will be put off.

Necessary; the body as it is, with all its feculent grossness, could find no place in the heavenlies; by death or by sudden change, there must be a putting off of the mortal.

This taking down of the tabernacle may be by lingering sickness, or almost suddenly, or quite so.

2. That clothing upon—what?

The putting on of the new body. This will be at the resurrection, to the great majority of the members of the body of Christ a glorious fact, plainly proclaimed by the Lord Jesus, and by the apostles, John v., vi.; 1 Thess. iv. 14, 17; and this is the putting on of the immortal. 1 Cor. xv. 42–49.

Nature suggests it; all Scripture implies it.

This will also be when Christ's waiting ones shall be changed at his coming. 1 Cor. xv. 51. "We shall not all sleep;" i. e., we have said this change will be equivalent to sudden death, the dissolution of the earthly and the clothing upon with the immortal. That day and circumstance must come, and may to us; who can show that it cannot? Then it is right and wise to contemplate it as a possible event in our day.

What will it be to those loving the thoughts of it, and waiting, watching for it? Paul told them to comfort one another with these words; doubtless they did so. We ought to do so also.

The church of the Thessalonians was a pattern church. They waited not for the Spirit's outpouring nor the fulfilment of prophecy, not for the conversion of the world, but for the Son of Man.

3. A recognition of the believer's desire. Paul speaks for himself and others. The apostle expresses his anxious desire, not for death, but for the change. There are various reasons for the believer's doing so.

Then every burden would be removed: "Here we groan, being burdened." All burdens then gone, the innumerable pains and sickness, indwelling corruption, unbelief, all ignorance, pride, and every abomination of the heart, no more complaining like Paul in Rom. vii. 24, no more temptations, wicked society, crosses, afflictions, all toil over, the race ended, the warfare accomplished; no more braving perils, opposing powers, enduring hardships, no more watching, warring fainting. The true rest is obtained, every sigh is hushed, every tear wiped away.

Then we have a permanent dwelling: the contrast between the tabernacle and house striking; consider the difference between a marquee and a cathedral structure.

The new body shall be like Christ's for beauty, vigour, purity, and endurance; and further, like the Savour's resurrection body in its wonderful capacity to become visible, or invisible, ascend or descend, eat and drink, or refrain.

Then we escape the suffering often connected with death; these sometimes great.

Then we have not to wait for the coming of Christ's kingdom. Then mortality will be swallowed up of life; the present state is comparatively but existence, yet the commencement of that which is worthy of the name of life with the Lord. Death gone; this ultimately shall be the case with all the earth, but the case at once with those who are changed; wonderful their position and dignity. Rev. iv.

How wonderful the love of Christ, in not only rescuing, saving, but also glorifying.

How gratefully should we commit ourselves unto him as our Saviour.

How foolish to live without him; "Ye must be born again."

How wise to live waiting and expecting him; he may come at any moment.

Have faith in Jesus Christ: rest upon his atonement; believe. "He that believeth hath everlasting life.—Selected.

"PRAISE IS COMELY."

WE are constrained in this public manner, to mention the tender mercy and loving kindness of the Lord toward us.

During the past summer when our strength was very low, the fellowship of the Father and of the Son through the Holy Spirit was most precious; precious beyond expression.

O the fulness of peace, resulting from an assurance by the indwelling of the Spirit of God, that whether we wake or sleep we shall live together with him"! For this we will praise God; yea, the language of one of old; we will call upon all within us to praise his holy name.

In these times we asked, if consistent with his divine will, to spare us to live on, and pleaded several reasons, among which were the cause of his beloved Son, and the preparation of a people for his glory; "and he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears." We trusted him for his word in Psa. 41: 1 to 5 inclusive; beside, others pleaded and trusted for us, and we have continued unto this hour; blessed be his holy name! My health is much improved; indeed, I am quite well; but have not the mental or physical endurance of former years. For all these mercies, it is good for me to praise him in the congregation, to worship and bow down.

THANKS.

It is meet for us also to express our thankfulness to the loved ones, who have so fervently prayed for us, and for this expression of sympathy and tender love both privately and publicly. We would especially thank them who have showed so much solicitude for our welfare,—some of which has been expressed through the HERALD—yet we have never seen their faces in the flesh. It has called forth "many thanksgivings to God."

Not only will such faith and solicitude for the members of the body of Christ, help revive the tender love and fervent desire of the early days of Christianity; but it will also keep them alive upon the earth, that they may more perfectly fulfil their mission to their generation; and increase the riches of their glory through Christ Jesus in the everlasting age.

I now feel called upon afresh to "walk in newness of life;" to dedicate my all to him who bought me with a price; to walk continually with a deadness to this world, that the coming of Jesus be most sw.et and precious to me; yea, to have my whole being not only willing that Jesus should come quickly; but earnestly longing for him to appear.

We are also thankful to the Lord for the excellent medium we have of communicating with the loved ones,—the HERALD OF LIFE—.

KEYPORT, N. J, Oct 24, 1869.

BENJ. MELLOR, Rockdale Mills, Pa., writes: The paper in its new dress looks well. Sister Weaver's article on "Practical Preaching" is a very sensible one, and I wish she or some one else would give us another on "Practical Living." We talk much about being built on Christ Jesus as our foundation. That is good, sure and safe, provided we build with material that will stand the test of fire; such as "gold, silver and precious stones." But does it not appear from the text that "wood, hay and stubble" may also be used in building on this same foundation? But these will not stand the fiery test; and the builder will suffer loss, and he himself only be saved as by fire. Therefore, let every one take heed how they build thereon. See 1 Cor. iii. 11–15. Love to you all, in Christ.

J. W. MCCAGG, Warsaw, N. Y., writes: The cause of truth is gaining all around this place. We have many who love to listen to our views, and say they see much Bible for them. I find the great secret of success is to deal kindly with all. We will do this if we are filled with love ourselves. Love will reach down deep into the heart; and when we can gain the heart truth will enter. How I love to dwell on the great and glorious truths the Life views bring out of God's treasure-house; and how glad I am that I was not blinded so as to miss the great truth of "No life out of Christ" beyond the grave; that a union with Christ, the only LIFE-GIVER, can alone secure a revival from the dead. God grant that we may be kept by the grace of Him who died for us and rose again.

URSULA EATON, Leonardsburg, Ohio, writes: I feel much rejoiced that the HERALD OF LIFE yet lives, and hope its Editor and those noble brethren and sisters who stand by the cause of truth to sustain it may be "preserved unto everlasting life." Stand fast, brethren and sisters. Stand fast, if there are but two or three in a place. Pride and vanity abound. Spiritism is making rapid inroads in many places; and why should it not? The churches cannot "raise up a standard against it," because they stand upon the same "platform." Brethren, "Cry aloud, and spare not."

GEO. W. LEWIS, Bethel, Vt., speaking of the result of the late camp-meeting, of which a report has been given in this paper, writes: Brethren and sisters were quickened anew to duty, and we trust strengthened to meet the trials and temptations of life; backsliders resolved to dedicate themselves anew to God; and some were hopefully converted; a large amount of prejudice was removed from the minds of the community. Since the close of the meeting, others have started in the service of God who never moved before in our prayer meetings.

OBITUARY.

BROOKS.—Fell asleep in Jesus, in New Britain, Ct., Sept. 27th, Captain Martin J. Brooks, in the fifty-third year of his age.

He leaves a wife and only child to mourn his loss, In his last sickness—which continued only six days—patience had her perfect work. When asked if his hope sustained him while suffering so much, he answered, "Yes; my hope is big with immortality." He calmly gave directions concerning his funeral and then took leave of his family, falling asleep in the glorious hope of awaking in the morning of the resurrection, clothed with immortality.

The untiring zeal of Bro. Brooks in the cause of truth, the sacrifices he made to sustain those who were proclaiming it, and the hospitalities which he at times extended to preachers and others, will be held in grateful remembrance by them. May the Lord sustain and strengthen Sr. B. in this her day of trial.

The gospel hope was presented by the writer, to a large and attentive audience, in the Scotch Chapel at Middletown, where the interment took place.

WM. STUART.

PERKINS.—Died, in Yatesville, Conn., Oct. 15th, 1869, Bro. Stiles Perkins, aged 46 years.

Bro. Perkins was converted twenty-four years ago. He became a firm believer in the speedy coming and kingdom of Christ, and died in the blessed hope of a future life through Christ by a resurrection from the dead. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband and a kind father, but who are sustained by the assurance of a future happy reunion. Sister Perkins sustains, also, the loss of a kind father who died the same day. May the Lord comfort the bereaved. The funeral sermon was preached by the writer to a large congregation in the Advent chapel.

SIGNS OF THE END.

A SHORT time since we gave notice of a pamphlet by Eld. D. T. Taylor, of Rouse's Point, N. Y., on "The Coming Earthquake; and the Signs that Betoken its Approach." We now give an extract from the work, which goes to show the fact that we are nearing the end of this wicked world's career, when the new dispensation, under the personal administration of the earth's rightful King shall be ushered in, and the incorrigibly wicked will all be cut off from the earth and rooted out of it. Our extract is taken from Chap. vii. of Eld. Taylor's pamphlet, as follows:

THE INCREASE OF EARTHQUAKES.

Earthquakes in divers places.—Matt. xxiv. 7.

In entering upon an investigation of this question, we invite attention to a work entitled "Earthquakes and Volcanoes; Their History," etc., by Mungo Ponton, Fellow of the Royal Society at Edinburgh, published at London, 1868. The author opens his interesting volume by observing that nothing is more remarkable than the extreme fewness of earthquakes on record before the beginning of the Christian Era, in comparison with those which have been registered since that time; and he allows that this fact is so striking as to fairly admit a physical interpretation of our Saviour's prophecy in Luke xxi. 11. He further declares that so far as our knowledge extends, such convulsions did begin to be more frequent after the utterance of our Lord's prediction, and have continued since; and while yet admitting that the ancients perhaps failed to register many such occurrences, or were ignorant of their transpiring in other and unknown regions of the globe, in comparison with whom our means for obtaining information from all parts of the world are greatly enhanced; nevertheless, he observes, that while previous to A. D. 79 Vesuvius had been in repose for ages, but since then has been active at brief intervals, there are certainly also more earthquakes in Italy than before the Christian Era, and he concludes that before that Era the Roman world (then principally known) was seldom convulsed. "And it seems hard to believe," says our learned author, "that, had there been as many great earthquakes before the Christian Era, as there have been since its commencement, so few of them should have been recorded, or even transmitted by tradition.

Mr. Ponton then proceeds to demonstrate his position as follows: "Commencing with the age before the birth of Christ it is found that according to the researches of Robert Mallet (with whom we believe agree Messrs. Austed and Perry) there can be counted during the seventeen hundred years B. C. but fifty-eight earthquakes, only four of which were disastrous, i. e., those that overthrew buildings and destroyed life largely, being properly 'great earthquakes:' these four all occurring within the sixty-five years preceding the birth of Christ. Then omitting entirely those unknown portions of the globe outside the Roman Empire, there is found on record during the sixty-five years that elapsed preceding our Lord's prediction, the occurrence of only nine earthquakes in all, distributed as follows, viz., three in Asia Minor, one in Palestine, one in Upper Egypt, one in Cyprus, one in the Greek Islands and one in Italy. As we have said, four of these nine were great earthquakes. On the other hand, as exhibiting the large increase in modern times, in the sixty-five years that elapsed between A. D. 1800 and A. D. 1865, there occurred within the same limits, that is the old Roman Empire, no less than thirty-five great and disastrous earthquakes arresting the attention of the historian. These last were distributed thus: eleven in Italy, eight in Asia Minor, five in Greece, three in Persia, two in Syria, two in Candia, two in Sicily, one in Egypt, and one in Spain.

"Now it is scarcely credible that had there been so many as thirty-five destructive earthquakes in the earlier of these two periods, only four of them should have arrested the attention of the historians of the time, while they registered other five of minor importance. There is thus established a strong probability that the number was in reality much smaller in the earlier than in the later interval. This probability will be strengthened when it is borne in mind that the Ancient Greeks and Romans viewed earthquakes with superstitious dread—regarding them not only as evidences of the present anger of their gods, but also in the more important aspect of prognostics of calamities that were to follow.

"Thus Herodotus, in reference to the earthquake that happened at Delos, after the visit of the Persian fleet, says: 'But after he, (the Persian leader,) had put to sea from thence, Delos was shaken with an earthquake, as the Delians say, the first and last time that it was so affected to my time. And the Deity assuredly by this portent intimated to men the evils that were about to befall them. For during the reigns of Darius, son of Hystaspes, of Xerxes, son of Darius, and of Artaxerxes—during these three successive generations, more disasters befell Greece than during the twenty generations that preceded the time of Darius—partly brought upon it by the Persians, and partly by the chief men among them contending for power. So that it is nothing improbable that Delos should be moved at that time, having been until then unmoved. And in an oracle respecting it had thus been written: 'I will move even Delos, although hitherto unmoved.'

"Such a view as this was more likely to attract the attention of mankind to earthquakes, than had they been regarded simply as natural phenomena. The idea of a portent was dear to the heathen mind, and this circumstance tends to establish the greater likelihood, that all the really important earthquakes of the period in question were registered, than that only so small a proportion of them attracted the attention of any contemporaneous or later historian."

"The comparative fewness of the earthquakes recorded during the sixty-five years that preceded our Lord's prediction, may have therefore had quite as much foundation in fact as in historical negligence. It may be really true that the number of earthquakes within the limits of the old Roman Empire may have greatly increased since that time, and that our Saviour may have foreseen this increase when he said that among the signs—'There should be earthquakes in divers places.'"

Mr. Ponton then sums up the whole number of earthquakes given in the tables of Mr. Mallet, as follows: "Regarding them chronologically, Mr. Mallet distinguishes the registered earthquakes into five periods, thus:

| | Total. | Disastrous. | No of Years. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Those recorded before A. D., | 58 | 4 | 1,700 |
| Thence to end of 9th century, | 197 | 15 | 900 |
| Thence to end of 15th century, | 532 | 44 | 600 |
| Thence to end of 18th century, | 2,804 | 100 | 300 |
| Thence to 1850, | 3,240 | 53 | 50 |
| | 5831 | 216 | |

"It will thus be perceived how very great has been the increase since the beginning of the Christian era; and although much of this increase is due partly to more perfect registration, and partly to there being a larger portion of the earth's surface comprehended in the records, still there are good reasons, as already indicated, for suspecting that there has been a gradual augmentation in the number of earthquakes themselves, more especially of the more disastrous kinds."

It is seen that Mallet records less than seven thousand down to the year 1850, but it is believed that Mr. Ansted, the English geologist, and M. Alexis Perrey of France, have by later researches tabulated over seven thousand previous to that date. "The immense number on record since the epoch of the Reformation, about A. D. 1500, is very striking and challenges solemn attention. The occurrence of three thousand two hundred and forty in a period of only fifty years gives an average of nearly sixty-five each year. Supposing this to be the number annually occurring, we have then in the sixteen years elapsing between 1850 and 1866 over one thousand more, which added to those previously recorded would swell the whole number from B. C. 1700 to A. D. 1866 to over eight thousand earthquakes. "Of destructive, or great, earthquakes," writes Ponton, "such as have overthrown cities and destroyed many lives, the total number registered up to 1850 is two hundred and sixteen, and other fifteen have happened up to the end of 1865—making in all two hundred and thirty-one, and of these only four occurred before the birth of Christ. To this number of destructive earthquakes must be added at least fifteen more which have occurred during the past three years, registered in the following order, viz., Algiers in Northern Africa, Mitylene, West India Islands, Formosa, Sandwich Islands, Northern Ecuador, California, Jalisco in Mexico, Tebrees in Persia, Bengal in Asia, and Santander in South America, all of which were destructive of cities, villages, and human life, with numerous ships.

How fearful is the thought of so many of these awful calamities transpiring on man's earth, his native home! Eight thousand, and doubtless very many more, in less than six thousand years since man lost Eden, since the curse fell crushingly upon our world. So many spasmodic beats—so many convulsive throbs—so many deep shudderings of poor "Old Mother Earth," since the sin and fall of man, and at man's perpetual and persistent rebellion against his Maker. So many signals of sure and of final dissolution. So many audible, agonizing groans for the promised redemption. So many throes and pangs presaging the birth of a new and better world. And oh, how many hundreds, and thousands, and hundreds of thousands of stately dwellings, and lovely villas, and fair green fields, and brave men, and beautiful women, and sweet babes—and how much of human splendor, wealth, and pride have been rocked to ruin or gone down to Sheol, when the earth like some angry demon shook its ponderous sides, belched out its deadly, sulphurous gases, lashed its gigantic inward forces, and vomited forth its volcanic fires, that far beneath our feet burn, and burn unceasingly! And who can but shudder at the bare thought of the possibility that the four hundred burning mountains on the surface, that emit two thousand eruptions every hundred years, which is twenty each year, or nearly one every fortnight, might—should Deity so will it—at once cease to flow, and the pent-up Titanic forces, finding no vent, angrily shake the whole globe, occasioning that "Great earthquake such as never was since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great!" causing the vast planet, in the Scripture language of the ancient prophet, to "reel to and fro like a drunkard, and be removed out of its place like a cottage!" That such an event is possible, nay, highly probable, is the admission and opinion of the wisest divines, philosophers, geologists, and men of science.

POLLY G. PITTS writes: May God bless you all in your undertakings. I feel that light on God's eternal truth is spreading, and therein do I rejoice. May grace, mercy and truth be and abide with the whole Israel of God, henceforth and forever. I know the whole lump will be leavened, for God's word is for it. Amen; so be it. Your sister, waiting for life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

THEORY OF INHERENT IMMORTALITY RESPONSIBLE.

BY L. C. THORNE.

PAPACY holds that by the words of consecration, pronounced by the priest over the bread and the wine, these elements are changed into the body and blood of Christ. The sacrifice of the mass is considered practically the same as the sacrifice offered by Christ on the cross, Christ offering himself again through the hands of the priest.—Through this ceremony the merits of Christ are believed to be made available to men. Christ is believed to be really present as a victim, asking pardon for sinners as he did on the cross. As the church maintains that those of her members who leave this world without having sufficiently expiated their sins, are at death subjected to the infliction of a temporary penalty in a disembodied state, it is claimed that the sacrifice of mass renders the merits of Christ available to those suffering ones on whose behalf it is offered, and secures from God a remission of the penalty. So masses are sometimes offered specially for the dead, or rather that part of the dead which is held to be more alive than ever. To what extent the ceremony of offering masses for the dead is really practiced, the world will probably never know, but to what extent the hollow-hearted profession of the church in this direction is carried, recent developments in France afford us some knowledge. The exposure was brought about by a singular case of swindling tried before a French court. All may not be aware of the fact that it is customary for surviving relatives of Roman Catholics to have masses said on behalf of deceased persons. The demand for these masses is so great in the city of Paris, that the resident priests are not able to meet it. In order to satisfy the requirements of the public in this matter, there are houses in Paris which, for a commission, agree to send the fees and the orders to priests in the provinces.

The case of swindling, which we quote from a New York journal, is this: "Two rogues, one of them a priest, issued circulars, which they sent to rural priests, offering to act as agents for them and to negotiate what may be termed their bills for masses. So specious were these circulars that some priests fell into the trap, and sent undertakings to repeat the masses, leaving the number in blank. As the signatures were genuine, the two persons referred to were able to discount these with the funeral furnishers or publishers, who were entrusted with the fees and orders. But instead of sending the vestments, or books, or whatever the priests desired to have, in return for their promisory notes, they appropriated them to their own uses. They were also open to receive orders direct from the public, and there was no guarantee that they did not pocket the fees without making any return, as the only prisoner who remained to take his trial, declared that his was a ready-money business, and that he kept no books. It was no easy matter to get evidence in a matter which, though it was affirmed to be in accordance with canonical rules, they felt was not creditable to them."

Such was the case, and the trial revealed that one priest had placed himself under obligations to repeat 1,200 masses—a work he would have to labor early and late for a considerable time to perform. Another priest had bills in the market to the amount of 11,265 masses; another for about 5,000; another 7,000; another 3,000; another 9,000, and another 28,000. But these were moderate compared to one ambitious, dashing clerical gentleman who had contracted, upon the basis of the current price, one franc each, to offer 100,000 masses.

Now the gross absurdity of all this, and its extent, provokes a smile and a few comments from the casual reader; but few pause to reflect that it does not exist without cause, and fewer still that that cause is a system of popular theology which he who dares to question is branded with infidelity. Orthodoxy, so called, asserts that the essential man is immortal, and that they who die in impenitence are thrust into hell torments. So harrowing is this to the better feelings of even those who strenuously insist upon it, that we have seen parents, years after the death of some of their loved ones, seek relief to their agonized minds in the gush of hot and bitter tears, when they contemplated the bare possibility that those loved ones might be suffering tortures in hell. It is plain to all minds, that eternal torment is a punishment to which the offence can bear no reasonable proportion. To escape this difficulty, immortal soulists resort to various schemes. Universalists send none there, or only for a short time at the worst; each advocate of popular theology sends every wicked person there, except such as each feel some special interest for; while Papacy, for the relief of her children, has invented a scheme, inducements to abuse, which are too glittering to be withstood by its reverend dependents. Although both the Catholic church and modern theology are brimful of errors and inconsistencies, there are among them all few indeed that the doctrine of inherent immortality is not directly or indirectly accountable for. We would say to Universalists, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him;" and "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Holiness is not a quality susceptible of impartation, but is developed by obedience to divine law, therefore there is no foundation upon which to rest a reasonable hope for the salvation of such as die impenitent. To prejudiced defenders of the torment theory we would say, "All the wicked will He (the Lord) destroy," not preserve in misery. To the professed offerers of the sacrifice of mass we would say, "Every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins; but this man (Jesus) after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God. . . . For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." And to all, we would say, no longer teach for "doctrine the commandments of men," nor attempt to libel the character of the God of infinite love and goodness; but in both word and deed seek to honor and glorify Him "who only hath immortality." May the Lord help them to know and love the truth.

UNCLOTHED AND CLOTHED UPON.

"We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.—2 Cor. v. 4.

IN the previous chapter the apostle refers to his constant exposure to death (verses 10, 11), yet rejoiced in the thought of the resurrection through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (verse 14); and it is the subject matter of this fourteenth verse, which is continued and expanded from the commencement of this fifth chapter. In the verses intervening he refers to the spiritual joy and soul-growth of those who are lifting their eyes above the things seen and temporal to those which are unseen, yet eternal—who are really looking for the "blessed hope," the "exceeding and eternal weight of glory"—and thus consistently prepare themselves for the coming of their Lord. Of this chapter may not the apostle's meaning, in the first few verses, be as follows: We know that if we, believers, fall asleep in death, we shall be raised again, and surely join the living watching ones, who will be suddenly changed at the time of the Lord's coming into the air? Whilst we are in this body on earth we groan, being burdened; and earnestly desire that new body which shall be given at the period of the resurrection from among the dead, or at the instantaneous change of the living; for if we be "clothed we shall not be found naked," we shall not be left behind at the Lord's parousia, and men will not see us shamed.

This fourth verse implies something put off, and something put on, and for this the apostle expresses his anxious desire.

1. That unclothing—what is it? The dissolution of the man, under the illustration of the taking down of a tabernacle; the body a wonderful structure, reared by the great Artificer of all things—a house, but unstable building; tabernacle, like a shepherd's tent, capable of removal from place to place.

Destined to be taken down; subject to the law of decay; the law of dissolution is operating on us every moment; to a certain period of life this law is to some extent counteracted, but the time comes when the frame is reduced to its primitive elements.

An event certain; as proved in the departure of all past generations, and declared in Scripture; and even the sudden change, to those ready at the Saviour's coming, will be equivalent to death; the old body will be put off.

Necessary; the body as it is, with all its feculent grossness, could find no place in the heavenlies; by death or by sudden change, there must be a putting off of the mortal.

This taking down of the tabernacle may be by lingering sickness, or almost suddenly, or quite so.

2. That clothing upon—what?

The putting on of the new body. This will be at the resurrection, to the great majority of the members of the body of Christ a glorious fact, plainly proclaimed by the Lord Jesus, and by the apostles, John v., vi.; 1 Thess. iv. 14, 17; and this is the putting on of the immortal. 1 Cor. xv. 42–49.

Nature suggests it; all Scripture implies it.

This will also be when Christ's waiting ones shall be changed at his coming. 1 Cor. xv. 51. "We shall not all sleep;" i. e., we have said this change will be equivalent to sudden death, the dissolution of the earthly and the clothing upon with the immortal. That day and circumstance must come, and may to us; who can show that it cannot? Then it is right and wise to contemplate it as a possible event in our day.

What will it be to those loving the thoughts of it, and waiting, watching for it? Paul told them to comfort one another with these words; doubtless they did so. We ought to do so also.

The church of the Thessalonians was a pattern church. They waited not for the Spirit's outpouring nor the fulfilment of prophecy, not for the conversion of the world, but for the Son of Man.

3. A recognition of the believer's desire. Paul speaks for himself and others. The apostle expresses his anxious desire, not for death, but for the change. There are various reasons for the believer's doing so.

Then every burden would be removed: "Here we groan, being burdened." All burdens then gone, the innumerable pains and sickness, indwelling corruption, unbelief, all ignorance, pride, and every abomination of the heart, no more complaining like Paul in Rom. vii. 24, no more temptations, wicked society, crosses, afflictions, all toil over, the race ended, the warfare accomplished; no more braving perils, opposing powers, enduring hardships, no more watching, warring fainting. The true rest is obtained, every sigh is hushed, every tear wiped away.

Then we have a permanent dwelling: the contrast between the tabernacle and house striking; consider the difference between a marquee and a cathedral structure.

The new body shall be like Christ's for beauty, vigour, purity, and endurance; and further, like the Savour's resurrection body in its wonderful capacity to become visible, or invisible, ascend or descend, eat and drink, or refrain.

Then we escape the suffering often connected with death; these sometimes great.

Then we have not to wait for the coming of Christ's kingdom. Then mortality will be swallowed up of life; the present state is comparatively but existence, yet the commencement of that which is worthy of the name of life with the Lord. Death gone; this ultimately shall be the case with all the earth, but the case at once with those who are changed; wonderful their position and dignity. Rev. iv.

How wonderful the love of Christ, in not only rescuing, saving, but also glorifying.

How gratefully should we commit ourselves unto him as our Saviour.

How foolish to live without him; "Ye must be born again."

How wise to live waiting and expecting him; he may come at any moment.

Have faith in Jesus Christ: rest upon his atonement; believe. "He that believeth hath everlasting life.—Selected.

"PRAISE IS COMELY."

WE are constrained in this public manner, to mention the tender mercy and loving kindness of the Lord toward us.

During the past summer when our strength was very low, the fellowship of the Father and of the Son through the Holy Spirit was most precious; precious beyond expression.

O the fulness of peace, resulting from an assurance by the indwelling of the Spirit of God, that whether we wake or sleep we shall live together with him"! For this we will praise God; yea, the language of one of old; we will call upon all within us to praise his holy name.

In these times we asked, if consistent with his divine will, to spare us to live on, and pleaded several reasons, among which were the cause of his beloved Son, and the preparation of a people for his glory; "and he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears." We trusted him for his word in Psa. 41: 1 to 5 inclusive; beside, others pleaded and trusted for us, and we have continued unto this hour; blessed be his holy name! My health is much improved; indeed, I am quite well; but have not the mental or physical endurance of former years. For all these mercies, it is good for me to praise him in the congregation, to worship and bow down.

THANKS.

It is meet for us also to express our thankfulness to the loved ones, who have so fervently prayed for us, and for this expression of sympathy and tender love both privately and publicly. We would especially thank them who have showed so much solicitude for our welfare,—some of which has been expressed through the HERALD—yet we have never seen their faces in the flesh. It has called forth "many thanksgivings to God."

Not only will such faith and solicitude for the members of the body of Christ, help revive the tender love and fervent desire of the early days of Christianity; but it will also keep them alive upon the earth, that they may more perfectly fulfil their mission to their generation; and increase the riches of their glory through Christ Jesus in the everlasting age.

I now feel called upon afresh to "walk in newness of life;" to dedicate my all to him who bought me with a price; to walk continually with a deadness to this world, that the coming of Jesus be most sw.et and precious to me; yea, to have my whole being not only willing that Jesus should come quickly; but earnestly longing for him to appear.

We are also thankful to the Lord for the excellent medium we have of communicating with the loved ones,—the HERALD OF LIFE—.

E. WOLCOTT.

KEYPORT, N. J, Oct 24, 1869.

BENJ. MELLOR, Rockdale Mills, Pa., writes: The paper in its new dress looks well. Sister Weaver's article on "Practical Preaching" is a very sensible one, and I wish she or some one else would give us another on "Practical Living." We talk much about being built on Christ Jesus as our foundation. That is good, sure and safe, provided we build with material that will stand the test of fire; such as "gold, silver and precious stones." But does it not appear from the text that "wood, hay and stubble" may also be used in building on this same foundation? But these will not stand the fiery test; and the builder will suffer loss, and he himself only be saved as by fire. Therefore, let every one take heed how they build thereon. See 1 Cor. iii. 11–15. Love to you all, in Christ.

J. W. MCCAGG, Warsaw, N. Y., writes: The cause of truth is gaining all around this place. We have many who love to listen to our views, and say they see much Bible for them. I find the great secret of success is to deal kindly with all. We will do this if we are filled with love ourselves. Love will reach down deep into the heart; and when we can gain the heart truth will enter. How I love to dwell on the great and glorious truths the Life views bring out of God's treasure-house; and how glad I am that I was not blinded so as to miss the great truth of "No life out of Christ" beyond the grave; that a union with Christ, the only LIFE-GIVER, can alone secure a revival from the dead. God grant that we may be kept by the grace of Him who died for us and rose again.

URSULA EATON, Leonardsburg, Ohio, writes: I feel much rejoiced that the HERALD OF LIFE yet lives, and hope its Editor and those noble brethren and sisters who stand by the cause of truth to sustain it may be "preserved unto everlasting life." Stand fast, brethren and sisters. Stand fast, if there are but two or three in a place. Pride and vanity abound. Spiritism is making rapid inroads in many places; and why should it not? The churches cannot "raise up a standard against it," because they stand upon the same "platform." Brethren, "Cry aloud, and spare not."

GEO. W. LEWIS, Bethel, Vt., speaking of the result of the late camp-meeting, of which a report has been given in this paper, writes: Brethren and sisters were quickened anew to duty, and we trust strengthened to meet the trials and temptations of life; backsliders resolved to dedicate themselves anew to God; and some were hopefully converted; a large amount of prejudice was removed from the minds of the community. Since the close of the meeting, others have started in the service of God who never moved before in our prayer meetings.

OBITUARY.

BROOKS.—Fell asleep in Jesus, in New Britain, Ct., Sept. 27th, Captain Martin J. Brooks, in the fifty-third year of his age.

He leaves a wife and only child to mourn his loss, In his last sickness—which continued only six days—patience had her perfect work. When asked if his hope sustained him while suffering so much, he answered, "Yes; my hope is big with immortality." He calmly gave directions concerning his funeral and then took leave of his family, falling asleep in the glorious hope of awaking in the morning of the resurrection, clothed with immortality.

The untiring zeal of Bro. Brooks in the cause of truth, the sacrifices he made to sustain those who were proclaiming it, and the hospitalities which he at times extended to preachers and others, will be held in grateful remembrance by them. May the Lord sustain and strengthen Sr. B. in this her day of trial.

The gospel hope was presented by the writer, to a large and attentive audience, in the Scotch Chapel at Middletown, where the interment took place. WM. STUART.

PERKINS.—Died, in Yatesville, Conn., Oct. 15th, 1^69, Bro. Stiles Perkins, aged 46 years.

Bro. Perkins was converted twenty-four years ago. He became a firm believer in the speedy coming and kingdom of Christ, and died in the blessed hope of a future life through Christ by a resurrection from the dead. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband and a kind father, but who are sustained by the assurance of a future happy reunion. Sister Perkins sustains, also, the loss of a kind father who died the same day. May the Lord comfort the bereaved. The funeral sermon was preached by the writer to a large congregation in the Advent chapel.

"Nothing but Leaves."

Matt, xxi. 19.

Nothing but Leaves! When the Master shall come
To visit His vineyard below;
No fruit of the Spirit! no life work of love!
Can it be that our Life shall be so?

Nothing but Leaves! And the Master will come
For fruitage when Autumn is here,
But the bough of Life's tree will yield nothing but Leaves,
And these will be yellow and sere.

Nothing but Leaves! All the soft Summer showers,
And the warm genial sunshine in vain;
The bright buds: the blossoms of hope
Are gone, and they come not again.

Nothing but Leaves! Opportunities gone,
Aspirations all quenched at their birth,
The higher, the nobler, the holier life
Buried up 'neath the rubbish of earth.

Nothing but Leaves! The glad Summer's gone,
And the Autumn is coming e'en now.
Alas! for the tree—it shall wither away,
God looketh for fruit from each bough.

Nothing but Leaves! A life lived in vain,
And, Oh, how the Good Master grieves
To find that for all He has suffered for us,
We come laden with nothing but Leaves.

Nothing but Leaves! Oh, God, shall it be,
That this life shall so fruitless be found?
No, graft us anew, with Thy Spirit of love,
For without it, we cumber the ground.

The Surface Gospel.

BY O. F. YALE.

"But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty; so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."—2 Cor. xi. 3.

Believers in "Life only through Christ" are charged with skimming only the surface of God's word. The old adage, "Truth lies at the bottom of the well," prevails in many minds.

But we think the sentiment of one of the fathers, that, "The Scriptures are of little use to them who understand them literally," and which has been (more or less) a principle of church interpretation, will bear reviewing.

It would seem that our "beloved brother Paul thought there was danger of being corrupted from the simplicity that belonged to the gospel of Christ; and, as in his epistles, he frequently speaks of the gospel which they "have received," and which he "preached unto them," it would seem reasonable that his meaning should appear on the surface of his communications, especially as he does not exhort them to seek for hidden meanings and mystical interpretations of his language.

It is true that he says, 1 Tim. iii. 16, "And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness;" but immediately goes on to explain the mystery; "God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, believed on in the world, received up into glory."

And in his epistle to the Ephesians, he speaks of the mystery made known to him by revelation, which in other ages was not made known to the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets, by the Spirit, that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel. Eph. iii. 3–6.

So we see the mystery belonged to other ages, but was now revealed, and the purpose "made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light, through the gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10.

The gospel, then, that Paul preached, was the gospel that brought life and immortality to light. In 1 Corth. xv., he explains and comments on this gospel. "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand, by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures."

The apostle goes on to give us that glorious chapter on life and immortality, by a resurrection from the dead, which on its surface bears such strong consolation, such a blessed hope to Life believers, but which so many well meaning Christians cannot receive. By some means their minds have become corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ; so down they dig in search of hidden treasure, leaving the light of heaven shining on the surface, and with lamps of human wisdom to aid them, they grope about, and find—what?

One finds eternal torment, misery, suffering, to be the portion of the wicked, the penalty of sin. Another finds a limited term of torture; and another, dying is the penalty; while yet another, groping in another direction, finds universal salvation for all men, good and bad. Some find a going to heaven or hell (gehenna), at death. Others find a sort of half-way house, where all good and bad, stop and wait till the judgment; the bad considerably miserable, but expecting to be much more so; the good tolerably happy, but having in prospect a much better time after the re-uniting of soul and body at the resurrection. All these, and more delusions, sweet and bitter, are hugged and treasured by those groping in various directions beneath God's truth, while all the time, like sparkling diamonds, right on the surface, shines the glorious gospel, the glad tidings of great joy, "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." ("Therefore, if any man be in Christ he is a new creature." 2 Cor. v. 17). "But every man in his own order. Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul. The last Adam was made a quickening Spirit. Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

Who are this blessed "we"? Read! "Unto the Church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." Cor. i. 2. Does not that include us?

Glory to God for the precious assurance given on the surface of these glad tidings of great joy.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us continue to thank God, who has enabled us to grasp these precious truths; and let us also continue to do all in our power, by speaking the truth in love, to spread the good news. And as we know what light and joy they brought to our minds, let us not be weary in well doing while we strive to present the light to others. And as we know what quantities of rubbish (thrown up by those who had digged so deep), had to be removed from our own minds, so let us patiently work and wait and pray for those we love. Somebody will "remember our work of faith, and patience of hope, and labor of love;" and we have the promise, "in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not."

Terryville, Conn, Oct. 1869.

Information Wanted.

Having noticed, within the last two or three years, that there has been a zealous contest going on in the body of professed Christians called Second Adventists, upon an interesting and very important Bible question; which, if true, certainly should interest the whole race of men, and should be understood; and if not true, must be a most baneful and pernicious error. If it be possible, it should be treated in that manner by those that openly and publicly affirm that it is untrue, that it should proceed no further.

I will now state the question in its different forms, so that all may understand me. First, then, I shall affix to it the name which in my opinion is the most appropriate, which is "No life out of Christ." Secondly: As the term is more generally used by those that differ from me, "Non-resurrection of the wicked." Thirdly: Will those who die—not having the sting of death removed, and not having the germ of life implanted in them by the Spirit of life, given by Christ, our Life-giver, previous to their loss of the Adamic life—will they ever live again, either by being raised to a corruptible or an incorruptible life? In short, after they are literally dead and in their graves, will they ever have any other, or any more life of any kind? I believe now the question to be clearly and plainly stated. Who, among our brethren and kind friends, will favor us with a candid Christian answer, drawn from the Bible? I am now over 75 years old, and the Lord knows that if I am in error on this point, I desire to be led into the path of truth. I will take the liberty here to state my position on this subject, and also how I arrived at those conclusions, so that if any one should care enough for my salvation to condescend to favor me with an answer, they may know which side of the question I occupy. My mind is, and has been for a long time settled and at peace in believing that the wages of sin was death, and that when the penalty of the law was inflicted, and the sinner was so dead that he could not live again, he had got his wages and would never see life, but would remain under the dominion of death. And now, how I arrived at these conclusions. When the principle of the non-living of the wicked dead was first presented to my mind, it filled me with utter abhorrence. I considered it the most God-dishonoring principle that had ever been invented by the enemy of Christ and his revealed truth. So I commenced my investigations, first, by humbly bending upon my knees, with my Bible spread open, and most earnestly prayed the Lord to lead me into a correct understanding of the Scriptures in regard to this matter; and I promised that when I might be satisfied where the truth rested, from the plain teachings of the Bible, I would accept it, however much it might debase me in the esteem of others, or however much reproach it might bring, only so that the reproach should not be for any evil doing of mine. I had in this less of my own will, and more of a desire that the will of God might be done than I ever felt in any one thing in my life. I did not look with any expectation of finding it to be true, but with my mind more fully open to the convictions of truth, yet still not without some prejudice against it. I searched the Scriptures with deep and close attention; but yet as mysterious as it looks to me, and doubtless will to many others, in collecting testimony in favor of the principle and against it, I found a longer list in favor than I did against it. Here I became restless and alarmed, for I considered that in the capacity of judge I should be constrained to render my judgment according to the law and the testimony; but there was one passage that I had not examined. So I turned very deliberately to it, and, like many of our honest-hearted opponents, I said, Well, this is the word of Christ, and should settle all controversy on this question, once and forever. Does any one ask what passage it is? Well, if your faith on the question is not with mine, it will at once tell you what it is, for it is always in the mouths and on the tongues of all those who oppose the principle. But lest you should darken counsel by words without knowledge, or beyond your knowledge, I will candidly tell you, and thus tell you the result of my investigation.

The passage is found in John v. 28, 29. "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice; and shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." The first look at this it appeared that no honest, sane man could avoid the conclusion that all who had ever lived would have a resurrection to life in the future; and as I sat, longing for a full understanding of this word, I referred to the context, and to what followed; and while reading it backwards and forwards, all of a sudden it appeared as if some one had spoken in plain words, saying, "Read that again." And I thank the Lord to-day that I did read it again; and whether it be false or true, I will rejoice for the sweet and lasting peace that sprung up in this old, withered, sorrow-stricken heart of mine. But perhaps you say, My "peace is only a false peace, and was only a device of the enemy to silence the spirit of inquiry in me, and cause me to sleep as do others, who have no hope of eternal life." If so, he has failed in that direction, for I have never enjoyed a pleasanter season of prayerful watchfulness, than I have for these few years since I embraced the teachings of the word on the principle of "No life out of Christ." But perhaps you would like to know what I found so refreshing in that passage. Well, if I could but believe that it would fill your heart one half as full of that joy unspeakable as it did mine, I would gladly let you know, and I will, as it is, if you desire it. Please listen, then, while I honestly tell you that as I read and re-read, the same voice arrested my attention again at that appalling, and, to my understanding, of all other words found in language the most alarmingly awful word, "Damnation." O who, unless of that class whose consciences are seared by sin and unbelief, as with a hot iron, can read in God's holy word that awful doom without a shudder (Damnation?) What could I find in this? The voice continues to ask me, Is there any life of any kind in that dark, heartrending word? To my mind it is conclusive, that if wicked dead sinners have a resurrection, there will be no life accompanying it. But perhaps you say, If I am confirmed in my faith, why do I ask for information? Listen, then, and you shall hear the reasons of my inquiry. Once I was a Methodist, and I believed and preached as honestly and faithfully as I could, that we all had an immortal soul; and that when Christians died they went direct to heaven; and when sinners died they went direct to hell. And I, in my great ignorance, was as much confirmed in that, as I am now confirmed in the principle of "No life out of Christ;" and should doubtless have remained so, had it not been written in the Bible, "Search the Scriptures." But by following this instruction, with the assistance of the grace of God, I became unconfirmed in that form of theology, and I should be ashamed and condemned, with the light shed on the present dispensational truth, to still continue to preach thus. So you see at a glance that the reason of my inquiry is, that as I have been mistaken in my honest views, and as I make no claim to infidelity, it may possibly be that I am mistaken now; but I shall rest satisfied in my honest convictions of truth, until I receive satisfactory answers to the following questions: Matt. xxiv. 30. "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn; and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Dan. vii. 7 to 15 inclusive. Zec. xii. 10 to the close of the chapter. "And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first born. In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon." Rev. i. 7. "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because him." Even so, Amos. We would like to know of those that are so strenuous upon the stress to be laid upon that very important word all in those passages. Does it really include the righteous with the wicked? If they think not, but rather as their own printed articles claim, and as I believe, that the scene under consideration will be one of triumph and joy, and very full of glory. Will our brethren of the opposite views, on the theme of No life out of Christ, be so kind as to show us the distinguishing feature, or the dividing line, so that we in our infirmity may understand it? If so, they will greatly oblige an inquirer after truth.

H. Rockwell.

New Britain, Conn., Sept., 1869.

The Inexhaustibe Mine.—Lord, this morning I read a chapter in the Bible, and therein observed a memorable passage, whereof I never took notice before. Why now, and no sooner, did I see it? Formerly my eyes were as open, and the letters as legible. Is there not a thin veil laid over thy Word, which is more rarefied by reading, and at last worn wholly away? Or was it because I came with more appetite than before? The milk was always there in the breast, but the child was not hungry enough, until now, to find out the teat. I see the oil of thy Word will never leave increasing whilst any bring an empty barrel. The Old Testament will still be the New Testament to him who comes with a fresh desire of information.—Thomas Fuller.

We are apt to believe in Providence so long as we have our own way; but if things go awry then we think, if there is a God he is in heaven and not on earth. If anything happens to overthrow our plans, we think all is gone to ruin.

It is the pale of passions that are the fiercest; it is the violence chill that gives the measure of the fever.

It is in seasons of sorrow that love more especially roots itself; as trees are best grafted in cloudy days.

If you would render your children helpless all their lives, never compel or permit them to help themselves.

God is Here.

Kneel, my child, for God is here!
Bend in love, but not in fear;
Kneel before him now in prayer;
Thank him for his constant care;
Praise him for his bounties shed
Every moment on thy head;
Ask for light to know his will;
Ask for love thy heart to fill;
Ask for faith to bear thee on,
Through the might of Christ, his Son:
Ask his Spirit still to guide thee
Through the ills that may betide thee;
Ask for peace to lull to rest
Every tumult of thy breast;
Ask in awe but not in fear;
Kneel, my child, for God is here!

Is it Swearing?

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Mrs. Perrin, "the minister is coming here."

Mrs. Perrin was a little, round dumpling of a woman, with a mild, benevolent face, and a smile almost always on her lips On the occasion of this exclamation she was at work in her kitchen, shelling peas, and her neighbor, Mrs. Jerkin, sat beside her, knitting.

The minister was seen at some little distance, coming toward the house. Mrs. Perrin had her sleeves rolled up to her elbows, her old blue flowered apron on, and her household implements around her; and it was this unfitness of dress, as she thought, that brought out this irreverent speech.

"Who, the minister?" asked Mrs. Jerkin, an expression of a peculiar character passing over her face.

"Yes; why in the name of mercy didn't he come yesterday, when I was all cleaned up? In the morning, too, when I'm in such a stew!" said Mrs. Perrin, untying her cap-strings as fast as she could, and pressing down her sleeves, while the perspiration rolled down her face. "Land of promise! I haven't a minute's time;"—and sure enough, before the words were out of her mouth, the minister stood on the steps of the kitchen.

"La, sir! how are you? I'm mighty glad to see you. Wont you go round to the front door? and I'll let you into the parlor; I ain't fit to be looked at here."

"Do let me sit down here, Mrs. Perrin; don't drive me into your parlor, just because I happen to be a minister. There, now, I am comfortable, if you will allow me;" and he seated himself in a chair. "Now, Mrs. Perrin, I insist that you go on with your work; or shall I shell the peas for you?" he asked, observing the basket by her side.

"La, sir, how comical! no, I'll just go through the job, seeing as you say so; we must all mind the minister;" and she took up her work again.

After a few minutes of pleasant discourse, the minister, quite rested and refreshed with a draught of new milk, arose to go on his way.

As soon as he was out of sight, Mrs. Jerkin began praising him.

"He's a good man, and preaches such beautiful, plain sermons!" she said. "Even the little children can understand them. Do you remember his last Sabbath's discourse?"

"O yes! and didn't he give it to some of our folks? I wouldn't have stood in Jerry Cook's shoes for something, I can tell you. Did you see Jerry Cook's face, just as red as a beet? Let me see—his text was 'Swear not at all;' didn't he handle it beautifully?"

"Yes, I took a good deal of it to myself," said Mrs. Jerkin; "and I don't know but what I felt almost as bad as Jerry Cook."

"You!" exclaimed Mrs. Perrin; "you took it to yourself? Why, you don't swear, do you?"

The neighbor could not help laughing at the comical expression of the little fat, rosy face before her.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Jerkin, "I found that I had been swearing the greater portion of my life, though, I hope, ignorantly, and I resolved to give it up immediately; since then I've been careful of my speech."

Mrs. Perrin looked first amused, then thoughtful; but the shells fell on the floor, the knitting-needles clicked, the cat purred, the sunshine lay across the field, everything told of quiet and contentment, and the two women only spoke occasionally as they worked.

"Good heavens!" soon exclaimed Mrs. Perrin, looking up; "there's the door of my bird-cage open! Suppose the bird had gone!"

She shut the door, and was about to resume her occupation, when she observed a singular smile on the face of her companion, that arrested her attention.

"Of what are you thinking?" she asked.

"Of that expression you used just now, and I dare say you would think quite innocently."

"O, I said 'Good heavens,'—I remember," replied the little woman, more soberly. "Why, that is nothing!"

"But Christ said it was," returned the other; "don't you remember the words, 'But I say unto you, swear not all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne?"

"O dear! I never thought of it, I'm sure," said the little woman; "why, it is swearing, isn't it?"

"I consider it so," replied Mrs. Jerkin.

"Dear me, and I've got such habit of it, I'm sure," said Mrs. Perrin again. "So you think it is wrong to say, 'In the name of mercy. In the name of patience?'" asked Mrs. Perrin.

"Most decidedly," said Mrs. Jerkin.—"Christ says, 'Let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay;' and he adds, 'for whatsoever is more than these, cometh of evil.'"

"Dear me, but people don't know they're doing wrong," said Mrs. Perrin.

"They have the Bible," replied her neighbor.

"To be sure," replied Mrs. Perrin, hastily; "I don't think of that; but you don't find a woman but uses some such words."

"More's the pity," said Mrs. Jerkin. "I have heard really ladylike women exclaim, 'My gracious!' and 'Creation!' That was swearing by the earth and all created things; expressly forbidden, you know."

"Dear me!" said little Mrs. Perrin.—"There! was that wrong?" she asked, looking up. "Well, from this time henceforth, I am determined to have no slang words or pet phrases," said the little woman, resolutely. "The thought that I was swearing—it seems dreadful."

"I, too, am determined to have my communication as near the gospel as I can," replied Mrs. Jerkin, gathering up her knitting work, and taking her departure.

Mr. Perrin came home from the farm very tired. He was a good Christian brother, but his communication was not yea and nay.

He sat down to the supper-table. Some of his favorite cakes were set smoking before him.

"Jerusalem!" he exclaimed, with a pleasant air, as he surveyed the smoking pile.

"O Amos!" said his wife; "please don't swear."

The farmer dropped his knife, and stared with a ludicrous countenance.

"Don't swear!" he repeated.

"You said 'Jerusalem.'"

"Well, you call that swearing, do you?"

"Christ says so."

"I'd like to have you tell me where! Pretty conscientious you're getting, to reprove a man like me for swearing, who never swore in his life."

"Why, husband," said Mrs. Perrin, "Christ says, "Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; neither by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King.'"

"Well, really, I never thought of that before; and the habit has grown on me, I believe."

"You see Mrs. Jerkin was in here, and took me to task for swearing."

"Took you to task for swearing? Well, that is a pretty piece of intelligence."

"But I did, though, Amos. I said 'Good gracious' and 'Good heavens,' and ever so many other things, when I felt excited; and she proved from the Bible that I was wrong; and so I was, you see."

"Well, well, that's a new light to me. 'Live and learn,' my old grandmother used to say, but I never thought I should live to learn that I'd been swearing all my days. Why, I've often said that I never used an oath in my life. Je—there! you see, I just saved myself. A habit is so hard to break, but I shall try at it. Just reprove me when you hear me say it, will you, wife."

"Yes, if you will reprove me."

"I certainly will," returned the good farmer; "when I hear the wrong word coming, I will quote the Bible—'Swear not at all.'"—Youths Companion.—Selected by Mrs. E. C. M. Boyd.

The Little Drawer.

"Where did you get your orderly habits?" I asked of a lady who never had to waste a moment in hunting for things out of their place.

"When I was four years old," she answered, "mother gave me a little drawer to put my clothes in. 'Make it your business, my dear child,' she said, 'to keep that drawer neat and tidy. Let me never find it in disorder.'

"Once she sent for me to come home from a party of little girls, in order to put away a pair of stockings carelessly left one the floor; and I used sometimes to think mother was hard on me; but now I see I owe my good habits to the care I was made to take of that little drawer when I was four years old."

You see how early habits are formed. It is never too soon to begin a good one.—The Child's Paper.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE FAITH OF ANCIENT MARTYRS.

BY W. H. H. MCALLISTER.

In 2 Maccabees, chap. vii., we read of seven brethren, who with their mother, were put to death with the most cruel tortures, because they refused to violate the law of Moses, by eating swine's flesh, when commanded by King Antiochus. They professed themselves ready to die rather than transgress the laws of their fathers. No ordinary methods of torture, such as scourges and whips, could make them comply. The first was then taken, his tongue cut out, his members cut off, and, being yet alive, was put in a pan and fried to death over a fire, in the presence of his mother and brethren. While the first was thus expiring, they exhorted one another, with the mother, to die manfully, saying, "The Lord God looketh upon us and in truth hath comfort in us, as Moses in his song which witnessed to their faces, declared, saying, 'And he shall be comforted in his servants.'"

The second was next brought, and having declined to eat, was treated in the same manner. "And when he was at the last gasp, he said, 'Thou like a fury takest us out of this present life, but the King of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlasting life."

"After him was the third made a mocking stock; and when he was required he put forth his tongue, and that right soon, holding forth his hands manfully, and said courageously, 'These I had from heaven; and for his laws I despise them; and from him I hope to receive them again.'"

Then they tormented and mangled the fourth in like manner; and when he was ready to die he said, "It is good being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him: as for thee, thou shalt have no resurrection."

Afterward they brought the fifth, also, and mangled him, And he, looking on the king said, "Thou hast power over men; thou art corruptible; thou doest what thou wilt; yet think not that our nation is forsaken of God; but abide awhile, and behold his great power, how he will torment thee and thy seed."

After him they brought also the sixth, who being ready to die, said, "Be not deceived without cause, for we suffer these things for ourselves, having sinned against our God; therefore marvelous things are done unto us. But think not thou that takest in hand to strive against God, that thou shalt escape unpunished."

The same account goes on to say, that the mother was marvelous above all, and worthy of honorable memory; for when she saw her seven sons slain in one day, she bore it with good courage, because of the hope that she had in the Lord; and she exhorted every one of them, in her own language, filled with courageous spirit. She said, "I cannot tell how ye came into my womb, for I neither gave you life nor breath, neither was it I that formed the members of every one of you; but doubtless the Creator of the world, who formed the generation of man, and found out the beginning of all things, will also of his own mercy give you breath and life again, as ye now regard not your ownselves for his law's sakes."

While the youngest was yet alive, Antiochus attempted to do by flattery what he had failed to do by tortures, and he promised with oaths that he would make him both a rich and a happy man, if he would turn from the laws of his fathers; and that he would also take him for his friend, and trust him with affairs. But the young man could not be persuaded, and the king appealed to his mother to exhort him to save his life. And she, laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, entreated him, among other things, not to fear this tormentor, but being worthy of the death of his brethren, to take his death, that she might receive him again with his brethren.

Then the young man gave his final answer to the king, in which he refused to obey the king's commandment, and gave his adherence to the commandment of the law. He told the king that he was the author of all mischief against the Hebrews, and should not escape the hands of God. He acknowledged that they had suffered because of their sins, but though the living Lord was angry with them for a little, for their chastening and correction, yet should he be at one again with his servants. "For our brethren," said he, "who have now suffered a short pain, are dead under God's covenant of everlasting life; but thou, through the judgment of God, shalt receive just punishment for thy pride." Then the king handled him worse than all the rest, and took it grievously that he was mocked, and the record adds, "So this man died undefiled, and put his whole trust in the Lord. Last of all, after the sons, the mother died."

I have quoted at length from this account that the connection might be clearly seen. Those who have access to the Apocrypha will do well to read the account in full.

It will be seen that one spirit animated all these martyrs; that they ought to obey God rather than man; and so thoroughly were they imbued with it that nothing could make them comply with the commands of the king. These, as the Apostle Paul says in Heb. xi. 35, "were tortured not accepting deliverance;" and it is seen that the inspiring hope is that of a resurrection to life. This hope is clearly expressed no less than six times in this account as their firmest confidence sustaining them in severest torture. The question arises just here, Was this hope a Bible hope? Were they well instructed in the purposes of God, or were they laboring under strong delusion? We believe that their hope was a well-grounded hope, and that they were sustained in their persecution by the Spirit of God. So far as a future life is concerned, this is the only way of obtaining it pointed out in the Old Testament Scriptures.

But we find another doctrine, less frequently, it is true, but no less explicitly expressed. "As for thee, thou shalt have no resurrection." So it appears that in olden times there was at least one man who did not believe in the resurrection of one wicked man, and probably the rest of these martyrs believed the same, though it is not explicitly stated. And not believing it of this one, he would not believe it of all wicked men. And this, too, was stated as a firm conviction under severe torture, and probably with sincere satisfaction. Where did he learn this doctrine? Very likely he had read Psa. xlix., Isa. xxvi., and others passages which teach it. Was he correct in this view? or did he die believing a grand error along with a grand truth? We believe his information on both points was from the same source, and alike correct, and is the true hope of all God's children.

GIVING GOD THE GLORY.

BY A. BOYNTON.

"And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them. And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man. And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost."—Acts xii. 21-23.

Although the indignation of the Lord is not often thus summarily visited upon the sinner, yet the sin is no less offensive, and cannot escape its deserved punishment. Our subject is an important one, as the text shows. Let us consider some of its bearings upon us.

That wicked Herod, who laid no claim to Christian character, a man of the world, of war and blood, should, in his self aggrandizement and worldly honor, neglect to ascribe the glory of his eloquence to another, while his immense auditory applauded him, is not so strange as was the result of his pride and arrogance—his disease and death. But this was perhaps given as a lesson, an admonition to all who in after time should read the record. The point is here: If God should have so specially aided this wicked ruler in his speech so that the people were in danger of giving him idolatrous worship, to prevent which, he must be thus ingloriously disposed of, how much more should we not expect His power and grace to rest upon and work through His own dear children, and how must He expect an expression of the Psalmist constantly to arise from their hearts, "Not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake?" Psa. cxv. 1. If the beloved Son, when called "Good Master," could say rebukingly, "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God," with what humility should poor sinners, saved by His rich grace, attribute all of good that they may have or do to Him, and through Him who doeth all things according to the counsel of His own will.

And further, unless we thus feel and publicly express our nothingness and God's fulness, keeping the fact lively before the mind, thus through the Spirit mortifying the deeds of the body (pride, especially), God will remove the candlestick out of its place—leave us to glory in ourselves, the end of which is death.

In this fast age of improvement and invention, we are in great danger of forgetting, "that which is born of flesh is flesh." Its highest aspirations are only and can only be fleshly or selfish. The "vessel" is an "earthen" one; the "gift," the "treasure" is of God; the "law in the heart and mind" is thereby the power of the Holy Spirit. "No man can say that Jesus Christ is the Lord (or his Lord) but by the Holy Ghost." 1 Cor. xii. 3. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." The strength, power, and glory of the Christian is the living, indwelling Christ. He feels the begetting power of God—the Spirit working a development of a divine nature, which has its consummation when Jesus comes with his resurrection or translating power.

Another thing: How can we appreciate these solemn truths, or how can we receive any divine truth? Only as God pleases to enlighten the eyes of our understanding. We are equally dependent on God for knowledge and grace or a right disposition—a loving heart. But He works by means; very likely not the means of our choosing, "but as it hath pleased him." Like clay in the potter's hand, place yourself before him; suppress the rising will, hush the murmurings of self, be still and listen to the soft, silent voice of the Spirit. No matter how much is said or believed to the contrary, God's people are" led by the Spirit." Take your Concordance and turn to the word Spirit, and read the array of testimony on this point, and "be not faithless, but believing."

P. S.—We would recommend "Cole's Concordance," a pocket edition, very convenient, perhaps as good as "Cruden's," published by the Methodist Book Concern. Price $1 50.

THE ATONEMENT.

BY CHARLES A. HASTINGS.

[Concluded]

WE have shown what the penalty of the law was in Adam's case, and that penalty passed through upon all who come out of his loins as their inherited calamity. Life was forfeited by the representative head, Adam the first; and none of his seed could claim more than a temporary life.

Did the Lord institute another law, by which He should take this life, and restore it to any or all, and thereby cheat justice of its rightful claim? If so, it shows that the first law was defective, and not "holy, just and good," as the Apostle hath testified. But we are willing his testimony should stand unimpeached, and we believe it will.

Now let us for a moment examine a few testimonies as to what constitutes man; and where, and what is his life. We read in Gen. vi. 3, "And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man; for that he is flesh." Our Lord, also, said to Nicodemus, "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh." The Apostle saith, "The first man is of the earth, earthy." This testimony is sufficient. It shows that man by nature is but an animal of flesh; of the earth, earthy.

In Gen. ix. 4, we read, "The life of the flesh is the blood thereof." In Exo. xxx. 1, "And thou shalt make an altar to burn incense upon," (verse 10.) "And Aaron shall make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year with the blood of the sin offering of atonements: once in a year shall he make atonement upon it throughout your generations: it is most holy unto the Lord."

Again: in Lev. xvii. 10 to 14, we read, "And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourns among you, that eateth any manner of blood, I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people; for the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul. Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, no soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood. And whosoever there be of the children of Israel, or of the stranger among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten, he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust: for it is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof; therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh, for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof; whosoever eateth it shall be cut off." Now, the summing up of this matter thus far is this:

1. The law, which was given to the first man, Adam.

2. The penalty of that law, which was the forfeiture of life; and this resting on all to condemnation: he should "surely die."

3. That man, as he came from the hand of his Creator, "is but flesh," of "the earth, earthy."

4. That the "life of all flesh is in the blood thereof;" and this life the law demands.

5. That the blood of beasts, as a type, was given on the altar to make an atonement, reconciliation; hence the Apostle saith, "Without shedding of blood is no remission."

But the law is just, and demands this blood-life. If a man die, lose this blood-life, how can he live again, so long as justice retains its lawful claim? Or, in other words, how can God be just and justify, or give life, to any, even to them that believe, and still let the law retain its just demand?

To this we answer: By bringing in another man, endowed with another principle of life, by which the law may retain its just claim, (which is the blood-life) and man may live again by being forgotten, and born again, by this new life principle. And this is clearly brought to view in many portions of Scripture; for we read, that "God, according to his eternal purpose, which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, before the foundation of the world"—not in Adam, but in Christ Jesus, before the world began. So again in 1 Cor. xv. 45, 46: "The first man Adam was made a living soul," (not an immortal soul), "the last Adam was made a quickening spirit;" or, as some render it, "A life, giving spirit." "Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural," (or animal) "and afterwards that which is spiritual. The second man is the Lord from heaven." "The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world."

This idea is again brought to view in the priesthood. Heb. vii. 16, "Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life; a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec."

But, "He had to suffer and die." True: but for what? Hear the Apostle, Heb. ii. 14 to 17. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them, who, through fear of death, were all their life time subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God to make reconciliation for the sins of the people."

He thus took upon himself our nature; and that nature was condemned, (back in the garden). "He was made sin for us"; or a sin-offering, for us, "who knew no sin;" he shed his blood on the cross; and that is what is declared to be the "life of the flesh."

Christ, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God." For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sins." "Wherefore, when He cometh into the world, he saith: Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not; but a body hast thou prepared me. Lo I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God."

Thus, "by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." This was an eternal sacrifice; and that sacrifice he never took back; it remains good to-day. "Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened (or made alive) by the Spirit." Because "it was not possible that he should be holden in death," for he had committed no sin; also having another principle of life, on which the law had no claim. By this act, He vindicated the justice and righteousness of the law, making reconciliation or atonement.

Therefore, in the language of the Apostle John, "Herein is love; not that we loved God, but he loved us, and sent his son to be the propitiation, atonement, reconciliation, for our sins; not for Adam's sin, which was the violation of a direct and positive law, thereby bringing in condemnation and death upon all his posterity, from which we find no remission; ("for it is appointed unto man once to die"); but the remission of our sins, and this on the condition, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John i. 9.

And the Apostle Paul, also, saith, "Whom God hath set forth to a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God"—God's love; his goodness; his grace. It is all of grace; not of debt, but a free gift; long suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance; for He hath no pleasure inthe death of him that dieth.

"God so loved the woold, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." This divine nature, we believe to be spiritual; embracing "eternal life; and this life is in His Son."

Therefore he hath said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Ye must be born again;" ye must be regenerated of the Spirit, else there is no hope of life beyond the grave.

And this "not of works, lest any man should boast; but by the hearing of faith," the confession of our sins, the "washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit." that we may not be holden in death by their cords,—the cords of our own sins.

"For if there had been a law given which could have given, life verily righteousness should have been by the law. That is, if our good works could or can merit eternal life, then righteousness and life would have been by the law of works; but such is not the revealed will of God: "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth: for the scriptures hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe." "And he that believeth hath the witness in himself: for the Spirit beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God; whereby we cry, Abba Father;" that is, He is our Father. Therefore the Spirit is the earnest of our inheritance; the pledge of our redemption; the seal of the purchased possession.

Here, then, is the Christian's hope; his "anchor, which is sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail," knowing and believing this, that, "Because he lives we shall live also." For "our life is hid with Christ in God; and when he who is the believer's life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." For, "if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken (or make alive) your mortal bodies, by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

For it is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." And again, "our conversation (or citizenship) is in heaven, from whence we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

"Wherefore seeing we have this hope in us, let us hold fast the confidence of our faith, firm unto the end; for the grace that shall be brought us at the revelation of Jesus Christ;" so that no man take our crown. And to him we will ascribe all glory, and honor, and might, and dominion, who hath redeemed us by his own blood, and hast made us, unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth. And with the poet we are led to say:

All hail the power of Jesus' name;
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all.
Ye chosen seed of Israel's race,
Ye ransomed from the fall,
Hail him who saves you by his grace,
And crown him Lord of all.

ARE SECOND MARRIAGES PROPER?

CUSTOM tolerates this abominable social evil, if it does not approve it. It cannot do less, when the lax state of public morality makes divoces even not only possible, but easy of accomplishment. Marriage by many is no longer regarded as a divine institution, but simply an alliance to be entered into, and dissolved, at at the caprices of folly, lust, or convenience.

There are but few persons, comparatively, but that believe in the immortality of the soul; and that those who have gone before us to the spirit land will be recognized, and hold the same relation to us, when we meet them there, that they did here—therefore, to such, a marriage once must, to all intents and purposes, be a marriage for all eternity. A plurality of wives or husbands, in the world to come, must excite the same horror which it does in all right-minded persons when such a state of things is contemplated here. In this light I view it, and I cannot divest the idea from my mind that the contraction of more than one marriage by the same person is no less than a kind of polygamy.

How agonizing and terrible it must be to a devoted and tender wife when separated from her partner, in the halcyon days of their wedded life, after waiting many long years in the spirit land for the dear one left behind, to find perhaps two or three later wives of her husband sent to her before his arrival; and when he at length comes, to have her claim disputed, or at least receive only a moiety of that love which her priority should claim as a whole. Aside from this there are other considerations connected with second marriages which are not less repelling.

First marriages are usually contracted when youth, love, and romance cement the union with a tenderness and sacredness which no later periods can approach. The human heart pours out its best and purest oblations upon a first union, and all other connections of the kind are in comparison only ridiculous burlesques upon the institution of marriage. The heart can never yield but to one the divine glow which distils the true elixir of wedded life. When this one is removed, the fountain is dried up in this world, and no rod wielded by a second love can again make it flow with its original abundance and sparkling purity.

How ridiculous, farcical, and iniquitous then are all marriages save the first! How abhorent the bare idea of a connection of this kind must be to all such as are basking in the happy fruition of a first union! To think, for instance, at some future day, that a beloved wife or husband may be removed and others step in their places; at their boards other hands to to preside; at their firesides new faces to smile or frown upon them; the arms that embrace them and the kisses they receive to be bestowed by mercenary and selfish interlopers.

When death takes away a beloved wife or husband, the bereaved, instead of casting their eyes around for one to fill the place, should live on the memory of their beloved ones; look upon the affliction as only temporary; bear the lost one ever in mind; shape every act as though their eyes were upon them; and as they proceed onward, nearing the goal, their love should be constantly increasing so as to be fully prepared for that reunion which will be final and eternal.

BR. STORRS: THE foregoing, from the "Rochester Union," is, to me, a new argument in favor of the theological notion of an immortal soul, written by "A loving woman: (and are not some of them loving, lovely, and lovable?) It is another illustration of the many absurd extremes one will be drawn into who adopts the popular theological immortal soul theory. If there was any foundation in the Scriptures of truth for this "loving woman's" appeal in behalf of keeping or adhering to ones first love in consequence of inherent immortality, I should be inclined to side with her in her protest against a plurality of husbands or wives. For what could be more, distressing to an immortal and immaterial soul, which popular theology claims to know more after death than before, but which after death is said to be released from this tenement of clay and proceeds at once to search for its first love (while here on earth) somewhere "beyond the bounds of time and space;" and, if perchance successful, may find the once departed immortal and immaterial soul to have been wedded to one or more other immortal and immaterial souls? It would surely be positively inconsolable. The contemplation that such an occurance is even possible, in that far off world beyond the skies is to me so affecting that I cannot further comment.

RICHARD MARTIN.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1869.

Note by the Editor.

THE "loving woman" above noticed is only one of the many monomaniacs made by "Spiritism," which was born of the doctrine of inherent immortality. Spiritism has spawned many such absurd and unscriptual notions, for which the teachers of an immortal soul in man are responsible. They have laid the foundation for all the trash that Spiritist belch forth on a credulous world, "credulous" of error, but hating the truth of Life future and eternal only through Christ; and that those who are accounted worthy to obtain that world "neither marry nor are given in marriage." Luke xx. 35.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

DARKNESS seems to cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; they rush on regardless of the signs that speak the coming of the Lord as nigh. They can discern the face of the sky, but to the signs of the times they pay little or no attention. Their eyes they have closed that they may not see; their ears are dull of hearing; their hearts they have hardened that they will not see the truth, and submit to Christ and be converted. In viewing the deplorable state of affairs at the present day, my heart cries out, Give me my portion with the children of God; let me suffer affliction with them rather than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; give me that peace which God alone can give; let me feel his love burning in my heart, and I desire no more. This world with all its pomp and show will soon pass away like dew before the morning sun; and they whose interest is only in it will pass away with it; but they who have confessed Christ in this wicked adulterous generation, and kept his commandments, will have a right to the Tree of Life, and they will live and reign with Christ forever. O, who would not possess such a hope as this?—a hope that reaches deep within the vail, whither Jesus, the forerunner, hath for us entered. O, weary pilgrim, press on thy way a little longer; soon thy blessed hope shall be consummated. Soon "hope shall be changed to glad fruition; faith to sight, and prayer to praise." We are now living in a grand and awful time. Iniquity abounds, and the love of many is waxing cold; and many are drawing back to perdition; and we are exhorted to hold fast whereunto we have attained, lest we lose our crown; and to watch lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping, and we lose the kingdom at last.

What a loss that would be! If that is not gained, then everything is lost; we have lived in vain. O, let us watch unto prayer. Let us be up and doing while the day lasts; and as we see signs there's no mistaking, which tell us that our Lord is coming to raise the sleeping and change the living saints, let us try to persuade others to get ready for that great and glorious event. Let us clear the skirts of our own garments from the blood of all souls.

Come poor sinner, ere the darkness
Of eternal night sets in;
Ere the Saviour ceases pleading
To redeem us from all sin.

DORA S. DOORE.

SOUTH ATKINSON, ME.

A writer very correctly remarks: "God looks not at the oratory of your prayers, how elegant they may be; nor at the geometry of your prayers, how long they may be; nor at the arithmetic of your prayers, how many they may be; nor at the logic of your prayers how methodical they may be,—but the sincerity of them he looks at.

BEST THINGS TO GIVE.—The best thing to give your enemy is forgiveness; to your opponent, tolerance; to a friend, your heart; to a father, defference; to your mother, affection, that will make her proud of you; to yourself, respect; to all, charity.

"HOBBIES."

BY W. H. H. MCALLISTER.

THERE is much said these days about hobbies. Any one who starts a new idea and pursues it with that zeal and energy necessary to insure success, lays himself open to the charge of "riding a hobby." Those who cut across the conservative ideas of the world, and strive to infuse life and vitality into old systems, will ever be met with the ridicule and sarcasm of this charge. All real substantial progress in any direction has to stand this ordeal. Columbus rode a hobby, and he rode it to a magnificent success. Galileo rode a hobby, but was made to dismount at the altar by Papal persecution. Luther rode a hobby and no power of the Pope could dismount him. All reformers of the world are especially singled out as the hobby-riders. And within our own time, Garrison and Phillips and a host of others, good men and true, have rode the hobby of the abolition of slavery till it has become a respectable beast of burden. Then all have the hobbies of temperance, of female suffrage, of health reform, of the use of tobacco. In short, there is no end to the application of this charge, and but little discrimination.

The most frequent use of this term is in its application to religious ideas. He who does not accept the current theology of the day, but insists on investigating the Bible for himself, and is not discreet enough to keep his views to himself, will inevitably meet this charge. In these latter days William Miller is the chief of religious hobby-riders. He rode the Second Advent, and prophecy as connected with it, hard. Since him, others have risen riding his hobbies and inventing new ones. The Seventh-day Sabbath is one hobby, the mortality of man and the unconscious state of the dead, another; and finally, the hobby of hobbies is the non-resurrection of the wicked. Even those who ride some of the hobbies mentioned, and rejoice in them, are quite forward to characterize this last as one of a disreputable breed, unworthy to have a name in the natural history of the animal.

I must confess that I have been in time past, rather sensitive to this charge. I didn't like to be accused of riding a hobby in my religious ideas. I like to be met with fair argument instead of ridicule; but ridicule is employed when argument is wanting. This is a comfort of itself. But there is a stronger consolation than this. One day when I had had a fresh trial of this kind of argument, it occurred to me to look and see what this term really meant. I turned to Webster's Unabridged, and under the word "hobby" read as follows: "Any favorite object. That which a person pursues with zeal or delight." And since then, I do not deny the charge; but rather strive to merit it. For the principles of divine truth which I believe are a favorite object with me; and I strive to pursue them with zeal and delight. And if this be hobby-riding, I glory in the charge. Hence we can see why the worthies I have named were really hobby-riders, though the term instead of being complimentary was intended for ridicule. But none of these things should move us; "For we are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end."

QUERIES.

BR. STORRS: We wish to ask D. G. Weaver a few questions, through the HERALD. He says, in the HERALD of Oct. 13, "In order to have a wife or husband there must be a ceremony performed in order to have it lawful." He also says, "I have been instructed from the Bible that 'beasts' represent governments, and I will believe it. I think Christ does not want us to be connected with them, neither will the true church desire to be." Query: Must not a man be connected in some way with the 'beasts' in order to solemnize the right of matrimony? Must two, that belong to the "true church," and wishes to marry, go to a servant of the "beasts," and have him to perform the ceremony in order to make it lawful? According to the laws of Illinois a man must become connected with the government ("beast") in order to solemnize the right of matrimony. We desire light on this question. Will D. G. Weaver give it?

MORE QUERIES.

WHO will answer the following? Jesus says, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see, nor enter into, the kingdom of God." Now if to be born again, is to put on immortality at the last day—as is generally conceded by us all—how can a remnant of Judah and Israel in the flesh be subjects of the kingdom without being born again?

This query rose in our mind by reading Br. Grim's inquiry on "the present hope of the world." Who will reconcile it?

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"THE CONSTITUTION OF MAN."

THE articles on this subject, by Dr. Finley, of Niles, Mich., are to be immediately put into a pamphlet, and will be issued as early as possible. Let those therefore who are disposed to help in this work send us their contributions at the earliest possible period. We need not only the amount pledged, already, put something more to issue it free from debt.

The work will be a valuable addition to the Life literature, and should have and will have an extensive circulation and wake up an interest on the theme of Life only in Christ in quarters not before reached.

If you cannot give a donation for this purpose, let us know how many copies you will take and pay for, at the first cost; which will not exceed fifteen cents per copy, and may be less.

REST IN CHRIST.

"For we which have believed do enter into rest."—Hebrews iv. 3.

The Saviour said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. xi. 28.

THE natural condition of men is one of restlessness. The reason of this is, they lack something which cannot be found in any merely sensual or intellectual attainments. However perfect these attainments may be, they fail to meet the aspirations of human desires; hence a restlessness, to greater or less extent, is constantly felt by every mind.

But God has provided rest; that rest is found only in Christ by an undoubting and unwavering faith. To have such faith it is essential that the understanding be enlightened by the entrance of the pure truth of the gospel of Christ. False views of man's nature, of God's requirements of him, and His designs concerning him, will always cause an unrest, and prevent that unwavering and undoubting faith which alone can give rest to the mind or heart of man.

True views of man's nature and God's designs concerning him, heartily believed and accepted, cannot fail to give rest now to the person whose understanding has been enlightened in these matters, and whose heart cordially embraces them.

Real Christianity, or true subjection to Christ, gives a present rest, because thereby the judgment is informed on all important points relating to ourselves and God's designs concerning us, and our doubts on these matters are removed. Doubting is always a source of unrest or disquietude. A pure Christianity, heartily accepted, removes this state of mind, and rest succeeds it.

This is not all. The mind thus settled in the true faith has rest, because the will is settled to trust in God in all things and for all things; fully satisfied that whatever He appoints or allows is for our highest good, and is under the direction and control of Infinite wisdom, power and love; so that "all things work together for good to them," because they "love God." O, what a source of rest is here! Settled in God and in His Christ; believing in all the "great and precious promises," to those who accept Christ as God's appointed Head and Deliverer from sin and death; why should such an one not be at rest now? He is, and must be; it cannot be otherwise. He has cast all his "cares and burdens on the Lord, knowing that he careth for" him. "Happy the man whose hope the Lord is."

Rest is the result of all this, because, also, all the passions, appetites and desires are brought into harmony with the Divine will, which results from the indwelling of the Spirit of God. How can such an one be otherwise than at rest? Well might Paul say, "For we which have believed do enter into rest." Still a greater "rest remains for the people of God," when "mortality shall be swallowed up of life." "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest," and not "fall" through "unbelief."

Brethren and sisters in Christ, let us be, as it were, dissolved into Christ, live in Him, walk in Him, and have our faith so firmly fixed there that our daily "fellowship" shall be "with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ our Lord." 1 John i. 3. Let us seek to feel and realize, at all times and in all places, that "we live and move and have our being in God;" (Acts xvii. 28); so shall we ever be like unto those who "wait for the coming of their Lord," and that day of our Lord's return from heaven will not "overtake" us "unawares;" but joyfully shall we hail "His appearing and kingdom;" an event nigh at hand.

Jesus directed Mary, after His resurrection, "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend to my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God." What blessed words! How well calculated to give "rest" to the minds of all who love Him; and let us not forget He said, "I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also;" and "Because I live ye shall live also." Glorious assurance! Who would not believe? Here is rest.

GEOLOGISTS' ASSUMPTIONS.

THE Apostle tells us, "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." In scarcely one thing does it appear more striking than in some of the assumptions of geologists. We notice only one at this time; and this only because some sincere and honest souls really believe they find in the statement evidence of the burning of the globe at no distant period. We are told,

"A majority of noted geologists claim that all earth's hidden interior, save only about twenty or thirty miles of the outer surface, is an intensely heated mass, in a condition of molten fluidity, agitated, restless, and rolling its fiery waves hither and thither age after age, incessantly seeking, with a terribly expansive power, an outlet to diffuse its igneous elements over the surface and into the atmosphere."

We are told that we dwell "on this thin, rocky film, or outer surface," or this shell of "twenty or thirty miles" thickness, which incloses this internal fire.

Of course we are no geologist: we never made it a study; but the above theory puzzles us, and almost leads us to exclaim with Festus to Paul, "Thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad." Acts xxvi. 24.

In the first place, there is no solid ground of reliance for such a theory; it is a mere speculation, at best. To be believed, it wants a demonstration which no man living can give. Let us look at this geological assumption.

The diameter of the earth is said to be eight thousand miles. Take off thirty miles from all sides of it for this imaginary shell or casing, on which we live; or take 60 miles from 8,000 and there remains 7,940 miles, or a volume of fire seven thousand nine hundred and forty miles in diameter, which has been rolling and burning "age after age," etc.

Will these learned geologists tell us where the fuel comes from to sustain such a mass of fire? or, does it burn without fuel, like the theological hell? Such an immense fire, we are foolish enough to believe, could not continue its burning without material to feed on more vast than the little thin surface of "thirty miles," supposed to cover it; and it is not pretended that this thin surface has grown much if any thinner in six thousand years! A poor, miserable fire that must be, 8,000 miles in diameter, less 60 miles, which would not have burned its way to the surface in that period.

To build a theory on the burning of the world or globe on such a fiery notion, or even to mention it, in that connection, adds no strength to the argument in a reflecting mind.

That the bowels of the earth may be filled largely with gaseous matter, is highly probable; and when this matter finds vent into the air it ignites. But this is no more evidence that such gaseous matter is on fire while confined in the bowels of the earth, than that gas in the gasometer or conducting pipes is on fire, or a mass of fire before it gets vent and is ignited. To assume that these gases are in a state of continual burning, in the bowels of the earth, because when they reach our atmosphere through volcanoes they burn, is, to our mind, as unphilosophical as to affirm the gas in the gasometer must all be on fire because it burns when it reaches our dwellings, is let into the air and ignites. It would not burn without air, and a burning cause added.

We conclude that all the talk about 7,940 miles of the diameter of this earth being a flaming, rolling mass of fire is among "the old wives fables," which will answer to frighten minds that do not or will not think.

That fire will be employed in changing the face of this earth, to some extent, we do not question; but that its whole surface will ever be burned, we do not believe; nor do we believe such an idea can be harmonized with the general tenor of the Bible.

"THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE."

THIS work, by ex-Chancellor HALSTED, we have been expecting to receive for several weeks past; but from some unknown cause none have yet come to hand. Just as soon as they do, we will supply the orders already received.

"IMMORTALITY — THE CONFLICT."— THE half-sheet, of August, 4, on the above subject, being a review of, and reply to Dr. E. O. Haven, now President of the Northwestern University, at Evanton, Ill., is still for sale at this office. Five copies will be sent for ten cents to any who desire it. Only some 50 to 75 copies are left.

A CORRECTION.—In the article, last week, on the Atonement two errors were uncorrected. In the last column on the first page, 44th line from the top insert no between the words "been" and "atonement," so as to read no atonement. Same article, first column inside, 22d line from the top, read statement instead of "atonement."

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES."—John v. 39.

UPON this important commandment of Jesus Albert Barnes remarks: "The word translated search here, means to search diligently or anxiously. It is applied to miners who search diligently for the bed of the ore, with an intensity or anxiety proportionate to their sense of the value of the metal. It is applied by Homer to a lioness robbed of her whelps, and who searches the plains to trace out the footsteps of the man who has robbed her. It is applied by him to dogs tracing their game by searching them out by the scent of the foot. It means a diligent, faithful, anxious investigation." That Jesus meant we should thus diligently search the Scriptures, readily appears when we consider the importance of correct knowledge.

Sincerity in the absence of truth is of no weight in the eyes of God. The Lord seeketh such to worship him as worship him in Spirit and in truth; and our Heavenly Father acknowledges and accepts no worship which is contrary to his revealed will. The Mohammetan, the Papist, and even the worse deluded idolator, attend to their devotions with a degree of sincerity that would be commendable in many Protestant denominations; but in the absence of gospel truth their sincerity is vain. In order that we have not a "vain faith" it is highly important that we have correct knowledge of the gospel which unfolds the grand system of redeeming love for the recovery of man from the eternal claims of death.

Again, the value of correct knowledge is apparent from the fact that doctrinal knowledge is the foundation of true religion. All true love to God—every exercise of humility and repentance, has for its object something taught in the Scriptures, and which is believed. Every degree of true Christian zeal is kindled up in view of the truths of revelation respecting the plan of redemption, and the kingdom which lies beyond. All Christian duties arise from some doctrine taught in the Bible. The duty of loving God is based upon the doctrine that he is good; and because he is the best of all beings it becomes our duty to love him supremely.

The doctrines of the Bible present the motives by which all its precepts are enforced. Salvation is obtained through faith and obedience. A mere precept shows what ought to be done, but is not instrumental in producing obedience. In order to influence intelligent, reasoning beings to perform the duties enjoined, other considerations must be presented. The doctrines of the Scriptures furnish the motives to influence such creatures to obey. They present the reasonableness of the requirements of God, and the goodness of his character; shows man his obligation to obey, and presents the reward of obedience and the certain punishment for rebellion and sin. Hence it is of the greatest importance for perishing mortals to "search the Scriptures," which the apostle Paul informs us are able to make one wise unto salvation.

PAUL'S DESIRE TO DEPART.

BY DR. J. K. FINLEY.

[WHEN we published Dr. Finley's articles on the "CONSTITUTION OF MAN," some months since, we omitted the one on the above subject. We now give it to our readers as revised by himself, and as it will appear in the pamphlet to be issued. Please help us to get out the whole series in pamphlet immediately.—EDITOR.]

We will now take up another inferential argument in favor of the immortality of the soul, and which is esteemed very weighty by the advocates of that dogma. I will just remark of it, that it also depends upon the assumption that there is a soul, for all its force. It is found in Phil. i. 23: "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." Paul had been telling the Phillippians in the twelfth verse and onward, that his imprisonment and bonds, etc., "Have fallen out rather into the furtherance of the Gospel." In the 20th verse he affirms the result of all his trials and vexations was, "As always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, (or me), whether it be by life or by death." The import evidently is, that as all his many sufferings and perils heretofore, had always been made to magnify Christ, so his present troubles would also be made to have the same result. "For," and this "for" connects the next verse with what he had just said, "For to me to live is Christ," or will be made to magnify Christ, "and to die is gain," or will be overruled to magnify Christ. The meaning is not that death would be gain to himself but to Christ. He was not talking or alluding to his own case, only as it affected the glory of his adorable Master. And then in the next verse he goes on to say: "but if I live in the flesh this is the fruit of my labor" that Christ shall be magnified. This is the only and the great desire of life, for which he labored unceasingly. "Yet what I shall choose I wot not." He knew not what to choose, whether life or death. "For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ which is far better."

Now, if depart here means to die, we have Paul saying in one verse, he did not know which to choose, life or death, and in the very next verse say he had a longing, or intense desire, to die, for the word translated desire, expresses not only a desire, but a longing or strong desire. We all know that Paul was not the man to talk thus, yea and nay; and besides he expresses himself here by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and his utterances would be in agreement with all that he had said before and afterward in his Epistles to the various churches.

In the next chapter of this very Epistle to the Phillippians, he says, "God had mercy" on Epaphroditus in sparing his life, which was threatened by a dangerous sickness. Now, if Paul longed intensely for death, in order that his soul might depart and be with Christ, why does he claim it as an act of mercy to Epaphroditus, that God withheld him from dying and going to be with Christ also? The fact which we have fully established, that the Bible nowhere teaches that man has an entity called the soul, which can live apart from the body, but the contrary, is proof sufficient of itself, that he did not intend to express a desire to die at all; if he had, he would have convicted himself of being, just what we all know he was not, most absurdly inconsistent with all his other utterances on the subject. Paul, in scores of instances, and in all his Epistles, speaks of death as our greatest enemy, and as the just punishment for sin. In the passage under consideration, he makes no allusion whatever to his soul, but speaks of himself, the man Paul, embracing whatever constituted him a man. What, then, it will be asked, was the object of his strong desire? It appears to me that we are shut up to the conclusion, that he desired above everything else, either life or death, a translation, that like Enoch and Elijah he should "not see death." The desire certainly was an innocent one; there could be nothing wrong in it; but at the same time with that spirit of self-abnegation, which always characterized him, he expressed no hope or expectation that his desire would be granted, for the reason that "to abide in the flesh is more needful for you, and having this confidence I know that I shall abide, and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith."

When we take into account the fact related by himself, that he had enjoyed "visions and revelations of the Lord;" that he "was caught up to the third heaven;" that "he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not possible for a man to utter;" that his ecstacy was so great, there was danger "lest I should be exalted above measure, through the abundance of the revelations," it will appear to have been the most reasonable thing in the world, that he should desire, if it were the will of God, to enjoy those transcendent visions of glory without the liability of being brought back to suffer the manifold afflictions and perils which continually beset his pathway on earth; and above every other consideration to be with that dear Master for whom he had suffered the loss of all things, and "counted them but dung, that he might win Christ, and be found in him."

The making of the word, depart, to mean death, is due to the absurd, antiscriptural, and heathenish notion, that death is caused by the soul departing from the body; absurd, because our daily observation shows us that all animals exhibit the same phenomena in dying that man does, and that death is produced in all cases by ceasing to breathe the breath of life; it is anticriptural because the Bible tells us "As one dieth so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath, so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast;" it is heathenish because it is in some form or other the belief of a vast majority of the heathens, as we have it in a pretty little distich quoted recently for our instruction by Inquirer:

"The poor Indian whose untutored mind,
Sees God in clouds, or hears Him in the wind;
. . . And thinks, admitted to yon equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company."

Inquirer may, but we don't wish to form our ideas of Bible truth from the untutored mind of the poor Indian, whilst we have the life giving oracles of the living God to guide us. But we know "extremes sometimes meet," as we see here. The champion of orthodoxy and the most degraded heathenism not only meet, but lovingly embrace each other. Orthodox translators would have us believe that Paul desired his soul to depart and be with Christ, which is in direct opposition to the whole Bible, and especially to Paul's own recorded belief. For when the time did at last arrive when he was to lay down his life, he tells us "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing." That day when Paul expected to receive his crown was at the return of the Saviour from heaven, when all his followers would also receive their crowns; until then it was laid up for him. Paul and the early Christians and martyrs were not as highly favored as Christians are now-a-days, who all receive their crowns at the moment of their death. Death not the resurrection, according to the prevailing theology, "is the gate to endless joy."

I have now replied to the chief inferential arguments employed to sustain the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. All of a similar kind have been so often and thoroughly refuted in books easily obtained, that I do not think it necessary to pursue them any further. My next will be on the mission of Christ to our world.

THE PROPHETIC REVELATIONS.

WE gather the following items from an article in "The Rainbow" on "Dr. Marsh on Prophecy." William Marsh, D. D., was Rector of Beddington, England. The writer says, "His love to the Saviour was most intense and realizing; his life was one of beautiful consistency; his views of prophetic truth were singularly clear and definite." He died in 1867. As early as 1831 he wrote:

"As to the coming of our Lord, I simplify it thus. There is no intervening period of a millennium between Daniel's 'Son of Man' coming in glory and the destruction of the fourth empire. Nor in our Lord's prophecy of the fall of the civil and ecclesiastical sun, moon, and stars, and his return. Nor in the apostle Paul's revelation of the man of sin (2 Thess. ii. 1–8), and the Lord's return to destroy him. Ergo, the millennial period succeeds, not precedes, the Lord's return. The prophecies in the Old Testament proceed on this plan. As to the signs of the times, without fixing days and years, they are most remarkable; I cannot but regard them as latter days—last days. There is scarcely a sign wanting, as far as an evident preparation for the whole is concerned, except a movement of the Jews eastward.

"Let us, therefore, believe, and watch, and pray. And 'yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith.' And the just by faith shall live.

"God grant our nation to repent, and our church to be zealous, and we shall be spared till the day dawn. Oh! what a blessed hope the humble believer in Jesus has, whatever may happen to kingdoms and churches."

Again we select the following:

After the death of Mrs. Marsh, we are told: "One blessed hope bore up his spirit—the hope of eternal re-union in the presence of the Lord. 'Poor comfort,' he said, 'would there have been in the stress St. Paul laid on the promise to the bereaved Thessalonians, that they should be caught up together with those whom they were mourning—at the coming of the Lord—if they were not to recognize each other in that company!'

"The prospect of the comparatively near approach of the second advent of our Lord was, indeed, his most joyful theme. For years it had been the subject which called forth his highest eloquence, and his most exulting praise. But now a tenderer tone was added. The hymns which touched upon the glorious prospect became his chief favorites—and his countenance lighted up with more than usual radiance as he clearly and succinctly explained to inquirers, his scriptural grounds for believing that 'the day of glory nears.' Although not thinking it right to fix on any dates with definite certainty, he looked forward to the closing years of the present decade as a time which would probably usher in 'the beginning of the end.'"

In the year 1845, Dr. Marsh preached a sermon on the signs of the times in connection with the hope of the coming of the Lord. "Rarely was he heard to speak of dates with reference to that subject without extreme caution. But in the course of this sermon he stated his own strong impression that, within about twenty-five years from that time, Anti-christ would be revealed, and then the second advent of the Anointed King would be at hand." . . . "The complete victory of truth I do not expect until the second advent of our blessed Lord. I have no hope of a general or universal spread of Christian knowledge 'till he come.' When he has 'taken out of the Gentiles a people for his name,' and called 'a remnant of the Jews, according to the election of grace,' then 'he will return and convert the Jewish nation, put down all rule, authority, and power opposed to his gospel, and cause the knowledge of himself to cover the earth. So I read in very many passages of Holy Writ, and long for the day; for then Satan will be bound, and creation will cease to groan."

In 1848 Dr. Marsh wrote:

"The time for the beginning of the end appears to have arrived. How long it may last till the end, no man knoweth. I recollect reading, many years ago, Fleming's Apocalyptical Key, written in 1701 or 1704, which professed to foretell the downfall of the king of France in 1794, and the commencement of the downfall of Popery in 1848. The former we know took place. If the present revolution end in infidelity, the latter will begin to take place. But popery will make great exertions, and die hard."

In 1863 Dr. Marsh wrote as follows:

"There is a deep-laid conspiracy against the Protestantism of our church and country. If permitted to succeed, judgments will fall on the land; but if Popery prevail for a short time, it will terminate in infidelity as the last Antichrist. Satanic influence is not sufficiently recognized, yet it will prevail till the enemy be bound. The Jesuit is abroad, and if (as I fear) the church of England is to be visited with chastisement for her want of faithfulness to her own principles, Romanism will prevail. After that infidelity will succeed, and there may be a violent struggle. But, after that, He will come who will 'put down all rule, authority, and power' opposed to the glorious gospel of the grace of God. 'Amen: even so, come, Lord Jesus.'"

We quote the following remarks from Dr. Marsh's writings:

"I never knew an anti-millenarian give a satisfactory answer to 2 Thess. ii. 8. If the man of sin must be destroyed before the millennial period, the Lord must come before that period; for it is of his personal, not spiritual coming, that the apostle is speaking. Spiritual, indeed, that will be also, for there will be little spirituality till then. Judah will vex Ephraim, and Ephraim envy Judah."

Referring to the future state, beyond the millennial period, he said:

"The mediatorial work having accomplished all that is intended, then God becomes 'all in all.'" He considered that the inhabitants of our earth in the millennium would be "a race of men preparing for a higher state, as Adam in paradise, supposing he had lived a thousand years there in an unfallen state." Then he added, "It appears to me that the millennial world is to be distinct from the 'kings and priests.' Kings have subjects, and priests have services. They are to 'reign with Christ' during the thousand years, and to 'serve him, seeing his face.' If we can only say Hosanna now, we shall sing Hallelujah then.

"That is a fine expression, not only liberty, but 'glorious liberty of the children of God.' There are two other things mentioned in that chapter (Rom. viii.), the 'manifestation of the sons of God,' and the 'redemption of the body.' They have not yet been manifested 'The world knoweth us not;' but 'when manifested,' they will enjoy their glorious liberty in a redeemed body."

The following statement of Dr. Marsh's feelings in 1864, in relation to the coming of our Lord, is taken from his memoir, written by his daughter:

"But 'the time drew nigh that Israel must die.' It was his wish, with reference to his birthday gathering, that this year should be connected with it a call to his clerical brethren, to meet specially for prayer and addresses on the subject of the coming of the Lord. Several laymen were also invited, and the day fixed for it was Tuesday, the 19th of July, the eve of his birthday. When we recall the thought and prayer with which he arranged the plans for both these meetings, it seems to us now that there must have mingled with the gladness with which he looked forward to the festival, a solemn yet joyful presentiment that it was to be his last anniversary on earth.

"The following was the form of invitation which he sent for the 19th:

"'THE NIGHT IS FAR SPENT, THE DAY IS AT HAND.'"

"We intend, therefore, in obedience to the apostolic command, to "assemble ourselves together, and to exhort one another, so much the more as we see the day approaching.'

'Will you join our gathering here at half-past three o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday, the 19th instant? And, in the meanwhile, unite with us in fervent prayer, that the power of the Lord may be present with us, that we may be "filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost," looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God."

Your faithful servant and brother in the Lord, WILLIAM MARSH.'

"Hearty and numerous were the responses to this invitation, and those who were present will not soon forget the power with which he spoke that day; the clear testimony to the blessedness of resting alone on the work of Christ, of walking in conscious, unbroken communion with him and of looking for his coming glory; nor the pouring out of his soul in prayer, and the sudden burst of sacred song—the overflow of the joy with which 'he drew water from the wells of salvation.'

"After alluding to the more widely diffused expectation of the near coming of the Lord, and to the numerous calculations of dates in the prophecies which converge in the present decade, he went on to say, 'But be that as it may, we are expressly told by an apostle, that the first and second advents of the Messiah are the great subjects of Holy Writ, for the Spirit of Christ was in all the prophets, testifying beforehand of the sufferings of Christ and of the glory that should follow. For what end did the Redeemer come into this world? He came to glorify God, to magnify the law, to make "a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice" for the sins of the whole world, to offer a free pardon to guilty man, and so to take out of the way every obstacle which hindered his coming to God for pardon, peace, and grace here, and glory hereafter.

At the first advent of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, it appears to me that he came especially to exercise the office of a prophet, as the Great Prophet that should come into the world.

'Since his ascension into heaven, his work as a prophet being ended, He has assumed the office of a priest; the forerunner is for us entered within the vail, "even Jesus, made an high priest forever." By his intercession, he keeps the way open to the throne of grace, and therefore mercy and grace can flow freely to us. . . .

'Let me now speak to you of the second advent, which is the Christian's hope (as the first advent is the foundation of his faith); for then Christ will assume his office of King; and not till then will the great enemy of souls, the "accuser of the brethren," be bound, error be banished, sin be subdued, and creation cease to groan; because at his coming he will establish the kingdom of truth, righteousness, and peace. What Christian is there who, believing this, when he hears the Saviour's voice saying, "Surely I come quickly," will not reply, "Amen, even so, Lord Jesus?"

"The first advent is the source of all our hopes of eternal life; but when we have been admitted freely into the kingdom of glory through the Saviour's obedience unto death, we shall find at the second advent, that there is nothing that we have either done or suffered for him, that will not be graciously remembered, and ever rewarded by him.

'"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, inasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Be steadfast in this faith, that Christ died for our sins. Be unmovable from this hope, that through his resurrection all who believe on him shall have a joyful resurrection when all sins and all infirmities shall be gone forever. For "so also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body."

'Lastly, be always abounding in the work of the Lord. The fruit of such work may be, and often is, seen even here, and most certainly shall be seen hereafter; for "the day shall declare it," and the reward shall be reaped, for ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."'

A few weeks after this Dr. Marsh fell asleep in Jesus, to wait the resurrection at his Lord's return "from heaven."

A Brief Criticism.

[We copy the following sensible criticism on Rom. viii. 11. from the "Advent-Christian Times;" and commend it to the attention of a late writer in the World's Crisis" on the same text, The two contrast beautifully.—Ed. of Her.]

I have read that Rom. viii. 11 refers entirely to conversion. Let us see how it reads. "How readest thou?" "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

That is the way it reads; now what does it mean? Does it need any explanation? Does it not mean what it says, and say what it means? First it says, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you." Is it not plain that this describes the condition of one who is already converted? Surely the Spirit of God does not dwell in an unconverted person. I think all will admit that this clause speaks of the condition of one who is a Christian already. Then of course the promise which follows in the verse is something more than conversion; something yet to be received by one who is already a Christian. And what is the promise? It cannot be more plainly stated than in the language of the text, viz: "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

This is a promise of a future blessing to those who are already Christians. They are to receive something they have not already received. The word "shall" shows this. And what is this to be yet received by those who are already converted? Why, the quickening of their mortal bodies by the Spirit which already dwells in them. It now is a guest, and dwells in them. Then it is to become a part of them by becoming a life-giving principle to their now-mortal bodies. Certainly, it will immortalize them. And to make this more sure, the case of Jesus is cited as an example.

The word used is "also;" that is, in a similar manner. Similar to what? Similar to the raising of Christ from the dead. Surely this is not Christ's conversion, but his literal resurrection. And how was he quickened? Hear Peter: "Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit." 1. Pet. iii. 18. So "also" shall your mortal bodies be quickened if you are Christians. Who now will say all this is conversion? Who now will say there is no literal resurrection mentioned in the verse? Let them first prove that a man can have the Spirit dwell in him and yet be unconverted, and then prove that raising up Christ from the dead means his conversion.

"But the context—the context," says some one: "that means conversion, and that is what Paul is trying to teach in the preceding chapter." Well, suppose it is; does that prevent him from saying one word about the resurrection if he chooses? Let us not try to pile a whole chapter on to one verse in order to crush out the meaning of the verse.

I have written thus plainly, that all may understand me.

To Believers of Life Only in Christ.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: "Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." Peter i. 2–5.

Times there are, dearly beloved, when we feel as we imagine John felt on the lonely Isle of Patmos. On this island of barren rocks in the Grecian Archipelago, over against the coast of Asia Minor, the home of those churches that Paul had planted and that John in his old age had watered—the disciple whom Jesus loved, abode for a season.

Because of his work of love, this good man had been banished to this desolate island. Ardently he desired to communicate the word of life; but he could not. Hence his sorrow was a double sorrow. But he could do this one thing: he could write—and his Lord and Master bid him do so. "Write!" sounded again and again into the disciple's ear and heart. And do not many Life believers hear this command of their Lord? And do we all obey? Brethren and sisters, write! Some of you may not be able to preach; but, perhaps you can cheer and edify us by your pen. Are not some of the letters on the third page of the Herald often interesting? And does it not rejoice our hearts often to hear from each other? I cannot preach to you, but can I not write a letter to you? Can I not write humbly and reverently what I believe? And what is my subject in this number of our paper? It is John v. 28, 29.

Brethren, turn not away from this column in our welcome weekly messenger, and say—"We are sick and tired of the many discordant views on these often quoted passages." No; let us go on examining and obeying these words of our Lord.

Will he not in his mercy open our understanding that we may understand these Scriptures? I would not by any means say that my views of these texts are the correct ones; but, with the present light that I have, I write them. Will you prayerfully and kindly read them?

Firmly and honestly do I believe in Life only in Christ. Away from him there is naught but death. His life he sends out and it reaches to the end of time; yea, it flows from age to age. He makes alive—he enlightens—his fire burns within his people's hearts. He will open the ponderous gates of hades, and let the prisoners free, Power he has—sovereign power—to bring out from death whomsoever he will. Power he has—yea, goodness, love and justice too, to keep in death and to send into death forever whomsoever he will.

This Life-giver says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." The hour cometh—that is, the hour cometh for all that are still in this mortal state. When Christ spake these words, the hour was coming to John, and Peter, and James, and to all who believed. It was coming to Paul when he preached at Athens. It was coming to the martyrs when led to the stake. It was coming to Luther when he said, "here I stand, I cannot otherwise; God help me! Amen!" It was coming to the Wesley's when they preached. It was coming to Watts when he composed that beautiful hymn:

"Alas, and did my Saviour bleed,
And did my sovereign die?"

It was coming to Cowper when he wrote:

"There is a fountain fill'd with blood."

It is coming to us, who are still on earth, unless we shall be among that number who are alive when Christ comes. If so, then that hour will not comes to us. We shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump.

The hour cometh and now is. The hour has come and now is for righteous Abel, although 6000 years have come and gone since his death; it has come and now is for Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for Samuel and David, for Isaiah and Daniel, for Andrew and Thomas, and Phillip; for Mary, the mother of Jesus, and Mary Magdalene, and Mary and her sister Martha; for Phebe and those many dear ones mentioned in the last chapter of the epistle to the Romans. It has come and now is for Polycarpus and Cyprian, for Knox and Whitefield, and for all who have fallen asleep in Jesus, whether they were unknown to us, or whether we knew them and have wept over them, because they went to the land of the enemy. The hour now is—for there is no time to them after death. Unconsciousness reigns from the moment of death until the resurrection. The verse refers to those who are asleep in Jesus, and to those who will yet fall asleep in him before he comes. To Christ's dead—to those of whom we read, "And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." These are the dead of whom Christ here speaks. "The hour cometh, and now is, when the dead,"—those asleep in Jesus, and those who will yet fall asleep in him. Christ's dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear (literally, have heard—have heard in this dying state, or, if you choose, hear in the grave) shall live.

And now let us go to the 28th and 29th verses. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the grave shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

Mark, our Saviour does not say "the hour now is"—but merely, "the hour is coming."

Again, all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; all, all! Is this verse synonymous with the 25th? No; it is not—it cannot be. Christ emphatically and clearly teaches in other places that only those who believe shall live. The prophets in the Old Testament taught that the wicked "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." The apostles taught, "The wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." The whole Bible teaches Life only in Christ. There is therefore—there can therefore be no contradiction. But there it stands—all in their graves shall come forth. All! And who are these all? All who are living on earth when Christ comes. What do we read in Ezekiel? Open your Bibles. Ezekiel xxxvii. 12, "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel."

Again read the 23d verse, "But I will save them out of all their dwelling places, wherein they have sinned. And here let me refer you to "Life from the Dead; or the Righteous only will live again," pages 43, 44.

In Ezekiel, God promises to bring his people Israel out of their graves and bring them into the land of Isreal. He promises to save them out of all their dwelling places, wherein they have sinned. Graves and dwelling places then, in Ezekiel, are synonymous terms.

And now to John v. 28, 29. All shall come forth from the graves—from their dwelling places. From mansions as splendid as those in Fifth Avenue, and from miserable tenant houses, believing and unbelieving; Esquimaux with their missionaries; pious and wicked Greenlanders; the free-born citizen of our country and the freeman; the Mexican, the West Indian, the South American, the Hindoo, the Chinese, the Arab, and all the inhabitants of Asia; the Hottentot and every African; the German, the Englishman, the European, and every inhabitant of Australia; all that dwell on Islands; every Catholic, every Protestant, every Mahometan, every heathen; all, all shall come forth from their graves—from their dwelling places—when Christ comes. We are mortal; and as such we are, in a figurative sense, in our graves already. But thank God, they are mnemeeoi, places where precious things are stored up and preserved. In our mortal state we may become heirs of life. Life and death are placed before us. Choose life, and ye shall live; choose death, and ye shall die.

All shall rise from the grave. Is not this synonymous with Matth. xxv. 31, etc.? "Before him shall be gathered all nations." And who are they on the right hand of the Son of Man? Those who have done good. Who are they on the left hand of the Son of Man? Those who have done evil. And all appear before Christ. Those on the right come unto Christ, as the Resurrection and the Life; they come forth unto the resurrection of life. They shall live, and live forever. Those on the left appear before Christ; they too have come out of their graves—out of their dwelling places. But, alas! they have come forth unto the resurrection of condemnation. They go away into everlasting punishment. Their end is destruction.

Thus viewed, this passage "has no application to what is denominated a general resurrection of all men at the end of this world;" but it applies to those who are alive, still on earth, when Christ, the Life-giver, shall appear.

Perhaps some will object, and say, "Verse 25 you take literally, and verses 28 and 29 literally and figuratively. What right have you to do so?" Examine John's Gospel, and you will find that it abounds in literal and figurative language. However, brethren, I have done.

Perhaps I am not right. But, even if not, let us go on, and ask the Lord to give us light. Will He not answer? Why should this one passage remain hid unto us? May not the time come when John v. 28, 29, will be understood even by a little Sunday School scholar? No life but in Christ.

"Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen."

Dr. J. W. Bechtle, Harrisburg, Pa., has sent us five new subscribers for this volume with the cash in advance for them all; and he writes: I have good hopes of a number more ere long. I am working hard for the good cause. By the help of the Lord, I will push the cause of "Life only in Christ." My Heralds all go out as soon as I have read them, and that is generally by Monday morning. My "Bible vs. Tradition," and "Life only in Christ" are read through and loaned out. By sending you a plenty of new subscribers I expect to get help. May the good Lord raise them up thick and fast. All the subscribers I have sent you are good, sound, reading men. May God bless you and all who are laboring in the good cause of Life only in Christ.

Note by the Editor.

Such labor is just what is needed to raise the Herald of Life to its proper quota of subscribers, and give it the place it deserves in christendom. The truths it advocates of Life only in Christ, and that by the resurrection from the dead "at the last day," will stand when all the chaff of human traditions is burned up. Take courage, friends.

How we Believe vs. What we Believe.

In our intercourse with men we often broach doctrines contrary to the popular belief, and it is somewhat interesting to see the effect produced; while a few seem interested, the others may be divided into two classes,—the indifferent hearers, and the fighting hearers. No matter how carefully you express your views, how dispassionately, or how kindly, they are ready to pounce upon you (by their words, of course,) like beasts of prey. We sometimes think we can form a pretty correct opinion of a doctrine by the manner in which it is met. God's law is "written in mind and heart" (or affections) of his people; consequently they have a loveable disposition; loveable in a high and holy sense—with the love of God. The course pursued by many in showing forth their views, and also in opposing others would lead one to suppose their righteousness was made up of doctrines only; but when we turn to the Detector, we find Paul ranking this "knowledge" (minus of chartity) among the empty sounds of instrumental music; consequently we have come to the conclusion that it is of more importance how we believe than what we believe.

Truth's seeds to germinate must find a prepared soil for their reception. God's grace—the presence of this divine Spirit in the soul (or mind) is the thing requisite in the proper acquisition of divine truth; proper, we say, for knowledge without this "puffeth up; but charity edifieth." One may have the blaze of the meteor as it shoots athwart the sky, striking consternation to the beholder, but the other is like the mild and genial rays of the rising sun, cheering and warming by its influence. Love is not a fight in attribute; it is gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality—is not self-willed what to receive or what to discard —and without hypocracy, honest in expression, fearing not the opinions of men.

Now let us "be kindly affectioned one toward another, with brotherly love;" that they on the contrary part may be drawn into the full manifestion of the truth. We are not anxious to swell our ranks, only as they come through the "wicket gate,"—by the way of the cross.

God help to keep us humble, then shall we not fail of being triumphant.

From Dr. J. S. Seabury.

Br. Storrs: I am much pleased with the neat appearance of the paper in its new dress, and trust that it may continue to go forth as the herald of Life to a dying world, until Christ, who is our life, shall appear; bearing upon its pages the precious truths of the gospel uncontaminated with Pagan philosophy, Jewish traditions, or the later dogmas of a corrupt church, that the sincere seekers after truth may accept the teachings of Him who has proclaimed Himself "the Way, the Truth and the Life:" and who has brought immortality to light through the gospel. That they may see, in this gospel, a message of "Glad tidings of great joy to all people," that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life; for God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." "If a man abide not in me," saith the divine teacher, "he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered."

I have given the subject of "Man's Nature and Destiny" my earnest and prayerful attention for the last twenty-five years, taking the Bible as my "only and sufficient rule of faith," which has resulted in the firm conviction, that without a union with Christ by the indwelling of his Spirit, by which we are begotten to a new and immortal life, we shall go down into the grave as the germless seed sinks into the ground, and return to the dust; our name and our memory blotted out, and perished, and "be as though we had not been." May God in his mercy save us from this awful doom!

I was very much interested in the series of articles which appeared in the Herald some time ago, from the pen of Dr. J. K. Finley, and am glad to learn that an effort is being made to have them published in pamphlet form. I should like to have a few copies for distribution, and you may consider me responsible for ten dollars in the cost of publication.

With my earnest wishes for your own welfare, and the success of the soul-inspiring truths, which you have so long and faithfully labored to promulgate, I am with fraternal regard, yours, truly.

From Julia A Pearce.

Br. Storrs: I praise God for his goodness to you and yours, and I pray that you may be kept in a spirit of deep humility and love, the two principal elements in the Christian religion. Oh, how the Lord poured out his Spirit one hundred years ago upon the Methodists and Quakers. The time had not come for the present light to shine. Or, to illustrate the parable in the words of our western brother: "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." It appears, the blade sprung up in the days of Luther; the Ear appeared in the days of William Penn and John Wesley; and now the full corn in the ear. In those days they had not our knowledge, but they had humility and love, which is better than knowledge. Paul says, "though I have all knowledge and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." When I compare my life with that of Mrs. Fletcher, who lived one hundred years ago, I am ready to sink with shame and confusion before the Lord, to think that notwithstanding the blaze of light I have received on the divine word, I should fall so far behind her who turned so many to righteousness. I see that I have grown weary in well doing, That because some did not run well, over whom I once had influence, I have been discouraged from laboring for others, and in so doing have brought darkness upon myself. I believe that every man and woman in this vineyard of the Lord has a field in which they are fully capacitated to labor, and that the Lord will excuse no idlers. I must not only repent, but must do my first work. Take my pen, search out the former lambs, and endeavor to bring them pack unto the fold. Oh, let us all awake to renewed diligence. Now that the spirit of the world is becoming more and more intensified, we need an intense earnestness to counteract it. Since it is our high privilege to constantly retain the indwelling and enlightening Spirit of life, let none of us come short of it. May the Lord give us an abundance of humility and love. Amen

Pawling, N. Y., Oct. 24, 1869.

Daniel L. Osborn, Findley's Lake, N. Y., writes: I am unexpectedly at home, where I have lived since 1842. I am not here from choice. I wished very much to be in the West, and expected to go last spring, but failed. I am still trying to get ready to go into the work of preaching. Brethren and sisters among whom I have gone preaching the gospel of Christ—hold fast that no man take thy crown. Be kindly affected one to another in brotherly love, in honor preferring one another. Not slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. As Paul said, "I long to see you that I may impart to you some spiritual gift." Let all that hath breath praise the Lord. Jesus saith, "He that believeth in me, I will raise him up at the last day." Faith is the evidence. This is through Jesus a good foundation. I have been trying to do all I can for the Herald of Life. My prayer is, that it may be worthy of its name. The first number of volume 7 is received. It is very nice, and looks and is better than ever before. The supporters of it have done nobly, and the Life-giver will reward them. I send one new subscriber.

The Wise Judge—A young man going on a journey entrusted one hundred denars to an old man. When he came back, the old man denied having had any money deposited with him, and he was had up before the Khazee. "Where were you, young man, when you delivered this money?" "Under a tree." "Take my seal and summon that tree," said the judge. "Go, young man, and tell the tree to come hither, and the tree will obey when you show it my seal." The young man went in wonder. After he had been gone some time; the Khazee said to the old man, "He is long. Do you think he has got there yet?" "No," said the old man; "it is some distance. He has not got there yet." "How knowest thou, old man," cried the Khazee, "where the tree is?" The young man returned, and said the tree would not come. "He has been here, young man, and given his evidence. The money is thine."

HUMAN LIFE.

BY WILLIM C. BRYANT.

Slow pass our days
In childhood, and the hours of light are long,
Betwixt the morn and eve; with swifter lapse
They glide in manhood; and in age they fly;
Till days and seasons flit before the mind
As flit the snow-flakes in a winter storm, Seen rather than distinguished. Ah! I seem
As if I sat within a helpless bark
By swiftly running waters hurried on,
To shoot some mighty cliff. Along the banks,
Grove after grove, rock after frowning rock,
Bare sands, and pleasant home, and flowery nooks
And isles and whirlpools in the stream appear
Each after each, but the devoted skiff
Darts by so swiftly that their images
Dwell not upon the mind, or only dwell
In dim confusion; faster yet I sweep
By other banks, and the great gulf is near.

Wisely, my son, while yet thy days are long,
And this fair change of season passes slow,
Gather and treasure all the good they yield—
All that they teach of virtue, of pure thoughts
And kind affections, reverence for thy God
And for thy brethren; so when thou shalt come
Into these barren years, thou mayest not bring
A mind unfurnished and a withered heart.

CHRIST OUR PROPHET, PRIEST AND KING.

BY GEO. L. HARD.

"His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isa. ix. 6.

How vain is the help of man without the aid of revelation, to discern the unfoldings of the plan of the Infinite One. And how disadvantageous is that education which interprets the Word of Life in so mythical a manner as to obliterate the truth which sanctifies those who understand. We sometimes hear those who hold error, and despise the advance of truth, speak disparagingly of the knowledge we seek to gain, as though some simple recital of the death and sufferings of Christ was sufficient to hold us in the faith. "Let us have peace," say they; "and we cannot if you advance your views." Shame on such considerations. Charity thinketh no evil, and while we are governed by the universal voice of revelation we are safe. To know him aright is eternal life. Thus we meditate on the excellency of our God. He knew the importance of our knowledge of primitive man. In the beginning knowledge was the greatest temptation. Desire to attain it unlawfully brought ruin. The record reads, "A tree to be desired to make one wise." Wisdom was necessary to the full development of the creature. Man was the crowning work of all. And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good. Not perfect, for man was not yet perfected; and we do not believe that earth, with its animal creation, had attained to the order that God intended under the dominion of man. One great element, knowledge, to which man could lawfully attain by obedience, and escape death, was necessary to the full establishment of the kingdom of man under God. God rested, but the work was not finished; it was placed in the hand of man. The nameless beasts pass before the chosen monarch, "and the fountain of the Infinite" pours all the comprehension and wisdom necessary to the task; and thus it might have continued. Man was and is to be willingly educated in righteousness, to be accepted with God. That I may be understood in saying that an unfinished condition existed, I refer to the command to multiply and replenish the earth. That earth, peopled by an animal race, perfected by the laws of generation and regeneration, was and is to be an eternal establishment, we think is taught in the Word. This would not necessitate death to attain the perfect by regeneration, no more than it will in the case of all that are changed at the appearing and kingdom of Jesus our Lord. The obedience of faith was and is to be the principle of salvation, not out from death, as now; but wisdom, transmitted from Jehovah, would have been given as it was to Jesus; and the law of sin would not have a penalty to inflict. Righteousness fully developed, as now, would have controlled the will power of the Almighty, as Jesus did, thus bringing by wisdom and power, all the generations of animal life to a standard of harmony. Thus it will be, if we rightly consider Jesus as the Saviour. Christ as the anointed Lord will, with his redeemed host, execute that which man failed to do after the rescue from death. The kingdom delivered up to God will be a complete discomfiture of sin and all its consequences. All righteousness. A harmony to be unbroken, accepted by the Father as an eternal throne. O how oft have I noted the storm sweep by, carrying with it devastation even to the innocent, and wondered if God was there; and I have learned that God is not answerable for earth's calamities, no more than for our sorrow and pain; that the curse which rests so heavily upon our globe is not the work of creative genius, but the result of our loss of power to control the laws that govern, as we might if all had proved obedient. This is demonstrated, four thousand years after, by one of the race, the Son of Man. He speaks; the deaf hear, the dumb speak, the law of nature ceases to carry out its penal demand in every case. He is Master of all. Old ocean bows at his bidding; the unfruitful tree withers. He is righteous and claims his right. He thought it not robbery to be equal with God. Yes, his claim is accepted. He is crowned. But our Priest King grants mercy to the rebellious ere he executes. The time of suffering continues. Nature is dying under the puny rule of man. Physical force almost entirely alone is used, and were it not that the arm of Jehovah is brought to bear upon the discordant elements by the prayer of faith, earth's last agony would come. Will it be necessary that she die ere the righteous One shall execute? Some think that earth must pass through death, that by it she may be cleansd. But is it necessary? is it true? Will not the presence of her Lord save the wreck, as in the case of living saints? He comes to save at his appearing. All will be subjected to the chosen seed who have been subjected, not willingly, to suffering. They will reign in life; all imperfections will be removed, and the throne established. "He will pluck out of his kingdom all things that offend, and those who do iniquity." Yes, this will be necessary that Jesus shall destroy by the power of God all evil. Some have overlooked this in the great desire to overthrow the doctrine of the Age of Execution.

It is supposed that the Father, by other than Christ's executive, destroys the evil after the resurrection of the just, having delivered up the kingdom in the sense of giving up the power, which, say they, he received at his first advent. But we have not so learned Christ. The first sentence of hope was a promised execution of evil. "He shall bruise thy head." Yet the apostle says in Rom. xvi. 20, that the God of peace will bruise Satan under the feet of his people. Now, it is very easy to make harmony with all such Scriptures if we rightly interpret. God, the Father, is the supervisor of the whole plan; yet Jesus is to this world, in its reconstruction, what God the Father is to the universe. All power is given to Christ to do this work. True, we read in Psalms cx. 1, "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." But this cannot refer to a local sitting in the heavens, nor can it mean that God employs others to execute besides Christ. The right hand must, we think, refer to the fellowship of power, as in Matt. xxvi. 64. He is to be seen coming in the clouds, on the right hand of power; and as his coming is in his kingdom or reign, called also the kingdom of God, we can see what is meant, as in Psalms ii., it is called "the hill Zion," and God declares that his King shall rule and dash in pieces the heathen.

We will give some quotations proving Christ as the executive; and let it be remembered that the office of Christ gives him the names of God, as Lord Almighty, Jehovah, etc., as in Isaiah, which we have quoted. Also chap. xli., the righteous Man executes by the word of his mouth, where his feet do not go. He is called, like the Father, "the first and the last," as in Rev. xxii., where he says, "I, Jesus, am the first and the last." Again, chap. xi., the "Branch will judge and reprove, and with the breath of his lips will he slay the wicked." But some will say, "This is a conditional prophecy." Yes, it is, if God's promises fail these will. Do you believe? Read Rev. xix., at the fall of mystic Babylon. The warrior is symbolically set forth; then the kingdom, the white horse, the kingdom of God, Christ in the executive, till, in chap. xx. we see the last dynasty of earth, gory death, pass under the symbolic penalty of eternal destruction. Then, in chap. xxi. the reconstruction of earth. That same voice that calmed Gennesareth speaks; old earth recovers its garments, new harmony is now complete; God dwells with man, Jerusalem the throne, all are there; the associated reign established; eternal the power, delivered with the realm of earth to the Father, never again to fail in its fruit of righteousness. The Lamb and God, his people, the temple with all its polished stones erected in the peaceful reign. We often find the terms Zion and Jerusalem; sometimes with mountain attached, as in Isaiah xxiv., Heb. xii.; and these names have, we think, a great significance in our interpretation of truth.

Zion, with Jerusalem, began with David's reign to be the seat of empire. Jehovah ruling through his king, the typical executive. Zion is, when interpreted, a monument; and we read in Psa. cxxv., that mount Zion cannot be removed, but abideth forever. We conceive that this cannot refer to the literal mount Zion, for this establishment has been removed. What then? The precious rulers of Israel had failed to execute, according to the will of the Lord, the nations of the Jebusite and Philistine; and others should have been subdued under Israel, to have a full typical fulfilment of the subduing of the kingdoms of this world.

David established, at Zion, a government in which the power of God was associated, and the nations were subdued under him. David conquered a peace for Israel, as Jesus will in the future. David's Zion is, then, the throne of the Lord in his hand to order. Thus when we read in Psa. ii. that when the heathen raged God says, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion," we understand that God exalts his Son to the associated kingdom. The Son is to execute and subdue, as we read in verse 9, "Thou shalt dash them in pieces." There were those that David reigned over that he could not give the emolument of a throne; but they believed in the success of his anointing, and suffered with him until the removal of Saul. Then all Israel was gathered to him; and they that suffered with him reigned with him. So with Christ; he is a suffering King until the reign of the Gentiles ceases. If he reigns in our hearts, and we bear patiently the persecution and humility of his anointing, we shall reign with him. Our King suffers in the body of his church. Earth, the inheritance of both, is not yet given. The time of possession is near; then Zion will be established; redeemed with righteousness it abideth forever. To it we shall return and come. Isa. xxxv. 10. The first dominion lost, and we driven out, restored. The kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world; the garden extended under our "God, who will come with vengeance," executing evil; yea, a recompense to save. Sorrow and sighing shall flee away. The desert then shall bloom, and earth recover entire from the effects of the curse. And when Zion shall cease to excute she shall become a quiet habitation, and the prey of the great spoil He will divide with his saints. Isa. xxxi.

I have asked, Why did not the Lord let David build the temple? Was he not as capable as Solomon? But a type is reserved; the mighty God is to execute, as typified by David. And the Prince of Peace is to reign, as Solomon, after the subduing; amid the shouts of all God's ransomed creation, the cap-stone shall be placed on the tabernacle that shall never be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed; neither shall any of the cords be broken. Isa. xxx. This picture of salvation is illustrated most beautifully in Rev. xxi., a symbolic, fortified city. Amid the desolations of war a walled city is considered a safe place, if impregnable, and such is Jerusalem. What a symbol of defence. Such is salvation's plan, when complete. Read Isaiah, commencing with the 23d verse of the xxivth chapter. When the reign of mount Zion is established, he declares the terrible ones shall be brought low, the covering over the nations be destroyed; death, the besieger, overthrown. Salvation appointed as the wall of the city, and the gates open to the righteous. Again, the besieged may suffer from famine or want of water. But the symbol is complete; the throne of Jehovah and his Son. Life eternal. As the river of water gushes up in the city, a never-failing fountain. As the Father hath life in himself, so the Son hath life in himself, and he giveth it to as many as he will. From the association in this kingdom we receive the stream, the spirit of life.

One more symbol: the Tree of Life and all is complete. Jesus said, I am the life, the bread. To live by him will be to live by the tree of life. The leaves heal the nations. As sinners we could not partake of the original, lest as sinners we continue. But redeemed from sin, by the application of his righteousness, we partake of his life. Such the symbols appear to me; the leaves of a tree are necessary to the development of fruit; so is righteousness to a development of everlasting life. But I am diverging. Jer. xxiii. The executive, the Branch shall execute judgment and justice on the earth. His name Jehovah. The Lord our righteousness. In the days of the ten kings, the God of heaven sets up the kingdom that shall consume all others. Where will he set it up? On the earth, of course.

GODLINESS.

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord; for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts (higher) than your thoughts."—Isa. lv. 8, 9.

There is too great a tendency among men to bring the thoughts and ways of God down to the level of the thoughts and ways of men. This is wrong, very wrong, as it is making God manlike instead of making man Godlike. And nowhere is this evil tendency more conspicuously seen than in the theory that sinners must suffer more or less, as they have sinned more or less. This is in perfect harmony with the grovelling thoughts and ways of men. But the thoughts and ways of God on this subject are as much higher than those of men as heaven is higher than the earth.

God made man to fill the human sphere, which sphere no other created being could fill. And, in order that he might be able to fill it, he was made liable to sin, that he might be subject to a HOPE. See Paul, Romans viii. 20. Had he been made too high and holy to have sinned, he would not have been man, but an angel. And had he been too low and ignorant to have sinned, he would not have been man, but a brute. And in either case, God, in surveying his ample creation would have exclaimed, "There is not a man to till the ground." Here was a vacant sphere, and it needed just such a being as man to fill it. And man is just such a being as he must have been to have been able to fill it, liable to sin that he might be subject to a hope of being exalted to an equality with angels, without rising up to crowd the angels from their sphere. But being necessarily liable to sin, he soon let sin into the world with all its woes. The consequence is that a vast, unfathomable ocean of wretchedness and misery rolls its murky waves over the earth to-day. But this tremendous flood of misery is not always to last. The time will come when it will be entirely swept from off the earth, and peace, joy and endless happiness will remain. But this cannot be done by the first man, of the earth earthy, for he brought the evil into the world: it must be done by the second man, the Lord from heaven; and how will he do it?

The Almighty has decreed that death is the penalty of sin. This penalty does not hold within itself any suffering at all of the sinner; it only demands his life; and has for its higher and all-important object the elimination of the evil effects of sin. Thus we see the thoughts and ways of God are as much higher than the thoughts and ways of men as heaven is higher than the earth. We hang a murderer to prevent his repeating his crime. But would it any the more prevent him by burning him over a slow fire, and then hang him? Certainly not. And would not any Governor or Potentate who should so execute the penalty, subject himself to the reproach and contempt of the public? Why then do we dare to impute that to God which we despise in men?

No amount of suffering which the sinner is able to endure, will in the least effect the great and high object aimed at in his death. Nor will two deaths effect the great object more than one; for one prevents him from being the cause of further evil as effectually as ten. All that divine justice aims at is the removal of the effects of sin. So when all sinners are destroyed, and they all will be, the end designed is accomplished.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

A correspondent of the London Athenæum, writing from Naples, gives some interesting information respecting the means employed by Prof. Abbate of that city for preserving the human body. He says:

Some secret similar to Dr. Abbate's has existed for a long time, as travelers who have visited Florence probably well know. In the Cabinet of Physiological Anatomy in Santa Maria Novella, there are preparations of portions of the human body by Dr. Segato. The Grand Ducal government refused to purchase the secret, which died with the Segato. His preparations, I repeat, were only portions of the body, whereas that which is now being exhibited in Naples, in the ex-convent of Santa Maria della Nuova, is the entire body of a youth of seventeen years of age, who died of phthisis about the end of last January. For five months, therefore, it has resisted the action of a very variable atmosphere. The features, the integrity of the form, are perfectly preserved as they were at the moment of death. The nails have a roseate hue; there is no odor of any kind; and the flesh has the hardness almost of marble. To this let it be added, that the hair adheres so tenaciously to the head that it is impossible to remove it, of course without violence. The operation of embalming or petrifying is effected in a few hours, without the necessity of removing the dress; indeed, another body has been petrified according to the same system, without taking off the dress, and even preserving the gloves on. "We know," says a medical gentlemen, not an Italian, to whom I am indebted for these details, "that some gentlemen in Naples, after having proved what we have stated, have made an alteration in their wills, imposing it as an obligation on their heirs that they shall apply the system of Abbate to their bodies, in the event of their dying before the professor."

This discovery has, however, a more practical and more important phase—that is, in preserving meat fresh. There are difficulties in this special application of it which would not present themselves in the petrifaction of human bodies, such as the danger of introducing substances injurious to the health, or affecting the taste, the appearance, or the nutritive qualties of the meat. All these difficulties Abbate declares he has overcome; and it is a known fact that a first-rate house in Italy, whose commercial relations with the Americans are considerable, has already made offers to Abbate on the subject. Should it be proved by experience to be true that the wholesome food of man—which is now thrown away in vast districts as utterly unavailable, or is only melted down for the sake of the fat—can by simple and inexpensive means be exported to Europe fresh and good, an inestimable boon will have been conferred on humanity. This our professor asserts he can do; and as he already has done so much, surely his system deserves the attentive examination of scientific men. During his life Abbate has no intention of making known the secret of his discovery, but he is prepared to visit any part of the world which he may be requested to visit, and show the result of his invention.

THE QUAKER HOUSE.

A most remarkable case of providential preservation occurred at the siege of Copenhagen, under Lord Nelson. An officer in the fleet says:

I was particularly impressed with an object I saw three or four days after the terrific bombardment of that place. For several nights before the surrender the darkness was ushered in with the tremendous roar of guns and mortars, accompanied by the whizzing of those destructive and burning engines of warfare, Congreve's rockets.

The dreadful effect was soon visible in the brilliant lights through the city. The blazing houses of the rich and the burning cottages of the poor illuminated the heavens, and the widespreading flames, reflecting on the water, showed a forest of ships assembled round the city for its destruction.

This work of conflagration went on for several nights, and the Danes at length surrendered. On walking some days after among the ruins of the cottages of the poor, houses of the rich, manufactories, lofty steeples, and humble meeting-houses, I descried, amidst this barren field of desolation, a solitary house unharmed. All around it was a burnt mass, this alone untouched by the fire, a monument of mercy. "Whose house is that?" I asked. "That," said the interpreter, "belongs to a Quaker. He would neither fight nor leave his house, but remained in prayer with his family during the whole bombardment." Surely, thought I, it is well with the righteous. God has been a sheld to thee in battle, a wall of fire round about thee, a very present help in time of need.

A boy, having been praised for his quickness of reply, a gentleman observed,—"When children are so keen in their youth, they are generally stupid when they become advanced in years." "What a sensible boy you must have been, sir," replied the lad.

THERE is a difference between happiness and wisdom—he that thinks himself the happiest man, really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest man is generally found to be the biggest fool.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

HOW MANY WAYS TO BE USEFUL.

Do you think two little boys, eight and ten years of age, can be of any use at home? Perhaps Mike and Jimmy would tell you; but I will tell you what I know about them, and then you can judge for yourself. Jimmy was the eldest of five little children; his mother had been sick and lame for a long time, and his mother had often and often shielded him from the unkind blows of an intemperate father. The child was now comparatively well, but his was a sad heart one day; for his kind mother had been very ill, and that morning, before she died, had told Jimmy and Mike to take good care of their little sister.

The mother—now no longer able to speak to the children—lay dead on the bed in the room; some artificial flowers covered her breast, but nothing of gloom was associated with her, no sheet even thrown over her face. Jimmy had kindled a fire in the stove, and was trying to warm little Kate's cold hands, while the child sat in his lap. Mike and the other little girls were standing by. "Who dresses the little children, now that mother is gone?" Mary Ann looked up smiling. "Why, Jim and Mike." "But who gets the dinner ready before father comes home from work?" Again the little voice answered, "Jim and Mike." "Yes," said Jim, "and we read some every day, and try to teach Mary Ann."

This was not the work of one day merely, but the children continued to do thus for each other for more than a year, though Mike attended school again. Even little Mary learned her letters, and proud enough was Jimmy when she could point them out.

HAPPY AMY.

"WELL, I do not see how she can be happy, living in such a poor little house, and wearing such patched clothes. I am sure I could not;" and Kate Rice looked on her own beautiful dress, and thought herself much better than some she knew. But could she have looked into the little home, and seen the sweet smile of love on Amy Lee's face, and heard the gentle tones of her voice, I certainly think she would have changed her mind.

"But," you ask, "how can that be, when Kate has all the comforts that wealth can buy, and Amy is fatherless and poor?"

O dear children! it is not the riches of this world that can make us happy. If we have not the peace of God, we are poor, miserable creatures. It is only the love of Jesus that can truly fill our hearts with joy and peace.

Pray earnestly, dear children, that God will give you a new heart. Then, whether you have poverty or riches in this world, you will have a happy heart, and the promise of "that inheritance which fadeth not away."—Selected.

A HOME THRUST.

"MOTHER," asked Willie, "what does it mean to 'Seek first the kingdom of God?'"

"Why do you ask, child?"

"Because my Sunday School teacher gave that verse to the class, and wanted us to find out the meaning, and try and do as it said."

"I suppose, my son, the passage means that we should make religion the first thing in life."

"And is that what our teacher wished us to do, mother?"

"Certainly."

"But why don't you and father do so?" You belong to the church, and go to the communion."

"Hush, hush, child," returned the mother, testily; "you are too young to understand these things!"

A CHILD'S FAITH.

A little boy some four years old, whom we will call Charley, while playing one day near an open hatchway, accidently fell in, and but for a basket of shavings which fortunately stood beneath, would probably have been killed. The family were quite impressed by his providential escape, and frequent allusions were made to it during the day. At night, after Charley had been put to bed and left by himself, his little voice was heard in prayer. In tones full of faith and love, the little fellow poured out his heartfelt petition—"O, God, please keep that cellar door shut, but if you can't do that, won't you always keep a basket of shavings there?"

"I FORGOT."

SALLY's great fault is, "I forgot." "Sally, did you do this, or do that? or get this or put away that?" "O, I forgot." George thought we had better change her name, and call her "Little Forgot." That made Sally cry. She thought it was cruel in George to say so. O, how many times she was trudged back on forgotten errands, until her poor little feet were tired enough, I am sure.

On Sally's eighth birthday her grandma gave her a gold ring; and on it, outside, was a word, one word—not grandma, nor yet Sally, or love; it was "REMEMBER."—Selected.

WHEN the good and the lovely die, the memory of their good deeds, like the moonbeams on the stormy sea, lightc our darkened hearts and lends to the surrounding gloom a beauty so sad, so sweet, that we would not, if we could, dispel the darkness that environs it.

REFORMING the world is like patching an old coat, which still will soon need another patch; but if it were not for reformers the world always would be out at the elbows.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

ELD. HIMES AND THE ADVENT HERALD.

WE copy the following article from the "Advent-Christian Times," of a recent date. It is an extract from his "Journal;" the date shows when. Eld. Himes is frank to confess that he was "once strongly opposed to what is called materialism, or the idea that man is absolutely mortal." Yes, and we remember well the time, in 1843, when he most severely addressed us on the subject for some remark we made in relation to Josiah Litch's attempt to refute our position on the subject; and his face has been turned from us from that day to this, though he has advanced to the position we then occupied, while we have made a further move to a higher ground, to which he is as "strongly opposed" as he "once was" to our early position, to which he climbed after nearly twenty years opposition. Twenty years more are not likely to be added to his life; but if they should be, he would be seen on the platform we now occupy of "No future life out of Christ." Such a result is inevitable to him and all others in his present position, if they "follow on to know the Lord" and His boundless love.

TUESDAY, Oct. 12. I have visited a number of families who wait and watch for the Coming One, to whom I spoke words of cheer. As I sat resting this evening, Eld. Fassett came in with his mail, and among his papers was the "Advent Herald," a paper I originated and published for many years in Boston, Mass. I transferred it to an Association some years ago, the leading members of which are strongly opposed, as I once was, to what is called materialism, or the idea that man is absolutely mortal.

I have had so much to do in the great field to which Providence has called me since that time, that I have had no time to give much attention to the course which my old friends are pursuing. It was a good thing for me and the Advent cause, that Providence separated us, and put me, even at my advanced age, into another and wider field.

This branch of the Advent family some years ago, and before I left them, added the word Evangelical to their name. This was to show two things: First, that they were orthodox on the state of the dead; and, second, to separate themselves from the great Advent family who generally hold to the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. The leaders of this party repudiate what they call materialism, or annihilationism, and are quite as severe upon us as any of the older and more orthodox sects. But they are still more or less affected with materialism in their own ranks. But we understand they are weeding out the tares, or changing them to wheat, as fast as they can with prudence.

In the attempts of this party to defend their position on the state of the dead, the conscious intermediate state of the soul, and the final punishment of the wicked with eternal torment, Eld. J. Litch takes the lead. But the other and lesser lights have tried their hand at the business. But I have seen nothing new, and nothing I can now call true from them on the subject of man in death, or the doom of the wicked. We have a rehash occasionally of the doctrines of Plato, and the Pharisees, who, with some modifications, adopted the heathen notions of hades and paradise.

They ought to know that the heathen notion of hades under the earth, with its two departments of Elysium and Tartarus is a myth. The heathen themselves did not believe them real. Josephus and the Pharisees and Christian Fathers, so-called, may have believed these fables, but it is not creditable for men of intelligence in the nineteenth century to make of these fables articles of Christian faith, and then condemn as heretics those who reject them.

They make nothing by quoting the parable of Dives and Lazarus, for this is a parable, founded on the fictions of the heathen mythology, and designed to represent the fall of the Jews and their wretchedness, and the reception of the gospel by the Gentiles and their blessedness under the new covenant. This in the estimation of the soundest divines is the meaning of the parable.

The under-world, or hades, is the grave. and nothing else. There is not, and never was, a cavern under ground in which the dead are kept alive! The parable of hades in Is. xiv., relating to the fall of the king of Babylon, and the kings of the earth rising up to meet him, is truthfully explained by one of the ablest writers of the age. He says:

"Hades, the world of the dead, is not capable of acts and conditions that correspond in any manner to those which are here affirmed of it. It is addressed as though it were an intelligent agent, and the keeper of the dead; and it is in that character that they are ascribed to it.

"The figure is thus one of the most lofty and beautiful that the fancy employs, and invests the events it is used to exemplify and adorn with extraordinary dignity and splendor. To exhibit them, as of such significance that the great objects of the material world should be roused to consciousness at their presence, and touched with joy or sorrow, and burst into songs or lamentations at their occurrence, is to exalt and aggrandize them in the highest degree of which the imagination is capable."—D. N. Lord.

My attention was called to the report of two sermons in the "Herald." The one from Heb. xii. 17. "We watch for souls, as those that must give an account." It was on the occasion of an ordination, and the preacher made it a doctrinal discourse. He said, among other things, "But do they watch for the body? It is not known that the same particles shall constitute the resurrection body that we have now, though it will be a material body, capable of being recognized." Again, he says: "The conscious identity of the soul cannot be destroyed."

But the Saviour says (Luke ix. 25), that "whosoever shall save his life shall lose it, but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it. For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and LOSE HIMSELF, or be a castaway." The Son of God makes no such distinction between the soul, spirit, and body as some of his followers have done. Who then is right? Jesus says a man may lose his life, yea, more, lest we should not understand him fully, he repeats, lose himself, or be a castawdy. What is there of a man after this? James says "the body without the spirit [margin, breath] is dead, being alone." But do they watch for the breath? This is all that leaves the man when he dies. And he sleeps till the resurrection. 1 Thess. iv. 14–16.

The idea that the pastor is to watch for some mysterious spiritual entity called the soul, in distinction from the body, has no foundation in the word of God. The soul means the person, the man. It is the man that is lost, and it is the man that the apostle sought to save. The whole man: as the Saviour calls him, "himself." There is no life without organization. There can be none. When the man is organized in life, with soul, body, and spirit, he is a "living soul" or person—a living man. And while he continues in a state of perfect organization, he will have life and intelligence. But when the man dies, his breath goes forth, and he returns to the dust. There is no one attribute of man, or any part of man, that can live separate from the other. The only hope of the future life is founded on his re-organization in the resurrection.

In the other sermon, which Eld. Fassett read in my hearing, the speaker evidently supposed his gun loaded to the muzzle with a charge that would demolish "materialism." He meant to hit hard, and evidently supposed he did. But, among other things, he says:

"Human sympathy, when the saint is immortalized, becomes separated. Here our sympathies influence our faith oftentimes. And sometimes sympathy leads men into materialism."

Then, in the immortal state, the saints are to have one part of their nature annihilated. The quality of human sympathy is to be separated from the immortal saints. Why is this? Oh! it leads to "materialism" here. Well, pray tell us how and for what reason? Why, when men with sympathy consider the dreadful dogma of the eternal torment of the greater portion of the human race for endless ages, it leads them to doubt whether God has taught such a doctrine, and to consider whether he will not, as he has said, destroy both soul and body in gehenna. Matt. x. 28.

But what of the next world? Oh! there the immortal saints are "separated from human sympathy!" They can now behold the untold myriads of human beings in the lake of fire seething, burning, scorching, weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth forever and ever, without one particle of sympathy! They have no sympathy, at least no human sympathy.

But are they to be without any sympathy in the immortal state? If so, how can they love God, or the angels, or each other? It may be replied, they will have sympathy for the good and the divine. What then hinders them from having sympathy with the suffering? Have they become like the Priest and the Levite, and pass by on the other side? Have they become so depraved, and devil-like, that, in the language of Edwards, they gloat over the misery of the damned, and have their joys heightened by the terrible and endless wails of the lost? As Edwards says:

"The woes of sinners in hell will not be a cause of grief to the saints in heaven—but of rejoicing. This rejoicing will be the fruit of an amiable disposition, and a perfect holiness, and conformity to Christ. At the judgment you may be ready to fly to some godly friend, but you will see them unconcerned for you, with joy ascending to meet the Lord, and not less joyful for the horror in which they see you. When they hear you groan and sigh and gnash your teeth, these things will not move them at all to pity you. After your godly parents shall have seen you lie in hell millions of years, or ages, in torment day and night, they shall not begin to pity you then. They will praise God that his justice appears in the eternity of your misery."

Now, if human sympathy, with good sense and reason, leads me to reject such God-dishonoring doctrines as these, and to embrace materialism, then materialism it is. I stand just there. And more, I reject the dogmas of the immaterialism and the spirit of modern theology as myths. We are not frightened at the word materialism.

THE PREDICTED RESTITUTION.

"Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts iii. 21.

THESE words carry us forward to a blessed period of the world's destiny which, amid the strife and turmoil of its present condition, it is most refreshing to contemplate. They tell us of a time when the last echoes of the Lord's judgments shall have died away, when the whirlwind of his wrath, and the earthquake, and the fiery desolation with which this dispensation is to terminate, will be over and gone; and there shall succeed the peaceful calm, and a smiling and renovated earth, clothed once more with all the beauty of the paradise of God, and fit for the dwelling place of the redeemed. There is something most tranquilizing to our very spirits in looking forward to scenes of blessedness like these, for we have no such repose in our present condition. The world, as it now is, presents a sad picture to the Christian's view. We look around us, and within us, and we see sin prevailing, and dark clouds gathering on every side. There are "fears within, and fightings without." The overflowing of ungodliness makes us afraid; the earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; the professing church is vexed with strife, and the whole creation groans under the curse; so that, if we look only upon things which are seen, we should be "of all men the most miserable." But "we walk by faith, not by sight." This is our privilege, and while it is our privilege, it is also our comfort and our refreshment, in this tempestuous state of human things, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." Faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen; and when we look forward by faith, there floods before our contemplation the prospect of our inheritance, in all its loveliness, and in all reality. Nor is it a vain and delusive vision of the coming future that we gaze upon; for it is the word of the true and living God that sets before us the glorious scene, and that maps out for us the pleasant land. The world, indeed, has its day dreams, and its visions of imagination, which will end in disappointment. There are men who ignore the Bible, and disown Christianity altogether, who will tell you of a grander and a better day which is in store for our species, and whether it is to be brought about by the progress of science or the spread of education, or by measures of secular improvement, they anticipate it without any reference to the Scripture, and they expect the regeneration of the world without a Saviour, without God.

But that which these *un*inspired prophets doat upon, the prophets of the Bible do most certainly hold out to the faithful. "We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." And while the visions of infidel philosophy, being based upon falsehood, will issue in "shame and everlasting contempt," the bright and heavenly visions which are unfolded in Scripture are full of reality and truth, and will never fall short of the most sanguine expectations. The believer has every possible warrant for his faith and hope. For him, indeed, there is a golden age; attested by prophets, apostles, and evangelists; and it is God himself who throws open to him in his word an exquisite vista, terminating in a day of blessedness which shall fill the whole world with his glory.

This is the glorious day referred to in the text. It is the day of God, when "he shall send Jesus Christ, whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

1. Consider, first, "What are the times which are here spoken of?" The apostle Peter is speaking to the Jewish people, and exhorting them to repent and be converted, that they might be prepared for the second coming of Christ: "Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the lord, and he shall send Jesus Christ, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things." Observe, therefore, that the times here spoken of are the times when God shall send Jesus Christ. This can relate to no spiritual coming, but to a personal coming. For there is not a single passage of Scripture in which God the Father is said to send Jesus Christ, except with reference to his First or Second coming into the world in his own person. But when the apostle spoke, the first coming was past. Christ had come in the flesh, and died upon the cross, and risen again from the dead, and ascended up into heaven; and, therefore, the sending of Jesus Christ, spoken of in the context, can only be understood of his Second Personal Advent; and it is here stated that then shall be "the times of the restitution of all things."

2. Now, what does restitution mean? It means the re-placing of anything into its original state; the restoration of anything that has been injured, or fallen into decay, and the reconstruction of it according to its former plan; as, for instance, the reparation of a ruined temple. Now, it will be just so at "the restitution of all things." The world which is now in ruins, so to speak, shall then be restored to its former magnificence and perfection. It is beautiful even now, in its fallen state; and we can discover, in its degenerated ruins, something of the grandeur of the original building. "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches." Everywhere we may trace the beauty of the divine workmanship, though it has been defaced and marred. When it came fresh from the hands of its Creator, there was no imperfection. On the evening of the sixth day, "God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good." To that state it will be restored at the time of "the restitution of all things;" for then the curse which sin has brought upon it shall be removed; the world will be constructed, according to the original design of its divine Artificer, and Satan shall not have the boast of having so marred the work of the Almighty, as to lead him to blot it out of existence. No; "we, according to this promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Peter iii. 13.

There are some, indeed, who will tell us that it is in "heaven" that this restitution takes place. But how can this be? We can understand how restitution can apply to a ruined world, and to the restitution of its lost purity and happiness. We can understand how it can relate to the rebuilding of the tabernacle of God on earth, which has been thrown down, to the replacing of the world's sceptre into holy hands: and the bringing back of all things into subjection, "to the second Adam, the Lord from heaven." We can understand how it can relate to the re-establishment of righteous government, when Christ shall come to "put down all rule, and authority, and power," which is not holy and righteous power: when he shall "restore the kingdom unto Israel," and build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and build again the ruins thereof. But how can restitution refer to heaven, where there is nothing that needs reparation or renewal?

Surely, the restitution must be in the very scene which has been deteriorated by sin. "Heaven," says the Duke of Manchester, in his Finished Mystery, "has nothing to be restored; and hell will perform the office for which it was prepared; but as the earth has been deteriorated, so the earth shall be severed."

2dly. But we shall gain further insight into the nature of "the restitution of all things," if we refer to another word which is used in the New Testament to express it: that word is, Regeneration. "Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye who have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28.

This word regeneration only occurs twice in the New Testament: once in this passage, where it relates to the renovation of the earth in the times of restitution; and once in St. Paul's epistle to Titus, where it relates to the regeneration of the heart by the Holy Ghost. "We are thus reminded," as it has been well remarked, "how close is the connection between the present renewal of the Christian and the future regeneration of the world. The same word is set apart by the Holy Spirit to describe both these events. The true church are the first fruits of God's creatures, and the first fruits are a sure pledge of the harvest that will follow. The grace of God in the regenerate soul, is an effectual earnest of that future glory. The inward renewal of the heart in this life can alone secure us a place in the regeneration to come. Rev. xxi. The one is the seed, the other is the blossom (unfolded). The one is the spring and fountain of life in the soul of the believer; the other is that ocean of joy and blessedness into which it must eternally flow."

Now, with regard to this regeneration, clearly it is connected with the kingdom of Christ which he will receive as the "Son of man," and in which he will reign over the earth, together with his saints. It is the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory; and when shall this be? If we look to Matt. xxv. 31, we shall find the answer, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory;" that is, when he comes again, he will sit upon his own throne, as contradistinguished from his Father's throne, where he now sits. . . . (It is important to notice the distinction between the throne of God, which the Son of man shares with the Father, and the throne of Christ which, at his second coming, he will share with the saints.) This distinction is strongly marked in Rev. iii. 21: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." For to this end was he born, not only that he might "give his life a ransom for many;" not only that he might fulfil the prophetic and the priestly office; but that he might be a king, according as it is written of him, and as God spake to the virgin Mary, by the mouth of his holy angel, "Thou shalt bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 31–32.

Now, in point of fact, has the latter part of this ever been fulfilled? Christ, in his human nature, has not yet reigned over the house of Jacob. "King of the Jews" was his title at his death, but he has never yet occupied the throne of his father David; and he has never yet been acknowledged by his own nation as their King and their Messiah. This he will be when they shall see him in the clouds of heaven, and shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord;" and then shall be the Regeneration, when he shall sit on "the throne of his glory; "then, not only as king of Israel, but as King of all the earth, he shall wield his sceptre over a righteous and a renovated world. And the saints shall reign with them, and they shall be "kings and priests unto God and the Father." Christ has appointed unto them a kingdom, and when he comes in his glory, they shall be associated with him in that glory, and shall have part with him in the government of the earth. Thus we find that the apostle Paul refers to this as an acknowledged and recognized truth in the early church. "Do ye not know," he says to the Corinthians, "that the saints shall judge the world?" 1 Cor. vi. 2. And just so it is that our Lord and Saviour himself speaks, "To him that overcometh will I give to sit with me in my throne: even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. And again, "He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken in shivers: even as I received of my Father." Rev. ii. 26, and Rev. xix. 15. How striking also is that passage in the hundred and forty-ninth Psalm. It relates to the same subject, and it will have its fulfilment when the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and shall judge the world. "For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people. He will beautify the meek with salvation. Let the saints be joyful in glory. Let them sing aloud upon their beds;" that is the place where they rest from their labors—let them sing in anticipation of the coming triumph. "Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand: to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people: to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with links of iron; and execute upon them the judgment written; this honor have all his saints."

[To be concluded next week.]

THE JEWS.—Everywhere, the spirit of inquiry is manifesting itself among the Jews. Many are opening their eyes to the fact that Jesus Christ is the promised Messiah, and are embracing Him as their only Saviour. In Poland, the work of God is progressing among them gloriously. In Warsaw, some recently converted are among the most influential citizens. Five thousand copies of the gospels, and the Epistles to the Hebrews in Hebrew, have been put in circulation in Poland. The salvation of the Jews draweth nigh.—Zion's Herald.

COVETOUSNESS.

WE take the following from the "Christian Advocate," of this city. It is an extract from an article by "Rev. Cyrus D. Foss."—ED.

The direct and literal rendering of Paul's famous proverb about money is, "The root of all evil is love of silver," that is, covetousness. The thing it speaks of is a passion of the soul, and not a possession in the hands. It belongs to the pauper as well as to the millionaire. Covetousness may burn as fiercely in the breast of a man without a cent in his pocket as of one whose check is good for millons. If a man will, he can drown himself in a shallow brook as effectually as in the ocean. It is a disposition, and not the success or failure attending its exercise which is anathematized.

The sweeping statement concerning this passion is, that it is "the root of all evil;" not, of course, of each particular sin ever committed, but of all sorts of evil. There is no kind of bitter fruit which does not in innumerable instances grow from this prolific root.

The love of money causes the violation of every command in the decalogue. It puts "Mammon" above God. It "is idolatry." It moves men to take God's name in vain, to violate the Sabbath, to dishon parents, to kill, to commit adultery, to steal, to bear false witness, and it is the specific violation of the tenth. One might say of it as Robert Hall said of war: "It is a virtual appeal of the ten commandments."

Why do we bolt our doors? Why does the belated traveler shun dark alleys at midnight? Why are safes manufactured, and prisons built, and brothels kept, and liquor saloons opened at every corner, and perjury made common, and juries packed, and judges bribed, and legislation bought? Because men love money. I arraign covetousness as the grand destroyer of the peace and virtue of the world, and the murderer of innumerable souls. It develops the adroitness of the pick-pocket, and the guilty skill of the burglar. It nerves the arm of the assassin. It perverts the brain of the merchant, and corrupts the conscience of the statesman. It sometimes padlocks the lips of the embassador of Christ, and falsifies the interpretation of God's saving word. It strikes at the foundation of all duty, in that it silences the two synoptic commandments. God says, "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself." Covetousness says, "Thou shalt love money with all thy heart, and thyself above all other beings." It flies into the face of every obligation to God and man. It parts choicests friends, and makes parents and children, brothers and sisters, bitter and life-long foes. Millions of children have learned from their catechisms this question and answer: "What is the chief end of man? To glorify God, and enjoy him forever." The covetous man's creed seems to be: "The chief end of man is to glorify gold and enjoy it forever; life is a time afforded to grow rich in; death, the winding up of all speculations; heaven, a mart with golden streets; hell, a place where shiftless men are punished with everlasting poverty."

ARROGANCY.

I NEVER yet found pride in a noble nature; nor humility in an unworthy mind. It may seem strange to an inconsiderate eye, that such a poor looking virtue as humility should ever dwell with honor; and that such an aspiring fume as pride should ever sojourn with a constant baseness. Yet so it is. It is certain, we seldom find pride but in such, as being conscious of their own deficiency, think there is no way to get honor, but by boldly assuming it.

It is he that has nothing else to commend him, which would invade men's good opinions by a misbecoming forwardness. If you search for high and strained behaviors, you shall, for the most part, meet with them in low men. Arrogance is a weed, that ever grows on a dunghill. It is from the rankness of that soil, that she hath her height and spreadings.

I observe, that of all trees, God hath chosen the Vine, a low plant, that creeps upon the helpful wall; of all beasts, the soft and patient Lamb; of all fowls, the mild and guileless Dove. As if he would by these elections, check the conceited arrogance of man.

HE that loves the world and the things that are in the world, has not the love of the Father abiding in him; and he who does not deny himself and take up his cross daily, cannot be Christ's disciple.

As a flame touches a flame, and combines into splendor and glory, so is the spirit of man united unto Christ by the Spirit of God.

The true Christian cheerfully resigns his will to the divine will of his Father who is in heaven; for he knows that all things come by his decree or wise permission. Job. i. 21.

From Lucretia B. Lamb.

Welcome, thrice welcome messenger of truth: a leaf from the tree of Life which has twelve manner of fruits; and this yields its fruit every week to enlighten, comfort and cheer. What shall thy mission be? Surpassing thy predecessors, we trust, in wisdom, power and love. Their achievements surpassed the expectations of their friends. Who that witnessed the Herald's birth contemplated its present results? How many skeptics have been led by it into the light of truth, and have received the gospel of the kingdom? How many groping in darkness, by reason of early impressions and false theology, have seen a clear light emanating from Jesus? How many have been built up in faith and love, growing into a holy temple in the Lord, polished after the similitude of a palace?

Great as has been the progress of the past volumes, we expect to invoke for thee far greater. Truth must triumph. It takes much time to dig it out of the mine and separate the precious from the vile. When this is done, how quickly beholders see its lustre. The past has in some measure cleared the way; therefore the work before thee is not so much up-hill; thy friends now number thousands more than at the first; the God of truth will go with thee, which is a sure guarantee of success. We hail thee as a blessed light, betokening the age to come, when the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun as the light of seven days.

We will follow thee in thy errand of mercy with our prayers and efforts, that the sword of truth, with two edges, may cut both ways, until the Dagon of error and superstition falls before the word of God's truth, to rise no more. Where, then, will be the philosophical speculations and writings of earth's great men, together with their authors? Gone out in endless night! But thy mission is to prepare the humble disciples to shine as stars (how long?) forever and ever.

May this volume increase the number of such, not by thousands only, but ten thousand times ten thousands. The human imagination staggers to make the mighty conception, the issues of which are connected as a net-work with the improvement of now, the present time. Do we not wish to "bear much fruit?" Jesus said, "Herein is my Father glorified."

May this year's mission of thine witness the glorious Epiphany of earth's King, when the chief captains and the mighty men will seek to hide themselves from the face of Him that sits upon the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb; while the glorified will rejoice because the marriage of the Lamb has come and His wife hath made herself ready. Amen.

P. S. I can hardly see to write at all: one eye has failed entirely, and the other is fast failing.

John v. 28, 29.

A. P. Moore, in the "Crisis" of Oct. 13, has an article to show "The word translated 'graves' in the text is mneemion, and is found forty-nine times in the Bible." And is translated "tomb" "grave," "sepulchre," in its singular and plural form. But in no place, that he has quoted, is it applied to the place where the wicked have been buried, except it be in the text, or where Christ said to the hypocrites they were as "graves which appear not." While we freely admit that "Christ is the great Teacher sent from God," we as freely admit that holy men of "old spake as they were moved by the Holy spirit." Also, that "there is nothing in all the rest of the Bible but what harmonizes with Jesus in John v. 28, 29, unless it be wrested from its legitimate meaning."

Did not the "great Teacher" say, John iii. 31, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life?" "But that means eternal life." Please tell where Jesus ever promised to give any other life. Again, did He not say, Luke xx. 35, 36, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . neither can they die any more?" Now, don't "wrest that from its legitimate meaning." Did not Paul say, 1 Cor. xv., "the dead are raised in incorruption"—in power—"a spiritual body?" These texts "need rather to be believed than to be interpreted, or figured away." Again we hear Him say, by the mouth of His prophet, Isa. xxvi. 14, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." "John v. 28, 29, unless wrested from its legitimate meaning," perfectly "harmonizes" with all the above texts, and many others that might be quoted.

Were the Antediluvians and Sodomites judged and destroyed for their own sins. If so, does love, mercy, or justice demand that they shall be raised from the dead, judged and destroyed the second time? For one, I desire "the truth," however unpopular. I love life, and like Bunyan, I will run and cry, "Life, LIFE, eternal life." I love all of God's dear ones; I want to share their trials and afflictions here, and the glory that shall be revealed hereafter.

Mrs. R. Glass, Hinesbury, Vt., writes: I send $5 on my subscription. It affords me great pleasure to think the Herald is still sustained. I prize it more and more as it comes each succeeding week laden with the priceless truths of the gospel of the kingdom. May the richest of heaven's blessings rest upon you, and finally upon all those who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and strive to promote His cause.

"The Kingdom of God."

See the remarks on this subject in another column, by Br. S. S. Call.

By a "Resolution" passed at the anniversary of the "Life and Advent Union," it is not allowable to reply the same week to any communication, unless the Editor deems it desirable by the writer. Though Br. Call does not explicitly ask a reply, yet he asks many questions which cannot be answered without a general reply; so we venture to construe the Resolution of the Union in favor of a reply this week.

The true questions at issue are, Is the kingdom of God set up on the earth? and, What is the method revealed by which that work should be accomplished?

That the kingdom of God, or of heaven, is not yet set up on the earth will appear from various considerations. In the first place, in the time of Jesus and his apostles the point in prophecy had not been reached when that event should take place. In Dan. ii. we have a prophetic history of this world, beginning with the kingdom of Babylon, running down through Medo-Persia into the "legs of iron," which Iron kingdom was to "be divided," and at length the "feet and toes" were to appear, which symbolized the various divisions of the Iron kingdom. It was not till "in the days of these kings," or separate monarchies, that "the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom." Our Saviour and his apostles lived several centuries before any division occurred in the Iron kingdom; and therefore the kingdom of God was not set up or established in their days.

If these things are so, then the conclusions at which our brother arrives in his article cannot be correct. Moreover, when the "stone" (the symbol of the kingdom of God) smote the symbolical Image of Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. ii., it "smote it upon the feet and toes," which could not have occurred in the days of Jesus and his apostles, because these divisions were not then in existence. And further, when the "God of heaven sets up" this "kingdom, it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms."

It is a self-evident truth that none of these events have yet taken place; or at least did not take place before the Scripture texts were written on which our brother relies to prove the kingdom of God came in the days of Jesus and his disciples.

This prophecy of Dan. ii., is only a sample of a multitude of others, all going to show the kingdom of God, on the earth, is a future event. In Jer. xxiii. 5, we read, "Behold the days come saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Can any one think Jesus is now thus reigning, or ever did thus reign in the earth? We need only to ask the question.

Again the word of inspiration saith, "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth;" and, "in His days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." Psa. lxxii. 7, 8. Is not the entire history of the world for the last 1800 years proof, incontrovertible, that no such times have yet been witnessed?

The Scripture testimony is uniform on these points. "War is to cease to the ends of the earth," and men are to learn it "no more." Prior to that time, the earth is to be under the government of such rulers as are symbolized by "dreadful and terrible beasts," who neither rule in righteousness or execute justice and judgment, but are oppressors of the poor and needy. When the kingdom of God shall come, "He shall break in pieces the oppressors." Psa. lxxii. 4.

Our Saviour taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come," showing it was then future; and we have no evidence that at any period since then we are authorized to leave off thus praying. It is not until the "seventh angel sounded" that "there were great voices in heaven saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ;" and then, "He shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.

The apostle Paul tells us, "The Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;" and that it is then himself and all those who love His appearing shall receive their crowns. 2 Tim. iv. 1–8. But we need not multiply testimony as to the fact that the kingdom of God on earth is a future event, and to be revealed only when the saints are made immortal, for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. xv.

As to the texts which our brother supposes teach that we are now in the kingdom, it appears to us they are not difficult of solution. If "God calleth things that be not as though they were," because of their certainty in the future (see Rom. iv. 17); and if His prophets spake of the sufferings of Christ as past, hundreds of years before they occurred (see Isa. liii. 5–9), shall we stumble on texts that speak of the kingdom as if present, because faith brings it nigh long before its actual development?

To "seek" a thing does not prove that it can be immediately possessed. We "seek for immortality, eternal life." Does that prove it a present possession, or attainable before our Lord's return from heaven? The Apostle saith, "Ye are risen with Christ." Would our brother conclude the resurrection is already past, although the "last trump" has not yet sounded? It is manifest all such expressions are the language of faith in the certain fulfilment of God's promises; they embrace these promises as if present, by faith; so that they "call things that be not" yet in actual possession "as though they were." That is the peculiar property and province of faith, a firm and undoubting confidence that what God God has promised He is able to and will perform.

Jesus said to his disciples, "Fear not little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." They had it not then; but the promise made it sure; and hence they spoke of it as if in actual possession, like John on the Isle of Patmos. The kingdom of their faith was sure, and they spoke of it as theirs now. It is just such language that an unwavering faith employs. Abram's name was changed to Abraham, because God had made him (by promise) the father of many nations (when as yet he had no child); and "he believed God, and it (his faith) was counted to him for righteousness."

Suppose Abraham had talked of himself as the father of many nations, at that time; would our brother conclude that those nations were already born?

There is an embryotic state (so to speak) of the kingdom of God. The King was born 1869 years ago; associate rulers have been preparing from that day to this, and for centuries previous to the King's birth. These are all heirs of the kingdom, and may be said to be of the kingdom of God; but that no more proves the kingdom of God has come, than because a child is heir to his father's estate, therefore he is in the actual possession of it. He has to wait "till the time appointed of his father." So believers in Jesus are heirs of the kingdom of God; and as such may be called of the kingdom; but they are not yet in actual possession of it; and will not be till "mortality is swallowed up of life."

The kingdom of heaven is spoken of, in the New Testament, often, in reference to the state of preparing materials for it; hence is represented as a mustard seed, a net, and the like; all going to show that it does not now actually exist, but is only gathering materials which are to be examined carefully, when the kingdom is to be set up, and that which is unsuitable or unfit for it will be rejected. The kingdom was preached as "at hand," i. e., coming; but never as already come or developed, except in vision, as at the transfiguration.

To teach that the kingdom of God has actually come, is to teach that the "resurrection is past," thus "overthrowing the faith of some;" for the kingdom cannot come, or be established in the earth, till all the rulers are prepared and made immortal: the "heirs" must all be there, or the kingdom is imperfect. There is to be but one coronation day; but one day of placing crowns on the heads of those counted worthy so be "heirs" of the kingdom.

A kingdom is composed of its king, subordinate rulers, subjects, laws and territory. We do not design here to speak of all these. The territory of the kingdom proper may be only a small portion of the dominion over which these rulers exercise authority. Daniel saw in a vision, chap. vii., "Dominion, and glory, and a kingdom," etc. The whole earth is included in the dominion; but the territory of the kingdom proper is limited, for "they shall come from the east and the west, and from the north and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God." Luke xiii. 29. This shows the territory proper of the kingdom of God is a select portion of the earth, and not the whole globe. This select portion is emphatically the territorial kingdom; and from this territory everything that offends and them who do iniquity will be removed, or gathered out: the unclean and the unholy will be forever excluded.

As to Christ's return from heaven, He comes to deliver his people from death and mortality; and at the same time "He will be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them who know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction," etc. 2 Thess. i. 7–9.

We have not thought it necessary to go into a detailed notice of all the texts referred to by our brother, but to show by a general view of the subject that the idea of the actual kingdom of God on earth being now in existence is out of harmony with positive statements of the word of truth, and irreconcilable with the general tenor of the Bible. The apostles taught "that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." Acts xiv. 22. They did not teach that we are now in that kingdom, but that it was a future inheritance; and Peter—who had the "keys" of which our brother speaks—exhorted his brethren to "give diligence to make their calling and election sure" . . . "for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. i. 10, 11.

Let us not be impatient in waiting, and so take the "bond-woman" instead of the "free," which shall come in the time of God's good pleasure.

Hanging "Immortal Souls."

Don't laugh, reader, for the "N. Y. Tribune" of last Saturday, in an editorial, spoke as follows:

> Whether we shall do violence to our common nature by examples of public murder; whether we shall gibbet our own civilization; whether we shall take the brute method of dealing with immortal souls;—these are the obvious questions.

This was an outburst, editorial, against hanging men for murder. It is not our design to enter the discussion of that question; but we would like to know how "immortal souls" can be hanged, or in any other way experience a "public murder?" and especially by a "brute method?" If our learned and philanthropic brother editor can explain these matters, we will petition to have bestowed on him D. D., and have the honor increased by a LL. D.

Is there a new thing under the sun? Can an "Immortal soul" be choked (not to say killed) by a rope around the neck of the body? Is not this "the obvious question?" Or, perhaps we might state it thus, Can there be any such thing as a "brute method of dealing with immortal souls?" Has our learned cotemporary any other definition to give of an "immortal soul" than that which theologians generally give, viz., "Immaterial, uncompounded, indivisible, indestructible," etc? If he has not, how will he prove there can be any "brute method of dealing with" them? Hanging must be a great mercy to such souls, as it releases them from the animal nature, in which the murderous propensity seems to reside, and the "immortal soul" goes off free from its murderous companion; and hence will have no more partnership with the murderer. What a blessed deliverance!

The gallows, then, cannot have, and should not have any other effect on these "immortal souls" than a very pleasurable one, to rid them of an uncomfortable companion—the animal nature, or the body. This view of the subject would make a strong plea in favor of the gallows or some other equally effective method of freeing "immortal souls" from such hateful companions as mortal or animal bodies and their murderous propensities.

The idea of keeping these "immortal souls" confined with such murderous companions for an indefinite period ("for life") in a State's Prison, seems to be a mere "brute method of dealing with" them; far worse than to cause an entire separation between the two, dissolving the partnership, and setting free the "immortal" one, and letting the other go to the dust, as it deserves, for its murderous propensities.

Remember, brother editor, "immortal souls" can't die, nor suffer unless connected with materiality; and if that materiality will murder, why not let the soul have the benefit of a separation from it? The gallows may not be the best way to effect it. Let any easy method be employed that human skill can invent; but don't insist upon tormenting "immortal souls" by refusing to let them go free from such horrid companions as these animal bodies are.

Please don't say we have made a plea for they "death penalty;" for death is impossible to "immortal souls:" they live right on, if the exist at all; and no human legislation can harm them, unless it refuses them the privilege of a separation from the murderous animal body, when that body has become so base that the "immortal soul" cannot govern or control it; then, surely, pity would seem to say, Help it to get out of such a corrupt tenement. Would that not be mercy? Who that believes in the existence of "immortal souls" can say that it is not?

Christ's Future Advent.

Many admit the idea of Christ's second coming, but occupy a position, practically and theoretically, in direct antagonism to the Scriptures bearing on the subject; and thus we have in the world a great diversity of views regarding the nature of the event, as we might reasonably expect when pre-conceived opinions are put forth as truth to which all antagonistic Scriptures are made, by a cunning devised system of spiritual interpretation, to blend in perfect harmony. We cannot say that Christ comes spiritually in any religious belief or principle of faith, or that he makes his advent at the death of the Christian, without virtually casting aside the plain testimony of God's inspired word.

1, The Scriptures speak of but two advents of our Saviour: first, in humility, and second, in the glorious triumph of a king. He says, "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you," John xiv. 28. Did he "go away" spiritually? Nay, verily! He showed himself to his disciples, after his resurrection, to be the same literal bodily Jesus that had been crucified; he exhibited the scars where the cruel nails had held him to the cross, and told doubting Thomas to thrust his hand into his side, where the Roman soldiers had pierced him, and be not faithless. And, finally, his disciples beheld him as "he went up," and they received the comforting message, direct from the Court of God, that "this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts. i. 10 11.

2. The evangelists all utter one testimony in reference to the certainty and manner of His second coming, invariably locating it "at the last day," and associating with it the resurrection of the dead. 1 Cor. xv. 21–53; 1 Thess. iv. 15, 17.

3. He will come in the clouds of heaven, and in so startling and visible a manner that we cannot be deceived in regard to the event. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt xxiv. 27.

Therefore, with these facts before us, we may truly rest, with unshaken confidence, in blissful expectation of the speedy coming of Christ in the future, "whom the heavens must receive" until the "times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord." The long uttered prayer, "Thy kingdom come," will soon be answered; and the rightful heir to David's throne shall set up His kingdom which shall never be destroyed. W. H. S.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

That this recital occuring in Luke xvi. 19, is a parable and not a literal history, the following paragraphs may show.

1. While it is preceded by the words, "And he spake this parable unto them,"—yet many other parables that are universally admitted to be such, are not heralded by any sentence of the kind. The parable of the Two Debtors commences in this manner: "There was a certain creditor which had two debtors," Luke vii; that of the Good Samaritan, "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho," Luke x; "A certain man made a great supper, Luke xiv; "A certain man had two sons," Luke xv; also, that of the Unjust Steward, which occurs in the same chapter that contains the parable under consideration—"There was a certain rich man which had a steward." Finally, that of the Rich Man and Lazarus, which commences—"There was a certain rich man." The fact that this latter case is not preceded by the above named heralding, does not disprove that it is a parable, any more than that the circumstance does not disprove that the others named in this paragraph are parables. Finally, the fact that its introductory language is identical with that of many other parables, may be accepted as one proof that it is a parable.

2. There are many eminent scholars who believe it to be a parable.

3. Not a syllable is said about immortal souls or spirits in the entire account. It deals with men in bodily form. Lazarus, the beggar who was full of sores, and whose sores were licked by dogs, was the one who "died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." Surely an immortal soul cannot be full of sores, and if such souls are "immortal," as we are gravely informed, the dogs must have been much bewildered by the appearance of a sore ghost! Again, the rich man who was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day, was the man who "died and was buried, and in hell . . . lifted up his eyes, being in torments." Nothing short of a bodily organism can be so clad and fare sumptuously. That was the man spoken of as "being in torments." Immaterial souls cannot so eat and be clad. Furthermore, the rich man had his EYES with him, for "he lifted up his eyes," etc. If he had not a bodily organism, he, according to popular theology and popular philosophy, did not need his eyes in hell. We are informed that the eyes are the windows of the body for the immortal soul to look out of. If that be true, and Dives' immortal soul, and not his body, was in hell, then surely he was out of his body or house, and had no further use for the windows. A man out of doors never thinks of such an absurdity as lifting up windows in order to look out and see what is going on out of doors.

4. The conversation that ensues between Abraham and the rich man proves a bodily presence. The rich man says, "Father Abraham, send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame." It is evident that the rich man had a material tongue that of course could not have been connected with any other than a material organism: such a tongue can be affected by heat. He looked upon Lazarus and said, "Send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water," etc. If Lazarus was not in sight as a bodily being. Dives would not ask that an immaterial being might dip the tip of his immaterial finger in water. Such a request would have been ridiculous in the extreme.

Abraham's reply proves a physical presence,—"Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedest thy good things. (purple, fine linen, and sumptuous fare.) and likewise Lazarus evil things," (sores, poverty, and beggary.) This cannot be said of immaterial spirits.

5. If the account is a real history, then a constant miracle must be in operation in case of the rich man, in order to keep him from being utterly consumed by the flame. That which is immortal cannot suffer pain; for "pain is an interruption of the principle of life." Hence a mortal, bodily, and miraculous presence exists in the case of the rich man, provided it is real history.

6. The location of the parties. Whether it be the theological heaven and hell, or an intermediate state, it matters not. The parties are separated from each other by a "great gulf," yet they are near enough together to see, recognize, and converse with each other. (It would be rather hard to understand this of immaterial beings.) The idea that we can be near enough to fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, children and relatives, friends and neighbors, provided that they die out of Christ, to hear their cries for mercy, and their description of the sufferings they are enduring, and their appeals to us for relief, while at the same time they witness our comfort and hear our songs of joy—also, that it is utterly out of our power to afford them relief, (while we recognize them and call them by name,) on account of the intervening gulf—the idea of such a scene, if the case in hand is not a parable, is horrible in the extreme. No wonder that Prof. Stuart, in his dilemma over this matter, said that perhaps "God would extinguish our social susceptibilities." This latter is a wretched refuge from an insurmountable difficulty. It can't be met.

7. The time of the occurrence. If the recital is not a parable, then we have the rich man suffering the torment of flame, and that too before he is judged. The Scriptures locate the judgment after the dead are given up by the sea, etc. If he went to his torment at the time of his death, and that torment is a part of the penalty for his transgression, then we get the criminal under the penalty before the sentence of the law is given by the Judge. That would be as ridiculous a matter as the hanging of a man until he is half dead, and then cutting him down for the purpose of hearing sentence, and after that remanding him to the gallows again.

8. Theologians consider, generally, that gehenna is the place of punishment for the wicked. But the rich man was not in gehenna, but in hades. Gehenna is the place where "their worm dieth not," etc., and not hades. Those who hold that the narration is a reality give the Roman Catholics the entire argument in favor of Purgatory.

9. But hades, the hades of the Bible, is not a place of conscious existence. There are 75 passages where hades and the corresponding word sheol occur, and it is always represented as a place of darkness, silence and unconsciousness, for all the dead, both righteous and wicked. Must 74 of these passages, which teach thus, be thrown to the winds for the sake of trying to prove from one text that it is a place lighted up, as it must be, by fire, if the account is real, so that Abraham could see and recognize the rich man in it? a place of noise and knowledge? of consciousness and misery? John writes, "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." If these dead ones were alive in hell, then those dead ones in the sea must have been alive in the sea—if not; why not?

10. Those who hold that the account is literal history, generally inform us that the wages of sin is the "second death." From John we learn that no one of the inhabitants of earth is "cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death," until after the judgment, which does not take place until after the judgment is set and the books are are opened, when the sea, death and hell deliver up the dead which are in them. But as "Death and Hell" are to be "cast into the lake of fire," then the rich man is not in the lake of fire, hence he is not suffering the second death. If he is suffering in hades, how comes it that he is suffering there? for hades is not the second death. Why must he be tormented in hades?

11. Why should the rich man be alive in hades, while everyone else there is dead?

All the foregoing paragraphs are respectfully submitted to our friends who hold that "The Rich Man and Lazarus" is history and not parable. The time may come when they may be able to discover that as Capernaum which was exalted to heaven could be brought down to hades, even so might Jerusalem and Judea. Yours, in Christ,

F. H. BURBANK.

ON LOVING JESUS.

HIS love to the Lord Jesus is the mark of a Christian. He stands alone, distinguished from all other beings by this single, central peculiarity, that he is one with the Son of God in flesh. Lost till Jesus became his Head to share his death with him, he is lost still but that Jesus shares His own life with him. For closeness, for tenderness, for power, a Christian's love to Christ ought to be unrivalled in creation.

Being characteristic of the Christian, this love forms the most delicate test of each person's relation to Jesus. It is never wanting in any Christian. Born with the birth of the new creature, it is one of the earliest graces to come to strength. Just as in a little child, long before trust in its mother becomes intelligent, long before its will is disciplined into obedience, long before experience has taught it patience or self-control, long before it has regulated its zeal by prudence or widened its affections into brotherly kindness; in the very opening dawn of this little spirit, there rushes up the first-born virtue of infant hearts to overspread all the infant life, even love for her who bare and nurseth it: so, in very young Christians, we see the flush of first love kindle their early experience, we hear them speak of the person of Jesus sometimes with a rapture almost unknown to older saints, and find them lying contented in His new-found arms with tender, grateful, and broken spirits.

"Lovest thou Me?" No Christian soul but quivers at such a question. First to come, last to go; this natural and simple attachment of the new heart to the person of its Saviour tells most truly of the heart's relation to Him. Hence I find Paul girdling the Church of God with this girdle when he would speak a Catholic blessing: "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity;" that shuts none out who should be in. Again, I find he fences off the Church with the same fence: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema;" that leaves none in who should be out.

"Lovest thou me?" For the answer to this question, we are sent, each of us, in upon himself. The Lord makes appeal directly to personal experience. Love to Him is simply a matter of which one may be conscious, like any other love. It is very true that, practically, this love works as the motive-power in Christian holiness; true, also, that this is to be the last test of the Judge, by which our love, like our faith, is to be tested after it has come to ripeness and wrought its perfect work. A man knows when he loves child or wife. Put a mother in a prison-house where she shall neither see her infant nor be able to do for it one office of motherly duty, where her love can neither caress, nor toil, nor serve, but must lie bound in chains, a very idle, fruitless love; will it be so hard for her to know she loves? Will not the power of her affection betray itself all the more in absence and constraint by yearnings to be with the child, and brooding over its image, and restless thoughts that will not cease day and night? Bring back her babe, and, after the first gush of endearment has spent itself, ask her as she looks down on its sleeping face in the first blessed calm of absolute content, ask her if she loves! Love is its own witness. Now, why should not a Christian man be as sure that he loves the Lord Jesus? Our feeling toward him is quite as personal as to any other friend. To be sure we never saw him, and shall not, perhaps, for a few years to come. But what of that? Some of our brothers have seen him, and their accounts set him before us in a lively way. We are perfectly convinced of His existence and well aware of his character. We know what he has been and has done for us. Besides, no Christian is without experience of him.—Though He and we never yet looked each other in the face, we have had dealings with each other: He has communicated with us through messengers and letters; we have spoken to him a thousand times, and He has answered us; we have asked for gifts and He has given them. Nay more, we have a spiritual medium of intercourse which no other friendship enjoys, and are thus brought into the nearest possible communion; for by his Spirit He dwells in us while his body is not here; and we by His Spirit live upon his resources though we see him not. He is a living Friend who in a most true sense is quite near at hand and very accessible indeed. In sober fact, there is no reason why any man should not be better acquainted with Jesus Christ than with any other friend he has. For, in his infinite condescension, the Lord Jesus permits us to begin at least on a very low and human level of affection. If, at first, with the rudeness of our natural hearts as yet unspiritualized, we give Him such love as we give our earthly brothers, such in kind, though stronger; if we transfer the passionate personal attachment which belongs to the flesh, from others to Himself, rejoicing chiefly in his human sympathy and the blessings He has won for us; I think He does not complain, though such love is unworthy of him, but graciously accepts it. Yet He will by degrees train us into a purer and diviner affection. When we fix our thoughts on this Beloved One, the heart should be moved as by another beloved. By the tenderness that hangs about His name, by the outreaching of desire after Him, by the lingering of the mind upon His image, reluctant to let it go, by the clustering of all hope and interest round His person, by the warmth which begins to melt the soul when His love is dwelt on; in brief, by all the indescribable emotion that stirs us in the presence or at the mention of a familiarly loved one, we ought to know our attachment to His gracious person, and to be able out of the depths of our heart to answer with the Apostle whom he questioned, "Yea, Lord! Thou knowest that I love Thee."

Ought one not to shrink from so bold a declaration? There are people, and these not the worst of people, who are far too conscious of the weakness of their love and the multitude of their falls to allow even within themselves that they love Christ at all. It seems to their self-jealousy that there is presumption in a profession like that from a man who has just been loathing himself for the uncleanness of his heart. And there is room for suspicion and careful testing of self after grievous sinning. The Lord himself insisted on putting the question thrice to the thrice-fallen. Still, it is not in the least impossible that there may be love, and much strong love too, even in the denier of his Lord. Suppose one finds it so; suppose the heart does echo to every repeated "Lovest thou Me?" a repeated "Yea, Lord;" suppose a man is conscious, to do himself justice, of still really loving Him, whom he grieves to have denied, and to whose blood he looks for pardon; is he not to say so? Must one stifle the heart's cry of affection, and do violence to one's own feelings, and deny with the lips what the soul affirms? Will the sacrifice of a burning heart to false modesty please the Heart-searcher? I take for granted that we are in His presence and can speak, not as Peter did once, out of presumptuous self-boasting, but, as Peter did at last, out of penitent self-distrust; then why not take up, if it be true, Peter's good confession, and say boldly, though humbly, to the dear Questioner, "Yea, Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee?" Before we can get the length of saying that truly, however, there is one thing to be observed. Repentance must have wrought its perfect work. Humiliation and bitterness of soul for sin must have been pretty complete, before love will flow out unhindered and pure. Peter wept bitterly on the night of the denial. He had a private interview for his humbling on the resurrection day. Once more, by the Sea of Tiberias, the Lord would not accept his professions of love till he had anew brought his triple sin to mind and grieved him at the third time.

The consciousness of loving Jesus never brims up in the heart so, nor runs over in such irrepressible tears and vows, as when a new act of contrition has been done and a new pardon got. Then is the poor soul glad to find its rest again, and see the cloud pass from the loved face, and lie low, yet near, in the recovered confidence of peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Then, when it has washed its feet and is clean every whit, is it ready to sit down with Him, and forget toil and fight and danger of falling, forget the outside wintry world and snares laid in the dark, for the present joy of communion with Him whom it loves. I wish we cultivated this warm penitent love that rests in its own conscious assurance, and is pleased to lie still and say, "Yea, Lord, Thou knowest." Religion which stops at feeling love without doing anything is one-sided; but so is a religion which undervalues silent, meditative love for the sake of bustling or showy activity. We have here something to learn from those Christians, plentiful in other generations, who spent their days in ardent exercise of this grace, feeding the love-fire on their own hearts. To muse on Jesus till one's thoughts begin to burn within, and the fountains of the deep are stirred, and the soul overflows in lavishment of affection, thanks, and tenderness; to break thus the costliest perfume of one's heart on His feet who alone is worthy of it, is not very unlike that much-pardoned, much-loving woman in the gospel, nor very unfit for pardoned sinners in any age. Very good it would be did we now and then take our own hearts to task for their coldness; asking them, amid all our manifold duties, "Heart, lovest thou Jesus? Why art thou never on a glow? Why so seldom even warm with love? What love is this of thine which wastes no alabaster boxes, is never lavish of its thanks, nor ever outgushes with any unrestrainable tenderness of feeling? Hast thou, then, been forgiven so very little, that thou canst give only the cold, decent proprieties of a circumspect and just man, who never was lost, instead of the melted, repentant love of a pardoned harlot, a returned prodigal, or a converted Peter?—Extracted from the Sunday Magazine.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

BR. STORRS: I have many things to write that, to me, appear to be of a good deal of importance; yet I cannot speak of them all now.

The kingdom of heaven, by Jacob Grim, was very interesting to me. The kingdom of heaven is likened by our Advent brethren altogether different from what it was by the Lord himself in Matt. xiii. Here the kingdom is likened unto a man who sowed good seed in his field, and the enemy sowed tares while he slept. Again it is compared to a grain of mustard seed. Again it is compared to leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal. Also it is compared to a treasure hid in a field; and like a merchantman seeking goodly pearls; like a net cast into the sea. Now let any one read the explanations of the parables, and then contrast them with the picture we have had so vividly brought to view by our Advent brethren, and see what a contrast. The Saviour tells us that the good and the bad seed grow together (in the kingdom) till the harvest. For he shall send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend. This is admitting that they were in the kingdom, if not, they could not be gathered out. The harvest is the end of the world, or age. Gather first the tares, and bind them in bundles. What for? To burn them; and thus get them out of the kingdom. The net gathers of every kind. Is the kingdom of heaven like that? Does the kingdom gather of every kind? The Saviour says it is. Matt. xiii. 47.

Then there is a kingdom. Yes; for we are commanded to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Surely the Saviour would not command us to seek for a thing not in existence. But he says, seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you.

Again, in Matth. xxiii. 13, "Wo unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites; for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men;"—something they could not do if the kingdom did not exist—"for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." This shows there is, or was, a kingdom, and those Scribes and Pharisees hindered and shut upon up the kingdom; for, which a wo was pronounced against them.

In Rev. i. 13, John declares he was in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, on the Isle of Patmos. Paul says, in Col. i. 13, "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of God's dear Son."

These are but a few of the positive texts showing that there is a kingdom, and that Christ is king; for he declared that all power, both in heaven and in earth was given unto him. Now what more can be given unto him to make him a king? If he has not got the kingdom, and if the kingdom is not set up, how can we seek and find it? how can we knock and have it opened unto us? and of what use were the keys to Peter? and how were others in the kingdom? and how were these Scribes and Pharisees shutting it up and refusing to enter? and how can Christ deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power? For he (Christ) must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet; the last enemy shall be destroyed, death. Then, if I mistake not, He delivers the kingdom up to God the Father.

But in contrast, we are told, then Christ sets up his kingdom, and begins to reign. But Paul saw it different. I believe we have a kingdom. I believe we have a King, one Jesus. I believe we are the servants to whom we yield ourselves. I believe that same Jesus will so come in like manner as he went up into heaven. How did he go? Please consider. Did he destroy any one? We have no account that he did. Did everybody see him ascend? I think not. Will everybody see him come? No: if they do, it will not be as he ascended. Think on these things, and see if He will come other than He went. Will he sit at the right hand of the Father until his foes are made his footstool? I think he will.

I need not repeat the description of the time Christ will have setting up his kingdom with fire and sword, according to some teachers, for such things cannot be; it is contrary to the nature of Christ; contrary to his word; contrary to the principle of love, and doing to others as ye would be done by; for love is the royal law.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM MARIA MATHEWS WEAVER.

DEAR PILGRIMS: Certainly the HERALD has improved, and we are all glad to know that its editor is to be relieved somewhat by the assistance of Br. Spencer.

How good the last paper is!—Oct. 27th. But my eyes are so very weak I can read but little. It comforts me greatly to hear from the scattered ones—those little unassuming letters; how precious. They are like little diamonds surrounding great pearls—those sermons, etc., from the brethren. But, beloved, let all keep humble, and when we have written something worth printing, may we not become lifted up, and think we are great writers, fit to write books or edit a paper.

It is a great thing to know our places, keep them, and in them be contented. We don't want to make an idol of Br. Storrs, and think whatever he says must be true; for he is mortal like we are. Yet it becomes us to listen to his words, respect his age, and profit by his long experience in the things of God.

My soul is sick of this sinful state. There are many pleasant scenes here, and sometimes when my little ones appear so happy, it seems as though this world would do to live in eternally. But, alas! pain and death draw near, and the heart cries out for "a better land than this."

Thank God for a promise of that home "where friends shall not sicken and die; where cruel foes can never enter; where evil speakers, slanderers, and mischief makers cannot mingle and sunder cords of sacred friendship. To such a home I long to go. "Home, sweet home," indeed. And then the loved ones who now sleep in death, will greet us again. Blessed hope! Mourning ones, rejoice! The time draws near when your ears shall again hear the sweet voice of your little ones. Did you not miss their cheerful prattle after the hush of death made your home so quiet? Did not your ears long to hear the name "papa," or "mama," lisped by baby lips? But those lips grew pale and cold and motionless, and returned to dust. O yes, sad heart, you know the loved form is crumbled into dust, and that nothing remains in that "little grave" which could in any way resemble your beautiful child. But Jesus comes. The Saviour approaches. In his hands he holds the "keys of death and the grave." Will the blessed Lord unlock that dismal place and let your loved ones come forth? The grave opens, dust cleaves to dust, and Almighty power speaks, and the dead come back to life to die no more.

Is not Jesus, then, "Lord of all?" Who is like unto him? Our Lord, our life, and our only hope. O let us cling fast to such a friend. Do not grieve him. Keep his commandments. Be not ashamed of him, or of his words.

"Ashamed of Jesus, that dear friend,
On whom your hopes of life depend?"

Never, never! Rather be ashamed that we serve him so unfaithfully.

Let us pray for each other. The Lord liveth and will answer the prayer of faith. It is our privilege to know that He hears us; and when He answers let us give glory to His name.

Pray for me. My health and strength and courage often fails, and since Camp-meeting I have been looking into the grave. But O, it looks so dark and cold and lonely, that I shudder on its brink, and choose rather to live, even in pain, and labor in sickness, if I can but see the light of life till Jesus comes. How can I become reconciled to death? Tell me, is it sinful to shrink from such a foe? He is a terrible monster to me. How can I submit to go into his hands? Is "death no punishment?" Let them but feel its power, and then say yea or nay.

I feel "to live is gain," and love "gain" more than "loss."

WESTFIELD, Mass., Nov., 1869.

FROM ESTHER A. BROWN.

BR. STORRS: It is the first time that I ever attempted to write for a paper, but feeling a deep impression in my mind, permit me to say a few words through the HERALD OF LIFE, a paper I prize next to my Bible; it is about all the life preacher we have here. Praise the Lord for the HERALD. I love the truth; I feel anxious for others to see the harmony there is in God's word. For years I truly thought I had an immortal soul, and when this body died the soul went to God, and so lived on eternally; and I truly thought it could be found in the Bible.

About five years ago Bro. J. C. Wheeler came into the place where I live, and preached the coming kingdom. He also said we did not possess immortality, etc. Well, I took my Bible, began to read it with a prayerful heart, and, glory be to heaven's King, I found it to be so, that we must seek for immortality, and we are to put on immortality at the resurrection. I praise God that I ever took his word for my guide; that I was led into the truth; blessed be His name for his goodness to us. After I learned this great truth, I began to inquire concerning the wicked dead, for I thought we must all be raised to life, both saint and sinner, and be judged according to the deeds done in the body. Well, while I was studying into this I saw one of the advent brethren. I said, Brother, if the wicked dead are raised, what life do they have? Why, said he, they are raised to this mortal life. But that did not satisfy me; I clung to the word of God, and nowhere between the lids of the Bible can I find they will be raised to life, but they will remain in the congregation of the dead. This is the plain teaching of the Bible. Since I have embraced this truth, I meet with much opposition on every hand, but, blessed be the Lord forever, I have his word, and his word will stand. Though heaven and earth pass away, his word will not pass away; and He has promised to be with us clear through to the end; and His promises are sure. I confide in them and take courage, knowing in whom I trust. "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his; but if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you." This is plain teaching. It does seem as though any one could understand the Bible if they would. What does Jesus say? "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." O, I love the truth; it is what I am seeking for. I feel willing to bear the scoffs and frowns of the world. Yes, blessed be the Lord of glory, willing to go without the camp bearing the reproach for Jesus' sake.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us be faithful; we are living in an evil day, where sin and wickedness abound, and the love of many is growing cold. O that we may have on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand, having our loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness, and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; taking the shield of faith, wherewith we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked; and take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; praying always, ever ready to give a reason of our hope.

From a sister, looking for redemption when Jesus comes.

FROM MRS. P. H. DAY.

BR. STORRS: As I took up the last HERALD, and run my eyes eagerly over its contents, on reading Sister Wood's letter from Albany, I was forcibly reminded of my own feelings, not long since, on retiring, as all alone I mused, my husband being absent, my mind went back to the many pleasant scenes of our last camp-meeting; and one after another of our dear brethren and sisters, whose features and a good many of their names are indelibly stamped upon my mind, our dear Br. Wolcott, though I never saw him, came before my mind, and a spirit of earnest intercession on his behalf was given me, so that for some time I was lost to all else; and it seemed to me that God, through Christ, would hear and answer prayer.

In this perilous time how the little church needs just such men, filled with the meek and gentle spirit of our Master; and like Luther, in the case of Melunchton, I felt we could not spare him, and others that came up before me, Brs. L. C. Thorne and A. Boynton, whose writings from time to time have so fed my hungry soul.

For a number of days I thought much of writing a few lines, and making a special request in behalf of Br. W., but excused myself as unqualified to write anything for publication, and so it passed, until I saw Sister Wood's request.

One thing is obvious in our prayer-meetings; we lose much by not having some special object or subject, and then concentrate our faith and earnest desires to that point; then God will hear and answer through the Beloved, and we may, with all confidence, rely upon his precious promises. Beloved brethren and sisters, let us be earnest and faithful, and never rest until we know, by living faith, we are fruit-bearing branches of the Living Vine, and thereby glorifying God in our life and conversation; reflecting his image, that if alive when He comes, we may be changed from mortal to immortality; but if sleeping, we may awake with his likeness—satisfied. Your sister.

FROM JOSEPH LINGLE.

BR. STORRS: Seeing your offer to send the two first numbers of the HERALD OF LIFE to persons who might probably subscribe, I send you the names and addresses of two. I wish to do all I can to spread the glorious light which we enjoy. I know I cannot effect much, as my hearing is so bad it requires some effort to make me hear. And as people do not like to trouble themselves, I cannot converse with them, but when they do, I do not fail to give them my views.

I see there is some improvement in this place, and from what I learn some inquiring about our views. Our friend Dr. B. has caused some excitement and lead some to examine the matter, and has got a number of subscribers.

Did he ever tell you how he came to subscribe? From his case I judge if others would read they would also subscribe.

I had some conversation with him on our views, and his reasonableness induced me to give him some of your publications, and also the paper, to read. After he had read them, I wished him to subscribe. He hesitated. I told him I would pay for it if he would read it and did not like it. On those conditions I sent for it. After he had read a number of them, he met me and said he did not want me to pay for it, and that it was the best paper he ever took.

HARRISBURG, PA., Oct. 30, 1869.

W. F. GARDNER, 295 K. St., Washington, D. C., writes: With others of your correspondents, I am very thankful for the HERALD OF LIFE, and wish I could do more for it. It is all the preaching I have or hear that comes any where near the truth. The living preachers here—as well as elsewhere—are troubled with the immortal soul, the eternal hell fire suffering, and the resurrection of the wicked dead doctrine. It is a pity that so many, claiming to be Adventists, are holding on to that last named falsehood; the evidence is, that they, like the orthodox, are still politicians—still voters—and hence are left in the dark.

I am now one day in my 80th year. I was somewhat affected by a sun-stroke in the summer of last year; but, thank the good Lord, I can yet write, and so I keep writing Bible to my friends. The "time of the end," Dan. xii. 4, 9, we understand is the hour of Rev. xiv. 7, the 24th of the 1000 year day, i. e., 40 years. Well, 40 years, commencing 1843, reach to 1883, the end; so there are 14 years yet to come.

Please give me the address of Br. Fred. Winans. In much love, yours, waiting for the Master to come.

Note by the Editor.

Br. Winans' address is 519 Hubbard street, Chicago, Ills.

AMBROSE RONDTHALER, minister of the Gospel, Bethlehem, Pa., accompanying his article on John v. 28, 29, in last week's HERALD, sent us a note in which he says: "Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full." "Peace be to thee. Friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name." Love from all to all.

Note by the Editor.

We recognize the Apostolic language in the foregoing; and hope it may be realized in all its fulness. Our friends in this city will be glad to see Br. Rondthaler's face and hear his words for Jesus and the resurrection.

J. C. DAY, South Ashburnham, Mass., writes: We feel thankful to our kind and loving heavenly Father that the light and truth is still spreading, and thinking men are being attracted by it to love the dear Saviour more and more. And notwithstanding the opposition that is put forth against it, yet the truth stays not. Men may graduate, and become stereotyped in their faith, but the truth is onward. "It is a shining light that shineth more and more until the perfect day." As well might a man blow his breath against a mighty tornado and to try to turn it back from whence it came, as to put forth his puny effort to stay the tide of truth in its onward march. I have often thought that all the efforts put forth against the truth were only so many contributions to spread the light, and in fact this is the language of Scripture, for says St. Paul, "We can do nothing against the truth, but for it." I was reminded of this not long ago in reading the letter of my beloved Br. Cleaves, of Boston, for I have been satisfied for some time that his philosophic mind could not long be kept from the truth by such shallow surface arguments as is presented in that pamphlet entitled, "Our Loss in Adam, and our Gain in Christ." Yes, my dear brother, truth is onward and mighty; and I have long since come to the conclusion that I will follow the man who carries the lantern.

Thy brother, in hope of life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

EMMA COLLINS, Coopersville, N. Y., writes: I am a constant reader of the HERALD, and a believer in the doctrine it advocates. There are some texts, however, which it is difficult for me to harmonize with "No life out of Christ" views; but I hope that by careful study of His word, and the aid of the very clear explanations I find in the HERALD, I may satisfy my mind. There is another point which disturbs me not a little; that is, in regard to my duty if I try to live a Christian life. I do not wish to unite myself to any body of Christians in particular; I mean, to any organized church; yet I ought to do something to let the world know I am trying to live for Christ. Do you think "baptism" necessary? Please give me your opinion of the matter, and oblige.

Note by the Editor.

We have sent you our Tract, "The Essential Baptism." May the Lord guide you into all truth and in the path of life.

Even in death the rose is sweet, and sweetens every place where it lies. Thus the Rose of Sharon has given the fragrance of life to the very chambers of death and the grave—to that wardrobe of the saints, where their material garments are to be laid up until the morning of the resurrection, then to be brought forth beautiful and fresh, fit for the Court of heaven.

From the first moment of his pilgrimage to the last, the Christian has but one point of safety, one rock of refuge, one place of shelter, and its name is "Constant dependence."

BIRD OF JOY.

BIRD of joy! why art thou lingering here,
In the place of weeping?
Bird of morn! why rings thy carol clear
Where the dead are sleeping?
Bird of summer! cannot winter's cold
Chill thy bosom's gladness?
Cannot mourners' tears, that wet the mould,
Touch thy heart with sadness?

Thus I wondered in myself to see
Mirth and sorrow meeting,
As a lark arose, and carolled free,
Bleak November greeting,
Where a widowed husband, silent tears
In fresh sorrow pouring,
Wept the while his loss of other years,
A sweet child deploring.

Hither when we brought the sleeping dust
Of that gentle maiden,
Ev'n while earth received her solemn trust,
And from hearts o'erladen
Broke the stifled sob—lo! from the side
Of the grave, upspringing,
Rose a lark, and soared, and far and wide
Filled the air with singing.

Bird of joy! and thou art true to-day
To the blessed token;
Mother with the child to rest we lay,
Sad, but not heart-broken;
Out of drear November we have heard
Promise more than vernal;
Visions thou hast brought us, happy bird,
Of the Day Eternal!

THE 144,000 OF REVELATION:

And the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. Matt. xxv. 34.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

BR. STORRS: I have heard and read various opinions as to who the 144,000 were, but they all appear to have been without much regard to the inspired record. I desire the use of your columns for the purpose of setting forth what I believe to be a Scriptural exposition of this matter, which will necessarily lead into the subject of the "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world."

I shall not enter upon a criticism of the opinions above mentioned, believing that the best way to expose error is a plain setting forth of the truth.

Rev. vii. 4, "And I heard the number of the sealed; an hundred and forty-four thousand sealed out of every tribe of the children of Israel." (I use Tregelles translation of Revelation.) The time this sealing was done is of some importance. By turning to chapter i. 19, it will be seen that "the First and the Last and the Living One, divided the revelation into three parts, thus—"Write therefore the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." The record of "the things which thou sawest, and the things which are," ends with the third chapter, for the fourth opens as follows—"After these things I saw and behold a door opened in heaven, and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet speaking with me, saying, "Come up hither and I will show the things which must be hereafter," i. e., after the things "which thou sawest, and the things which are" recorded in the three first chapters; and as a consequence, after the revelation was given to John. And if we are to regard the order in which the events are recorded, the sealing was completed between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals.

The record says they were sealed out of all the tribes of the children of Israel. This has led some to the conclusion that they were literal descendants of Jacob. This I think is a mistake. Let us hear the apostle James. "James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting."

Our first object is to discover who James means by the "twelve tribes." This I think can be done by reference to the epistle itself; from which we will make a few quotations. Chapter i. 23, "My brethren, count it all joy when you fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience." What kind of faith did the literal twelve tribes of Israel have at the time James wrote? Verse 18. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." Chapter ii. 1, "My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect to persons." Those to whom his epistle was written, are declared to have been begotten by the word of truth, and are addressed as having the faith of Jesus Christ.

Verse 7, "Do not they (the rich) blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?" Anderson reads, "which is called upon you." The Emphatic Diaglott, "which has been named upon you." Chapter v. 14, "Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." Verse 19, "Brethren, if any do err from the truth and one convert him," etc.

Were the literal twelve tribes ever begotten by the word of the Lord? If so, when? Has that name ever been named upon them? Did they at the time of the writing of this epistle, or at any time since, as tribes, hold the faith of Jesus Christ? Unless these questions are answered in the affirmative, the literal twelve tribes are not the persons to whom the epistle of James was written.

That this epistle is written to believers in Christ—those having been begotten by the word of truth, i. e., the church of Christ—must, I think, be admitted by every one who will considerately read the epistle.

In the symbolic language of Revelation it is said of the 144,000, chapter xiv. 4, "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." Tregelles renders it, "Those who follow the Lamb," etc. Jesus said to his followers, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there you may be also." John xiv. 9.

Paul, speaking of the coming of the Lord and the resurrection, says, "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. iv. 17.

In Rev. xix. 14, we read, "And the armies which were in heaven were following him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and pure." Question: Who were those following him, "clothed in fine linen, white and pure?" See verse 8, "And it was given to her (the Lamb's wife) that she should be arrayed in fine linen, bright and pure: for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints."

From the Scriptures just quoted, we get the following facts:

1. The 144,000 are the ones that follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.

2. That is just what John saw the armies in heaven doing.

3. They were clothed in fine linen, bright and pure.

4. This is the clothing of the bride, the Lamb's wife.

5. And is explained to be the righteousness of the saints.

Consequently the 144,000 must be the symbolic number of the armies that were in heaven following him that sat on the white horse, and which we have identified by their clothing to be the saints—the bride, the Lamb's wife.

The following passages are additional evidence of the correctness of this view: "These were redeemed from among men, a first fruit to God and to the Lamb." James says, "Of his own will begat he us," (the twelve tribes, chap. i. 1,) "with the word of truth, in order that we might be, as it were, the first fruits of his creatures," (Anderson). James writing to the church, calls it the twelve tribes, and says that God of his own will begat them (the members) with the word of truth, in order that they might be, as it were, the first fruits of his creatures. John says the 144,000 were sealed out of all the tribes of the children of Israel; and in chapter xiv., he says they are the first fruits to God and the Lamb.

"And in their mouth was found no falsehood, for they are without blemish," verse 5. Jude says, "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless," (without blemish,) "before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy," ver. 24. It appears to me a pretty clear case that "all the tribes of the children of Israel," from whom the 144,000 were sealed, and the "twelve tribes scattered abroad," to whom James wrote, are the same. Christ says, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv. 31. I find the following in "Appendix to the New Testament," in the Emphatic Diaglott, under the word Angel: "This word, both in the Greek and Hebrew languages, signifies a messenger. It denotes office and not the nature of the agent." The interlineary word for word translation, reads, "and all his messengers with him."

I now enquire, does the Scriptures give us any information as to who his messengers are that come with him? Let us read. "And Enoch, also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these," (rocks in your feasts of love, verse 12,) "saying, Behold the Lord cometh with his holy myriads, to execute judgment," etc., Jude 14, 15, (B. U.) Paul calls these myraids, "The angels, i. e., messengers of his power." 2 Thess. i. 7. The prophet Zechariah calls them the saints. "And the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee." Zech. xiv. 5.

Christ continues in Matth. xxv. 32, "And all nations shall be gathered before him; and he will separate them one from another, as a shepherd separates his sheep from the goats. And he will place the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left." Then comes the invitation to those on the right hand to come and inherit the kingdom, prepared from the foundation of the world; and in ver. 40, in reply to a question put by them, the king says, "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these my brethren, you have done it unto me." I wish to call particular attention to this reply of the king. A question is asked by the righteous on the right hand of the king. "Then will the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when did we see thee hungry," etc. Now, notice the reply: "Verily I say unto you," (i. e., the righteous on his right hand,) "inasmuch as you did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, you did it unto me." He does not say, Inasmuch as ye did it to each other; or, Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of your brethren; but, inasmuch as you did it to the least of these my brethren," etc. That the parties called by the king, "these my brethren," are not the righteous that have been separated out of all nations at the time of his coming, and to whom the king is speaking, is clear to my mind. But if they are a distinct class from the righteous that are separated out of "all nations," assembled before the king, who are they, and what is their relation to the judgment scene? What saith the Scriptures? "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. "Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?" 1 Cor. vi. 12. Paul informs us that the saints (of which the Corinthian brethren were a part) shall judge the world. Jude, quoting Enoch, says, "Behold the Lord cometh with his holy myriads to execute judgment." And Christ informs us that when he comes with his messengers he comes to judge all nations. And Zechariah tells us that the saints come with him when he comes to be king over all the earth. Here we have the brethren of Christ—the saints that come with him. They are joint heirs with him, having been "begotten by the word of truth;" the first fruits, represented to John by the symbolic number of 144,000, sealed out of all the tribes of the children of Israel, viz., the church.

We have also the righteous separated from the wicked of all nations assembled before the throne of Christ, and seen by John, after he had seen the 144,000 sealed out of all the tribes of the children of Israel, as a great multitude that no man could number, out of all nations, and tribes, and peoples, and tongues, standing in the presence of the throne, because they had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

But some one will ask, Does not Christ say to those on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world?" Yes; and the reader will please notice that it is the kingdom prepared "from the foundation of the world." We will look into the nature of this kingdom.

The word that is here translated kingdom, lexicographers say, primarily, means dominion. Let us give its primary meaning, and read, "Inherit the dominion prepared for you from the foundation of the world." when God laid the foundation of the world, and created the heavens and earth, and all things "for his pleasure," did he prepare a dominion for man? What saith the record? "And God said, let us make man in our own image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image," etc. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." Gen. i. 26–28.

This is the dominion that God prepared for man at the beginning. The herb and the fruit of the tree, including the tree of life, was to be his food. See verse 29 and chap. ii. 16. "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good." Now suppose man had not sinned, but had obeyed the command to multiply and replenish the earth; would not his dominion have continued? Since God created all things for his pleasure, (Rev. iv. 11,) and when they were finished he said, they were "very good," have we any testimony in Scripture that these things will be restored? Let us see.

"And that he may send forth Jesus Christ, before appointed for you; whom the heavens, indeed, must receive, until the times of the restoration of all things, which God spoke of by the mouth of all his holy prophets from the beginning." Acts iii. 20, 21, (B. U.) Three things are presented to our mind by the verse first quoted:

1. God by the mouth of all his holy prophets, from the beginning, has been predicting a restoration of something; and since he has been predicting a restoration from the beginning, the things to be restored must either be the order of things before the fall, which pleased God so much that he said it was very good, or else it must be a state of things which existed before the creation, as a prediction to establish something that had never existed at the time of the prediction would not be a restoration

2. There is a time appointed for this restoration; and

3. Jesus will not come until this appointed time of restoration has come.

I will make but one quotation from the prophets to show the nature of the restoration, as I purpose to speak more particularly of the kingdom in another article.

We will read a portion of Isaiah xi. 1, "And there shall come forth a rod out of the Stem of Jesse, and a branch shall spring out of his roots." Verse 4, "But with righteousness shall shall he judge poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." Ver 6–9, "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow, and the bear shall eat straw like the ox; and the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the adder's den, (margin). They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Here we have the dominion of every creeping thing restored to man, as it was before the fall; and this is spoken by the mouth of his holy prophets. If any one can show from the Scriptures that God prepared any other dominion for man at the beginning, he will enlighten me by so doing.

This is the kingdom (territory) and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven given to the people of the saints of the Most High. Dan. vii. 27. It is not given to saints, but to their people. The kingdom that the saints inherit is the dominion of the nations; i. e., the people of the saints to whom Christ says, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

SOLOMON'S SONG.

IT pleased the Holy Spirit, in the olden time, to blow his divine music into the world, through rather curious organ-pipes. Balaam was one; King Solomon was another. The latter was, indeed, a many-sided man. We have in Proverbs the most powerful aphorisms in weight and edge—solid wedges of condensed matter. In Ecclesiastes, the most mournful wail over the vanities and glories of human life. In the Book of Canticles, the richest of all songs—matchless in depth, tenderness, and lyrical rapture. It was written in an age of plain speaking, and translated in a period of old-fashioned simplicity. Hence, in times of sham refinement, the critics find it voluptuous. In fact, it is beyond them, for it rapidly transcends the human starting point, and reaches a domain of celestial love in which they have no vision. In truth, the production is bright as the morning star, stately as Lebanon, and pure as the driven snow. As our age darkens, and the people of God draw more closely together, it will be studied more earnestly and relished more devoutly. It has been frequently supposed that the song is never quoted or referred to in the New Testament. As a help to the reader in that line, we may quote and compare a few passages: "I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys." Chap. ii. 1. "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Matt. vi. 28. "I sleep, but my heart waketh; it is the voice of my Beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled." Chap. v. 2. "But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat;" "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." Matt. xiii. 25; xxiv. 42. "Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon, he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver." Chap. viii. 11. "There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country." Matt. xxi. 33. "I have put off my coat, how shall I put it on again? I have washed my feet, how shall I defile them?" Chap. v. 3. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately." Luke xii. 35, 36. "Draw me, we will run after thee; the king hath brought me into his chambers, we will be glad and rejoice in thee, we will remember thy love more than wine: the upright love thee." Chap. i. 4. "No man can come unto me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 44. "I opened to my Beloved, but my Beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone. My soul failed when he spake; I sought him but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer." Chap. v. 6. "Then said Jesus unto them, yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that sent me. Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me, and where I am thither ye cannot come." John vii. 33, 34. This method of illustration might be pursued through the entire book, and would repay the labor.—The Rainbow.

THE TRUE CHRISTIAN.

HE endeavors continually to walk with God, and to have his conversation in heaven, so that in the midst of company, and in his converse among men, he often lifts up his mind in holy ejaculations to heaven. Phil. iii. 20.

He walks in a lively sense of God's omniscience and omnipresence, and prefers the will and favor of God before that of men. Psalm cxxxix.

He endeavors that his prayers be as frequent as his wants, and his thanksgiving as his blessings. 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5.

To advance the glory of his Maker, is the very centre of all his actions; and the doing his will the very joy of his soul, and the conversion of sinners his great delight. Psalm xi. 8.

As his love is wholly fixed upon God, which is an infinite good, so his hatred has no other object but sin, which is a great evil. Psalm xiv. 7.

The virtuous and wise are his only guests, which makes him a companion of those that love God, and his delight is among the saints. Psalm cxix. 63.

He strives more to be grave and modest, than to have the reputation of being accounted witty. Eph, v. 15.

He is not only careful of his time, but of his company too; and is more anxious to know himself than he is to know others. 1 Cor. v. 11.

He abhors the thought of undermining his neighbor, or cheating the ignorant; and is ever striving to be a stranger to envy and malice. 1 Cor. xiv. 20.

He follows not the opinion or example of the worst, but of she best of Christians. Phil. iii. 17.

He is so good a husband of his time, as to improve it in doing good to himself, and others; for he sees the most busy man must find time to die, though he will not find time to prepare for it. Luke xxi. 34.

RELIGION is a personal business; and if all the rest of the world were to forsake Christ it would be our duty to follow him.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

WHEN MAY THE CHILDREN COME.

I do not know why a child may not begin to love Christ when he is four or five years old—as soon as he is able to run about and to love father and mother, and others in the family. The instinct of infantile affection toward the nourishing parent precedes all other instincts. It develops finally into love. And not only that, but as soon as they come to discriminate moral qualties in persons, I think they may be able in their way, to discern moral quality in God—to love it and to be affected by it. I have seen children that had been taught that their best friend was Jesus Christ, and that he loved little children so that he was grieved when they did wrong, and was pleased when they did right, and took an interest in everything that they did; and nothing was so attractive to them as the name of Jesus. I have known children to whom that name was a greater power than school teacher or father and mother. And I believe that parents should seek to develop the religious nature of their children. I believe there ought to be such instruction in the household as that children shall grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord from the beginning. I do not mean to set aside the doctrine of conversion, but I say that it does not require any such mechanical, formal method as many suppose. When a child knows enough to look up to Christ and say, "My Christ," and to feel, "I do want to live so as to please thee," he is converted. It may require afterwards more voluminousness. There are many parts of the unfolded life that have to be transformed—formed again; but in the child the simple act of loving Christ—of clinging to him—I hold to be the purest and least obstructed form of conversion. Faith and love are the beginnings of Christian character in children. —Selected.

"HE'LL BE BETTER."

"He'll be better, mother; Willie 'll be better," pleaded little Susy.

"What makes you think so, darling?" asked her mother.

"I'm sure he will; for God will help him, mother; I am sure he will," and a bright smile of hope and love glowed on Susy's lips, although tears were in her eyes. She clasped her hands tightly together and raised herself on tiptoe, in her earnestness of feeling, as she repeated, "Willie 'll be better." She was pleading for a playmate who had just struck her.

Willie was selfish and unkind, and often hurt her when they played together, and yet she was always ready to play with him, and always treated him kindly and generously. She gave him the best and handsomest apples, the largest share of her candy, and the choice of her nicest playthings to play with. Willie could not help liking such a dear little girl, and yet he would hurt her so that she would cry from pain and sorrow.

Sometimes her mother forbade her playing with him, and then she would tearfully ask, "Who can he play with, mother?"

"He can play with boys like himself."

"Then he'll be worse, he'll be worse; and how can he ever get good?" she would exclaim in her distress.

"I don't know," her mother would answer; "but Willie 's a bad boy, and perhaps he 'll make you bad."

"God won't let him; God takes care of me," the little one would say in beautiful trust. At one time when her mother expressed her fear of Willie's influence over her, she slowly shook her head as she said, "I a'nt afraid; good is better than bad, and I don't want to be bad. Willie 'll be better, mother. God will make him better." When she had to tell him that she could not play with him, she would try to make him promise to be better. "You will be better, won't you, Willie?" she would keep saying, till she had won a reluctant nod, which she accepted as a yes. When he had been playing more kindly and gently than usual, she would take his hand in hers and whisper softly, "A'nt you better, Willie?" Willie would blush and look ashamed, but Susy's love and trust in him were helping him to be better all the time.

Susy grew very sick indeed, so that she could not play, nor even lift her head from her pllow, but she wanted to see Willie. Her mother tried to persuade her that it was not best; but Susy seemed so desirous to see him, that her mother sent for him. When he came, Susy wanted him to stand as close to her as he could. Her mother could just hear her whisper, "If I die, will you be better, Willie? "I'm sick, and if I die, will you be better?"

Willie could not speak, but he choked, and his chin quivered, and he nodded a yes.

"And when you're better, you'll make somebody else better, won't you, Willie?" said the dying child.

Willie noded again, and this time he could not keep back a great sob.

"I want to kiss you, Willie. I thought you'd be better." She put her lips to Willie's cheek for the last time as he stooped over her.

Susy died, but Wiliie can never forget her beautiful life. Many a time when he wants to do wrong, he hears the sweet voice of the child asking him to promise to be better, and he is better as he listens to it.—Selected.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE BLESSED HOPE.

"And every one that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure."—1 John iii. 3.

THE church of God is a witness-bearer. It is called to bear witness to unpopular truths; and it dare not withhold them. Our Lord was unpopular when he broke down the strongholds of Pharisaic pride, and taught the people that forms could not save them. Peter was unpopular when he taught that, by the name of Jesus of Nazareth, he had raised up the lame man at the beautiful gate of the temple. Paul was unpopular when he went everywhere preaching Jesus in Jewish synagogues and Gentile law courts. But this did not close his mouth or seal his tongue; he still continued to speak unpopular things, because he knew they were true.

The church of the first century was a witnessing church. It witnessed to the truth of the first coming and the resurrection of Jesus Christ the Son of God. By the blessing of God's Holy Spirit this testimony, sealed with the blood of martyrs, was not in vain. The witnesses succeeded in planting the belief in Christ's resurrection firmly in the minds of millions, and in the hearts of thousands.

But the church of God is still a witness-bearer. The world which professes to have fully accepted the testimony of the early church, and to have no doubt about the first coming and resurrection of Christ, still rejects (from its creed) the other great truths of Christ's second coming, and the resurrection of his sleeping saints. The church which is bound to bear witness to the truth must not decline the task of insisting on the reality of the Lord's coming in glory and the resurrection. It is unpopular doctrine, it does not harmonize with modern science; it does not agree with popular expectations. But so much the more must the witness bear testimony, until at least no excuse be left to any unbeliever. The more the infidel or worldly man scoffs, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" the more must the sober, waiting, faithful church lift up its voice and say, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" Such then, is the first thought which we would earnestly commend to each of Chrirt's people. The apostolic church bore witness to the unpopular truth of Christ's first coming in humiliation, his suffering and resurrection. We must testify to his second coming in glory, his triump, and the resurrection of his saints.

And as this is to be the church's testimony to the world, so it is to herself to be the great hope by which her true members are to be sustained and sanctified.

But God has treasures of love as well as of wisdom and knowledge, which we could never even imagine were they not revealed for our learning. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be. But we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Then He "shall change our vile (or humiliated) body, that it may be like unto his glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby he is able also to subdue all things to himself."

Such is the hope hinted at in the second verse, and more fully unfolded in other parts of Holy Scripture. It was the hope which prophets dimly looked for, which apostles were permitted to, in figure, on the mount of transfiguration, to be behold, and which sustained them under the manifold trials and persecutions which they were called upon to endure. It was the hope which sustained the aged Paul when he wrote from his prison in Rome, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 5–8.

The thought of the second advent of the Lord Jesus is to many only filled with terror. Even the believer thinks he may well quake in expectation of that day. Strange that a great hope should be turned into a mere object of alarm. Why does the Lord bid us, when we read the tokens of his coming, "look up and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth near," if all he brings is a judgment-seat, an archangel's trump, a great white throne, and a day of wrath?

He comes to avenge the long curse of his creatures, and turn earth's blight to blessing. He comes to set up a kingdom that shall never be moved, a kingdom on this earth, a visible, and not merely a spiritual kingdom, as the prophets repeated and fully prove. The coming kingdom and the reign of Christ will be universal, perpetual, righteous, and personally administered by him.

In the seventh chapter of Daniel we read that there is to be given to "one like the Son of Man, dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, and all people, and nations and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be moved. . . . And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." This is the period spoken of in the book of Revelation (xi. 15,) in that glorious verse, "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.

Well may the believer lift up his eyes, and bid his heart be brave, when he views the reign of Christ as a perfectly righteous reign. If we had no other reason but this for desiring to see the days of the Son of Man, the love of righteousness, which shall then be paramount, should be sufficient to inflame our hearts with joy.

Those who hope for a gradual improvement in the morality and goodness of society, even under our equitable laws, and under the teaching of Christ's church in the present state of things, are doomed to be painfully disappointed. The observation of the tendencies of our age is confirmed by the sure word of prophecy, which proclaims that the period preceding our Lord's return will be one of degeneracy, and not of rapid improvement.

But while the heart of the believer, renewed by grace, is torn by the sight of the many wrongs of earth, and becomes gradually more and more hopeless of any considerable amelioration of the state of the world, his faith may be strengthened while his heart is grieved. For is not all this state of things foretold, in many various forms of prophecy, as the condition of the world in the times just preceding the Lord's coming? It is this to which our Lord points to in that sorrowful question, "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" It is this that the prophetic spirit, speaking through Paul, contemplated in the words, "This know also, that in the last days perilous (or grievous, difficult) times shall come."

The present world, pervaded by pollution, and in which death reigns, cannot be the rest and home of beings originally created in the image of God. Every unregenerated man, from the days of Cain to the present hour, has endeavored to realize unmixed enjoyment in earth and its furniture; and the universal experiment has issued in universal failure. Solomon's sad experience has been the experience of all: "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." All who have sought in this earth, as it now is, that which might meet and satisfy the cravings of the soul, pass from one pursuit to another, asking in the restlessness of their unsatisfied hearts, "Who will show us any good?" The grace which is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ, the kingdom in its beautiful order, its unspotted purity, and its unfading perpetuity, fills and satisfies the largest aspiration of the regenerated soul; even the hope of participating in the holy engagements and enjoyments of this heavenly kingdom, is so radiant with its reflected glory, that the apostle calls it the "blessed hope."

A blessed hope. But the apostle in the second verse of the chapter (John iii. 2,) refers to another branch of this hope, which, to the child of God, forms a prospect more beautiful still than even that of seeing and taking a share in the Saviour's triumphal kingdom. It is expressed in these words, "We know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

To see him, the long-trusted, the long-promised, the long-looked-for Messiah, will be indeed, the head and chief of bliss. Face to face his risen or tranfigured saints shall behold him who, while he gives glory, gives no glory to equal this, that he comes and gives us himself.

His servants shall serve him, and they shall see his face, and his name shall be upon their foreheads." Then shall he "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Our "eyes shall see the King in his beauty," the beauty of the glorified body, seen for a moment by angels at his sepulchre, and beheld by anticipation on the mount of transfiguration by Peter, James, and John. We shall see, not as now, through a glass darkly, but face to face, and know as we are known. We know that our Redeemer liveth, but, oh! the raptures of the thought that "in our flesh we shall see God." For we shall be "ever with the Lord," and when he shall come in his glory, those "who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Many passages of Scripture unite in teaching us that the redemption which Christ has promised to complete for us, and which was commenced when he suffered death on the cross for our salvation, will not be completed until we obtain the full adoption, viz., "the redemption of the body." The "blessed hope" is a hope of resurrection at the Lord's coming, a resurrection embodied in all the three creeds, and which it is indeed strange that any Christian should suffer himself to forget. How the aspirations of redeemed man can be satisfied, still more, how the honor and glory of the Lord, who made man in his image, can be demonstrated, if the soul of man alone is to be immortal, we cannot imagine.

It is not our purpose to prove that there shall be a resurrection; but rather to insist that the hope of a part in the resurrection of the saints is one of the prominent features of "that blessed hope," "full of immortality," which we are permitted to hold and rejoice in. To rest in Jesus when we die, and to rise again and be with Jesus, when he comes—these are two distinct things, each full of comfort, but which should not for an instant be confounded in our minds.

St. Paul speaks of the resurrection from among (Greek) the dead (Phil. iii. 11,) as the grand consummation of the Christian's hope towards the attainment of which his efforts were directed. Resurrection was the great final hope of the church in apostolic times; but this "blessed hope" has almost entirely faded away from the minds of Christ's professing people, many of whom seem to think that there is nothing better to be desired than that their disembodied spirits should be at rest with Jesus in some undefined locality, and in some unintelligible condition of life, and enjoyment in the spiritual world, while the body is detained under the loathsome tyranny of death in the prison of the grave.

The adherents to this system of falsehood, which substitutes death for the resurrection as the door of entrance to a glorious and eternal life, endeavor to give the sanction of Scripture to their miserable delusion, which practically regards Christ as the redeemer of only one of the parts of man's being, and virtually attributes a partial victory to satan in the everlasting annihilation of the bodies of the elect. Nothing is more common than to hear the apostles of this gospel of death quoting the words of St. Paul (2 Cor. v. 1), as though the sacred writer intended to say that he desired nothing more than to die and go to heaven, whereas the whole scope of the passage is to exhibit in contrast the frail and mortal body which we now inhabit—"the earthly house of this tabernacle"—with the imperishable and glorious body into which the ransomed child of God shall enter at the resurrection, and which is described as the building of God, the house (not the frail moveable tabernacle) not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

May our gracious God open every reader's heart to welcome and warmly to embrace this blessed hope. Faintly pictured in the words, "We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him," it is more fully laid for us in that glorious chapter (1 Cor. xv.) where, rising on the wings of prophecy St. Paul, who had been privileged in vision to see the unspeakable glory which is in store for the people of God, writes to sustain the tried, and to arouse the backward and slumbering Corinthians.

Let the reader ponder long and prayerfully the glorious truths here revealed; truths which far, far exceed that false hope which we owe to the Platonic philosophy, and not to Christ, of an immortality of the soul, which some attempt to prove from plilosophic principles, but which cannot be thus proved, as the failure of Butler (analogy, chapter i.) shows.

Why does the worldly majority in the professing church practically exclude from its creed the hope of which we have been speaking in the preceding pages? Because it is worldly. This is a heavenly hope, a divine hope, a hope altogether of too refined, too pure, too spiritual a character to suit the tastes and habits of the world.

Wherever this hope is really and lovingly held, we have an indication of an unworldly and earnest spirit, longing after that purity—that higher life of holiness, which is promoted by the contemplation of the coming glory.

To have this hope—not taken up at second hand as many do, from prophetic books, and entertained as "an interesting subject"—but embraced by the arms of the heart as a treasure, pure, beautiful and fair, given by God's holy Spirit—this is indeed a mark that he who has it longs to be holy, for it is inconceivable that impurity of any kind can be willingly entertained side by side with the joyful anticipation of that pure reign of Jesus, and of the renewed body and spirit which the child of God shall have at his appearing.

And indicates, too, some yearning after universal holiness, after a purified, regenerated world; he who holds fast this hope will not be indifferent how others live and die. He cannot expect that all will be saved, but he will do his part in seeking the salvation of all, and pray with the deepest earnestness, "that God would shortly accomplish the number of his elect, and hasten his kingdom."

The believer who has this hope in him cannot be an idler. And if we hear any one enlarging on the prospect of the coming kingdom, while he does nothing himself to win souls to Jesus, we may set it down safely as a fact that that man's hope lies only in his notion and on his lips.

The thought, the expectation, the certainty of Christ's Second Advent, and the resurrection of his saints at his appearing, forms to the child of God, to whom it has been given to realize these things, not only a blessed but a most sanctifying hope. He can declare, with no unfaltering tongue, that these truths separate the soul from the love of this present world, making it not only to love the thing which God commands, but to desire that which he has promised—that thereby the heart is sobered in prosperous days, and calmed in times of trouble.

We lay it down as a principle which cannot be gainsaid, that hope has a more elevating effect than fear, both because hope invigorates and because it kindles love. We may lay it down as another fixed principle, that in proportion to the clearness of our hope will be the earnestness of our search after a thoroughly devoted life. Alas! how often do the children of God take their standard from the lives and the maxims which they see around them!

Far other should be their standard, their motive, their desire. To be like him, to see him as he is—to share that magnificent glory, to see the fulfilment of all the promises which long postponed, sometimes seem to us now as if they were never to be realized. Such hope may well give to the soul that vigor and consecration which, by beating down God's great rival—worldliness—shall purify us even as he is pure.

The misty, vague, hope of "going to heaven," is so indefinite that it loses much of its sanctifying power. But the plain scriptural objective hope of heaven coming down to earth, of a heavenly kingdom being established on this very earth of ours, when each hillside shall gleam with new verdue, each valley flow with more fertilizing streams, when the curse is removed, when the new and glorified bodies of the saints of God shall be perfectly fitted to carry out to success the loving aspirations of their hearts in the presence of the King—such a hope must sanctify him who holds it, in proportion as he keeps it before his eyes.

This hope will never purify if it be only held as a notion, or as one out of a circle of truths. It must be the leading thought of all; the aborbing, vital faith and hope which it was to martyrs and spostles, or it never will have the effect mentioned in the text of purifying us.

It has a most sanctifying effect. For "every one that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Such is the standard—Christ's own holiness. And why this? Because it is a hope of being with, and being like, the reigning Christ.

"With him, and like him." Reader, pause, and contemplate this great truth. Do you want a motive and a help to perfect consecration, advanced to holiness, "a higher Christian life?" Surely it lies in this double hope, "with him, and like him." And what if you knew his coming was—as it may well be—very soon? Oh, how would trifles take their true places! Trifling advantages, and trifling evils, would soon appear the little things they really are, when viewed in the light of what is so soon expected.

Expect your Lord's return—realize it as near, and it will not fail to have a most sanctifying influence.

Let love to Jesus who promises, and prepares with his own hands, all the coming glory, be our motive and our life. Let us adore the omnipotence of that arm, which like the helmsman's grasp on the tiller in the stormy night, shall yet put down all opposition, and guide the church of the first born, not only into all truth, but into position of honor on the ruins of kingdoms, and false religions, and sin. All, all, O kingly Jesus, shall fall before thee! All power is given unto thee in heaven and earth: "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever." Thine are these poor cold hearts of ours, redeemed, and washed, and supported by thee. O make us holy; O make us pure; O make us like thee in body too; when the thrones shall be cast down, and the tide of wrath on thine enemies, earth's dreadful vintage shall be over, and thou reignest in quietness and righteousness with thy chosen on Mount Zion. For this we hope, and look, and pray. Hasten the day, Lord Jesus, and meanwhile "purify us even as thou are pure."—Selected from the Rainbow.

Remember you are not a tree that can stand alone—you are only "a branch," and it is only while you abide in Him, as a branch, that you will flourish.

Our business is to seek a perfect conformity to the will of God, and then leave him to give us such comforts as he sees good.

THE CHURCH OF ROME.

BY J. S. POTTER.

"THE Church of Rome is now a phrase of magnitude and splendor, yet at first it stood for no more than an assembly of converted Jews, dwelling at Rome, who met for worship in the hired house of Paul of Tarsus, then a prisoner."—Robinson's Ecclesiastical Searches, p. 117.

"The early history of this church is covered with obscurity, but the deficiency of historical facts has been supplied by papist writers with a multitude of fabulous tales. But it is sufficiently evident that the Church of Rome remained for a long time a small body of Christians, who were but little known to the rest of the people of this great city. The bishop of Rome preached in a private house, and merely superintended the care of his little flock, and doubtless never expected his successors would arise to the highest summit of blasphemous eminence, and hurl their anathemas to distant nations, dethrone kings and emperors, and make them bow at their feet."

"The bishop of Rome arose by gradual steps to eminence and authority, until he acquired the title of Universal Bishop. This title was conferred upon Boniface III., by the Emperor Phocas in 606; and from this period writers generally date the rise of Antichrist. If this be correct, his race will end, or the 1,260 years will expire about fifty years hence."

"The pontificate was elevated to its highest pitch of worldly grandeur in the eleventh century, and the Man of Sin appeared to have attained the summit of arrogance and blasphemy in the person of Gregory VII. This pope was a monk before he was elevated to the papal chair. His name was Hildebrand; Firebrand, he might more properly be called. He assumed not only the appellation of Universal Bishop, but also those of Sovereign Pontiff, Christ's Vicar, Prince of the Apostles, God on earth, Lord God the Pope, His Holiness, King of kings and Lord of lords, Prince over all nations and kingdoms, The Most Holy and Most Blessed, Master of the Universal World, Father of Kings, Light of the World, Most High and Sovereign Bishop," etc., etc.

COUNCILS.

"The custom of holding councils, according to Mosheim, commenced in Greece in the second century. They were, by the Greeks, called Synods. Councils were, at first, mere provincial assemblies, collected together for the purpose of regulating the affairs of particular districts; but they soon arose to the most august and powerful assemblies, and assumed the supreme command of the whole catholic world."

"The first general council was held at Nice, in Bythinia, in 325, wherein the deputies of the church universal were summoned by the emperor, Constantine, to put an end to the Arian controversy, which then began to rage extensively. At this council upward of three hundred bishops were assembled; it held about a year. Some of the catholic councils sat many years, and assembled a standing army of bishops and ecclesiastics, who stood ready to suppress every heretical whisper."

"The Council of Placentia:

"There were present at this council two hundred bishops, four thousand ecclesiastics, and three hundred thousand laymen."

This council was more liberal than Adventists, according to the number of what the clergy called laymen.

"The Council of Constance was begun in 1414, and was held four years. At this council were assembled (says Millot) a prodigious number of cardinals, prelates and doctors; above a hundred sovereign princes of Germany, with the emperor at their head; twenty-seven ambassadors, and innumerable deputies from all the different States and communities of Europe, and among the rest a crowd of minstrels, courtesans, etc. All Europe was in commotion about this council."

I hope all Adventists throughout the different States of America will be in commotion, and say to councils, keep your handcuffs off.

"The famous Council of Trent was held eighteen years, and during the lives of five popes. It commenced in 1545, some time after the reformation was begun by Luther.

"The resolutions of a general council, as well as the decisions of the pope, are, by the Catholics, considered equal to Scripture commands." "The Romans borrowed councils from the Greeks, and Protestants borrowed them from the Romans; and Presbyterian synods and Congregational conventions, are considered by some as vestiges of the august and imposing councils we have thus briefly described. And, indeed, the meetings, called councils, among the Baptists, are thought by some to be branches of the corrupt tree."

I have given these extracts about councils, to show what abominations grew at length out of the Apostle Paul's hired house at Rome, and one extract more will give the climax.

"The Bishop of Rome soon rose to pre-eminence among his brethren, on account of his local situation, and the foundation for the magnificent papacy was laid. The bishops of Antioch, Alexandria, and Constantinople were soon exalted to superior dignity. Next came Archbishops, Patriarchs, Exarchs, Metropolitans, Suffragans, Popes, Cardinals, Monks, Nuns, Synods, Councils, Anathemas, Dungeons, Gibbets, Flames, and Death, all for the glory of a God of mercy, and the honor of his holy name."—Benedict's History of the Baptist.

Now for the two great events in the year of our Lord 1869. One in Europe and one in America. The great Ecumenical Council at Rome; and the great National Convention at Rochester, N. Y. One called by the old Mother, and the other by the "Youngest Daughter." Now, brethren and sisters, these will be great events; and I cannot tell which part of the globe will shake the most; whether it will be Italy or New York, but you must keep a good lookout, and the Saviour says, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

Dear brethren and sisters, as the civil arm of the law was resorted to in the days of "Constantine to put an end to the Arian controversy, which then began to rage extensively," "and assembled a standing army of bishops and ecclesiastics, who stood ready to suppress every heretical whisper," so the "Youngest Daughter" will assemble a standing army of ministers, who will stand ready to suppress every whisper of "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST;" and as the civil arm of the law was called for, and two Stars appeared in a hall in East Boston, Nov. 3, 1869, where Eld. George W. Brown was exhorting sinners to repentance, and showing them the way of salvation. I ask what will be the end of these things? Perhaps not only stars, but stripes.

I see a call to the brethren "with a cheerful heart," to supply the table of entertainment "with roast meats, fowls, butter, cheese, fruits, or other necessaries, for entertaining our guests."

Now, brethren and sisters, you that used to cry in '43 and onward, "Come out of Egypt," "Come out of Babylon," if you have got so "cheerful" that you can send supplies to the table of entertainment, while the guests are gagging your mouths, putting the handcuffs on, I will send you the bill of fare, that the oldest daughter had to entertain her "guests" on Thursday, the twenty-first day of August, sixteen hundred seventy-nine, when "Earl Haddington's son was baptized.

BILL OF FARE.

"Fresh beef, 6 pieces. mutton, 16 pieces; veal, 4 pieces; legs of venison, 3; geese, 6s; pigs, 4; old turkey, 2; young turkey, 8; salmon, 4; tongue and udders, 12; ducks, 14; roasted fowls, 6; boiled fowls, 9; chickens roasted, 30; chickens stewed, 12; chickens fricasseed, 8; chickens in pottage, 10; lamb, 2 sides; wild fowl, 22; pigeons, baked, roasted and stewed, 182; hares roasted, 10; hares fricasseed, 6; hams, 3; a puncheon of claret, etc.

Brethren and sisters, I have hastily thrown these extracts together, as a motive to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, and hope that we will all remember "the hole of the pit from whence we were digged."

A WREATH OF GEMS.

BY MRS. P. H. DAY.

FEAR not Christian, the light of his presence, the rod of his power, and the staff of his promise shall comfort thee in the trying hour.

He that hath true and perfect charity, seeketh himself in nothing, but only desireth in all things that God should be exalted.

Every accepted prayer is not immediately an answered prayer.

He that hath light thoughts of sin, never had great thoughts of God.

Every Christian should be a martyr in spirit.

Religion is the very best armor that a man can have, but is the worst cloak.

A holy life has a voice; it speaks when the tongue is silent, and is either a constant attraction, or a perpetual reproof.

Lowliness of heart is a real dignity, and humility is the brightest jewel in the Christian crown.

Death breaks the lantern, but cannot put out the candle.

One of the finest sights in the world is a Christian at the end of a long course, with an unsullied reputation; his hair may be white, but his leaf is green.

Faith can supply the want of temporal things, and faith is the grave of care.

Concerning the Free Gift.

"Therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Rom. v. 18.

On this passage Prof. Hudson in his "Human Destiny," writes as follows:

"It is in this one verse of the whole passage (vs. 12–21), that the word 'all' is used in the second number of the comparison. And it is used with the word 'men.' This apparently denotes all mankind, and their salvation. It seems to me the strongest passage that is or can be adduced in support of that view. And if this interpretation at all agreed with the general tone of Scriptural language, if it were not an apparent exception from the usual style of the Bible, I should joyfully and without hesitation accept it as proving the final holiness and blessedness of all.

"But the very frequent distinction between the 'saved' and the 'lost' compels me to hesitate and examine the passage more narrowly. And I cannot rest so fond a hope upon it for the following reasons:

"1. The passage is indisputably valid against all theories of a limited atonement. And even more; it seems to assert that in Christ's name the sentence of death for sin is annulled in behalf of all. 'God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them.' 2 Cor. v. 19. In this view the relation of persons unconverted to God is this: they have not to ask for the pardon of past sins, so much as to accept the pardon already made out. But this is all I can prove from the passage in hand. Comparing it with passages parallel, I at once find a plain distinction between pardon granted, and pardon accepted and received. In chap. i. 16 I read of the gospel as 'the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth,' Jew or Greek. In chap. iii. 22 I read of God's righteousness, or plan of justification, which is 'by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Jew or Gentile. Here the distinction seems to be fairly made by two prepositions, 'unto' (eis), and 'upon' (epi). In the passage in hand the first of these only is used. The phrase might therefore be rendered, 'by the righteousness of one the free gift came unto (eis) all men, unto justification of life.' In this view all men are virtually justified or pardoned, though by unbelief that may not be actually saved.

"But it will be said the same preposition is used in the first clause, 'upon (or unto, eis) all men to condemnation;' and if all actually die, why are not all actually saved? I answer, the sentence of physical death, even, is only virtual, not actual against all. Enoch and Elijah did not die. And Paul believed and taught that a whole generation of Christians would never die, but be 'changed' at Christ's coming. All these are born mortal as others; the sentence was 'upon' or against (eis) them, but it fails to reach them. So there may be those within the range and reach of the great salvation, who yet fail of it.

"2. In ver. 17 it is said, 'they which receive abundance of grace, etc., shall reign in life.' But the word rendered 'receive' (lambanontes) is slightly ambiguous. It may also mean accept or embrace. It is often used in the active sense, as well as in the passive sense. Its original sense is to take, and it is used in the common phrase 'respect of persons,' or acceptance of persons. It is also the root of the used 1 Tim. vi. 10, 12, 'lay hold on (epilabon) eternal life.'

"3. In vs. 14, 15, 16, 19 the distinction is made, not between 'all' as dead and alive again, but between 'many' and 'many.' The main argument may then rest on the comparison of the children of Adam with the children of God in Christ, which agrees so well with the general tenor of Scripture, and with which the 18th verse, as above explained, does not at all conflict.

"4. The whole passage shows that what is gained in Christ has once been lost. This is something more than bodily immortality. It is salvation in the broadest sense of the word. And the 'free gift' or gratuity is said to superabound, or to cover more space than the condemnation could, not because it gives more than was lost, but because one divine act of justification avails against 'many offences.' Thus salvation is exceedingly gratuitous.

"But it inevitably follows that the salvation has been once forfeited. In other words, eternal death was not an unjust sentence to be pronounced upon sin; and Adam might have perished, and the whole race in and with him without wrong to man. The passage confirms what I have before remarked—that annihilation has been invited and confronted. That God interposes to save is doubtless in keeping with his nature as love. We may even say that in saving man God is simply just to himself. But to man he is more than just. It is strictly true, 'By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gratuity of God.' 'The wages of sin is death; but the amnesty of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.'"

The foregoing paragraphs are copied from Prof. Hudson's book, for the consideration of all who hold that temporal or eternal salvation for the entire race of Adam, is taught by the Apostle Paul.

I think that Paul taught that salvation was proffered to all men, even as Christ taught it when he said, "The bread which I give is my flesh, which I give for the life of the world;" while he made that life conditional by saying in the same discourse, "He that eateth me, even he shall live by me." John vi. 51, 57.

Yours in Christ, F. H. Burbank.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 17, 1869.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Constitution of Man:

And his Final Destiny, by Dr. J. K. Finley.

This work will be issued next week, if we meet with no disappointment. Send in your orders, your pledges, and all the funds you can to enable us to send it broadcast over the land. It will do good execution wherever it goes. Give it or loan it to ministers and all others who will read.

The exact price of it we cannot state till next week. It will not exceed fifteen cents including postage; perhaps something less.

The Business of our Office.

We find some of our friends labor under a misapprehension as to the aid we receive from Br. Spencer. His whole time and energies are occupied on the mechanical part of the paper. He has the entire charge of the composition, reading proof, making up the forms and seeing it got to press in time; all of which he manages with skill and energy, in a business like manner.

On the Editor devolves all the work he has ever had to do for the past three years; such as preparing all the matter that goes into the paper, buying the paper, attending to all letters, keeping the cash and mail books, making all the entries therein, seeing to the printing of books, tracts and pamphlets, and answering all orders for them, which has been no small work. Our work, therefore, is the same and as great as it has ever been, and must continue so till we have funds to employ further help in the office.

Now, friends, please make our work as light as possible, by writing plain and not mixing up business and other matters on the same page; and be sure to give the post-office address, written distinctly, of all persons to whom the paper is to be sent or to whom credit is to be given. Hours of our time has been wasted by carelessness in these matters. You are not to suppose that if you write "Cr. John $2," that we know where to find his post-office. Please, in all cases, to state it plainly. It is the name of the post-office and the State in which it is located we want. The name of the town should not be written, as it tends to confuse, unless it is the name of the post-office itself.

All names of persons should be written so plainly that there can be no mistake. We have no means of deciphering names badly written.

Paul's "Desire to Depart."

The view taken of this matter by Dr. Finley, in his article which we published two weeks since, is the only rational view, in our opinion, that can be taken of the text. We know some, who reject the idea of the conscious state of the dead, have adopted the notion that the original word—analusia—here translated depart, signifies to return. If the word has this signification primarily, it cannot here mean the return of Christ, or His second advent. Such a construction of Paul's language makes him an egregious blunderer, or altogether an unreliable writer. In the first place, Paul has taught us, distinctly, that all the living saints at Christ's return will be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; and that they will be caught up together with the risen saints to meet the Lord in the air. See 1 Cor. xv., and 1 Thess. iv. 13–18. Fancy Paul teaching the Philippian church the same thing—that the living saints are to be changed from mortality to immortality at Christ's return from heaven, and together with the risen saints to be caught away to meet the Lord. All at once, he cries out, "O how I long for the returning of Christ from heaven that I may be with Him: but nevertheless for me to abide in the flesh, my present mortal state, is more needful for you Philippian Christians than for Christ to return."

Would not his brethren have been thunderstruck? What, Paul! your presence in the flesh a greater necessity for us than the presence of Christ himself! Do you really think you have hitherto told us falsely, when you said, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment at the last trump;" and that "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with the trump of God, and that we who are alive shall be caught up together;" and do you now tell us, Paul, that we are all to be left behind while you go, at our Lord's returning! and you are more needful for us than Christ himself! O, Paul, don't mock us! We have trusted your word, and thought if Christ returned from heaven, while you and we were alive, we should all be caught up together to meet our returning Lord! Alas, alas! it seems it is not so; for you now say, it is more needful for us for you to remain in the flesh than for Christ to return!

Did Paul excite hopes to blast them? Did he preach "yea and nay?" Did he make his own presence in the flesh a more important matter to the Philippian Christians than Christ's return from heaven? Never; no, never. Paul was not guilty of any such monomanianism.

If any insist the word analusia, translated depart, means to return, or returning, then we must find some other application of it than that of the returning of Christ; it must relate to some other returning. What other can it be, if not Christ's? Far better to say, we do not know, than to make Paul such a bungling writer as that construction would make him, and which would impair if not destroy his claim to inspiration and common consistency.

If we must give the term the sense of return, we can find the application without such hazard to the Apostle's character. He had been in the third heaven, or paradise, where he heard and saw wonderful things, and doubtless found himself "with Christ:" he certainly had seen Him; for he affirms this more than once; and here are the words of Jesus the first time He appeared to Paul, and Paul inquired, "Who art thou, Lord?" "I am Jesus . . . I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee." Acts xxvi. 15, 16. Paul, then, had personal interviews with Jesus more than once; with these revelations he was, at one time, in danger of being "exalted above measure," and so had "a thorn in the flesh given" him to prevent the self-exaltation; he was made to learn that he was still "in the flesh"—still a mortal man. What a glorious state he must have felt himself in when in paradise! how great his rapture! But he has to resume a lowly condition. Suppose ye he ever forgot the glory he saw and felt, which was too great ever to be uttered by a mortal? Would he not naturally desire and long "to return" to that state of glory into which it was once his privilege to be admitted; and that, too, before any of his fellow Christians? How natural for Paul, while contrasting his prospects between life and death to say, I know not which to choose, but if he could "return and be with Christ," as he had been with Him when caught up into paradise, it would "be far better" than to live in this mortal state or to die. He desired to return to that glory he had seen and felt when with Christ in the third heaven or paradise; but he knew it was "more needful for" them—the living saints—for him "to abide in the flesh;" "and having this confidence," says Paul, "I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith."

Thus we have a natural and rational solution of the whole difficulty, and avoid the contradictions that any other construction puts on the Apostle's statements in this and his other epistles, together with his preaching as recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. Do not let us make Paul stultify himself by construing his words to mean that it was the returning of Christ he speaks of. It was not and could not be possible for him to talk so contradictory.

We therefore repeat it, Dr. Finley has taken the only rational view of the subject that can be taken. All others are contradictory and unsatisfactory to a mind that analyzes a subject thoroughly.

A True Christian Sentiment.

"Father Hyacinthe," as he is called, in replying to the invitation of the Boston Clergy to visit that place, etc., among other things, said:

I am a Catholic, and hope to remain one. I have not broken with the church, but its abuses. I recognize true Christians in all the Protestant bodies, for I believe the true Church, embracing all who hold Christ as their head, is far wider than any earthly organization.

We have italicised the words to which we have special reference. They express a noble Christian sentiment, and ought to put to shame the narrow and bigoted notions of those who suppose none are "evangelical," nor even Christians, who do not, at least, unite with some of the "earthly organizations," called churches. The sentiment we here commend is that on which we have acted for the past thirty years. Let Christ, and him alone, be our "head": all else, without this, is chaff.

Thoughts on the Judgment.

Among the opponents of "Life only in Christ," the common argument offered in proof of the re-living of the wicked dead is, that "they must all be raised to life to be judged." While this is a specious argument to meet a desired end, yet we cannot but believe that it is based upon a great misconception of the testimony of Scripture.

This position involves the mortal resurrection of the entire race, irrespective of character. But will this stand the test of the Scriptures? Was Christ raised from the dead to mortal life? It is repeatedly claimed that man is raised in mortality for the purpose of being judged. But was Christ raised to mortal life to be judged? He was "without sin;" and this fact was sufficient knowledge in the mind of God upon which to base the execution of the decision which delivered Him from the state of death.

Again, if Christ was raised immortal then must the mortal resurrection theory collapse; for Christ was the "first fruits" of the harvest, and the harvest must correspond in character with the sample. We cannot suppose from any portion of Scriptures that the "first fruits" would be immortal and the remainder of the harvest mortal! The immortal resurrection of Christ involves the immortal resurrection of all who shall live again, for the same Spirit that raised up Christ from the dead will quicken our mortal bodies if dwells in us. Rom. viii. 11.

But we inquire, Is it necessary to raise the race to a mortal condition before rendering a decision which shall decide their eternal destiny? We admit that a decision must be made before it can be executed. But a decision is based upon evidence, and this implies a previous investigation on the part of the Judge. Is it necessary for God to defer the investigation of each individual's case till after the resurrection, in order for him to obtain the requisite knowledge upon which to base the decision that consigns one class back to death, and confers upon the righteous immortality? We repudiate such an idea. The very fact that a chosen number—"the elect," (Matth. xxiv. 31—are gathered at the coming of Christ, and share in the marriage supper of the Lamb, proves must conclusively that the investigation has taken place and the decision rendered prior to the resurrection. The execution of the decision is at the sounding of the last trump, when, as Paul says, "the dead shall be raised incorruptible." "It is sown a natural (or animal) body; it is raised a spiritual body." Therefore, the judgment at Christ's coming is not an investigative one in its character, but purely an executive judgment; and this conclusion we believe is abundantly sustained by the Scriptures.

How He was Led.

William Leask, D. D., editor of "The Rainbow," London, England, made the following "Statement," prefatory to a sermon he preached the last Sunday in October. He says:

There is one man in the world of whom I never like to speak, and that is myself, but in this case a brief personal statement is desirable with regard to what I may call my mental history, i. e., my mental history respecting the destiny of the lost. I have very vivid sights of things; it is an intellectual characteristic, not acquired, and it is a fact that I look at some matters in an intense light. Many years ago, in the exercise of this faculty, I was distressed exceedingly at the thought—the appalling thought—that the overwhelming majority of human beings were to derive no benefit from the death of the Son of God. I tried to realize, according to the teachings of modern theology, the dogma that countless millions of human beings are to be kept in a life of torture as long as God himself lived. I looked at his character as a God of love, who so loved man as to give his only-begotten Son to a life of sorrow, and a death of ignominy and agony; I looked at his gracious appeals to us, his tenderness, his loving care for the widow, the orphan, the stranger and the outcast, and I could not reconcile the manifest inconsistency. "It is no business of yours to reconcile it," I have been told. I beg pardon, all that is revealed belongs to me. I never pry into the unrevealed. As time went on, I found that this common doctrine of theology had made a countless number of infidels; men told us in plain language, "We cannot believe that God will everlastingly damn his creatures." I found that persons had been driven to madness by the contemplation of this awful theory. I heard men blaspheme the God I love on account of this doctrine, but, I, like others, thought and spoke of the immortal soul and never-dying spirit. Again the subject came before me, and I examined the Scripture and found to my utter amazement, that no such word appeared in the book as "immortal soul of man," or, "never-dying spirit." Here a flood of light burst upon me. If this be so; if man, as man, is simply a natural being, a mortal being, the doctrine of an immortal life in hell cannot possibly be true. I have always preached the doctrine of life only in Christ, but in the usual theological light, the spiritual, instead of the natural life we derive from Adam. In investigating this, I felt compelled to take this position—we must take God's word literally, except where parable or metaphor is found; everything that looks like a doctrinal statement must be accepted as the plain utterance of the Holy Ghost. I found this key invaluable. I saw that there are more resurrections than one—the resurrection of the lost and the resurrection of the righteous, do not take place simultaneously. I saw, too, what I have been teaching for many years past, that the kingdom and the church are two distinct things—that the coming of Lord will supersede the present dispensation, and that the present dispensation is the era of the church. At the same time, I narrowly studied the meaning of words. Philology is important in theology. I looked at the original meaning of words, in the language in which the Bible was given, and though "everlasting" frequently expresses far more than its Greek original, I accept it literally in relation to the doom of the wicked, because irrevocable destruction of being is "everlasting punishment." Now, look around me, and find numbers in Germany, multitudes in America, and not a few in England, who have recoiled from the doctrine, that the devil is to triumph and have the majority—that groaning misery and blasphemy are to exist forever; recoiling from that they have adopted the theory of restoration. Hundreds, thousands of Protestants, who protest against the Roman Catholic purgatory, have invented a Protestant purgatory, which is infinitely worse. I searched again, and came to the conclusion that restoration is unknown to the Scriptures. I cannot bear the thought that the fires of hell are to be more efficacious than the blood of Jesus. I have taught the destruction of the wicked dead for some time past, in the magazine which I have the honor to conduct, and I am glad to-night to come before you and be able to state—though I feel a deep sense of responsibility—that hundreds and thousands are meditating upon this great question. I am now about to place before you no theory of my own, no mere reasoning, but an exposition of Scripture, leaving it to you to judge whether or not it is according to truth. I shall conclude by asking a question, the asnwer to which is of importance to you as a congregation, and to me as your pastor.

[We will give our readers the sermon in a week or two.—Ed. Herald.]

The Wisdom of Judaism!

How true the Apostle's statement, "Blindness in part has happened to Israel," etc. Rom. xi. 25. The following account of a recent "Conference," of the Jews, held in Philadelphia, was sent us by Br. Grim. He says:

"I send you a few scraps cut from our Philadelphia papers, in relation to the doings of some of the Jewish brethren throughout the country. There are some strange things made known. In article second, they deny the destruction of Jerusalem was in consequence of their sins; also in article third. The sixth, denies Israel's hope of a resurrection. Please publish for the benefit of the readers of the Herald.

Conference of Rabbis—Reforms in the Jewish Worship Proposed.—A conference of Rabbis is now in session in this city, to take into consideration certain proposed reforms in the Jewish Church. The following named Rabbis were present yesterday: Rev. Dr. S. Alder, of New York; T. Chronik, of Chicago; S. Deutsch, of Baltimore; D. Emhorn, of New York; B. Telsenthal, of Chicago; T. R. Guthelm, of New York; S. Hirsch, of Philadelphia; K. Kohler, of Detroit; L. Mayer, of Selma, Alabama; M. Melziner, of New York; S. H. Sonneshein, of St. Louis; M. Schlesinger, of Albany, and T. M. Wise, of Cincinnati.

The Conference organized by the election of Dr. Hirsch, President; Dr. D. Alder, Vice-President, and Drs. Melziner and Telsenthal, Secretaries.

The following resolutions were adopted yesterday, after a long discussion:

Resolved, That in the marriage ceremony the bride shall no longer occupy a passive position, but a mutual avowal shall be made by the groom as well as the bride, by the pronunciation of the same formula and by an exchange of rings.

Resolved, That the formula in marriage ceremonies shall be—"Be wedded unto me as husband, respectively as wife, according to the law of God."

The following resolutions were also adopted, after a lengthy discussion, in which all present participated:

The Rabbinical Conference declares that Judaism in its present phase of development confesses the following principles to be embodied in public worship:

First—The Messianic aim of Israel is not the restoration of the old Jewish state under a son of David, the renewed segregation from the nations, but the union of all men as children of God in the confession of the one and only God, of the unity of all rational beings and their vocation for moral purity.

Second—We do not regard the destruction of the Jewish state as a punishment for the sins of Israel, but as the corollary of the Divine purpose expressed in the promise to Abraham, and more clearly developed in the course of history: to send the members of the Jewish race to all parts of the earth in order to accomplish their high priestly mission: to lead the nations to the true knowledge and worship of God.

Third—The Aaronic priesthood and the Mosaic sacrificial worship were only preparatory steps to Israel's national priesthood, actually beginning with the dispersion of the Jewish people and to the sacrifice of the heart's devotion and moral sanctification as alone pleasing to God. These institutions, therefore, designed to prepare a higher state of religious sentiment, are altogether numbered with the destruction of the second temple, among the things of the past and in this sense only—i. e., in their educational capacity—may be mentioned in our prayers.

Fourth—Every distinction between Aaronity and non-Aaronity with reference to religious privileges and duties, is therefore inadmissible in public worship as well as in practical life.

Fifth—The selection of Israel as a religious people, as bearer of the highest idea of humanity, must now, as ever, be emphatically expressed, and on that very account shall the world-embracing mission of Israel and the equal love of God toward all his children be just as distinctly enunciated.

Sixth—The belief in a bodily resurrection has no religious foundation, and only the continued spiritual existence is to be expressed.

Seventh—However urgently and unremittingly desirable as the fulfilment of a sacred duty the cultivation of the Hebrew language, in which the Divine treasures of revelation are stored and the immortal monuments of a literature governing all civilized nations are preserved is in our midst, yet since that language has become actually unintelligible to the larger majority of our co-religionists, it must yield on this very account in our prayer, which if not understood is a soulless body to the vernacular as far as the existing circumstances render it advisable.

The Conference of Rabbis.—The Convention of Jewish Rabbis assembled yesterday, at the residence of Rev. Dr. Hirsch. At the opening of the session Rev. Dr. Hirsch called the attention of the Conference to the death of the great philanthropist, George Peabody, and warmly eulogizing him, moved that the Conference express its sympathy. The President seconded the motion in fitting expressions, and requested the convention to rise, in token of respect, which was unanimously acceded to, and ordered that the proceedings be entered on the official minutes.

The following resolutions were passed:

7. The dissolution of marriage pronounced by a civil court, is of full validity in the eyes of Judaism, if the judicial documents furnish evidence that both parties have consented thereto; where the court issues, however, a decree of divorce by constraint against one or the other parties, Judaism recognizes the validity of such divorce then only if the grounds on which such a decree is issued, are deemed sufficient in accordance with the spirit of the Jewish religion. It is recommended, however, that the deciding rabbi obtain the concurrence of competent men.

8. The decision of the question whether the husband or the wife is to be declared, in doubtful cases, as dead or lost, is to be left to the courts. It was further resolved,

The command to marry the widow of a deceased brother and of taking off the shoe, has lost for us all understanding, all validity and binding force.

Further—The male child of a Jewish mother is by its birth not less than the female, in accordance with a principle never disputed in Judaism, a member of the Jewish community.

The following propositions were adopted:

The benediction now in use is to be replaced by one which fully expresses the moral elevation of the married state and emphasizes the biblical idea of the fusion of man and woman into one personality, and the Divine prohibition of illegal intercourse.

Polygamy is in direct opposition to the idea of marriage. The marriage of a man with a second wife can be as little valid, therefore, and as little claim the sanction of ecclesiastical authorities, as the marriage of a woman already married to another man is to be considered null and void.

The Conference then adjourned to meet in Cincinnati.

[We do not wonder that thinking men despair of the deliverance of the Jews from their blindness, when in this age of the world such a mass of truth and falsehood, of wisdom and folly proceed from learned Rabbis. But, "as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts, saith the Lord." His "word shall not return void."—Isa. lv. 8–11.—Ed.]

Decision.

"It is worth remarking, that many persons are of such a disposition as to be nearly incapable of remaining in doubt on any point that is not wholly uninteresting to them. They speedily make up their minds on each question, and come to some conclusion, whether there are any good grounds for it or not. And judging—as men are apt to do, in all matters—of others, from themselves, they usually discredit the most solemn assurances of any one who professes to be in a state of doubt on some question; taking for granted that if you do not adopt their opinion, you must be of the opposite.

"Others again there are, who are capable of remaining in doubt as long as the reasons on each side seem exactly balanced, but not otherwise. Such a person, as soon as he perceives any—the smallest—preponderance of probability on one side of a question, can no more refrain from deciding immediately, and with full conviction, on that side, than he could continue to stand, after having lost his equilibrium, in a slanting position, like the famous tower at Pisa. And he will, accordingly, be disposed to consider an acknowledgment that there are somewhat the stronger reasons on one side, as equivalent to a confident decision.

"The tendency to such an error is the greater, that there are so many cases, in practice, wherein it is essentially necessary to come to a practical decision, even where there are no sufficient grounds for feeling fully convinced that it is the right one. A traveller may be in doubt, and may have no means of deciding, with just confidence, which of two roads he ought to take; while yet he must, at a venture, take one of them. And the like happens in numberless transactions of ordinary life, in which we are obliged practically to make up our minds at once to take one course or another, even when there are no sufficient grounds for a full conviction of the undertaking.

"The infirmities above mentioned are those of ordinary minds. A smaller number of persons, among whom, however, are to be found a larger portion of the intelligent, are prone to the epposite extreme, that of deciding, as long as there are reasons to be found on both sides, even though there may be a clear and strong preponderance on the one, and even though the case be such as to call for a practical decision. As the one description of men rush hastily to a conclusion, and trouble themselves little about premises, so the other carefully examine premises, and care too little for conclusions. The one decide without inquiring, the other inquires without deciding."—Selected by F. H. BURBANK.

A DEBATE—BOTH SIDES.

A spirited debate took place in Natick, three nights last week, between Rev. Miles Grant and Rev. Henry Lummis, on the punishment of the wicked. Rev. Mr. Grant has made this a speciality for years, but the acute and educated brain of Prof. Lummis, supported by the Scriptures, was too much for his antagonist. He made his points with rare force and felicity. We should like to pair these off in all Advent troubled communities. It would help the truth.

The above we take from "Zion's Herald," of the 11th inst. The item is short, but is distinct in its utterance. Now let "Rev. Miles Grant" tell the other side of the story. We copy it from the "World's Crisis," as follows:

We have just closed a very interesting discussion with Prof. Lummis, in Natick, Mass. Bro. Lummis is the Methodist minister at Natick, and reported to be a fine scholar, having much experience and skill in discussion of knotty questions in theology and science. He is a sharp critic, and an interesting speaker. Our discussion began Monday evening, Nov. 1st., and continued three evenings, in Winch's Hall, where Bro. Lummis preaches. Large, attentive, and intelligent audiences were present each evening. Our friends were delighted with the results. Several were led to see the truth, and rejoice in the light more than ever before.

We discussed the following question: "Is literal death the penalty of the divine law for sin?" Bro. Lummis made the following admissions: "I do not maintain that man has an immortal soul; nor that the soul is identified with the spirit; nor that the soul of the good goes to heaven at death; nor that the soul of the wicked goes to hell at death; nor that sheol or hades is the place of final punishment." "I claim no life when the body and spirit are separated." "Life is the result of a union of forces." "There is no life where there is no organic activity." He then made the following strange assumption: "There may be consciousness where there is no life." We pressed Bro. L. for proof of this assertion, but it was not presented. We thought the reason was apparent—there was no proof to be given, because the assertion involved an absurdity.

Bro. Lummis manifested a kind spirit, and appears to be quite free from sectarianism, being willing to fellowship all who truly love Jesus. We enjoyed the discussion, and the audience expressed much satisfaction with their entertainment. To us the truth never looked more blessed. Bro. Lummis took the position that Adam's penalty was moral death, and that "the second death" will also be a moral one. We claimed that moral death is a crime, and never a penalty; that whenever death is a penalty, it is always literal; and as "the wages of sin is death," it must be literal death; and further, that when Christ tasted death for man, it was not moral death, for he was without sin. We found the Bible very clear in its declaration, showing that all the finally impenitent will for ever cease to exist as conscious beings, and be found no more at all.

Prof. Lummis claimed that man and all animals have a spirit that continues conscious after death. When we quoted from Job and Eccl., he endeavored to impeach both, and said his own intelligence was as much a revelation as any other revelation. This statement was cheered by infidels and spiritualists.

At the close of the discussion, it was proposed that the audience have the privilege of asking the disputants questions, to which we mutually agreed. After several questions had been put to each of us, an intelligent man arose, and made the following inquiry of Prof. Lummis: "If the Bible sustains Spiritualism, why do Spiritualists deny that it is divinely inspired?" As the Prof. did not see the point in the question, by his request it was thrice repeated; when the questioner said: "I am a member of your church, but I find you all on the side of Spiritualism, advocating their sentiments." This statement produced a thrilling sensation in the audience, and it was evident that many agreed with the questioner, and were glad that he had the courage to stand up, even against his own minister, when he ventured to impeach the Bible writers for the sake of sustaining his fabled position that man and all animals will never be unconscious.

It is a cheering thought that the time is coming when sin will be "finished," and none but the pure and the holy will live eternally. Our prayer is that the eyes of the people may be opened to see the wide difference between the Bible doctrine and popular theology.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. C. L. PERCIVAL.

BR. STORRS: Your "Canadian Correspondent" is such no longer. I address you to-day from the "Golden State," and wish you grace and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. I have not written you for a long time, but the reason is not a lack of interest in the paper by any means, nor in the grand and precious, but neglected subjects to which the paper is devoted; no, no; ever since Br. "Dwight" [Weaver] put me on the track of that great truth, future life only in Christ, it has been to me like the little girl's flower in the story; every day it has put forth a new leaf; constantly increasing in size and beauty. O, there's a power in pure, unadulterated truth that the Christian world, as a rule, know nothing of. I don't wonder, now, that primitive Christians were bold to testify, and strong to endure! I thank my God that the rich truth that supported them has been once more dug out from the rotten rubbish of Romish and Protestant theology, and given to us for our comfort and encouragement. We shall need it still more than now before long. Nor do I fancy I have in time past written "thirty dollars worth;" no, Sr. Maria; I should be loth to charge thirty cents for my poor scribbles. God bless your kind, thoughtful heart, and those who so nobly responded to your appeal. I can never pay that debt. The Master will, by and by. But I have been very, very busy, endeavoring to "feed the flock of God," and to "teach the people, and preach, through Jesus, the resurrection of the dead." And in this work I have been upheld and assisted by as noble and faithful a band of disciples as ever any man had to help him since the days of Moses, Aaron and Hur. Enjoying, in its fulness, "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," we have labored, in the pulpit, the prayer circle, the Sunday-school and the Bible class, to teach to all the glorious message of full, free salvation from sin and death to all the fallen race of Adam, who would accept it by believing on Jesus and keep his commandments, and walking in love, one with another. Still in this our work, all the way, the ministry and leading membership of the churches about us have feared and avoided us, and slandered and falsely accused us; charging us, from pulpit and pew, with being mischief-makers, disorganizers and disturbers of the peace of Israel, and teachers of false doctrines, etc. Yet the Lord so blessed us, and added to our numbers of "such as" I know, by their faith and godly walk, "shall be saved."

For more than a year I have been growing satisfied that my work in Canada was finishishing up, and at the same time way opened in such a manner for me to come to this country, that we were satisfied it was duty, and with many tears I bid them adieu.

We had travelled long together,
Hand in hand, and heart in heart;
Through both fair and stormy weather,
And 'twas hard, 'twas hard to part.

But such seemed to be the will of God; so, with my family, we started on our long journey, and through thickly peopled city and across the wild and barren desert, across the broad prairie, and over the lofty mountains; across mighty rivers, and along the borders of the broad lakes, over the dizzy tressle and through the gloomy tunnels, among rocks that reared their wild fantastic heads from 500 to 2,000 feet, almost over our heads! and anon rushing along the edge of the deep ravines, so deep that the flesh recoiled at the gaze; among soldiers and civilians, black and white; among Indians and Chinese, Mormons and savages of all kinds, as well as flocks of prairie chickens, prairie dogs, and antelopes, and finally through miles and miles of snowsheds, lighted only by the cracks between the boards; by steam car and steamboat; by omnibus and country stages, we found ourselves at the end of seven days and six hours travel, in the comfortable home of my son-in-law, T. Shurtleff, in this city, 3,145 miles from our starting place! And here I am, hard at work with my hands all the week, testifying to any and all, as I have opportunity, the great and precious truths of the gospel of the Son of God.

Of the future I know nothing. The Lord knows it all. I am his, and he will direct. "The field is great and the laborers are" not, as far as my knowledge extends. I know of no person in the country of like precious faith, outside of my family. I shall leave no opportunity unimproved of spreading the light; and I earnestly ask the prayers of those who feel an interest in these things, that I may be guided and sustained by Divine power, and that the word of God may have free course and be glorified. I remain, with much love to you and the brethren, most truly your brother in the blessed hope.

NEVADA CITY, CAL., Oct. 24, 1869.

FROM EMELINE WOOD.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: Praise the Lord with me; and as dear Br. E. Wolcott says in one of his letters to me, "let us exalt His name together;" and I say, Amen.

I have just received a letter from Br. W. this morning; and I leave my work to let you know that he says that he is well—only needs more strength. O glory be to God for his love to him in answering our prayers in his behalf; and I know that you will praise Him and do praise Him. O how precious the Lord is to me, and helps me. And now, you loved ones, pray for dear Br. Thorne, and our Br. Ladd, that God will raise them up to perfect health and strength; for if the pillars fall the building may totter; and if any of you are sick, ask our dear ones to pray for you. I will join you with all my heart; for I love you all I hope as Jesus does; and God knows my heart that I feel for the afflicted ones. Now, there is our dear Br. and Sr. Hamilton, both afflicted, and getting old and cannot labor. Do not forget them when at the throne of grace; for unity is strength, and if our prayers go up, as the heart of one man, God will answer, for He is faithful who has promised, and never fails; and I do not cease to pray every day for all the loved ones; nor do I forget one who has been dear to me, Sr. H. R. But I think she must have forgotten me; but there is one who never forgets us, and his loving kindness, O how great, how lasting; never gets cold; glory be to His name. When I look at our dear Br. Storrs I feel like praising God; for He can renew our strength as he does his; he looks ten years younger than he did years ago; and you all see for yourselves what God does for him. Prayer is constantly made for him. I never forget him and our dear Br. Spencer; and I know you all remember them, and that we all make it a special object for those I have named. God says, "Ask and ye shall receive." I have been very much exercised in their behalf; and especially for Br. and Sr. Hamilton. His wife goes on crutches; and I feel that God will certainly heal her if you ask him. He can do it just as easy as cure blind eyes. You all know what He has done for me and Br. W. The world needs all of us; for, how sin abounds.

Now I will tell you what I am doing. Sabbath afternoons I go out with the "Documents." Thursday evenings Sr. Earl and I go away down to Goosebeckville to prayer-meeting. I took some your tracts there and lent the one on the "Devil;" and when I asked him for it O how they begged me not to take it from them; but as some did not like to have me scatter the tracts where I went with them, I thought I would get it returned. One brother said, any one that spoke against such tracts was not what he should be, and his wife plead with me never to go anywhere without them; they think there never was anything so good.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, I appeal to you to ask God to give me strength and wisdom to do my duty; for I feel perfect weakness in myself.

Br. Storrs, give me advice, and one and all pray that God will bless the tracts to the readers. I should like some more on the "Devil," and some of "Little Dene," and also the "Soul Saved or Lost," if you feel as though you could afford it, as I have not one cent to spare, for I can hardly support myself.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 3, 1869.

Note by the Editor.

Act wisely. Spread the truth in love. Withhold not the tracts where the people want them and will read them. Those who forbid you to do so, are associates that you can well afford to part with; their company will do more harm than good. Be kind to all, but neglect not to speak for Jesus and his truth for any; pray for opposers; peradventure God may open their eyes. Such is our "advice" to you.

In a postscript Sr. Wood sends $1 for Sr. Hoyt, and writes:

She is 81 years old and very feeble; I do not think she will need the paper long. Oh, how hard to live to such an age and no one to care for or help her, and to need the comforts of life. I do hope God will not let her suffer long. She longs for Jesus' return, and to be at rest. She says the HERALD OF LIFE is a great comfort to her now. I must help her to get it.

FROM ELD. WILLIAM P. SHOCKEY.

BR. STORRS: The word of the Kingdom has never been spoken in this vicinity till this time. I have just closed a series of thirteen discourses at a school-house, five miles from Tipton. Had a full house all the time, and the most intense attention; and much inquiry was induced. Three different preachers were present during the course, at different times, each of whom made a slight attack; but after a flash or two invariably acknowledged that the things I spoke were both "strange and new" to them, and they were not prepared to controvert them. I failed not to agree with them, that they were strange and new; but the strangest of all was, that they should be new, and yet be the very things which were in the Bibles of the same preachers!

I showed that the Bible taught that man was mortal; his soul went to the grave, the pit of corruption; his spirit lost its life in death. Isa. xxxvi. 17. His thoughts perished. Again. That the wicked dead will not live, rise, or wake, but shall sleep a perpetual sleep; not be; are extinct, and shall be no more. The living wicked at Christ's advent will be destroyed from among the people. That hell was hades, the state of death, is the grave; and in it there is no work, device, wisdom, or knowledge; and that Jesus would put hell and death out of being, etc. Gehenna was the Valley of Hinnom, that has burned at Jerusalem for hundreds of years; into which criminals, for certain acts, were cast alive. Also, that the Saviour said just what every afflicted person would say, if an arm was so mutilated as to endanger life, they would amputate it—"It is better to live with one, than to have two arms to be cast into the Valley of Hinnom."

Also, that the kingdom of God, heaven, and of Jesus Christ would yet come, be set up in the time of these kings, and break them down, when Jesus sits on his throne, which He will do when he comes in his glory, on mount Zion, and not in the skies. That the saints will inherit the earth and never go to heaven; that the gospel of it was to take out of the Gentiles a people for his name, to be kings on the earth. That the devil, beast, false prophet was evil as a principle, personified; and personally wicked, leading kings and priests—men, who were to be given to the burning flame, and no place for them was found. That he that believes the gospel should reform, be baptized, and do well, to be Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

TIPTON, MO., Nov. 3, 1869.

FROM WM. LUCAS.

BR. STORRS: Enclosed find one dollar to help get out Dr. Finley's tract on the Constitution of Man, believing it will do good. I think any one will be profited by reading anything he may write on that subject. I cannot do any more at this time. I know the tract will be a rich treat, and I want some of the people here to see it. I will ask you to send half the amount in the tracts when they come out. I am here almost alone in the cause so dear to lovers of truth, and with but little education, but you can hardly tell how strong I feel, by the help of God, battling spiritism in all its forms.

A short time since I was sitting in a store, talking with a rich member of the M. E. church on our particular views. The preacher entered, when the talk stopped for a moment. I was requested not to stop for the preacher. I informed them I never was guilty of doing so, and the talk went on. The preacher pitched in, and after talking some time, I having to answer questions from every side, I asked this question of the preacher: Sir, do you believe that God has a place which you call hell, where all the wicked that have lived on this earth, are now suffering the pains of burning with fire and brimstone, and all that will live wickedly will suffer the same through all eternity? In the same breath I answered for him, No, sir, you don't believe it. He seemed to resent it, and said something about the spirit being the sufferer. I then asked him, What is spirit? He answered, "Soul, Spirit and God are one thing, immaterial substance." I replied, Sir, that is nonsense. I don't know but I was rude, but I could not help laughing when I told him he had a nothing-something for his God. Yet he insisted that he could make it plain.

The talk has done good, and I believe that he is a good man. He has promised to read any works I would give him. I presented him with "Halsted's Theology," "Bible vs. Tradition," and, by his own request, "Hudson's Future Life."

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Nov., 1869.

FROM GEO. W. BROWN.

BR. STORRS: I thought I would report myself through the HERALD, as some would like to know what I am about.

I left home on Friday, Oct. 29th, in the steamer Cambridge for Boston, to attend my appointment in Charlestown; and as it was snowing quite hard, Capt. Johnson thought it adviseable to make a harbor Friday night; and so we lay at anchor until Saturday morning, when we started on our way and arrived in Boston, 12 hours behind time. On our way, Saturday, like the men going from Jerusalem to Jericho, I fell among thieves, who stripped me of my overcoat, although they did not leave me half dead, as I was able to preach the truth in Charlestown, according to my appointment, where I found some good Samaritan who supplied me with a coat, so I could go on my way.

By request of Br. Potter I went to East Boston to meeting on Monday evening, and was invited by the preacher, who was to preach on Tuesday evening, to preach in his place; and he gave out an appointment for me, but one man in the congregation arose and said he did not want any arrangements made about the meeting without first cousulting him, and after the meeting closed, and most of the congregation had gone out, the preacher came and told me he should have to withdraw the appointment; and on inquiring the reason, was told the church had decided that no man should preach there who believed in the non-resurrection of the wicked. Some of the congregation were very much offended at the course they took, and advised me to give out an appointment for some other place; but I told them I did not want to make any division, and if they could do any good I should be glad.

I attended a meeting in Charlestown on Tuesday evening, and by invitation of both preachers, met with them again on Wednesday evening, and was told the man had made some apology for shutting me out; and after I came in Wednesday evening the preacher came to me and invited me to use my liberty in the meeting, which I did by occupying some three or four minutes in exhortation, and while I was speaking they sent out for two policemen, but not, however, to take me, as I found by inquiring of them after the meeting closed; but they had come to take Br. Potter, who had not said one word in the meeting; and as many of the friends wanted me to preach to them, before I left, I consented, if they would get a place and circulate the appointment. The next evening there came together quite a congregation at Br. Potter's house, and I preached to them some of the principles of the Life theme, which I think was well received, as one old sister came to me after the meeting had closed and said it was good. I told her then it was her duty to hold it fast; and others stopped until near midnight to ask questions on the subject, which I think was interesting to all who heard.

It appears that the opponents of the Life doctrine have concluded the only way to keep men from embracing it is not to let them hear on the subject; but, thank God, it is surely gaining ground. Wherever it is fairly presented it commends itself to every man's conscience in the sight of the Lord.

Our Camp-meeting in Herman changed the face of things in that vicinity. Before we could not have the meeting house there to preach this glorious truth in; but now it is free, as I heard just before I left home.

Yesterday I preached here in Richmond Hall, and expect to go from here to Hartford the last of this week.

Br. Henry Perkins is here from Plymouth, Maine, and his health is improved; so he was out to meeting all day yesterday, and I hope he will soon be in the field, feeding the flock of God which Christ hath purchased with his own blood.

Your brother in Christ, "looking for the mercy of God unto eternal life."

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 8, 1869.

FROM D. J. ELLSWORTH.

BR. STORRS: It is long time since I have written to you or the dear HERALD; but have by no means wavered in my interest for our paper, or the grand truths it seeks to promote.

I am well pleased with its appearance, as also to know that you have a more accessible location for your office.

I am laboring to spread the glorious doctrine of a Life future only through Christ, our LIFE-GIVER, by scattering the tracts you gave, also the HERALD, and hope to get some subscribers for it.

I carry tracts in my pocket when I go to the city; and as I am doing business with different persons, I tell them that I am also trying to do good, and hand them out the different tracts, which in this way are always received with favor. I have an appointment once a week, and the Lord is with me.

O, that all who love the Lord could get into this blessed truth. How honoring to God, and how important the mission of Christ to our benighted and dying race. "God is love," and now we can love Him; nothing in his government but what savors of love and mercy. I believe the truth holds us stronger than any hope we can have without it. It is a lively hope; stronger proofs presenting themselves every day, as we draw from the storehouse of truth. It tends to keep us alive and from going to sleep; but, oh, how many are falling back, growing cold and indifferent. The Bride tarries, and many slumber and sleep: but he that endureth unto the end shall be saved. What will become of those that do not endure unto the end?

I have for some time desired to do something for the tract cause; and as the call comes for publishing Dr. Finley's articles, I will send $1 along with two subscriptions due for the HERALD. I expect to be able to do more very soon. I should like some of those "Little Dene" tracts. As I have funds, will send on. You may send me two dollars worth of "The Constitution of Man."

WINDSOR, Conn., Nov. 11, 1869.

S. J. BRIMHALL, Mapleton, Kansas, writes: Time endears to me our beloved HERALD; the only living organ that has for its foundation, and proclaims fearlessly the most glorious and all important truth, "Eternal life in the kingdom of God" to the saints and to none others. Blessed thought! Eternal life reaches the redeemed of the Lord; and all the abominable, all that do iniquity; yea, all the wicked will be destroyed. In the history of the ages to come there will be a time when sin and sinners will cease to be, and the blessed of the Lord will enjoy fellowship with Jesus and the Father in the God-lighted dominion of perpetual day. God's plan is the best one.

Fellow Christian, if what God has promised don't cheer you, there is nothing in heaven above nor in earth beneath that can. God's promises of eternal life to all the finally faithful is enough. Ye weary, time-worn and storm beaten pilgrims, lift your heads and rejoice; and when heaven wafts breezes of love, which permeates your whole being, then breathe a tribute of thanks to our Father in Heaven, who is sustaining and preserving our beloved editor in his labor of love. May heaven crown our beloved HERALD with the best of results for another year.

Now, kind Christian brethren, when you approach the throne of the Father, please remember the sunburnt pilgrims away out here in Kansas, who don't enjoy the rich blessings of listening to the preached word and those annual feasts of love at Springfield, which are foretastes of that which is to come, but breathed a prayer in our behalf, that our faith fail not in the hour when tempted, that we may be finally gathered in where there shall be only one fold and one Shepherd.

FROM THOMAS MCCLARY.

BR. STORRS: I would again express my thanks to you and others of like precious faith, through whose instrumentality (under God) I have been made to see that the Bible teaches that there is only a future and eternal life for the righteous, to be given to them at the appearing of Jesus Christ; all others to "remain in the congregation of the dead." My experience, since the knowledge of this precious truth of Life only through the Lord Jesus Christ, has been of a very gratifying character; and I trust that I have been purified by these truths. Certainly a correct view of what the Scriptures teach, has or ought to have a sanctifying effect on the lives of God's people. We now perceive that "God is Love;" and that his mercy endureth forever. We once believed, as orthodoxy teaches, that the finally impenitent would suffer forever in a sulphurous lake of fire and brimstone; or, what the preachers told us would be far worse, suffer mental anguish in a place without a ray of hope; or, in other words, suffering the pangs of eternal misery, whatever that may be. I praise the Lord that I am now one of his freemen; and it rejoices me to hear through our HERALD that the good work is making progress.

With a prayer for your health of body and vigor of intellect to be continued to you as long as the Master sees best, that you may still contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, I remain your affectionate Br. in Christ.

WILMINGTON, DEL., Nov., 1869.

ELD. SAMUEL BRAGG, writes from Bangor, Maine; I thank God for the light that is shining from the blessed Bible in these last days of peril; yet the precious truth of Life only in Christ is very much dispised in many places; and yet I praise the good Lord there are a few who are embracing it and love it. I am thankful that I ever saw the blessed truth; it does me good, praise the Lord. It looks just like the character of God. Yes, He is a God of love. Some treat me with coldness because I believe "the wages of sin is death," and the "gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." The present truth has always been unpopular and will be to the end. But, thank the Lord, if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him. The kingdom will be cheap enough. Praise the Lord. May he speed the right, is my prayer.

OBITUARY.

BR. STORRS: I have been very negligent of my duty to write and inform you of the death of my good, kind, Christian father, Jonas Notestine. He died very suddenly whilst riding in his buggy in company with my mother. He was conversing with her when suddenly he laid his head in her lap and was dead. It took place on the 23d of June, 1869. His age was 80 years and 20 days. He was a subscriber and constant reader of your paper for several years. We miss him very much, and mourn for him; but not as those who have no hope. He was a faithful, persevering Christian, and a firm believer in Christ's second coming.

Is Your Lamp Burning.

Say, is your lamp burning, brother!
I pray you look quickly and see,
For if it were burning, then surely
Some beams would fall bright upon me.

Straight, straight is the road, but I falter,
And oft I fall out by the way;
Then lift your lamp higher, my brother,
Lest I should make fatal delay.

There are many and many around you
Who follow wherever you go;
If you thought that they walked in the shadow,
Your lamp would burn brighter, I know.

Upon the dark mountains they stumble,
They are bruised on the rocks, and they lie
With their white pleading faces turned upward
To the clouds and the pitiful sky.

There is many a lamp that is lighted,
We behold them anear and afar,
But not many among them, my brother,
Shine steadily on like a star.

I think, were they trimmed night and morning,
They would never burn down or go out,
Though from the four quarters of Heaven
The winds are all blowing about.

If once all the lamps that are lighted
Should steadily blaze in a line,
Wide over the land and the ocean,
What a girdle of glory would shine!

How all the dark places would brighten!
How the mists would roll up and away!
How the earth would laugh out in her gladness
To hail the millenial day!

Say, is your lamp burning, my brother?
I pray you look quickly and see,
For if it were burning, then surely
Some beams would fall bright upon me.

The Predicted Restitution.

"Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts iii. 21.

[Concluded]

3dly. We may take yet another word out of the New Testament, as illustrative of the times of restitution of which we speak—Redemption. St. Paul, in writing to the Ephesians, of the "Day of Redemption," says, that the Holy Spirit is the "earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession." And thus our Lord, when referring to the signs of his approaching advent, encourages his faithful followers by saying, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Now, in each of these passages, the word redemption is applied to a time which is yet future; and it relates to the full and complete deliverance of God's church at the second coming of Christ; to their perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, "when they shall receive the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world."

In one sense, indeed, the redemption of the church is complete, i. e., as to the price that has been paid, and the blessings which have been purchased. For Christ gave himself a ransom for all, and "by his one oblation of himself once offered, he made a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world."

But the effects of redemption are incomplete. For if we look to the saints on earth, though a mighty change has passed upon them, though their understandings are enlighted, and their hearts renewed by the Holy Spirit, yet how many sad traces of their natural corruption remain! How dim is their spiritual vision, and how little do they understand of the Divine truth! Vain thoughts and evil imaginations disturb and distract them; their prayers are hindered, and their praises are often heartless. Fearful, oftentimes, is the strife that goes on within them, between sin and holiness—between God's will and their own, between the love of the Father and the love of the world. And besides all this, and besides sore temptations, there are the weakness, the imperfections, the weariness, the diseases of our mortal bodies, so that, as the apostle says, "We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house that is from heaven."

Then again, if we look to "them who sleep in Jesus," even they have not received the full effects of redemption. . . .

And if we look, lastly, to the visible creation, and to the framework of the world we live in, does not the apostle tell us that "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain until now?" The volcano, the earthquake, and the storm, plague, pestilence, and famine, desolating floods, and wasting blights, and mildews: these are the tokens of a world which has been made "subject to vanity," and upon which has descended the curse of Adam's sin; the whole face of nature is defiled; and, as it has been beautifully expressed, the earth is now "a wreck of what she was: still lovely in many of her aspects, though in sore distress; still majestic, and venerable, though a venerable ruin, appearing as out of joint; and giving token, by her extended deserts, and the gloom of her unpeopled solitudes, and her wintry frowns, and her many fierce and fitful agitations, that some mysterious ailment hath befallen her." But when the day of redemption shall come, all these evils shall be done away; the church shall no longer be vexed with sin, nor bowed down with sorrow, nor buffeted by Satan; the body will be no more a clog, and a hindrance. For then will have taken place . . . "the redemption of the body;" they that are Christ's shall rise at his coming, and we that are alive and remain shall be changed into the same immortality, and "death shall be swallowed up in victory."

And then, too, shall the effects of redemption extend to the world itself, and the creation shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God; together with man, it will be emancipated from defilement and dishonor, and shall come forth in everlasting beauty and unfading loveliness, to minister alike to the wishes of its inhabitants and its Creator's glory. And hence it is, that when the times of restitution of all things are spoken of, and the coming of the Redeemer is announced, all nature is summoned to an act of adoration to its Maker's praise. The voice of melody is heard from the mountains and the forest. The valleys and the rocks are made to sing. The whole of the inanimate creation is represented as vocal; and in one universal chorus it hails the Lord's advent and celebrates the jubilee of the earth: "The floods clap their hands and the hills be joyful together before the Lord, for he cometh to judge the earth; with righteousness shall he judge the world and the people with equity."

Christ has redeemed this world of ours. He has paid the price of his own precious blood to get it back. . . . "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil;" and destroy them he will, not only in the souls and bodies of his redeemed people, but in the world itself, through every one of its departments; when he takes to himself his great power, when he removes the curse of sin. . . . Then will be the redemption of the purchased possession. . . . the "kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."

To sum up what has been said upon this part of the subject, here are three Scriptural words by which the future condition of the world is described.

First, Restitution, not the annihilation of this material world—not the blotting it out of the universe of God, as if it had never been; but the replacing it into its former state—not Destruction, but Renovation; the reparation of the mischief which sin has produced, and the restoration of God's work in all its original beauty and perfection.

Secondly, Regeneration, that is, the world's new birth—that like as the regenerate sinner is created anew in Christ Jesus, that henceforth he may become a habitation of God by the Spirit: so this fallen world might have its new birth also, and become a fit dwelling place for the saints when he that is to sit upon the throne shall say, "Behold, I make all things new."

Thirdly, Redemption, that is, the getting back of a lost inheritance, by the payment of a price: and this price has Jesus paid. The world belongs to him. It was his by ancient covenant before it was created, "for all things were made by him and for him," and he has made it his by righteous purchase since. That which the first Adam had lost and forfeited by sin, the second Adam regained by redemption, and overpaid its value with his blood. In due time the full effects of this redemption shall be manifested, and Christ shall have the world for his possession and inheritance; as it is written, "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

Fourthly. To these three Scriptural words, we may just add one more.

Refreshing. "The times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." That is, breathing time, rest. Now, the Christian has no respite from conflict, and effort, and temptation. His safety lies in continually struggling; and his joys are those of gaining fresh conquests, not of established peace. The world in its present state is not rest, "there remaineth a rest for the people of God." The word in Greek, Sabbatismos here translated, meaning literally, "the keeping of a Sabbath," seems to be a recognition of the well-known Jewish opinion that Messiah's kingdom of blessedness would occupy the seventh thousand years of the world, answering to the seventh day of rest, after the six days of creation. The same opinion prevailed amongst the early fathers of the church; and it is beautifully alluded to by our Christian poet, Cowper, in his "Task," Book VI.

The belief has been entertained among all civilized people from Egypt downwards, and by all classes of religionists, that this world is a week world, six working days and a Sabbath.

We are on the eve of a momentous crisis in in the history of the world—"For the Lord will finish the work, and cut it short, in righteousness; because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth;" soon may take place the first resurrection, "For unto them that look for him (the Lord Jesus Christ) shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." The midnight cry is already made, and it waxes louder and deeper. "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." . . . "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we who are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (go before) them who are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord; wherefore comfort one another with these words." And this may take place at any moment, for it is written, "Watch, therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." "Be ye ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Soon may the Jews return to their land, rebuild their temple, and re-establish their ordinances. A prospectus has been already issued for that purpose, and a society formed for restoring the Jews to the Holy Land.

When the Lord gives unto Jesus the throne of his father David, then shall be heard great voices in heaven saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Then shall the Lord Jesus enter upon his glorious reign with his saints for one thousand years. "Then shall the earth be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." "Then shall the Messiah have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth; and men shall be blessed in him—all nations shall call him blessed."

And then, what a change to this very earth which has so long been groaning! what deliverance and joy! Christ upon his throne, the beast and the false prophet in the abyss; and Satan bound in chains; the saints exalted and glorified; the wicked trodden under foot and put to shame; the curse removed; paradise restored; Israel gathered; the Gentiles converted; creation blessed; and Jehovah, in the person of Immanuel, reigning with his risen and glorified saints in peace and righteousness over the happy nations of this earth.

Do chronological prophecies as well as the signs of the times indicate that the second advent of our Lord is near? "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Accepted in Christ now, and clothed in his righteousness, may we so "occupy till he come," that when he cometh we may be received by him, with the welcome words, "Well done, good and faithful servants, enter ye into the joy of your Lord."—Selected from the Rainbow.

Animal Instinct.

"The subject of animal instinct seems to form a point of contact between natural history and the philosophy of the human mind. And yet, beneficial and interesting as this circumstance alone might make this particular branch of study, a treatise upon instinct is still a desideratum; something like a philosophic or systematic view of the subject—a distinct and satisfactory answer to the question, 'What do you mean by instinct?' is still wanting. It seems that however far advanced we may be in a dictionary on the subject of instinct, a grammar is a thing very much wanted."

"To say, as many are accustomed to do, that brutes are actuated solely by instinct, and man by reason, is contrary to the implied rule, that a being is acting instinctively when impelled blindly toward some end which the agent does not aim at or perceive; and on the other hand, that it is acting rationally, when acting with a view to, and for the sake of, some end which it does perceive. For, as some things felt and done by man are allowed to be purely instinctive—as hunger and thirst, for instance, are evidently instincts—so many things done by brutes, at least by the higher description of brutes, would be, if done by man, regarded as resulting from the exercise of reason.

"In many instances we know this is not the case. A man builds a house from reason—a bird builds a nest from instinct; and no one would say that the bird in this acted from reason. But in other instances, man not only does the same things as the brutes, but does them from the same kind of impulse, which should be called instinctive, whether in man or brute. And again, several things are done by brutes which are evidently not instinctive, but, to all appearance, no less rational than human acts, being not only the same actions, but done from the same impulse. The domestic animals exhibit many instances of this. There is an incident upon record, and there seems no ground for doubting it, of a dog, which being left on the bank of a river by his master, who had gone up the river in a boat, attempted to join him. He plunged into the water, but not making allowance for the strength of the stream, which carried him considerably below the boat, he could not bear up against it. He landed, and made allowance for the current of the river, by leaping in at a place higher up. The combined action of the stream and his swimming, carried him in an oblique direction, and he thus reached the boat. I do not vouch for the accuracy of this anecdote, but I see no grounds for disbelieving it, as it is of a pieces with many other recorded instances.

"There is another instance of this nature, which did come under my own observation, in which the actor was a cat—a species of animal generally considered very inferior in sagacity to a dog. This cat was known, not merely once or twice, but habitually, to ring the parlor bell whenever it wished the door to be opened. Some alarm was excited on the first occasion that it turned bell-ringer. The family had retired to rest, and in the middle of the night the parlor bell was rung violently: the sleepers were startled from their repose, and proceeded down-stairs, with pokers and tongs, to intercept, as they thought, the predatory movements of some burglar; but they were agreeably surprised to discover that the bell had been rung by pussy, who frequently repeated the act whenever she wanted to get out of the parlor.

"Here are two clear cases of acts done by a cat and a dog, which, if done by a man, would be called reason. Every one would admit that the actions were rational—not, to be sure, proceeding from a high order of intellect; but the dog, at least, rationally jumped into the stream at a distance higher up from the boat into which he wished to get, because, having made the trial, and failed, he apparently judged from the failure of the first attempt, that his course was to go up the stream, make allowance for his strength, and thus gain the boat; he found that it would then carry him to it instead of from it: and the cat pulled the parlor bell because she had observed, that when it was rung by the family, the servant opened the door.

"It appears, then, that we can neither deny reason universally and altogether to brutes, nor instinct to man, but that each possesses a share of both, though in very different proportions. And yet the difference between man and brute, in respect of intelligence, appears plainly to be not a difference in mere degree but in kind. An intelligent brute is not like a stupid man. The intelligence and sagacity shown by the elephant, monkey and dog, are something very different from the lowest and most stupid of human beings.

"In fact, in the most striking instances in which brutes display reason, all the intellectual operation seems to consist in the combination of means to an end. The dog who swam from a higher part of a river to reach the boat, the cat who rang the bell to call the servant, these, and many other similar instances of sagacity, appears to consist but in this.

"But the great difference between man and and the higher brutes appears to me to consist in the power of using signs—arbitrary signs—and employing language as an instrument of thought. We are accustomed to speak of language as useful to man, to communicate his thoughts. I consider this as only one of the uses of language. That use of language, which, though commonly overlooked, is the most characteristic of man, is an instrument of thought. Man is not the only animal that can make use of language to express what is passing within his mind, and that can understand, more or less, what is so expressed by another. Some brutes can be taught to utter, and many others, to understand, more or less imperfectly, sounds expressive of certain emotions. Every one knows that the dog understands the general drift of expressions used; and parrots can be taught not only to pronounce words, but to pronounce them with some consciousness of the general meaning of what they utter. They call for food; when displeased, scold; and use expressions in reference to particular persons which they have heard applied to them. Almost every animal which is capable of being tamed, can, in some degree, use language as an indication of what passes within. But no animal has the use of language as 'an instrument of thought.' Man makes use of general signs in the application of his power of abstraction, by which he is enabled to reason; and the use of arbitrary general signs, what logicians call 'common terms,' with a facility of thus using abstraction at pleasure, is a characteristic of man.

"The implantation and modification of instinct in animals, in consequence of the education received by many generations of their predecessors, is a point well worthy of inquiry. The most widely diffused of all implanted and modified instincts is that of wildness or tameness. Whether the original instinct of brutes was to be afraid of man, or familiar with him, I will not undertake to say. My own belief is that it is the fear of man that is the implanted instinct. But at any rate, it is plain that either the one or the other, wildness or tameness—must be implanted, and not an original, instinct. All voyagers agree, that when they have gone into a country, which had not apparently been visited by man, neither bird nor beast exhibited fear. The birds perched familiarly upon their guns, or stood still to be knocked on the head. After the country had been for some time frequented, not only individual animals become afraid of man, but their offspring inherit that fear by instinct.

"There are many cases in which it cannot be ascertained toward what the immediate impulses of animals tend. We do not know through the medium of what organs birds are induced to put food into the mouths of their young. We see a pair of birds searching all day long for food; and in many instances, the food they seek is such as they do not feed on themselves—for example, graniverous birds hunt after caterpillars for their young: in other cases they seek for food which their own appetite incites them to eat; but they treasure it for their young, and are impelled by an instinctive appetite to put it into its mouth when opened. And this instinct is not peculiar to birds. The mamalia partake of it, for we find wolves, dogs, and other carniverous animals bringing home meat, and leaving it before their young ones. If a bitch or wolf has pups, and cannot bring food to them otherwise than by first swallowing it, she swallows it, and then disgorges it; for the animal has the power of evacuating its stomach at pleasure. Pigeons invariably swallow their food before they give it to their young. Take the case of migratory birds—even those which have been caged: when a particular season arrives, they desire to fly in a certain direction; but what leads them in that direction cannot be understood. That direction is pointed out to them by God; but how pointed out is only known to Him. And how delightful to a pious mind is it to contemplate every proof of the wisdom, goodness, and power of God—to mark everywhere the work of that same Creator's hand who has filled the universe with the monuments of His wisdom."—(Whately).—Selected by F. H. Burbank.

The great globe itself is not more interlaced with golden veins, and filled with precious things, than the field of revelation, the storehouse of the unsearchable riches of Christ.

They who make the glory of God their end, and the word of God the guide of their affections, and His providence the guide of their affairs, may be confident that the Lord goes before them as truly as he went before Israel in the wilderness, though, perhaps, not so sensibly.

Christ is almighty, and therefore perfectly able to restore lost powers, root up inveterate habits, and implant heavenly tempers.

The Old Herb Woman.

Alice found her one day resting under the cooling shade of a tree outside the garden gate.

"Do you want something?" asked Alice.

"Yes, my child," she answered, "I want a new dress."

"A pretty calico?" asked Alice.

"That will too soon fade," answered the poor herb woman.

"A black woolen?" asked Alice.

"That will too soon wear out," answered she.

"A silk?" asked Alice.

"I have nothing fit to wear with it," answered the herb woman, and Alice thought as much.

"A plaid, a beautiful plaid?" asked the child.

"That will too soon go out of fashion, answered the herb woman.

"Do you care much about the fashion?" asked Alice.

"I want the dress to last me a thousand years or more," said the old waman.

"Oh," exclaimed Alice, drawing back, for she half thought the poor woman was crazy, "do you expect to live so long?—A thousand years is a great, great while, and you are pretty old now."

"I shall live longer than that," said she.

"I will ask my mother," said the little girl, puzzled, "if she knows what dress would suit you, and perhaps she 'll buy it for you."

"Your mother is not rich enough to buy it, dear child," said the woman.

"My father is rich," said she.

"Not rich enough to buy me the dress I want," answered the old woman.

"Do you want to dress like a queen?" asked Alice.

"No, but I want to bressed like a king's daughter."

"The old herb woman is crazy," thought Alice to herself, "she talks so queer."

"I don't know where you will get such a dress," said she aloud, "something that will never fade, never wear out, never go out of fashion."

"And never get soiled or spoiled," added the old herb woman; "wear it when and where you may, it will always keep white and shining."

"Oh," was all Alice could say. Then she added, I should like such a one, I am sure. Could a little girl have one? But a little girl would outgrow hers."

"No," said the herb woman, "the dress would let itself out so as to suit you always."

The child was lost in wonder. "Will you please tell me what it is, and where I can get one?" she asked.

"It is the garment of salvation, the robe of righteousness, which Jesus Christ has wrought out for you and for me, dear child," said the old woman, tenderly. "Christ came to take away the poor rags of our sins, and to put on us his white robes, and make us fit to be children of God, the great King, and live in his palace forever. Should you not like to, dear child?"

"Yes," answered the child, "I do want to be one of God's children. I always wanted to. Will he give me a heavenly dress, do you think?"

Two Rules about Swearing.—A boy finding himself tempted to forget, pasted these two rules on his desk, and hung them up in his room:

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

"Swear not at all. Let your communication be, Yea, yea: Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

I think a great many boys had better follow his example.

A Dying Child's Thanks.—A sweet child, who had been trained in the way of religion by a parent, kind but judiciously firm, as she sunk to rest in peaceful reliance on her Saviour's love, affectionately thanked her beloved mother for all her tender care and kindness, but added, "I thank you most of all for having subdued my self-will."

A Sunday-school teacher, speaking one day to his children upon the depravity of the human heart, asked his children if they knew any one who was always good; one of the class, prompted by simple, and child-like affection, instantly replied, "Yes, sir, I know one—my mother."

The Christian knows that God hears and answers prayer; he knows this, not only because it is written that they who ask shall receive, and they who seek shall find, but because, having asked, he has actually received, and, having sought, he has found.

Enjoy the blessings of this day if God sends them; and the evils bear patiently and sweetly. For this day only is ours; we are dead to yesterday, and we are not born to-morrow.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE NATIONS.

A Sermon by WM. LEASK, D.D., England.

"Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal."—Matt. xxv. 41, 46.

THIS is the stronghold of those who believe that the everlasting punishment of the wicked is life in hell, but I will prove to you that this passage says absolutely nothing about the dead, and if I can show that this—one of the strongest passages for the theory in question—does not teach it, and that the unsaved dead of past and future generations are not on the scene at all, I shall have put in your hands a key with which to open the locks of this theological dispute. What are the facts? There is no mention of resurrection in the context; the people living on the earth when Jesus Christ shall set his feet on Mount Olivet—the sheep and goats spoken of in this passage—men in fleshly bodies are referred to, and none else. Our Lord begins his ministry with his wonderful sermon on the mount; what the name of that mount was I do not know, but the character of the sermon we all know; it is didactic, moral, spiritual, and deeply suggestive; our Lord closes his public ministry with a sermon on a mount, the Mount of Olives. We find that sermon in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth chapters of St. Matthew. Two days after he had uttered these words, he was betrayed and handed over to his enemies. About the last words of such a sermon there must be something exceedingly important. We have described to us the disciples coming to him in great distress, after he had told them that he was about to leave them, and saying, What a beautiful temple, what a glorious building, what stones we see here, what cost, what splendid architecture! He had just bidden farewell to Jerusalem, in the words, "Ye shall see me no more, until ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." The entire discourse refers to his return, and the allusions and references are so purely Jewish, that the disciples could not fail to understand him. This fact will throw great light upon the subject. The parable of the virgins begins thus: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins;" the other parable is, "The kingdom of heaven is like a man travelling into a far country," who, when he returns, rewards his servants according to their fidelity. Now, could Christ's Jewish hearers understand him in these sayings? Undoubtedly the moral import of these teachings is, "I am to be taken from you, and crucified, but I will do all the prophets have said, notwithstanding." Prophets have spoken about the Lord being married to his Jewish people—it shall be so; prophets have spoken about the Lord being proprietor of the world, and requiring fidelity in his stewards—I will come and demand an account; prophets have spoken about the "goats," and repeatedly described the enemies of Israel under this name, and the prophets have spoken about the time of tribulation, when the Lord will come and deliver the suffering remnant of Israel. He meant to say, "Do not be terrified, I will prove myself the promised Messiah." That was the impression produced on their minds.

I. Who are the persons judged? You will find them described in Joel iii. 2. "I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land." The Septuagint uses the very words of Matthew, panta ta ethne, "all nations," all the heathen. Now look at Isaiah x. 20, 21: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them, but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth. The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God." Clearly our Lord is describing the time when the controversy of Zion shall be settled, and if you just look at what he says in the chapter we have read, you will see this. Inasmuch as ye did it, or did it not, to one of these my brethren, who are described as sick, as imprisoned, as hungered, as athirst, as naked, and as deeply afflicted, ye have done it, or not done it, unto me. He is speaking of his Jewish brethren, the remnant of Israel that have turned to the Lord, and that have dared to refuse to worship the Antichrist. The enemies of God on the one hand, and the persecuted Jews on the other, are obviously referred to in the seventy-ninth and hundred and second Psalms. "Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God? let him be known among the heathen in our sight by the revenging of the blood of thy servants which is shed. Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee; according to the greatness of thy power preserve thou those that are appointed to die." Ps. lxxix. 10, 11. "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth; to hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those who are appointed to death; to declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem; when the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to serve the Lord." Ps. cii. 19–22.

Now then we have this: we have the triumph of Antichrist, and the picture of the small, faithful remnant who refuse to worship him and receive his mark on their foreheads; we see many in dungeons, "appointed to die." The mandate has gone forth from the cruel king, that no one shall relieve them under penalty of death; but Christ says to the righteous, "You have relieved those who were in prison, your suffering, tortured brethren, and now I have heard the sighing of the prisoner, and have come to deliver him," This is the time described in Rev. vi. 16, 17, when the panic-stricken foes of the Lord shall call to the mountains and rocks, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"

Christ has come to open the prison-houses of Judea, and other parts of the world over which the blaspheming Antichrist has had power, and he deals with nations, the representatives of the world who shall be present at that time; he calls them before him, and he deals with them as the Shepherd-King of Israel, who has come to his throne. He sets the sheep on his right hand, and the goats on his left.

II. Now we come to the sentence contained in the text. The language is distinctly Jewish, and refers to matters which the Lord's hearers would easily understand. Christ does not speak about the church to these Jews, because at that time it did not exist, and they would not have understood him. Look at Isa. lxvi. 15, 16: "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Passing over the next few verses, read the twenty-fourth. "And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh." Go a little further, down to Malachi, and we see the effect of fire upon these impious men. "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." Malachi iv. 1–3. There is no mention of "resurrection." It is manifestly the judgment of the living. Come, then, to the man who connects the two Testaments, John the Baptist, and hear what he has to say about the Lord Jesus as the King of Israel. "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. iii. 12.

Any one will see, without knowing Greek, that chaff having had fire set to it, will speedily be reduced to ashes. If the fire be not quenched, the work of destruction will be complete. It is a remarkable fact that hell is never mentioned in the letters written by the apostles to the churches. Peter and James wrote, as you are aware, to the twelve tribes and the scattered ones of Israel: James uses the word "hell" once when speaking of the tongue of the wicked—"It is set on fire of hell"—that is purely a metaphor. Peter speaks about the rebellious angels being cast down into hell, but that is a wrong translation of the word "tartarus," which means a prison-house, not necessarily of punishment, but a place of detention, where these angels, whoever they were, are "reserved unto judgment." We should like very much if we could find from one of Christ's apostles, how he understood the everlasting punishment mentioned by the king of Israel in our text. Well, it so happens that we can. Turn to 2 Thess., i. 9, and you will get an inspired explanation of "everlasting punishment."—"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction"—literally whose punishment shall be eternal destruction—"from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Here criticism of the meaning of words is exceedingly important. If those of you who can do so will look at your Greek Lexicon, it will be seen that the word "destruction" is the strongest, except the word "perish," which has substantially the same meaning—for an utter and eternal cessation of being; "everlasting punishment," as explained by Paul, is "everlasting destruction."

The meaning of the expression throughout the Scriptures is Destruction—the very words of our text prove this: "These shall go into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal," or "life everlasting." What is the contrast, what is the opposite of life? Death! Throughout the Scriptures this is the fact of the case. In that gospel text, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," the same meaning is clear. The Scripture statement is "the wicked shall not be," that is, being shall cease, the organized being shall come to an end. It is the same thing as annihilation, practically, but it is not that, for I maintain that there is nothing to annihilate; no mortal life could possibly be continued without a miracle. If you notice throughout the Scriptures, God speaks of us as descended from a man, having natural animal life only, and he speaks of the salvation he sends to us that we may have life, and not come into condemnation, as a "gift;" the punishment being by fire, as it was of the old world by the deluge of water.

III. Let me ask your attention to the place of execution, and you will see that as far as I have gone everything is perfectly harmonious. "When the Lord comes and sits upon his glorious throne, he will gather all nations before him." If you take the great men and the great captains who shall be there by order of the Antichrist, you have the representatives of the heathens. The time for that judgment may be very brief, but if you like to prolong the thought, you may well imagine that the nations are shortening the period that will elapse, that telegraphs and railroads are hastening the time, when the true king of humanity shall be on his throne, and put down all evil. You will not understand this subject, unless you believe in Jesus Christ as king sitting upon his throne of glory; on his left (to the south of Jerusalem) stretches a long valley, known among the Jews, as the valley of Jehosophat, or, that valley of the Son of Hinnom. The god of the Ammonites (named Moloch), was worshipped in that part of the valley of Jehosophat, known as the valley of the Son of Hinnom. Now, God had strictly forbidden the Israelites to pass their children through the fire to Moloch, but they did it frequently, notwithstanding. Solomon had built a temple to Moloch, to please his heathen wives. Manasseh made his children to pass through the fire, not necessarily to kill them, for I find his son reigning afterwards, from which I discover that it was not death always, but a horrible burning ceremony. In a part of the valley of the Son of Hinnom the prophet locates Tophet, which comes from Toph, meaning a drum, a drum being beaten to prevent the screams of the children from being heard, whilst they were being branded. Amon, Manasseh's son, was equally wicked, but his grandson Josiah, worshipped God. Search the book of Kings, and you will find all this, for I go by my brief. Josiah defiled the valley of Tophet, to prevent the horrid rites of Moloch. You are aware that those who maintain the doctrine of eternal torments have said that the "gnawing worm" means "an accusing conscience," and that "everlasting fire" means "perpetual misery;" thus they have departed from the literal word of God; they believe in their own inference—in their own emblem. I do not believe anything of the kind. I take the "worm" and the "fire" literally. You can see at once that the abominable stuff thrown in the valley would breed vermin, and it did: to prevent the city being affected by disease caused by the exhalation of noxious vapors, it was commanded that fires should be lit to consume the refuse. There we have the Gehennah, or valley of Hinnom of Scriptures. When Christ said: "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off; it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched," the people understood him, for they knew that these fires were kept perpetually burning. When the Lord comes, his adversaries will be consumed, and, as if to put the everlasting brand of infamy on the wickness of men who sacrificed to the horrible god Moloch, the spot on which they did so is selected as the place of execution, where the enemies of the great king, who are found in open rebellion against him at his coming, will be destroyed by fire. The scene of condemnation is close by the future capital of the whole world. After the place had thus become a receptacle for the filth of the city, the fire was not quenched, but continued burning as long as there was anything to burn. Let us now look at Mark ix. 43, which I have just read to you. This is a very erroneous translation, it should be "into the fire that is not quenched," and not "into the fire that never shall be quenched." Fires were kept perpetually burning: long since have these fires ceased, but the valley of the Son of Hinnom is destined yet to have the greatest fire it ever saw, or was ever witnessed, for then shall the living rebels at the time of the Lord's advent be sentenced to a fire that shall burn them up, to "everlasting," eternal destruction. The place of execution is this valley of the Son of Hinnom. I give you this rapid sketch in exposition of this famous passage to show that it relates to the living wicked at the time of the Lord's advent, and not to men raised from the dead.

Now what about the dead? There are three acts of judgment: first the church, regarding which it is written, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ." I have explained in former sermons, that the Lord will gather his people together, not to judge them for life or death, but to judge them for their fidelity, the use of their stewardship, and to appoint them their places in the kingdom of glory. Here is the second act of judgment; and the third will be for the dead, small and great at the end of the millennium, before the great white throne, when every one whose name is not written in the book of life will be cast into the lake of fire. After that we read, "Behold, I make all things new, and there shall be no more death, neither pain nor sorrow."

Taking into account the fact that God has set before us life and death, that he has determined to head up all things in Christ, that he has resolved on a period when every creature in heaven and earth shall praise him; taking into account the wonderful work of God's beloved Son; taking into account that eternal death is always pronounced against those who reject Jesus Christ; you must think of God who is rich in wisdom and in grace, who is determined to purify his world, to glorify his Son Jesus, and to give him unlimited authority over all creatures. Let me assure you that I never saw the doctrine of the new birth in such a vivid light as that in which I see it now—I mean the life in Christ of men who would otherwise die—I never felt so much liberty in denouncing God's anger against those rebels who continue in sin, and in pointing out to them that rejecting Christ they have no hope, but must perish everlastingly; that all the splendors and glories of the coming ages of ever developing glory, will be lost to them, and they will be branded with everlasting disgrace. I never felt more strongly the necessity of the doctrine of Christ's divinity. If we are to live forever, we must have a life that is supernatural, and that is only to be obtained from him who only hath immortality. Let me add, that I never before saw more vividly the necessity of the Holy Spirit as the "quickener of the dead" to make them new creatures in Christ, and I never loved God so much as I do now, when I see somewhat the beautiful completeness of his word. The harmony between the sayings of the prophets in the Old Testament, and the passages in the New Testament, clearly shows us that they are but two volumes of the one book. One more word: we we can see that in the God who is Life, the God who is Love, we can have the most absolute confidence; whilst we urge upon men—if they would escape the horrors of the second death and enjoy immortality—the absolute necessity of union with the second Adam, the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE QUESTION.

And now for my question: Men and brethren, will you rally around me, and stand by me, whilst holding up the doctrine of life only in the Son of God, or will you not? That is the question which I now put before you, and I ask for your decision? I know full well the prejudices in favor of doctrines we have received in childhood: I received them in the most rigid school; but now I am committed to this glorious truth, that there is eternal life only in Christ. I have sacrificed much—at least, it was much to me, and thereby I have at least proved my sincerity—to maintain this doctrine in the pulpit and through the press, and I am ready to sacrifice all, for what I believe to be divinely true. If you stand by me, and cheer me in this trial, the day may come when you will thank God for it, but if you think right to desert me, as some have done, and others threaten to do, do it, and may God go with you! But my position is taken. Here, as elsewhere, I have argued this with my voice and with my pen, and I emphatically state to you my firm determination that I shall continue to declare what I have this night maintained, respecting the living and the dead, the past and the future, and all that we owe to our Saviour Jesus Christ. If you stand by me, and encourage me, it is well; but if you think it right to do otherwise, perhaps it will be well, too. My course is taken, and that course I will follow, by the help of my glorious Master, who only hath immortality, and whom to know is life eternal. Amen.

PAULINE VIEW OF THE RESURRECTION:

As stated by H. H. DICKINSON, in the "Crisis"

"The careful student of the Scriptures cannot have failed to observe, that the teaching of the apostle is uniformly in favor of the resurrection of all men."

So says the "Crisis" writer. So, by this broad and very learned writer, it must be admitted that I am a very careless reader of the Scriptures, aside from being no student at all; for I am free to confess, that in all the apostle's teachings on the subject of the resurrection, I have failed to observe any such thing; and especially have I failed to observe that the "Crisis" writer has shown any such thing, unless he wishes us to understand him that he has quite recently embraced the plan of the universal restoration, and the salvation of all men. If so, will he be kind enough to say so, in so many words, and then go ahead. Says the "Crisis" writer,

"Learned men of every age of Christianity have adopted the Pauline view as in accordance with the plan of God, as revealed in his word. In this article we draw largely from writers of acknowledged ability and piety; but for brevity's sake shall not give references."

Here, we are constrained to say, that our friend and Br. of the "Crisis" has drawn more sparingly from the Scriptures, and has not given one reference to the blessed Word to prove his broad assertion that the apostle taught that all men would have a resurrection to any future life of any kind. We in reviewing the brother's article, fail to see in his following sentence, found in Rom. v. 18, any way to escape the conclusion that if the apostle did teach that all men would have a resurrection to life, that all men will be saved. Let us calmly and prayerfully read the passage; do not suffer ourselves to be obstinate or harsh in our decisions; but let us ever bear in mind that "Thou God seeth us;" let us labor in love to arrive at the correct understanding of the Bible.

I know that my brother has greatly the advantage, for he can draw largely from men of renown, and from his own scholarship; while I, in my infirm old age and ignorance, am hardly able to write my own name so as to render it intelligent. Allow me here to insert the passage referred to above. Rom. v. 11. "Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." If we admit the apostle's lucid description which he gives of the resurrection, in 1. Cor. xv. 42–44, 54, I see no way to escape the conclusion that as in Rom. v. 18, if all men are raised to justification of life, after being thus raised, they are not condemned to death, but the reverse of it. And being justified to life, they are no longer corruptible, and cannot die any more, for they are incorruptible and immortal. Is it not so, my brother? It is so positively affirmed, that I dare not deny it. Again, our brother affirms, from his comment on verses 13, 14, that death existed while there was no law for man to violate, and consequently death was not a penalty of individual sin. This statement we positively deny; and we say further that we honestly believe that it cannot be proved by any testimony of the Scriptures. I ask, therefore, if the Bible teaches that since the transgression, there ever was a time when the world was in such a complete state of anarchy, that God withdrew all of his law and authority from man, and left him without any responsibility? If I believed this, I should like to be informed for what purpose those that had lived and died in the intervening space between the revelation of the law of God, and its taking effect?

Again, for them to have a resurrection—for as it is stated that there was no law to violate—they could not be either condemned or justified, for they could not have done good or evil. So that our brother's theology would not reward or punish them.

After wading through a large amount of chaff in search of the wheat, it is quite refreshing to know that for one brief moment our brother of the "Crisis," is willing to change his strong emphasis from the word "all" to the "many." But in the next breath we are almost suffocated with dust and chaff, which he disturbs by his lifting the emphasis so suddenly from the many, and letting it fall so heavily upon the word "the." But it seems, to reflecting minds, that our brother labors more earnestly to keep a cloud of dust and chaff in motion, so that the indifferent reader might not see the truth, than he does to purify the wheat from the great bulk of chaff that modern theology has shrouded it with; and then to so garner and grind it to the finest of flour, and add to it the pure, sweet yeast of "No life out of Christ," that in due time it might be moulded and fashioned into that one bread, of which if a man eat he shall never die. Lord ever give us this bread which cometh down from heaven. Our brother here says:

"We maintain that as a consequence of Adam's disobedience, a sentence of condemnation to death, without any promise or hope of a resurrection passed upon all men; so by the obedience of Christ unto death, this one grand righteous act, the sentence was so far reversed that death shall not finally triumph for all shall be again restored to life. Justice must have its due, therefore all must die; the mercy of God in Christ Jesus shall have its due also; and therefore all shall be put into a salvable state here, and the whole human race shall be raised to life at the great day."

If we can see sufficiently clear amid this great cloud of "confusion worse confounded," so as to understand him, we suppose that he must have forgotten that in consequence of Adam's disobedience, before he was driven from Eden, that God in great mercy to Adam's posterity, made this promise. Genesis iii. 14, 15. "And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life: and I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." We ask our brother here, if he wishes us to understand him wholly to deny that God did ever make any such promise? I believe he did, for it is written. But although as man's heart was so fully set in him to do evil, and as he advanced in sin, the promised seed became hid from his sight; and as his bruised heel grew more lame at every step, as he travelled in sin, and the curse on the earth caused the thorns and thist,es to increase rapidly, that at every step he took his bruised heel became so lacerated by them, that if he saw the promise at all, he could see no form or comliness in it that he should desire it. So instead of looking up hopefully to the promise, he looked down despairingly to his sore heel, until he and all his race become converted to our brother's theology of being hopelessly cursed; and it became a national proverb, that as Adam had eaten the sour grape, all his children's teeth were set on edge, until our heavenly Father manifested his great mercy in declaring that "all souls are mine, saith the Lord; the soul of the father and of the Son: the soul that sinneth, it shall die." This proverb, then, which the Lord prohibited away back in days of gross darkness, is in these last days, somehow, among the many wonders, given to the weary, waiting ones as tokens of speedy deliverance, being revived again. Let every child of God be praying and watching the strong delusions of these last days. Let us now examine the corroborating testimony of the promised seed.

Long had prophets and kings desired to see the royal holy seed. Long had they waited, wept and prayed, until many of them died without the sight, until the one crying in the wilderness, saying, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. O how sweet the promise now. Say, my dear brother, does this not look in a different direction from a hopeless condition? In fact, to my mind, it is a grand and comforting truth to know that all men may have life in Christ by believing on him and by obeying his word.

We must pass over much of our brother's universal theory, but find ourself obliged to refer to his crowning triumph. Hear him:

"It is grace which restores all men to life at the resurrection; and, over and above that, has provided a gracious dispensation for the pardon of their sins; for reducing them to obedience; for guarding them against temptations; supplying them with strength and comfort, and for advancing them to eternal life."

Now, if this is all true, and if it can be correct, then let the whole world fall down and shout, "Grace, grace unto it," from the foundation to the top stone. Our reply is, Thank God if it is so; let all nations, tongues, and kindreds of earth cry Amen. Have we progressed so far? then I will stand still and see the salvation of God.

"KNOCK, AND IT SHALL BE OPENED."

Where are we to knock? "I am the door," says the Saviour. "No man cometh to the Father, but by me."

When are we to knock? "Evening and morning and at noon," says king David, "will I pray and cry aloud;" and David knew.

For what are we to knock? "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Heaven is the soul, that is what we want; for heaven must first come to us before we can go to it.

How must we knock? We must knock in earnest. We cannot knock too loud. Good Jacob said, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me;" and he got a blessing. We must knock perseveringly, too. The Lord does not always come immediately. "I waited patiently for the Lord," says David, and he "inclined unto me and heard my cry."

Here is the command—"Knock."

From Sarah A. Morse.

To the dear scattered saints in this pilgrimage land, seeking a home of rest: Soon it will be given. Pilgrims press on; a few more storms and our little bark will reach the port. Our Captain is a sure pilot; He will land us safely in port. Once there, we will bid adieu to these suffering scenes of old earth, with all its sorrows, and sickness, and death. Our hearts are often sad here while journeying through this valley of tears and sorrows. Death often severs the silver cord that binds our hearts to the loved of earth; but when we lay them away in hope, what a glorious prospect brightens the future! Jesus will unlock the graves, and the precious dust will live again, no more to suffer or die. We think of those sleeping in Jesus—"Blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep." The waking will be when the poor pilgrims are caught up in the air; so to be ever with the Lord. The change has come, the dead are raised, the living changed, our friends that oppose us because we love Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER, and his coming back to earth again to claim his waiting bride, will oppose and grieve us no more.

Friends and neighbors, we will weep and pray for you now, but it will soon be over. Soon you will weep and pray, but our mourn- will be turned into rejoicing.

Poor sinner will you not come while it is called to-day, when we see the gospel so near its close; in a little while he that is to come will come. God forbid that any of us should draw back to perdition, or make a shipwreck of our faith. We read, "because iniquity abounds the love of many shall wax cold." Is that before us? Do we see that state of things? It is sad, though true. God help us who profess to love our LIFE-GIVER, and are looking for his speedy return, to endure hardness like a true soldier. It is those that endure to the end that have the promise of being saved. Here in the world we have tribulation; but in Jesus we find peace, such as the world cannot give or take away, though it oft hath tried; but the heart cheering promise is, "The Lord will provide." How blessed to have our heavenly Father care for us. No parental care is so sure as the care of our heavenly Father. He cares for us in every condition in life; in sickness, how blessed to feel that Jesus cares for us. When these poor bodies are racked with pain, ahd disease is wearing us down, and sometimes we have to look into the grave, it is a dark spot, we don't love the enemy—death—it oft has made our hearts sad, we are glad that Jesus is soon coming to destroy death and he that hath the power of it, which is the devil; then the captured will go free; they will sing, "O death where is thy sting; O grave where is thy victory!"

Weary pilgrims, press on thy way a little longer. I know hope deferred has saddened the hearts of God's dear saints. But the hope will soon be consummated. With a hope so much divine we can trials well endure.

> "Weary pilgrims cease thy weeping,
> Soon we'll hear the Master say,
> Thy work is done, thy warfare ended;
> Arise ye saints, from earth come away."

"It's the Only Hope."

SOME years ago a young man, wild headstrong, profane, somewhat intemperate, riding through South Hadley, stopped at a store to purchase something, and as the shop-keeper was doing up the little package, he said to the young man:

"I don't know you, but I can't help asking if you are a Christian?"

Haughtily and sternly the young man said:

"Sir!"

With tears standing in his eyes, the good shop-keeper said:

"I don't doubt it may seem strange to you that I should thus ask, but I long to have all men come to a saving knowledge of Jesus. It's the only hope!"

Reluctantly the young man took the package from the hand of the shop-keeper, and went out to his buggy, speaking angrily and blasphemously of him, never to see his Christian counsellor again, not even to learn his name.

But that young man had a praying mother who had often pointed her son to Jesus, saying, "It's the only hope," and these words echoed from the walls of a heart where were hung the memories of childhood, those picture that never are dimmed. Through years they sounded in his ears, till he was brought to the feet of Jesus, to find how glorious a hope it was.

I don't know that this good store-keeper was the direct means of this young man's conversion; but since he became a Christian man, he recalls the incident with a vividness which shows how deep an impression it made on his mind; and in the better land he hopes to know and thank him for that little word so earnestly spoken and so angrily received by him.

No doubt that good man thought his labor would be in vain; and if he still lives and remembers the scene, may feel that he had been long in finding "the bread cast on the waters," though I doubt not he sowed it with prayer.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 24, 1869.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"Credit to Whom Credit is Due."

UNDER the above head, we find an article in the "World's Crisis," of last week, by "J. S. WHITE." Br. White has stated very candidly some things relating to the Life controversy. His first paragraph reads as follows:

> Some persons suppose that a thing which is new to them, is new to everybody. When they hear a doctrine advanced by some one which is new to them, they conclude that he is the author of it. This has been true of the Second Advent. Some to this day seem to suppose that Mr. Miller was the originator of the Advent doctrine. So of the non-immortality doctrine out of Christ. Some think that George Storrs is the author of it. And so of the destruction of the wicked, and of their non-resurrection.

We never had a desire to have any one suppose we were the "author of the non-immortality doctrine out of Christ." The doctrine is as old as the Bible; but we never saw a word on the subject written by any uninspired man, except a small tract by Henry Grew, late of Philadelphia, before we commenced our investigation of the subject, nor afterwards till we published our "THREE LETTERS" in the spring of 1841. Those "Letters" were originally written to "Orange Scott" in 1840. We were both, at that time, ministers in the Methodist E. Church. Those "Letters" were issued in a Pamphlet by his consent and advice early in 1841, but with a request to withhold his name; which we did. Those "Letters" were the fruit of our personal study of the Bible, and were purely original with us. Others may have come to the same conclusions, previously, but that had nothing to do with our investigations, except the one we have named, and that was but a very brief matter.

In the spring of 1842, in the city of Albany, N. Y., we preached our original "SIX SERMONS" on the immortality question, and two thousand copies were immediately published by request. In them we admitted the conscious state of all the dead, a universal resurrection, and judgment after, followed by the utter destruction of all the ungodly.

One year later, having become convinced of the unconscious state of all the dead, we revised the "Six Sermons," and added an article on the state of the dead and republished the whole, first in a folio newspaper form, of which fifteen thousand copies were immediately put into circulation. A few months later, we gave the whole a thorough revision, and published it in a quarto of 16 pages; in which form nearly or quite one hundred thousand copies were scattered in this country and in England. A large portion of the expense attending this work was paid from our private property.

It was this large circulation of the work that gave impetus to the immortality question such as it never had before, whoever might have had thoughts about it. We desire no credit in the matter, for we only acted as prompted by a conviction of duty to God and to man; yet we cannot help thinking of what Paul said to the Corinthians, when he found among them men who artfully attempted to undervalue his labors in promulgating the truth, and said, "Let no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool receive me, that I may boast myself a little. That which I speak, [now] I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly in this confidence of boasting. Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also: for ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise." 2 Cor. xi. 16–19. "I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me." 2 Cor. xii. 11. So now, we say, if we have "become a fool in glorying" it is because those who are now reaping the fruits of our labors "have compelled" us. They know, we know, and the Searcher of hearts knows that the labors we have performed, and the expenditures we have made, have, under God, been one principal means of bringing the immortality question before the American public in its present form; and many who are now rejoicing in the doctrine of immortality only through Christ, have, in times past, reproached and reviled us; and many who now revile and reproach us because we have gone in advance of our first positions, will, sooner or later, thank us that we did not so stereotype our thoughts as to prevent all advance in the knowledge of God and our Lord Jesus Christ.

Br. J. S. White says, "Elias Smith (in 1808) advocated the sleep of the dead, and the final extinction of the wicked." We reply, If he did, his followers have been nearly silent on the subject for a half century, and actually hid themselves on the question. But of their position we had no knowledge till some time after our stand was taken. Besides, the only work of Elias Smith's we have ever seen on the subject admits the conscious state of the dead; and, in our opinion, that was just what made his effort a failure—an abortion.

As to Br. White's quotations from some of our writings against "J. T. Walsh," on the non-resurrection question, he might as well have quoted from our sermons preached on "eternal torments" when we were a believer in that doctrine. We wonder the "Crisis" has not taken our advice, given some time since, to stereotype our article on that subject, and so have it always on hand ready for use whenever its correspondents are out of ammunition in opposing us. It has appeared nearly in full more that once in that paper, and by extracts often. If they would only make a standing column of it, and thus save words for their correspondents, who could point to it to show what "Geo. Storrs" said twenty years ago, and tell the reader he must have been a bad man ever to advance in knowledge and understanding of the word of God. Let those who choose to wear our cast off and worn out clothes have them; they may cover their nakedness a little; especially as they seem to have nothing half so good to put on in their exposed condition.

Near the close of his article, Br. White, in speaking of the separation which took place between J. T. Walsh and ourself, after W. came out on the non-resurrection question, says:

> Bro. Storrs pursued his usual course; Mr. Walsh was left to advocate, where he could, what Br. Storrs called "vain hope, strong delusion," a doctrine "opposed to the spirit and letter of the Bible."

"Br. Storrs" had thoughts on the non-resurrection question before "Mr. Walsh" ever had one; and we were the first to inform him that Jacob Grim held that view. He soon caught the idea, and endeavored to make personal reputation or capital out of it. Failing in that, he soon turned a "summersault into Phariseeism;" and from that he plunged headlong into the old slough from whence he first came out, and now is hand in hand with old immortal-soulism and eternal torments. So we are informed. A course or end most likely to result from the rejection of the Bible doctrine of "Life future and eternal only in Christ." We shall see if Br. White and others who stand on the denial of this truth do not land in the same place. Sure we are, to a logical and thinking mind, no other result can be arrived at, in the end, than eternal torments to the wicked, or that they "shall remain in the congregation of the dead;" unless, indeed, they plunge into the mire of universal restoration, as some in England have, and a few mortal resurrectionists seem inclined to do in this country. We trust, however, the grand and glorious truth that "God is love," will so far prevail that all candid inquirers after truth will yet be led to see and acknowledge that God has so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, nor come into a future hopeless life, but have eternal life by a resurrection from the dead; while all who reject him, or refuse the light given them, "shall not see life," but "shall utterly perish in their own corruption," and "be as though they had not been." See John iii. 16, 36; 2 Pet. ii. 12; Obediah 16, and a multitude of similar declarations running through the Divine testimony from Genesis to Revelation.

Zion's Herald Again.

The Editor of the above paper treats us to a scrap now and then. The following we take from its issue of last week:

> The Herald of Life concedes all that we declared, when it says of the present dogma of its school on materialism, "Mr. Miller, personally, never favored the view." It declares that its editor, Rev. George Storrs, did, and many others. That is where they added doctrinal error to Mr. Miller's chronological one. The "revival" stopped with that falser addition. (1). That it gained so early a foothold among the Adventists, shows the power of one error to breed a worse. That it substantially controls them to this day, though the Advent Church in this city clings to the old Scripture and Church doctrine of the eternal punishment and the constant, conscious life of the soul. (2). May Bro. Storrs, who by his confession led the "Millerites" away from Miller, bring them all back by his return to the true faith in the Word of God and nature of man. (3).

Notes by the Editor of Herald of Life.

(1). The "chronological error," Br. Haven admitted, was the means of adding to the Methodist E. Church "150,000" persons; but he said, "The reaction was greater than the revival; the falling off greater than the addition." Now, it seems our "falser doctrinal error" was more powerful than "Mr. Miller's chronological one;" for, while the latter was the means of the revival, ours "stopped the revival."

The revival was produced by an error!

The revival was stopped by an error!

That is certainly singular logic; but it may be good theology; it looks very much like a kingdom divided against itself. But there is a mystery about it so far as the Methodist E. Church is concerned. "Mr. Miller's chronological error" sent 150,000 into that church; and our "doctrinal error" never got into that church, and yet "the reaction" there lost them a "greater" number than the a d dition." How is that, Br. Editor? Our doctrinal error did not deplete your church at all, and yet your church not only had a "stop of the revival," but you lost more than you gained; i. e., more than 150,000. Surely you do not attribute that to our "doctrinal error," which had nothing to do in your church. As to the "revival" being "stopped among Advent believers by our "doctrinal error," that remains to be proved. If it "stopped" in your church without that "error," how do you prove it "stopped" elsewhere by it? That is a plain question, Br. Haven. If the revival was stopped by error in our ranks, was it not also by error in yours? What was that error?

(2). Here Br. Haven admits that one "Advent church" clings to the doctrine of eternal torments, etc. Well, now, will he tell us if that church did not have as great a stop to the revival as the others who rejected that dogma? Have they had more revivals since than the others? The answer to these questions might open our brother's eyes. But in that matter we will make no comparisons at this time.

(3). We thank Br. Haven for his good desire. We led no one "away from Mr. Miller;" but we have been trying for about thirty years to lead men "away from" the traditions of men "to the true faith in the Word of God and the nature of man;" and we are thankful that God has so helped us by His grace and Spirit, that thousands are this day rejoicing and praising God for deliverance from the bondage of Popish and heathenish notions of God's government, which have so corrupted the pure word of God. But multitudes of good men and women in the Protestant churches are willing and anxious to wear those chains and fetters still, while Heaven is pouring a flood of light on many minds as to the grand fact that "God is Love;" and that His government in all its parts is established and conducted on this grand principle. Whatever system contradicts this is a false and mischievous one, and to be rejected as having its origin from some other source than from that "God in whom we live and move and have our being."

In conclusion, as Br. Haven is anxious that we should have "the true faith of the Word of God and nature of man," if he will enter the work of helping us into it, he shall have our thanks, whether he is successful or not; and we return the courtesy, sincerely wishing that he and his fellow laborers in the Methodist E. Church—whom we still love for what truth they have—may "return to the true faith in the Word of God and nature of man" as taught by "holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit," and as taught by inspired men in both Testaments, till the apostacy brought in pagan superstitions, "corrupting the word of God by their traditions," thus "departing from the faith once delivered to the saints."

If our brother is disposed to make an effort in that direction, we will send him, as an introduction, the work we have in press on "THE CONSTITUTION OF MAN and HIS FINAL DESTINY: By DR. JOHN K. FINLEY," of Niles, Mich. When he has well digested that, if his appetite craves more, we shall be glad to help him to any amount of Scripture testimony to further his researches after "true faith in the Word of God and nature of man," as we are prepared to furnish any amount, to order, free as the Gospel itself; so that our brother and his associates shall not fail of coming to a knowledge of the truth from a lack of means for knowing it.

Our Br. ought to give us the credit of having studied both sides of the questions under consideration. Our columns are open for any light he or any candid and honest associate is disposed to furnish our readers, which he will indorse. Can you say as much for "Zion's Herald" with regard to a hearing from us? We would like to have an affirmative answer.

The Rabbis: The Other Side.

LAST week we gave an account of the doings of the Rabbis in Philadelphia. It turns out however, that they, like other D. D.'s, only sought to dictate to lesser clergy and the laity what they should believe and do. Well did Jesus say to his disciples, "Be ye not called of men Rabbi." It is the Rabbis, whether Jewish, Romish, or Protestants, who have corrupted the truth of God and attempted to enslave the people to their dogmas and traditions. We trust the day has come that men will seek truth from the Bible itself, searching the Scriptures for themselves without the fear of Rabbis, whatever names of vanity they may assume. We have reason to fear that many, disgusted with the high and false pretensions of these would-be-great dignitaries, will turn from the Bible itself, supposing that Book sustains such bald assumptions to authority over men's minds and understandings. The fact is, the Bible condemns in the severest terms all such lordships over the minds of men. Those men enter not into the spirit or nature of the kingdom of heaven, and prevent others from doing so by their haughty assumptions; i. e., they "shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for they neither go in themselves, neither suffer they those that are entering to go in." Matt. xxiii. 13.

Such has ever been the character and work of would-be Rabbis in all the religious sects from the days of Jesus and his apostles till now. For ought we know it may continue to be so till he comes who only is our "Master, even Christ." Matt. xxiii. 8–12.

We have had sent us from Philadelphia the following from the "Ledger," of that city, of Nov. 19. It shows the feelings of the body of the Jewish people, and may cause Rabbis of all sorts to be a little more modest in their efforts to exercise "lordship" over the people at large.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE "RABBIS."—The recent action of a small number of Hebrew Rabbis, at a session held in this city, does not appear to receive encouragement from the body of the Jewish people. The views expressed and endorsed by those present at the meeting, however welcome to those who agree with them, can only be taken as the action of a small proportion of the large body of Israelites in this city and throughout the United States. On this subject the Jewish Messenger, speaking for the great mass of the people of its faith, says that the acts of those Rabbis were the acts of the few, to the detriment of the many, and even the few object but to the ceremonial code, not to what they term the 'grand principles' of the Jewish religion. As it regards the many, they adhere to the Biblical laws, and the instructions of the sages. They do not reject the Messianic promises, the expectation of a restoration. They do not partake of forbidden food. They are opposed to intermarriages with strangers to their creed. They observe the laws of clean and unclean food. In fine, they adhere to their religion as handed down to them by their fathers, which they desire to transmit uncorrupted to their posterity.

"Their synagogues are open to all; within their walls not a whisper will be heard against any other religion; all the zeal of its preachers is devoted to improve those born within the faith of Israel, to be observant of its principles; and what those principles are may be found in that sacred volume which has been their chart and compass to guide them through the troubled ocean of life, so as ultimately to bring them to pacific shores. Such principles have at all times guided God fearing Israelites, and will continue to influence their every act, until the time shall arrive when, by common consent, one God, one religion, one hope, shall bring every created being to one fold, under the guidance of one Shepherd."

Having presented to our readers full reports of the proceedings of the meeting referred to, we deem it proper thus to present the other side.

Antichrist, and the Number of his Name.

WE are aware that many conflicting opinions have been advanced concerning the Antichrist of the "last time;" and we have watched the discussion of the subject with peculiar interest. As evidence has continually accumulated showing that we are rapidly nearing the consummation of all things, the light of revelation on this subject appears very clear to our mind that we are not to look for a future Antichrist to arise. We have watched Napoleon, with what light we had, but have failed to discover any satisfactory evidence that he could fulfil the fearful picture of Antichrist so faithfully delineated in the Scriptures. And it is apparent that many of the warmest friends of Napoleonism consider this theory exploded.

Respecting the rise of Antichrist, his work, the changing phases he would assume, and his end, we believe the Scriptures speak with clearness and a good degree of exactness; and our only wish is to obtain the plain Scriptural testimony on the subject, willing to rest all controversy thereon.

It is a very justifiable conclusion from the apostle's writing that they preached more about Antichrist than they wrote. Paul says to his Thessalonian brethren, "Remember ye not when I was with you I told you these things?" 2 Thess. ii. 5. "And we have heard," says the apostle John, "that Antichrist shall come; even now there are many antichrists, whereby we know that it is the last time." 1 John ii. 18. The "last time"—the gospel dispensation—was the time when Antichrist should arise. In a certain sense there are "many antichrists;" for the spirit which "worketh in the children of disobedience" is antichristian in every respect. The reason why the apostles preached more than they wrote about Antichrist, will appear when we consider how prudent the apostles were in the promulgation of the truth, that they might not bring persecution unnecessarily upon the church.

The question as to who is the Antichrist, may properly be settled by considering his rise, It clearly appears from 1 John ii. 18, 19, that Antichrist had his origin in an apostacy in the early church. (Antichrist we understand to be an apostate persecuting power—in character opposed to the gospel of Christ.) The apostacy which John mentions resulted in a division in the church; "they went out from us," says the apostle; and here we have the germ of a great antichristian system—the departure from the apostles teachings. But Paul, in his letter to the Thessalonians, settles this point. He says: "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day (the day of Christ) shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not that when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth (or hindereth) will let until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. ii. 2–10. In the apostle's day the "mystery of iniquity" was already working in the church, and a time would come when it would be developed into a gigantic antichristian power, represented by a man at the head, and this power—Antichrist—should continue until the appearing of Christ, when it should be destroyed by the "brightness of his coming." Has any such power arisen? All will point with unmistakable identity to Papal Rome. This power is the Antichrist; and it is here that we must look for the fulfilment of all that relates to that "Wicked," whose coming was to be "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness."

"The man of sin" we cannot consistently suppose to refer to a single individual, but to a succession of men having the same design, or carrying out the same principles of an intolerant antichristian system. Such is Romanism. No other system has ever appeared on earth, or succession of men fulfilling the divine picture like the Roman Pontiffs. History bears fearful marks of their blasphemous pretensions, claiming to hold "on earth not the place of mere men but of God himself;" that "the power of the Pope is greater than all created power, and extends itself to things celestial, terrestrial and infernal; the Pope doeth whatsoever he listeth, even things unlawful, and is more than God." We have not the space to adduce the multitude of facts which show that every particular predicted of the rise and work of "the man of sin" has had its fulfilment in the Roman Pontiffs.

Daniel, in prophetic vision, beheld the history of the world in the symbols of wild beasts, which are interpreted to be monarchies that should arise. The fourth beast, representing the last universal monarchy that should arise, had a peculiarity, viz., "ten horns," symbolizing the "divided" state of the Roman empire; and Daniel is informed that "in the days of these kings the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom." But among these "ten horns" there came up a "little horn," which was "diverse" from the others. "He shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High." The ecclesiastical character of this "little horn" made it "diverse" from the others. This power we understand to be the "man of sin," and is now in existence as the Antichrist of the last times. Romanism is an antichristian system in every particular. Its principles are unchanged and unchangeable. It is the same power ecclesiastically that it ever has been—still opposing the truth of God by every means in its power. Although the dominion, or civil power, of the "little horn," was to be taken away to be consumed and destroyed unto the end (Dan. vii. 26), yet that does not change the spiritual character of the system. All the blood that flowed during the dark days of persecution was caused by its civil authority, or corrupt connection with the "ten horns," using the civil arm to enforce its ecclesiastical authority.

But we have a particular mark, or sign, by which we believe we cannot mistake our identity of this power, viz., the number 666—the number of his name. (Rev. xiii. 18.)

It will not detract from the force of the argument on this point by raising the objection, that the number 666 cannot apply to the Papal power, as Papacy is represented by the symbol of a harlot woman (Rev. xvii. 4). But is not the same power represented also by a "little horn?" We must remember the fact that the same truths in prophecy are often represented in different places by different symbols. The Pontiff is the head of the Roman power, and Paul calls him the "man of sin," the "son of perdition." Has not his character, as predicted by Paul and John, been fulfilled in the one personage? i. e., in a man, or succession of men—the Popes? This we believe to be a matter of history.

But we will consider "the number of his name." Thomas Scott upon this point remarks:

"The Greek word Lateinos signifies the Latin man; or the man of Latium, from whence city the Romans derived their original and their language; and this word, according to the genuine orthography, contains, in numerical letters, exactly the 'number six hundred and sixty-six.' The church of Rome is properly the Latin church, and they use the Latin language in everything."

Faber, well known to prophetic students, says:

"No name, though it may possibly comprehend the number six hundred and sixty-six, can be the number of the beast, unless it equally answers in every other particular to the prophetic discription of that great name. Lateinos is at once the name of a man . . . and when the sum of its numerical letters is taken in the Greek language, it amounts to just 666."

Albert Barnes makes out the number of his name as follows:

| L | A | T | E | I | N | O | S | |
| 30 | 1 | 300 | 5 | 10 | 50 | 70 | 200 | —666 |

Another fact of great importance and of historic verity, is, that "in A. D. 666, Pope Vitalian first ordained that public worship should be performed in the Latin language, and Popery really became the Latin church." Hence it may be properly called "The Latin kingdom," for its subjects are "universally called Latins;" for, as an able commentator has said, "they latinize everything; masses, prayers, hymns, litanies, canons, bulls, in short, everything is in Latin; the Papal Councils speak Latin, nor is Scripture itself read in any other language under Popery than Latin." Dr. Adam Clarke, in his commentary on Rev. xiii., having shown from quotations from the acts of Romish Councils, Papal Bulls, etc., that they apply the name "The Latin Kingdom" to the Hierarchy of Rome, remarks, that if this application of this name to that power "be correct, the Greek words signifying The Latin kingdom, must have this number." And it is a remarkable fact that "The Latin kingdom," in the Greek, contains in numerical letters just 666.

It may be interesting to notice that the Hebrew Romiith. as also Romanus, makes just 666. It may then be called the number of his name, or the number of a man, being "a Latin name derived from that of Romulus, a man who founded Rome, Pagan, and so peculiar to a man, viz., the POPE, who is the founder of Rome Papal."

Again, the title, "VICARIUS FILII DEI (Vicar of the Son of God), which the Popes "have assumed to themselves, and caused to be inscribed over the door of the Vatican, exactly makes the number 666."

Finally, we will adduce a striking paragraph from "Fleming's Key to the Apocalypse." He says that "not many centuries back, on the front of the Pope's MITRE, the word 'MYSTERY' used to be inscribed, and was worn by them until the reformers discovered and pointed it out to the people, as the Scripture mark of Antichrist, from Rev. xvii. 5, which glaring manifestation of 'the man of sin' so opened the eyes of the multitude, that the custom was immediately abolished, and the word erased from the mitre."

With facts like these before us, we cannot doubt that Papacy is the Antichrist, and as it is "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," will soon be burned with fire (Rev. xviii. 8), though, as a harlot she may say in her heart, "I sit as a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." The Lord will soon come to avenge his slaughtered innocents, whose blood have long cried for vengeance. (Rev. vi. 10.) W. H. S.

DAYS OF PERIL.

BY L. C. THORNE.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come."—2 Tim. iii. 1.

THAT which impresses the student of prophetic Scriptures more strongly than almost any other thing is, that the period of our world's history denominated by Paul the "last days," when our Lord and King shall return to his weeping church, are identifiable by certain features peculiar to them alone. Not that these features are, as a whole, represented as something entirely new, and not having, in some degree, existed in the past, but are conspicuous, mainly, in their prominency and approach to, universality. Historians, and all observers of passing events, are well aware that there is a notable difference in times; they are not all alike. Some are distinguished, historically, for the prominence of certain peculiarities, and others for other peculiarities; but the times immediately preceding the return of our Saviour are so distinctly characterized in prophecy, that no lover of the Lord's coming need fail to recognize them, and thus know something definite respecting our whereabouts upon the great ocean of time, an ocean trackless except for the prophetic chart.

Jesus said: "Great earthquakes shall be in divers places . . . and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring: men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." That the first named of these phenomena have long been and are yet increasing in frequency, has been shown to our readers by extracts from a lately published work upon the subject. Volcanic eruptions are general. Late advices from western Africa inform us that one of the range of the Cameroons Mountains, opposite Fernando Po, is in a state of activity. A writer in one of our journals says: "No volcano has been in an active condition on the African continent for centuries—perhaps not since before the Christian era; and if the news is confirmed, one of the most remarkable circumstances of physical geography—the re-opening of a long dormant volcano over 13,000 feet high is taking place at the present moment." It is certain that there is an unusual commotion among the hidden forces of the earth, and it is as if in summoning all their power for some fearfully desolating outburst, they compel the weaker points of the earth's surface to yield in premature explosions.

Who that pauses for a moment, and inclines a listening ear, can fail to hear the universal murmur of unrest, and the voice of wailing and sorrow ascending up from the distressed of almost every nation, enlightened or uncivilized, so-called Christian or otherwise? To-day many of earth's great monarchs and rulers, who congratulate each other upon the existence of peacable relations between them, would be thrice happy could they feel themselves at peace with their perplexed and distressed subjects. It is not, however, these particular last-day features that we propose to consider, but those named by Paul in the third chapter of his second Epistle to Timothy. His prophetic eye rested upon the church (the professed church) as it would exist in the "last days."

We are well aware that this catalogue of crimes enumerated by Paul, is generally supposed to be represented by him as practiced by society in general; but we are satisfied he spoke of professed believers. There have been people enough in every age of the world to whom his words are specially applicable, and it needed not the spirit of prophecy to be able to foretell there will be. That it is of religionists he speaks is evident from the expressions: "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Hence, although vice of every species flourishes now among known worldlings, as it probably has never before done during the Christian era, a condition of things which Paul also saw, and speaks of, the moral condition he here describes must be observable among religionists; among those "having a form of godliness."

Let us, then, take a hasty survey, and see whether there is evidence that Paul's prophecy is now in fulfilment. But, says one, suppose the many vices named by Paul are found to exist in the church, the fact will afford no proof that the end is nigh, for the same state of things existed when Wesley, Fox, and other reformers commenced their labors. This is true, but does not the disparity between the religious privileges of then and now forbid comparison? Then religious liberty, in its true sense, was unknown: now all may worship God as they please. Then Bibles were chained to pulpits: now they are scattered broadcast through the land. Then religious literature was scarce: now Christendom is deluged with it. Then churches were comparatively few, and schoolhouses a rarity: now, here in our country, at least, from almost every valley, church edifices lift their tall spires heavenward, while hill and vale vie with each other in inviting the youth of every class to come and partake of the blessings of education. Truth has been further and further unfolded, until gospel light has become dazzling in brilliancy, and, God having revealed himself as the all-wise, all-good and all-loving being that He is, men are without excuse. Go to churches in any part of our large cities on the first day of the week. In all the luxury and splendor of gorgeous and expensive equipages, or each arrayed in silks, velvets and jewels, sufficient in value to purchase comfortable homes, so-called disciples of Him "who had not where to lay his head," come to worship. In church they loll in luxuriantly furnished pews, the prices of which are so extravagant that none but the rich can afford to pay them; they feast their eyes upon the display of fashion, richly stained windows, paintings by the best artists, and fantastic carvings by the most skilled workmen; they hear God praised in song by hired, ungodly singers; listen, perhaps, to a high-flown disquisition upon some subject understood equally well by themselves, the preacher, and the liveried coachman in waiting; services over, they march from church to the music of the great organ, and because they have experienced some feelings unlike their weekday ones, when they are grinding the faces of the poor, or getting gain by trickery, they fancy themselves religious. All this, too, while within sound of the songs of praise, men and women perish through want, and children cry for bread, and "no man layeth it to heart." Nor is it essentially different in the country. Everywhere the same spirit of self-love prevails. Men study their own interests, to the utter disregard of the interests of others. Congregations think it policy to employ popular preachers, and to make their houses for worship attractive; but when it comes to paying the bills, they become suddenly aware that they "cannot spare the money just now," and so they hide their own selfishness by begging from others, or else, through the agency of church fairs, get it by gambling and other immoral practices, and when they have succeeded in making a great show they boast of their work, and think themselves more blessed than their modest neighbors.

Many churches are scenes of almost constant strife between rival cliques, or between "progressive" and "old fogy" factions.—Preachers preach for hire, and, being always on the alert for a "call," the sweetest notes in which are from the plaintive voice of greenbacks, they go where they can get the most. Love "thy neighbor as thyself," is the divine command; but professed Christians are to a lamentable extent, "lovers of their own-selves." True and faithful ones there are in the various denominations, who never cease to mourn because of these things. Because so many of their associates are "covetous, proud, unthankful, unholy," they see Jesus remorselessly "wounded in the house of his friends."

Churches swarm with self-satisfied, vainglorious, arrogant men and women who despise others and their opinions, and, accepting the traditions of the church, do little or no thinking for themselves, and still are ambitious to be credited with superior wisdom. These are "high-minded," "boasters," and their name is legion.

Disobedience "to parents," and want of "natural affection," are growing evils. Children are trained in Sabbath schools on Sundays, and told about a meek, loving and crucified Saviour; how he went about doing good, healing the sick, giving sight to the blind, making the lame to walk, and calling from out the tomb the dead to life; and then, during the week, they are sent out, dressed in all the flimsy finery of fashion, by way of cultivating their pride and gratifying that of their parents, to be perfected in ball-room and such like exercises. Is it strange that parents early lose control of their children? When religion and iniquity are thus taught together, is it any wonder the latter most abounds, that children are "disobedient to parents," and that both parents and children are wanting in "natural affection?" They who are guilty in these particulars do not alone suffer. The poison is communicated to others, and parents who have reared their children amidst prayers and tears, are brought at last into shame and reproach by disobedient children.

This is a day of pleasure-loving and pleasure-seeking Christianity. Christians vie with worldlings in the gratification of worldly lusts. The excess of modest competency is not valued for the ability to do good which its possession confers, but for the amount of luxury it will purchase. Whence the mad race for wealth, in which so many who have started well in the Christian walk, become shipwreck? Springs it not from love of pleasure? Time was when to know a man was a professor of religion, was to feel tolerably well assured that his obligations would be faithfully met; but so reckless have men become in their greed of gain, that the wildest speculations are entered into, and funds not their own are boldly placed in the whirlpool of chance, only to be swallowed up because the chances for failure are a hundred to one for success; and confiding friends find themselves suddenly plunged into financial ruin. Many become bankrupt through extravagant expenditures, and then, to postpone their day of disgrace, and to secure a little longer indulgence, borrow from others by misrepresentations, not expecting to pay. Men exalted to high positions, because of great show of piety, prove recreant to every trust, and when concealment of their crimes is no longer possible, seek security in flight. Throughout the various religious sects, confidence is being undermined, and an already widespread distrust is increasing with amazing rapidity. Men who take advantage of the weaknesses of the law, and defraud others of their hard earnings, are being rich, received into membership, taken into the counsels of the brethren; they make loud profession and long prayers, and are constituted pillars of the church, while their unfortunate victims pine in want, and learn to detest religion because they are so wickedly wronged by some of its votaries. Most true, earnest Christians know how much more meagerly the church is represented at prayer and social meetings than at balls, parties, theatres and other places for pastime. A very slight indisposition, or a little rain will oftentimes keep from meeting many who will take especial pains to be in attendance at "card parties" and wine biblings. None who look abroad over Christendom, can fail to discover that sorrowfully numerous are they who, professing better things, are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

"False accusers" there are, too, in abundance. Few evils prevail to a more alarming extent in the church than false accusations. When one becomes jealous of another, that one has only to whisper some dark insinuation which, however oft refuted, will be sure to find willing believers. What! it is replied, do you charge religionists with such sin? Yes, and worse than that. There are upright men and women enough to-day, groaning beneath the crushing weight of the awful stigma of some imputed crime, and who, so far as human eye can see, must there remain through life, because of jealousy having organized itself and hedged them about. People of one sect misrepresent and falsely accuse those of other sects; Christians not in doctrinal agreement with those of their brethren who think more than they, and hence differently, condemn and falsely accuse them; ministers who happen to have some parishioners that hold doctrines at variance with the faith of their church, falsely accuse them, denounce them as infidels, and warn the people not to associate with them, and thus it goes. Within the various church enclosures are myriads of "false accusers," and they exert a powerful influence in bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ.

A thousand considerations conspire to strengthen the belief that the condition of society described by Paul is fully attained. A thousand facts furnish proof that the kingdom is not far off, that salvation is nigh. While all the evils mentioned by Paul prevail to so notable an extent, what is being done in the way of remedy or reform? Is Paul's injunction, "from such turn away," heeded? Is evil doing abased and righteousness exalted? Not so. So great is love of show, so proud is Christianity, so general is the feeling that houses for worship must be of costly build and luxurious appointment, that wealth is a necessity. Men without religion, without piety, and making no pretence to any, are made church dignitaries, simply because they are rich and needed by the church to keep up respectable appearances. Rich men, be their character such as to bring glory or shame, must be had; and if shame, then shame must be endured, for their financial contributions cannot be dispensed with. So down the moral grade the Christian train rolls, and that quite rapidly. Earnest, faithful, living Christians, whoever and wherever you are, set yourselves uncompromisingly against these evils. Give them no quarter, and pray the Lord to help you. Rebuke sin wherever you find it. Let the light of your example be bright. Let it shine in all the fulness of Christian glory in the dark places of the church. You cannot reasonably hope to extirpate the evils, for the wheat and tares "grow together until the harvest," (Matt. xiii. 30) but, your duty done, there may be fewer tares when the Lord of the harvest shall send forth his reapers to "gather together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them," and to "gather the wheat into" his "barn."

These are times of peculiar peril. They are, we believe, the "last times." The last great works of the present dispensation are being wrought, and soon our absent Lord will come and "shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Then will the counsels of the wicked be brought to nought. They will cry for help when they see the glory of Christ, but "the door" of mercy will be closed, and sudden destruction will come upon them. Then will the righteous triumph, and an abundant "entrance shall be ministered unto" them "into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." May we all stand "like unto men that wait for their Lord."

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., Nov., 1869.

THEN AND NOW.

IT is rather amusing to note the changes theologically that occur in the minds of some of the brethren who hold the Scriptural idea of "immortality through Christ alone." Some nine years ago, that being the period when I embraced that truth, our brethren, with myself, who held to the resurrection of both classes, were a unit in regard to the character of that resurrection, viz., that the righteous would be raised immortal and the wicked mortal. Some held that that resurrection would be one—a universal one; others, that the righteous would have the priority, either for a brief space or else for a thousand years, in their resurrection. But the idea of the character of these resurrections remained the same with the various parties.

The Life believers came into the field, or were in the field at that time, and the battle waged fiercely against them, but with loss to their opponents—the parties mentioned above. Many of these, who a short time ago were opposing the views of Life believers, have given up the idea of an immortal resurrection for believers, and have come to the conclusion that their resurrection will be of precisely the same character as that of the wicked. And why? Simply because the arguments of Life believers were so potent, that they felt obliged to abandon the idea of an immortal resurrection, knowing that if they did not, that it would of necessity do away with their idea of a great assize, or general investigating judgment. Since these brethren have abandoned their old position, they have most unmistakeably admitted that the conclusions of Life believers were legitimate one. It is equally as plain that all that opposition was wrong, and our opponents change of base proves it, but I am not aware that there has been any general confession to that effect on their part, but the battle goes on as before, but with a changed base. It looks quite favorable for "our side."

Before this change was made I identified myself with the Life party. I claimed that I acted consistently. As a general thing I have been kindly treated by the other side, and so have no cause for complaint in that direction. Let me here record my reasons for occupying my present position.

1. With my brethren I agreed that eternal death, and not eternal torment, was the penalty for sin. That being the case, I could see no necessity for making wicked dead men alive in order to inflict the penalty. It was clear to my mind that if they remained in the state of death, that the claims of justice would be met fully.

2. Admitting that the righteous have an immortal resurrection, it became evident that a decision, prior to that event, must have been made by the Judge. Such a decision must also disprove a necessity for the re-living of the wicked.

Our opponents saw these points, that were presented by our side so ably, and the result was, a surrender of their old battle ground and their retreat to a new field.

It is our turn to move upon their works; and I propose we do so with soft words and hard arguments. In doing this we will notice some of their present points of defense.

1. The great assize. This event, according to their theology, is preceded by the simultaneous resurrection of ALL the dead. It is claimed that this resurrection is due to all, because death came upon all, not as a penalty, but as a calamity on account of Adam's transgression. Our opponents also claim that the life conferred thus upon all the race who have died, is a gift, as well as that which is due them—a sadly disjointed theory which parallels debt and grace. But either position, or both together, invalidate their exposition of one of their famous texts, John v. 28, 29, where the good are said to have a resurrection of "life," and the evil a "resurrection of damnation." To talk about the resurrection conferred upon both righteous and wicked as of the same character, to wit, a debt due them, or a gift to all, in one breath, and in the next breath to declare that the resurrection of the wicked is a "resurrection of damnation," is to utter what I think to be theological jargon.

Notice, the text does not read "a resurrection TO damnation," but a "resurrection OF damnation. That would seem to indicate that they were damned or condemned already, hence they are not raised to be tried. Men are not condemned before trial. With our opponents the whole race have the great gift of life bestowed upon them, and in the midst of their felicity the entire company are summoned to court for judgment. How long all will enjoy the life thus due them, before judgment, we are not informed.

2. We are informed that "our loss in Adam is our gain in Christ," and prominent among the texts quoted is—"As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." This text is affirmed to be one of several that support the above view. Say our friends, "Is it not a fact that all men die because they are in Adam?" Yes, we answer. "Then," say they "even so in Christ shall all be made alive." We might multiply paragraphs in giving arguments against the conclusions of our opponents. We might ask, Is it not a fact that all men die? Our friends would reply, "yes." We might then assert that all men die in the Lord or unto the Lord, in support of our assertion quote, "And NO man dieth to himself . . . whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." But all men are not in Christ, though all men are in Adam. All in Adam die because all are in him who is the natural man. Even so all in Christ shall be made alive again, because Christ is the spiritual man. But Paul is talking about Christians and none others in 1 Cor. xv. He answers the question, "How are the dead raised up?" by saying that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible." Our opponents lay great stress upon the phrase "THE DEAD" in other places, affirming that it means the whole and not a part, of the dead. Will they let their rule work in this instance? We think not, for to have the dead "raised incorruptible," is not what they teach. With them "it is sown a natural body; it is raised a natural body." Even so, with them, all in Christ shall be made alive.

An extract at this point from Prof. Hudson may not be amiss. Concerning the text under consideration he writes: "The question arises here, Does the term 'all' in each member of the verse included the entire human race?

"There would be no exegetical violence whatever in applying the word 'all,' in each member of the verse, to the subjects of discourse in the previous context. These were those who had 'fallen asleep in Christ.' It was no doubt respecting their destiny, that troubled the Corinthian Christians. The expression, 'if in this life only we have hope, we are of all men most miserable,' goes to make the case of believers,—who then found little good in life, and who were killed all the day long—the burden of argument. Again, where our translation speaks of 'the dead,' the article is commonly omitted in the original. This is a matter of some account if the being 'made alive' is taken as 'the resurrection of life.' The article is found only in verses 29 (baptized for the dead), 35, 42, 52. . . But in every other instance . . . the article is omitted. We may then translate, e. g., in ver. 16, 'if the dead persons rise not, then is Christ not raised.' We are not warranted in saying that in these verses (12, 13, 15, 21, 32) 'the dead' means of course all the dead. For all these reasons I find no difficulty whatever in rendering v. 22 with reference to Christians, designated in verses 18, 19, 20: 'For as they all die in Adam, even so in Christ shall they all be made alive.' . . . The very common word 'all,' very naturally used I have taken it, does not require a sudden extension of the subject to embrace all mankind."

We invite the attention of our brethren to these matters hoping that some good may be effected thereby.

Thy brother in Christ,
F. H. BURBANK.

MRS. MARY MANSFIELD, East Machias, Me., writes: I subscribed for the HERALD OF LIFE for six months to see if I should like it; and I am so well pleased with it that I shall never think of doing without it while I can get the means to pay for it. It is all the preaching that I have, and it is very clear to me. I read them carefully and then send them away so some of my friends, who are in darkness, may have a chance to see the glory there is in truth. This is a glorious hope we have, and I want all to have this same hope, and will do all in my power to spread the truth. I hope I may get many subscribers by parting with my paper. I would like to keep them, but I cannot when I know that my friends need light on that blessed book, the Bible, and that my papers may be the means of saving them.

SPONGING IMPOSTORS.

BR. FIELD, of Rochester, N. Y., says he was spunged of $5 by a man calling himself Geo. Thompson, since published in the "Crisis" as an "impostor." He professed himself as having forsaken the "Crisis believers" and become a "Life believer," etc. We would say just one word on this subject. When you find a man in no business, making pretences of being a believer in your religious views, begging, you may safely set him down as an impostor. If you think it duty to help him, do so; but our experience is, we have invariably found such persons mere spongers.

"For Jesus' Sake."

Whene'er by God's assisting grace,
We speed upon the Christian race,
When we devote the fleeting hours
To strew another's path with flowers;
And with pure love, to pride unknown,
Prefer his interest to our own—
This thought each deed of love will make
Most sweet—"'Tis done for Jesus' sake."

Whene'er we watch the couch of pain,
And bid the mourner smile again,
When gladly from our little store
We help the sick or feed the poor,
(Though all our deeds are nothing worth,)
The gracious God of heaven and earth
Will bless each effort that we make,
In our humble faith for Jesus' sake!

When meekly bending to the rod,
We bless the chast'ning hand of God,
When neither insult, wrong, nor pain,
Can force our spirits to complain—
Oh! let this rainbow thought illume
The storm of grief—the cloud of gloom—
God will each pang a blessing make,
When meekly borne for Jesus' sake!

Our Saviour with an eye of love,
Beholds His servants from above;
He left the starry realms for them
To wear shame's starry diadem—
The Lord of heaven and earth appears
To bear their cross—to weep their tears—
To shed His blood, His body break,
For each repentant sinner's sake!
Then, O, what sacrifice can be Too great, my Lord! to make for thee!
Should wealth take wings and flee away,
Should comfort—health—and life decay,
Still shall we love Thee and adore;
Assured that life's brief trial o'er,
God will his blood bought servants wake
To endless bliss—for Jesus' sake!

The 144,000 of Revelation:

And the Kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. Matt. xxv. 34.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

[Concluded from No. 5.]

Of the 144,000 it is said in chapter xiv. 4, "They are the first fruits to God and to the Lamb." This they could not be unless they are to be followed by a harvest. And as the first fruits are always gathered in before the harvest, so must it be in this case, else they could not be the first fruits.

Turning back to chapter 7th, John says that after he had seen the 144,000 sealed out of all the tribes of the children of Israel, he saw a great multitude which no man could number, out of every nation and tribe, and people and tongues, standing in the presence of the Lamb, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands. He does not say that this great multitude were sealed like the 144,000, the first fruits; only that they were clothed in white robes and had palms in their hands, and stood in the presence of the throne and the Lamb. Verse 14 tells how they came by these white robes, viz., they "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." This must not be confounded with "white linen, pure and bright," with which the bride was arrayed, that was given to her.

This great multitude were in the presence of the throne because they had washed their robes and made them white, etc.

This scene being a symbolic representation of something, we wish to get at its meaning, if we can. Our attention is especially called to three things: White robes—standing in the presence of the Lamb, etc.,—and palms in their hands.

From John i. 7; Eph. i. 7; Heb. ix. 14, and Rev. i. 5, it appears to me that the statement that they had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, means that they had been justified from their sins through faith in the blood of Jesus.

We will now examine the words, "standing in the presence of the throne." In the appendix to the Emphatic Diaglott, under the word face, is the following, "Face in the Scriptures is often used to denote presence in the general sense; and there is no other word to denote presence in the Hebrew language. It is used as a token of God's favor, Psa. xxxi. 16; lxi. 1; Dan. ix. 7." In Gen. iv. 14, Cain, after he had heard his sentence, replied, "Behold thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid, and shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth." Cain did not mean that God had literally driven him off the face of the earth; for, in the same verse he says he should be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth. What did he mean? Read verse 12, "When thou tillest the ground it shall not give unto thee her strength." It should withhold her favors from him, and in a figure might have been said to frown upon him. "And Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod." That is, he no longer remained under the divine favor.

So with Israel, when God inflicted punishments on them for their sins; he is represented as casting them out of his sight and presence. See 2 Kings xvii. 18, 20, 23, and xxiv. 20. Psa. cxl. 13, reads, "Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name, the upright shall dwell in thy presence;" i. e., in the divine favor.

I conclude, then, that the literal meaning of this symbolic representation is, that they dwelt in the divine favor, and the blessing of him that sat upon the throne rested upon them because they had washed their garments and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. They are the blessed and happy subjects of the kingdom. The righteous separated out of the nations at the coming of Christ; the nations of earth blessed in the seed of Abraham.

John says they had palms in their hands. John xii. 12 13, will help us to understand this. "On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, took branches off palm trees and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna! blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord." What did they go out to meet Jesus for? Was it not to hail him as King of Israel, and to submit themselves to him as his obedient subjects? And in this formal acknowledgment of Jesus as the King of Israel they went forth bearing palm branches in their hands.

John knew where the 144,000 came from; but when one of the elders asked him who these were that stood in the presence of the throne, and from whence came they? he could not tell. If this great multitude had been the glorified assembly of saints having been begotten by the word of truth that he with the other apostles were commissioned to preach, would he not have recognized them? I think he would. It appears, however, that this white robed multitude out of all nations, standing in the presence of the throne, was something that he did not comprehend.

We will now return to chapter xiv., which opens thus, "And I saw, and behold, the Lamb standing on mount Zion, and with him an hundred, forty and four thousand, having his name and his Father's name written on their foreheads." In his message to the church of Philadelphia, the Spirit says, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God and the name of the city of my God, the new Jerusalem which descendeth out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name. He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches." It is to the churches that he makes this promise to unite his new name, and the name of his God, upon those who overcome. And here in this chapter we find a class upon whom these very names have been written, viz., the 144,000. These, with the Lamb, were standing on mount Zion; not on the literal mountain, for we are dealing in symbols. In this scene is the Lamb, the 144,000—the names written in their foreheads. But their location is significant. Let us see if we can discover its import.

The literal mount Zion was the site of the city of David. Upon it king Solomon erected his magnificent palace. The prophet Micah describing the Kingdom of Christ, says, "But in the last days (the dispensation of the fulness of times) it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be prepared, or established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills: and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem; and he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords in ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (This must be after the 1000 years of Rev. xx., for at the end of that period there is to be a big war.) "But they sit every man under his own vine and under his own fig tree; and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of the Lord of Hosts hath spoken it." Well then, since the mouth of the Lord of Hosts hath spoken it, will he not perform it? I believe with all my heart that he will.

I shall have occasion to call the readers attention to this prophecy again, when I come to speak more particularly of the Kingdom. All I wish to notice at present is, that mount Zion is the site of Christ's throne; and from there he issues forth the law of his kingdom, as David, prophetically, says, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill Zion." Psa. ii. 6. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation." Psa. cxxxii. 13. Other Scriptures might be added, but these are sufficient to establish the fact that mount Zion is the place selected for the throne of Christ and his brethren, 144,000, that are to reign with him.

The law of Moses, which was the law of the kingdom of Israel, was given on Mount Sinai; but the law of Christ, which is to be the law of all nations composing the subjects of the King, will be issued from mount Zion. Jesus is now Lord, and all authority in heaven and on earth, over the house of God, (the church, see Heb. iii. 6 and x. 21,) is given to him. To him the sinner must come for pardon and reconciliation to God. But when the full number of the Gentiles have come in (Rom. xi. 25,) this dominion—basileian—over the house of God will be given up to the Father. 1 Cor. xv. 24. He will then come and collect the various members of his body, and with them return, or as Daniel says, come into the presence of the Ancient of Days, where they will be invested with dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all peoples nations and languages shall serve him, (or them). But this kingly authority will be held and exercised in subjection to God the Father, that he may be all in all. In the prophecy already quoted from Micah iv. 2, it is said, "The law shall go forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Hence mount Zion symbolizes kingly power and authority, and Jerusalem the priestly; and in the book of symbols the investment of Christ and his brethren with royal or kingly authority over the nations is represented to John by the Lamb and the 144,000 standing on mount Zion.

The first five verses of chapter xiv. are taken up in describing the 144,000, constituting the first fruits to God and the Lamb. Verse 14 reads, "And I looked and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe."

If it should be asked, Who is this one like unto the Son of man? many would doubtless answer, Christ. This answer I think is only a part of the truth. Let us take a little time and examine this matter. If we turn to Dan. vii., we will find him relating a dream, in which he saw four great beasts, followed by one "like the Son of man, coming with the clouds of heaven" into the presence of the Ancient of Days, where he received dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all nations, people and languages should serve him. "And I, Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body, and the vision of my head troubled me. I came near unto one of them that stood by and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me and made me know the interpretation of the things" (seen in the dream). What were the things seen that had to be interpreted before Daniel could understand them? Answer—four beasts, and one like the Son of man receiving from the Ancient of Days dominion and a kingdom, etc. Let us listen to what the one that stood by said to Daniel, that we also may know the interpretation of the things. "These great beasts which are four, are four kings (or kingdoms,) which shall arise out of the earth. But the saints of the Most High (margin, "high places,") shall take the kingdom, and possess it forever, even forever and ever." Here we have the interpretation, or the meaning of the things seen in the dream.

The four great beasts, arising out of the sea, symbolized four kingdoms, or dynasties that were to arise out of, or on, the earth. The one like the Son of man, receiving dominion and glory and a kingdom, symbolized the saints of the high places, receiving the kingdom, which they are to possess forever. But as the saints are only joint heirs with Christ, and are to reign with him, he must be included in "the one like the Son of man." What says Paul about this matter? "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets," etc., "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come into the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, (like unto the Son of man) unto the measure of the statute of the fulness of Christ." Eph. iv. 13. Anderson reads, "To a measure of statute that fully develops the Christ." The Emphatic Diaglott, "To the measure of the full statute of the Anointed one." Daniel saw this fully developed Christ—the head and the body joined together, in immortality, constituting Paul's "perfect man,"—come into the presence of the Ancient of Days, where was given to him dominion and glory and a kingdom. John saw him, after he had received the kingdom, coming on a white cloud with a golden crown on his head—showing that he had received the kingdom—and in his hand a sharp sickle, with which he reaped the harvest of the earth.

This proves that our interpretation of the Lamb and the 144,000, standing on mount Zion, is correct; for John saw them standing on mount Zion before he saw the one like unto the Son of man coming on the white cloud to reap the harvest. And any one who will take the trouble to read this fourteenth chapter carefully will see that the events recorded are to follow each other in rapid succession. But another proof that the "one like unto the Son of man" is the symbol of the fully developed Christ, viz., the individual Son of man and his brethren, is the fact that he came with a sickle to reap the harvest. And when Jesus was on earth he said, "The harvest is the end of the world, or age—the reapers are the messengers," which we have shown to be the saints that come with him and take part in "excuting the judgment written."

The true church is represented to us under the following symbols:

"The holy city, the new Jerusalem;" "The bride, the Lamb's wife;" unltimating in "The one like unto the Son of man," represented by the symbolic number of the "Lamb and the 144,000."

We have the apostate church represented under the following symbols:

"Babylon the great"—"That great city city that reigneth over the kings of the earth;" "The woman drunken with the blood of the saints," "The mother of harlots," etc.; ultimating in the "Man of sin, the Son of Perdition," represented by the symbolic number of 666.

A Western New York correspondent mentions a neat little speech of a "four year old." His mother was hugging and kissing him, as mothers will, and said to him, as mothers will say: "Charles, what makes you so sweet?" Charles thought a moment; he had been told that he was made of the earth. A happy thought struck him, and he answered, with a rosy smile: "I think, mother, God must have put a little sugar in the dust—don't you?"

The Piles.—D. B. Salter, Saltersville, N. J., has been severely afflicted with the piles for years. He informs us that he has been entirely cured by the following means. He took a teaspoonful of salt, in cider vinegar, in the morning just before breakfast, till cured. He also says that half that dose is a remedy for dispepsie.

Glorifying God.

"Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit."—John xv. 8.

When surveying the boundless ocean of covenant mercy, every wave chiming, "God is Love," does the thought never present itself—"What can I do for this great being who hath done so much for me?" Recompence Him I cannot. No more can my purest services add one iota to His underived glory, than the tiny taper can add to the blaze of the sun at noonday, or a drop of water to the boundless ocean.

Yet, wondrous thought! From this worthless soul of mine there may roll in a revenue of glory which He who loves the broken and contrite spirit "will not despise." "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."

Reader, are you a fruit bearer in your Lord's vineyard? Are you seeking to make life one grand act of consecration to His glory? one thank-offering for His unmerited love? You may be unable to exhibit much fruit in the eyes of the world. Your circumstances and position in life may forbid you to point to any splendid services, or laborious or imposing efforts in the cause of God. It matters not. It is often those fruits that are unknown to man, ripening in seclusion, that He values most; the quiet lowly work; patience and submission; gentleness and humility; putting yourself unreservedly into his hands, willing to be led by him, even in darkness, saying, "Not my will, but thine be done;" the unselfish spirit, the meek bearing of an injury, the unostentatious kindness: these are some of the fruits which your heavenly Father loves, and by which he is glorified.

Perchance it may be with you the season of trial, the chamber of protracted sickness, the time of desolating bereavement, some furnace seven time heated. Herein, too, you may surely glorify God. Never is your heavenly Father more glorified by his children on earth than when, in the midst of these furnace-fires, he listens to nothing but the gentle breathings of confiding faith and love. "Let Him do what seemeth good unto Him." Yes, you can thus glorify Him in a way which angels cannot do in a world where there is no trial. They can glorify God only with the crown; you can glorify him with the cross and the prospect of the crown together!

Ah, if He be dealing severely with you; if He, as the great Husbandman, be pruning His vines, lopping off their boughs, stripping off their luxuriant branches and "beautiful rods," remember the end! "He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit," and, "Herein is my Father glorified."

Be it yours to lie passive in His hands, saying in unmurmuring resignation, "Father, glorify thy name! Glorify Thyself, whether by giving, filling my cup or emptying from vessel to vessel. Let me know no will but Thine."

Angels possess no higher honor and privilege than glorifying the God before whom they cast their crowns. How blessed to be able thus to claim brotherhood with the spirits in the upper sanctuary. Nay, more, to be associated with the Saviour himself in the theme of his own exalted joy, when he said, "I have glorified thee on the earth."

"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy may be full.

"No Danger, it's upon a Rock."

These were the words, my dear young friends, which were said to me a few weeks ago, when the waters were sweeping by a large mill as if they were determined to carry it away with the flood. Almost everybody about here at least, has a story to tell about their experience in "the dreadful flood," and so have I, and I hope it will interest you.

That Monday morning when it rained so hard, a gentleman from Cincinnati came to see me, saying that he could only stay a few hours.

"What," said I, "you will not think of going out again to-day in the rain?"

"But I must get on to Providence to-night," said Mr. Burnham.

So after he had been with me a few hours, I started in the rain with my horse, to take him to the depot. When we were within half a mile of the station, we came to a river where all the bridges and dams had been swept away, carrying with it also the wrecks of houses.

We then turned back, and tried to get to the station on another road, but there, too, the bridge had been swept away. A large factory or mill was near by. One of its owners was looking anxiously at the mad waters as they went roaring and foaming by. I said to him, "Do you think that the mill will be swept away?"

His quick answer was, "No danger; it's on a rock!"

It would not have been even injured by the stream which turned its wheel, that made all the spindles fly round so swiftly; but after the mill was built, a high embankment was raised up beside it, and a railroad track laid upon it, and under it, througn a small culvert ran a little stream which was often dry in summer. But when the floods arose that little hole beneath the great embankment, was not large enough to let all the water through, and so a great pond was made on the other side, and in a few hours it was so large that it pressed away the great sandy dam, and down, down came the mighty flood right against the mill that stood upon the rock. My friend, who not ten minutes before had said, "No danger; it's upon a rock," seemed almost trembling with fear. Trees, and rocks, and dirt, and floods of water came tumbling and rushing against the mill, but "it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock."

But though it was not thrown down, it was a good deal injured. Those that built the mill never thought of that tiny little stream swelling into a great flood; but so it did, and if the building had not been "founded upon a rock," it would most surely have fallen, and "and great would have been of it."

Jesus is called the "Rock of ages," because in all ages those who have trusted in Him, have been "like unto a man who built his house upon a rock."

Thousands of dear little children have built their hopes upon Him, and when the floods of remptation have suddenly come upon them, they have been swept away.

When I looked upon that mill, after the waters had done their best to destroy it, and when I saw how it was broken, and torn, and injured, but not ruined, I said, That's just the way it was with Paul when he said of himself, "we are troubled on every side, yet not destroyed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed."

Perhaps you, my little reader, are in just that condition now. What then are you going to do? Are you going to give up trying to be a Christian?

Oh, don't do that! What did the owner of that mill do? Sit down and cry, and say, "It's no use trying to do anything with this old broken down mill?" No! no! He went right to work, and is now fast fitting it up, and soon the great water wheel will be turning again, and all the long rooms will look as if alive with machinery. That is something like what you must do.

Oh, do not be discouraged,
For Jesus is your Friend.
He will give you grace to conquer,
And keep you to the end."

Here is a letter from a little boy in England. He, you see, has got the truth in his mind—the Lord Jesus is like a rock. He says: "The Lord never changes."

All of his letter will interest you. See if you do not think that he has built upon the right foundation.

My Dear Sir; When you told us about Jesus dying on the cross for us poor sinners, I gave my heart to God. I want to help to bring others into the fold of the Good Shepherd. I thank God for those blessed meetings. What a beautiful text is Psalm ciii. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth those that fear him."—And so the Lord will if we obey him and do what is right, for the Lord will never change if we do what he tell us, and keep his commandments. I thank God that I have been led to see that I was a sinner. Now I can sing with all my heart, "I love Jesus, yes, I do." I have chosen Him as my part. He has made my heart all new.

Your young friend, *

Beneath the Cross of Jesus,
I lay me down to weep,
And ponder o'er the matchless grace
Displayed on Cavalry's steep.

Beneath the Cross of Jesus,
I lay me down to pray,
Nor look in vain for blessing,
In God's appointed way.

Suppose that the builders of that mill had said, "It will cost too much to build our mill upon a rock; we'll place it on this soft, sandy foundation near by," where would it have been when "the rain descended and the floods came, and the wind blew and beat upon that house?" You know well it would have fallen, as other houses on the banks of this same river did. It is my prayer, that every little reader of "The American Presbyterian," may be sure that he is trusting only in Jesus, and then he will be "like unto a wise man that built his house upon a rock."—*Amer. ### Two Faces.

I know a little girl who has two faces.

When she is dressed up in her white dress and blue sash, and has on her blue kid shoes, and around her neck a string of pearl beads, then she looks so sweet and good that you would like to kiss her.

For she knows that company is going to call on her mother; and she expects that the ladies will say, "What a little darling!" or "What lovely curls!" or "What a sweet mouth!" and then kiss her little red lips, and perhaps give her some sugar plums.

And the ladies who praise her think she is very lady-like too. For she always says, "Yes, ma'am," and "No, ma'am," when she ought; and says, "Thank you," so sweetly when anything is given her.

But when she is alone with her mother, then she is sometimes very naughty. If she cannot have what she would like, or cannot do just as she wishes, then she will pout, and cry, and scream; and no one would ever think of kissing such homely lips.

And no one would take her to be the same little girl who behaved so prettily in company. So you see, this little girl has two faces. One she uses in company, and puts on with her best dress; the other she wears when she is alone with her mother. I know another little girl who has only one face; and that is always as sweet as a peach, and never so sweet as when alone with mamma.

Which little girl do you like best? The one with two faces, or the one who has but one? And which will you be like?—The Nursery.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

REVELATION AND SCIENCE.

BY HON. D. H. CHASE.

MUCH that claims to be scientific and revealed truth is human error. True science and true revelation, being both from God, cannot contradict each other, for God cannot contradict himself. True science is a revelation from God, worthy our intense interest and study, not to be neglected without serious loss. Paul, the great and learned apostle to us Gentiles, declared that "The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead." The day is coming when the wondrous harmony between revelation and science will give new faith and joy to the Christian. Permit one harmony to be traced in your columns.

THE HEAVENS AND EARTH RESERVED UNTO FIRE!

Revelation declares, "Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished; but the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto FIRE."

The water was literal. The fire must be so, too.

"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up."

This quotation from Peter, being in direct connection with the first passage, must also be literal. Many passages in the Bible declare the agency of fire in purging the world. Isaiah says, "For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the KING it is prepared; he hath made it DEEP and LARGE; the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone doth kindle it." The prophet seems to say, "as Jerusalem is purified from its carcasses and filth by the fire of Tophet (valley of Hinnom), so shall the earth be purified for the new Jerusalem, by the fires of the great day." "Death and Hell were cast into the LAKE OF FIRE." This appears to me to teach that the subjects of death and hades (or the grave), are to be burned to "ashes," "root and branch," in "the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." As your readers are generally familiar with the Scriptures, further quotations are unnecessary.

GEOLOGY ALSO REVEALS THE LAKE OF FIRE.

Geology is comparatively a new science. It numbers among its votaries noble intellects and truly Christian hearts. It does not profess to know all the history and facts regarding the earth, but holds some things as well established. It teaches that the interior of the earth is a lake, an ocean of fire, and it gives strong reasons for this teaching. Some of these will now be given.

FIRST REASON.

In boring deep artesian wells, the temperature of the earth is found to increase with the depth. The water of the deepest wells is warm enough for tepid baths.

SECOND REASON.

Immense quantities of intensely hot and fused rock are vomited from volcanoes in many parts of the earth. In a single eruption, mount Hecla threw out enough lava to cover the State of Connecticut twenty-five feet deep, by the computation of observers. So intense was the heat of this lava, that a hill on which an observer stood, and from which he retreated, was speedily melted down and washed away by a stream of lava. The hill flowed like wax in a flame. After these eruptions the surrounding district does not cave in, as it would naturally do if the earth were solid, and local causes should thus hollow out and undermine one district. If the interior is fluid, the vacant space would be speedily filled again from the interior ocean of lava.

THIRD REASON.

During earthquakes which occur from volcanoes, hot water, steam, and even flames issue from fissures in the soil, indicating internal heat.

FOURTH REASON.

During earthquakes a rolling motion like the progress of waves is sometimes felt, and these waves are very visible as they roll across level tracts. This phenomenon could not occur were the globe a solid mass. When an imprisoned body of water, lying deep in the caverns of the earth, is reached by the heat and converted into steam or gas, the imprisoning crust above is heaved upward by the great force, while the melted matter beneath is forced downward and sidewise, creating waves in the ocean of fire.

FIFTH REASON.

Earthquake waves traverse immense distances. One is said to have crossed from South America, beneath the Atlantic Ocean, to the western shore of Europe. Persons at sea, walking the decks of vessels, were thrown on their knees by the sudden upheaval of the ocean.

SIXTH REASON.

Liquids when free, assume a spheric form. Water drops and melted metal when falling from a great height become round. Shots are manufactured by the aid of this property. Now the earth and all the planets and satellites of our system have this round form. Moreover they are slightly shortened in their polar diameter, and assume the oblate spheroidal form, in consequence of revolving on their axes. And this is precisely the form a revolving fluid mass assumes. The earth has this form. A solid mass could not assume this form.

SEVENTH REASON.

Rocks in every quarter of the globe are found penetrated by veins or seams of other kinds of rock not soluble in water. These veins are sometimes broad, sometimes as thin as a knife blade. The material thus injected, must have been in a liquid state. Where veins pass through layers of bituminous coal, the heat converts the coal to coke or anthracite. The evidences of heat are undeniable. Therefore melted rock must exist extensively beneath the solid rocks.

But the inquiry is made, "What sustains the heat of this vast lake of fire?" "What fuel feeds its furnaces?" The answer is easy and simple. When a flat iron is heated and withdrawn to a cool place, it soon parts with its heat. If it be wrapped in several folds of flannel or other poor conductor of heat, it remains hot for hours. The larger the heated mass, and the thicker the badly conducting wrapper, the slower the cooling process. A heavy iron casting, even in winter, requires days to cool sufficiently to be removed from the mold. Could the wrapper be absolutely a non-conductor of heat, the mass would never cool solidify. Now apply this simple and obvious fact. The crust of the earth is a very poor conductor. It is many miles thick. It wraps a mighty mass of melted rock at white heat, thousands of miles through. Were the crust infusible by the heat within, it must require almost an eternity for the melted mass to cool. No new fuel were needed to sustain the heat through a million periods as long as man's history covers.

The sun is a thousand times larger than all our moons and planets united. It is the only body of our system whose surface has not been cooled and crusted over. Its surface is still intensely hot and in violent commotion.

The moon is the nearest of the heavenly bodies. It also bears strong marks of internal fires. Several times, and even quite lately, volcanic eruption has been seen with the telescope. Its craters are of vast size, almost visible to the naked eye. A good spy glass shows them distinctly.

Our earth has been the theatre of awful convulsions. Ocean shell fish are found imbedded in mountain summits. Vast layers of rocks have been displaced, heaved up, torn and ground into soil. Mighty ranges of mountains, thousands of miles long, have had their summits lifted above the clouds. Long the ocean of water seems to have battled with the ocean of fire. Again and again the former must have retreated from the conflict as an ocean of steam, then being cooled and condensed on its outer surface, must have descended to renew the struggle until it conquered from its great enemy a solid crust for its bed.

Ages of repose have followed. The crust separates the combatants. But steadily and stealthily the ocean of fire is dissolving the barrier, occasionally reaching a cavern filled with water, expanding it into steam and gas, and disturbing the truce of the enemies by an earthquake or a volcanic eruption. As the inner fires melt their way outward, these commotions multiply rapidly, there will be "earthquakes in divers places," forewarning man of the time when the war will be once more fully renewed, when the ocean of fire shall reach the ocean of water, the crust of the earth be shattered, the ocean flash into steam ("there shall be no more sea"); then "shall the heavens (atmosphere) pass away with a great noise, and the elements melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are within shall be burned up."

Then will the saints, raised above the conflict, safe forever with their Lord, look upon a scene of grandeur and sublimity such as it hath not entered into the mind of man to conceive.

Such convulsions may precede the formation of the new heavens and new earth (the third in the series), in which dwelleth righteousness.

CHRISTIANS AT THE JUDGMENT.

I. The time of the judgment. 2 Tim. iv. 1, "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 1 Cor. iv. 5, "Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come."

II. The Judge. 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8, "The Lord Jesus Christ . . . shall judge the quick and the dead." "The Lord, the righteous Judge."

III. Christians must be there. 2 Cor. v. 10, "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ." Also, Rom. xiv. 10.

IV. Why they must be there. Rom. xiv. 12, "So every one shall give account of himself to God."

V. The object of this judgment. 1 Cor. iii. 5–15, "I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth, anything, neither he that watereth; but God, that giveth the increase. Now he that planted and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, (and) precious stones—wood, hay, (and) stubble: every man's work shall be manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."

2 Cor. v. 8–10, "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him: for we must ALL appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

It is good to build with gold, silver, and precious stones; but bad to build with wood, hay and stubble.

VI. Christians are charged to be faithful in view of this approaching judgment. 1 John ii. 28, "And now little children abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John iv. 17, "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment." Heb. xiii. 17, "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls as they that must give account; that they may do it with joy and not with grief: for that is unprofitable to you." 2 Tim. iv. 1–8, "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom, preach the word, . . . watch thou in all things. . . . Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing."

From the foregoing it appears that all Christians will be saved, though some may suffer loss. This judgment, it would seem, does not have reference to their receiving immortality—that matter is decided before the resurrection, for the dead are raised incorruptible. Immortality, which secures eternal life, is a gift through Jesus Christ our Lord, and that without our merit being taken into the account. In fact, we can never earn eternal life. But this judgment has reference to rewards that will be given, or losses that may be suffered, neither of which can add to or take from our immortality: for though a Christian may "suffer loss, yet he himself be saved, yet so as by fire." That Christians will occupy various stations in the kingdom is plainly taught in the Bible. Christ says "He that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he," (John the Baptist). It is taught in the parables of the lord who gave money to his servants as he was about to travel into a far country." Again, "whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." "He that is least among you all, the same shall be great." "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

These quotations may suffice to establish the point. Let me close by quoting the exhortation of Peter to those of "like precious faith." Join "to your faith virtue (courage); and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly-kindness; and to brotherly-kindness charity. . . For if ye do these things ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Yours in Christ,
F. H. BURBANK.

THE ETERNITY OF EVIL.

SCRIPTURE declares, that God will "destroy both body and soul in hell." The popular theory teaches, that he will destroy neither one nor the other; but preserve both of them alive forever, in unmitigated agony.

Scripture declares, that "our God is a consuming fire." The popular theory teaches, that he is only a scorching fire.

Scripture declares, that the "fiery indignation" will "devour the adversaries." The popular theory teaches, that it will do no such thing, but only torture them.

Scripture declares, that the wicked will perish "like natural brute beasts." The popular theory teaches, that there will be no analogy whatever between the two cases.

Scripture declares, that whosoever "will save his life" by unfaithfulness to Christ, shall ultimately "lose it." The popular theory teaches, that no man can lose his life, and that the second death is no death at all, but eternal life in sin and misery.

Scripture declares, that whosoever "doeth the will of God abideth forever." The popular theory teaches, that every man will abide forever, whether he does the will of God or not.

Scripture declares, that if we desire "immortality" we must seek it "by patient continuance in well doing." The popular theory teaches, that every man possesses inherent indefeasible immortality, and what we have to seek for is, that it may prove a blessing and not a curse to us.

Scripture declares, that "the wages of sin is death." The popular theory teaches, that it is eternal life in misery; in other words, that God will inflict upon impenitent sinners a punishment infinitely greater than what he has pronounced to be their due.

Scripture declares, that "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." The popular theory teaches, that eternal life is the common possession of all men, and that the gift of God through Christ is the privilege of spending it in holiness and happiness.

Scripture declares, that "the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." The popular theory teaches, that they will never be destroyed at all, but that a portion of the universe will be specially set apart for the external exhibition of them in their fullest maturity.

Scripture declares, that Christ is to "reconcile all things to God." The popular theory teaches, that all things will never be reconciled to God; that discord and dishonor will never cease, but only be confined to one particular locality.

Scripture declares that in Christ "all things consist." The popular theory teaches, that a whole kingdom will "consist" forever, although not "in him."

Scripture declares, that "he that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son of God hath not life," that "if we live after the flesh we shall die, but if through the Spirit we mortify the deeds of the body we shall live." The advocates of the popular theory say, that the life of believers and unbelievers, of natural men and spiritual men, must be of equal duration—that the doctrine of eternal happiness, and the doctrine of eternal misery, must stand or fall together—in other words, that if what the Scripture asserts be true, what it denies must be true also.

I take my stand, therefore, on the plain, consistent, emphatic teaching of the whole Bible from beginning to end, as opposed to the "traditions of men," which have so grievously perverted it, and thereby obscured the glory of Christ, reduced to an unmeaning form the declaration that "God is Love," produced a frightful amount of infidelity, robbed the law of its terrors by making it threaten sinners with what they are sure will never be executed, incalculably weakened the saving power of the gospel, and damaged the believer's whole spiritual constitution, by putting an unnatural strain upon it that God never intended it to bear.

The three or four passages that are thought to confirm the traditional view have been examined, and been found either entirely to fail in lending it even the appearance of support, or to be but as dust in the balance against the overpowering weight of testimony on the other side.—Selected.

HIS SATANIC MAJESTY.

THE following account of this personage, was cut from the "Pittsburg Commercial" of Nov. 3, 1869, and sent us by Samuel Mason, of Beaver Falls, Pa. It may interest the reader. We hope none will be tempted to worship the whole "44,435,556 devils" which superstition has invented or discovered.

His "Satanic Majesty" has had many titles. The Egyptians call him Typhon; the Greeks, Titan; the Persians, Ohromaze. The Scotch have given him several names, as "Auld Clootie," which is supposed to allude to his cloven feet. They also called him the "Auld Ane," (the Old One), and still another Scottish appellation for him is "Auld Hornie," which is based upon the popular belief that his Satanic Majesty is supplied with horns. According to a learned German theologian, there are 44,435,556 devils. The usual German expletive is "ten thousand tuyfels," but the calculations render it a used up exclamation. Our ancestors firmly believed that it was possible for a person to be possessed by a devil. For thousands of years, indeed, humanity has held this creed, or this superstition; nor, in the face of the many instances of demonical possession recorded in the Scriptures, can we refuse, without impiety, to credit the stories of men, women and children who have had devils which have been miraculous cast out. The good men who translated the Bible into the English tongue were the contemporaries of the witchfinders. The king to whom they dedicated their grand labor had himself written a ponderous treatise against witchcraft. They came from their task, their brains heated by Oriental imagery, and unable, perhaps, to draw lofty ollegory and naked fact, to detect the supernatural in every relation of social life, and so find devils everywhere. The old fiend of the Mediæval legends—the Gothic devil with horns and hoofs, saucer eyes and a tail—was resuscitated in the bright morning of the Protestant Reformation. From the accession of James until the end of the reign of the Second Charles, "the State Trials" teems with records of devilitry. Let a woman be old and ugly and cross-grained, and especially rhematic, and straightway commerce with a familiar fiend was imputed to her. Many such miserable old crones, who had been scourged, ducked and pelted nearly to death's door, were fain to avoid further torture before they had reached the stake, to confess they had colleagued with the devil, "in the likeness of a black man, about a foot and a half high." In France, at the same period, the nuns of Loudun were possessed by a devil in the shape of a tom cat, speaking tolerable Latin. In Sweden the children were plagued with the evil one, who was regularly exorcised out of the whole troop of urchins every Sunday morning at the church door by means of a birth rod. And the devil even crossed the Atlantic and caught hold of people in Virginia and the washerwomen and cooks in Salem and other parts of New England.

The imagination of the Chinese have invented no less than ten devils and hells. One presides over a hell stuck full of knives; another an iron tank filled with boiling water; a third is a hell of ice; in another the punishment is pulling out the tongues of those who tell lies; another a hell of poisonous serpents; in another the victim is drawn into pieces; another a hell of blackness and darkness; and in praying they say, "May I not fall into a hell of swords!" and into this or that place of torment.

OUT AT NIGHT.

FATHERS and mothers, look out for your children when the shadows of evening have gathered around you! Where are they then? Are they at home, at the pleasant, social fireside, or are they running the streets? If so, take care; the chances of their ruin are many. There is scarcely anything more destructive to their morals than running abroad at night. Under cover of darkness they acquire the education of crime; they learn to be rowdyish, if not absolutely vicious; they catch up loose talk, they hear sinful thoughts, they see obscene things, and become reckless and riotous. If you would save them from vulgarity, save them from ruin, save them from prison, see to it that night finds them at home. More than one young man has told the chaplain of the state prison that here was the beginning of his downward course, that finally brought him to the felon's cell. Let parents solemnly ponder this matter, and do all they can to make home attractive for all the children, so attractive that the boys will perfer it to roaming the streets. There is no place like home in more senses than one—certainly no place like home for boys in the evening.

IN the voyage of life we should imitate the ancient mariners, who, without losing sight of the earth, trusted to the heavenly lights for their guidance.

THE KINGDOM.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

"BUT when they believed Philip publishing the good news concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptised, both men and women."—Acts viii. 12. "And he went into the synagogue and spoke boldly, for three months, reasoning and persuading them of the things concerning the Kingdom of God."—Acts xix. 8. "And now behold, I know that all ye among whom I went about preaching the Kingdom of God shall see my face no more."—Acts xx. 25. "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their languages, and preaching the good news of the kingdom."—Matt. iv, 23.—(B. U.)

From these and many other like passages, it is evident "the Kingdom of God" was the great theme of Jesus and his apostles. For this proclamation of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ is the gospel, that is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes it. In this article I shall confine myself to the "things concerning the kingdom."

In my article on the 144,000, I called the reader's attention to the nature of the kingdom (dominion) prepared for man from the foundation of the world. I also showed by the testimony of Peter (Acts iii. 21) that God has been speaking by the mouth of all his holy prophets from the beginning, of a restoration, and that Jesus would remain in heaven until the time to inaugurate the restoration had come. As the prophet saith, "Behold his reward is with him and his work before him," Isa. lxii. 12, viz., "To give to every man according as his works shall be" [recorded in the books].—Rev. xxii. 12. And to inaugurate the restoration by destroying the works of the devil. See 1 John iii. 8.

Proof.—"And when the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the angels (messengers) with him, then will he sit on his throne of glory, and before him shall be gathered all the nations, and he will divide them one from another as the shepherd divides the sheep from the goats. And he will set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. . . . Then will the king say to those on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom, etc. Then will he say to those on his left hand, Depart from me, accursed, into the everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." Matt. xxv. 31, 34, 41. (B. U.) I believe this, I believe that all nations means all nations; and I believe it means all of all nations. I believe that this judgment scene will take place at the time of his coming in his glory, because it is in harmony with the testimony of the prophets; I believe it because Jesus has fixed it at that time and nowhere else. And he speaks of it as the first work done by him after he comes and sits on his throne, consequently I believe it will be a preliminary work to the restoration, and not, as some teach, a thousand years after he comes. As proof of the correctness of my position, I offer the testimony of Paul. "Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us." When? "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels; in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe" [the gospel]. 2 Thess. i. 6–10. Paul and Christ are in perfect harmony. Christ says the punishment of the wicked of all nations will be when he comes in his glory and sits on his glorious throne. Paul says it will be when he comes revealed in flaming fire, etc., to be glorified in his saints. Christ says the punishment will be everlasting. Paul says it will be everlasting destruction. We will now have John's testimony. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath came, and the time of the dead to be judged, and to give the reward to thy servants the prophets and to the saints and to those who fear thy name, the small and the great, and to destroy those who destroy the earth." Rev. xii. 18. The language here is too plain to be trifled with. Angry nations, rewarding the saints, and destroying the wicked are inseparably connected together by the words, "The time came." What God hath joined together let no man put asunder. This time is introduced by the sounding of the seventh trumpet—the third and last wo; and the sounding of this trumpet is at the time that "The kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ," who will reign forever and ever.

If we can show by the Word of truth that the restoration spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets from the beginning, and "the kingdoms of this world becoming the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ," are one event, we will have done much toward settling the character of Christ's kingdom.

We have shown the kingdoms of this world become Christ's at the sounding of the seventh trumpet. We will now call up our old and faithful witness Paul. Hear him: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. iv. 16. Notice: the descending of Christ and the resurrection of the dead in him, are both at the sounding of the trump of God. Hear him again: "Behold I show you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump for the trump [the last trumet] shall sound, and the dead [in Christ] will be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Peter is our next witness: "And he may send him, having been before destined for you, Jesus Christ; whom, indeed, heaven must retain till the times of restoration of all things which God spoke by the mouth of his holy prophets from of old." Acts iii. 20, 21 (Diaglott). "From the biginning" (B. U.) "of ancient times."—Anderson. The summing up is this: The Lord descends, and the dead in Christ are raised at the sounding of the "trump of God," the dead are raised incorruptible at the "last trumpet" (Paul). Christ does not come until the "times of restoration" (Peter). The kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, at the sounding of the "seventh trumpet," at which time the dead are judged—the saints rewarded, the wicked destroyed (John), and as there are but seven trumpets, the seventh is the "last"—"the trump of God."

These witnesses positively prove the restoration, and the kingdoms of this world becoming Christ's, to be the same event; also that the judging of the dead and rewarding the saints, is at the same time; and John tells us, in addition, that the judging of the dead and destroying the wicked with the second death, is at the appearing of the great white throne; the fleeing away of the heavens and earth; and was followed by a new heaven and earth. Rev. xx. 11–15, xxi. 1, and onward. Hence the judging of the dead is preliminary to the restoration. With this positive testimony before me, I am compelled to reject the teaching that there will be a period of 1,000 years between the coming of Christ the appearing of the "great white throne," and the new heavens and earth state to which we will next invite the reader's attention.

A Dialogue.

Br. Storrs: I had a conversation with a good brother, the other day, on the second death. I will give you the substance of it, as follows: S. S. Call.

Call.—Brother B., I see you still believe all the wicked must be made alive from the dead, and then be destroyed, in order to suffer the penalty of the law.

B.—Yes; I don't see how you can harmonize the Scriptures any other way.

C.—How do you understand the word "perish," in John iii. 16? (quoting the verse.)

B.—I understand it to mean the second death.

B.—Did Paul so understand it in 1 Cor. xv. 16, 18, "For if the dead rise not . . . then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished?" Does not Paul carry the idea that if the dead are not raised they are perished?

B.—Well, I own I never saw it in that light before; it does look so.

C.—Now mark: It is only them that sleep in Jesus that also perish if the dead rise not. Must the wicked dead be raised to be saved from perishing?

B.—O, no; the dead in Christ shall rise first.

C.—Well, then, if all the dead are raised, how many are perished?

B.—Not any one.

C.—Now let us read the text again, 1 Cor. xv., in connection with 1 Thess. iv. 14. "For if the dead rise not . . . then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—"But now is Christ risen from the dead and become first fruits of them that slept." "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again" (all men will be raised from the dead? no; but) "even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Here Paul tells us just how many will be raised. Thus we see, if the dead, who do not sleep in Jesus, are not raised, they "utterly perish in their own corruption," as Peter says, 2 Pet. ii. 12.

S. L. Houghton, Florida, Mass., writes: It is with pleasure that I look on volume vii of the Herald, and can say that I agree with the brethren and sisters in commending it in its beauty and appearance; but, best of all, I am happy to think it is laboring to spread the glorious truths contained in the gospel. May the blessing of God and his smiles of pleasure attend it in its onward journey, and on those connected with it. May they seek to be guided by His commands, having their hearts filled with the love of God. I send the name of two new subscribers; hope soon to be able to send more. It seems to me as though the circulation of the Herald could be easily increased if the brethren and sisters would work a little harder. Let us all try; for soon the night will come when no man can work.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 1, 1869.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

To Subscribers.

We have extended credit to subscribers this year as we have never done before. A large number to whom we have thus continued the paper have, as yet. made no response. Three numbers more will complete the first quarter of this volume. If we receive no response by that time, you must not blame us if the paper reaches you no more. We hope better things for you, though we thus speak.

To those who have made pledges, we would say, it will be to the advantage of the office and the "Life and Advent Union" for you to redeem those pledges at as early a day as possible. Our expenses in fitting up an office have drawn more on our funds than usual at this season of the year.

Let us hear from all interested as early as as may be.

A Suggestion to Correspondents.

Those who write long articles will help us, by so arranging their matter that it can be properly divided so as not to fill more than two columns. Articles, especially on new topics, will be more likely to be read if short than if too extended. Further, every topic should be made to stand out alone, as much as possible, and not mixed up with others till the reader hardly knows what the point is, intended to be established.

Another thing: a typographical error, if it does not convey an entire opposite sense to that intended, is hardly worth correcting in a later issue, as no one is likely to go back to the article to see how the correction fits. The article, if it has been read, is retained only in its general view, and the error has been overlooked or forgotten. Sometimes persons quote Scripture imperfectly in their writings. They must not blame our compositors or proof-reader if they "follow copy." Be careful to see you are correct yourselves.

"Preventives Better than Cures."

Preventives are sometimes disagreeable to the persons for whom they are intended; and after the time has passed and the evil was not accomplished, it is very gravely said, "How foolish or wicked it was for you to say or do what you did; for the thing was not done."

That the thing was not done is no evidence that the effort to prevent it was foolish or wicked; that very effort might have been the real cause why the deed was not accomplished.

The public may have reason to suspect that certain persons design to perpetrate an evil on community which is regarded as a fearful calamity, if consummated. Those who are on the look-out sound an alarm which puts people on the watch, and the rogues themselves may fear, in consequence, to carry out their evil design, and it is not doue. Could they say, The note of alarm was foolish, wicked, or useless? Certainly not: that very alarm might have been and most likely was what prevented the deed being accomplished by those who designed it.

Watchfulness and constant vigilance is the price of liberty; and the first symptoms of an attempt to abridge liberty of speech or of the press is to be resisted, and the alarm sounded. If no evil is intended by those suspected, none will be done by putting people on their guard against submitting to such evils as are suspected.

All Christendom, nearly, is sounding an alarm against Popery in view of the "Ecumenical Council," soon to be held at Rome. Are these notes of warning foolish, wicked, or useless? What Protestant will pretend they are? Where is the Protestant that says, "Hold your tongues; wait and see what the Council does before you judge it?" Do not all say, The way to prevent the evil, if it can averted, is to put the people on their guard, and let that Council know they are watched, and that the feared evils will be resisted, if it dares to attempt them. How many who go up to that Council will do so under the influence of these previous warnings; and will be led to act entirely different on the offensive points to what they would have done if no notes of alarm had been sounded. Much as they might have desired it, they will fear to act in the affirmative on those propositions which they are forewarned the general public will resist.

When they come from that Council, think you, they will lecture the Protestants on their folly for having sounded an alarm previous to that meeting; and tell them all their noise about it was useless, as the things were not done against which they inveighed? If they did thus talk, would not Protestants respond, True, but was it not the knowledge which the Council possessed that it would cause a division in their own body and be used by Protestants to raise a storm against Romanism that would prove its overthrow, that, in fact, prevented the deeds?

What is true in Rome's case is true in relation to all other civil or ecclesiastical bodies. When any symptoms appear, looking to an unauthorized lordship over the rights of others, honest and fearless men will lift up their voices in advance of the accomplished evil; and thus, if possible, prevent it. Is not this better than by silence to seem to approve it, till it becomes an accomplished fact, and then set up a hue-in-cry against it? Will it not cost more labor, expense, and perhaps suffering, to have the evil removed than it would by a timely warning beforehand to have prevented it?

"If the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman: if when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people; then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet and taketh not warning; if the sword come and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head. . . . But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand." Ezk. xxxiii. 2–6.

Let us be warned, then, not to sit in silence when we see evil approaching, till it is actually accomplished; but lift up our voice against it in advance, so that none shall have occasion to say, afterwards, "I should not have been drawn into the snare if it had not been for your silence." We are not by silence to seem even to give consent to what our convictions tell us should be opposed, in civil or ecclesiastical bodies which may exist or are seeking existence; especially, if we have any relation to the cause involved. Such is our idea of the matter; and on this principle we have acted and design still to act, regardless of the reproach that may fall on us for it. We have but one Master to please, and we esteem his approbation above that of any individual, or associated body, by whatever name called. It is enough for us to be in the Church of Christ.

Responsibilty.

It seems useless to say anything on this subject, with the standing statement at the editorial head speaking out every week; and yet some editors and others speak as though we were responsible for all the sentiments which appear in the Herald of Life. One editor, not long sinee, quoted from this paper a short article, offensive to him, and told his readers it was the utterance of the "Herald of Life;" while the truth was, it was a correspondent, with his proper initials, which were omitted in the quotation. If such a course is honest or honorable, then we are ignorant of both those graces.

When we quote from a paper whose motto is, "Each writer is responsible for his own sentiments, and the editor is not, unless he indorses such sentiments," we speak of the writer, and not of the paper, further than to note the particular one in which the sentiments appeared. Any other course shows a design of evil to the paper itself.

If sentiments appear in our columns opposed to our own, we are forbidden—by a resolution of the Life and Advent Union, passed at its last session—from responding to them the same week. We opposed the passage of such resolution; but it passed, and we have governed ourselves by it. The consequence is, some sentiments we should respond to, if allowed to do it at the time, we pass in perpetual silence, not choosing to revive the subject a week afterwards.

When the Editor speaks, he speaks his own sentiments, and he alone is responsible for them. The Union may approve, censure, or condemn them, when assembled: and it is for them to say to whom they will intrust the editorial department.

The object of the "Union" in publishing this paper is expressed every week, at the left hand of its Head and in its Motto. If the Editor expresses sentiments not included there, let him bear the blame, if blame there is. On various topics he differs from many members of the Union; but they express their views, generally, if they choose to do so, and the Editor claims and exercises the same right. Yet there are some points, merely speculative, which he does not introduce, and discourges others from doing so.

We have at length been able to get this valuable work out, in a pamphlet of 84 pages, in neat style; and it is worthy of a place in every family in the land.

The first edition of 1,000 has cost within a fraction of $150, or fifteen cents per copy; but we put it at ten cents, or nine copies for $1, which includes the postage. We trust and believe that many thousand will be called for; it should be put into the hands of all persons who can be induced to read it. Perhaps nothing has been presented to the public, in so small a compass, on the "Life Views," that is so well calculated to do good as this work of Dr. Finley's. We intreat, therefore, the friends of the cause, everywhere, to take hold in earnest to scatter it in every place. Let none be left in ignorance for the lack of effort on our part to lay the truth before them.

"The Theology of the Bible."

We gave notice last week that we had received from Judge Halsted, the author, a donation of some of the above named work, which we offer for sale at $2 per copy, the purchaser sending in addition 32 cents to prepay postage when sent by mail. The retail price is $3; but we furnish them as above; or, we will give you a copy, as a premium, for four new subscribers, with $8 in advance, for the Herald of Life.

The following notice of the book we copy from the "New York Herald," of January 12, 1868:

This work is an examination of the Bible, with a view to show that there is no authority in the original text for the tenets and dogmata that the churches pretend to derive from it. Those words and phrases of the English version that seem to recognize another nature in man than the physical and intellectual—that seems to regard another existence than that of the body—such words as soul and spirit—such phrases as giving up the ghost, the references to hell as a place of punishment beyond this life—all these words are taken up whenever they occur and compared with the words of which they are put forth as correct translations, and the originals shown not to bear any such significance as later times have given to the interpretation. "Man became a living soul" is based upon words that signify only "man became a breathing creature." So the word spirit also refers only to breathing, and "giving up the ghost" is only breathing one's last. All other animals, "give up the ghost" equally with man. Hell is simply the grave. By this course of reasoning, by establishing that words which express distinctly the material relations of the body would better translate the Bible in all these passages, the author forces the conclusion that the Bible nowhere suggests the thought that we now associate with the word soul, as an immortal part of man. It will not do, however, to argue hence that they who first put the English word in these places did it with an intention to foist a dogma on the text. Indeed, they translated honestly enough, for the word soul, when first used in English, had relation only to the idea of life in its simpler sense, and not to that of life beyond. This is a sense that has grown upon it in later times. Nevertheless the evidence forces ecclesiastic Christians to the fact that the essential dogma of their religion originates not with the "inspired writings" on which they ostensibly rest, but in the speculations of Grecian philosophy.

Paul's Brother among the Sadducees, or, Is the Holy Spirit Nothing?

Such is the title of a pamphlet, 24 pages, "By Benj. S. Mills," published at Chicago, Ill. Its object is expressed on the title page as follows:

"A brief and suggestive inquiry into the reasonable and Scriptural testimony for believing that a Holy Spiritural substance is an indwelling, and an abiding resident in Christian men; operating as a cause or power; as opposed to the view, held by some, that the Spirit of Christ is immaterial mind, feeling, or effect only, and that Christian men have no more of a Godly nature, in reality of substance than other men. In which it is believed, the true clue to identity in death, and the proper and real connection between a man in this world, and the resurrection of the same in the next world, can be shown."

We have read this pamphlet with considerable interest. We know nothing of its author more than from the work itself. The matter is presented in the dialogue form. We give the following extract from pages 11–13:

S.—But, what is your idea of this something you call Spirit?

P.—I can give you its definition, and tell you its effects, but its essence or internal structure I cannot define, because I know not. The best affirmation I can make, is, that it must be a something.

Suppose I ask you what is caloric, the principle of heat, what is its substantial essence? Or, electricity? You say, they are thought to be material substances, manifested to us by their effects; but their real substance is invisible and incomprehensible to us at present; and still you know that there are such things as heat and electricity.

But "life," says a celebrated man, "is not an entity; it is the name of a condition," i. e., it is not a real being, existence, or essence, but a condition, or state of mind, body, or thing, or quality of a being, existence, or essence. Bacon says: "It seemed to us a condition, and property of divine powers and beings, to be hidden or unseen by others." So, according to Bacon, invisibility is a condition incident to divine powers and beings. But, according to the first quotation, the power itself is only a condition; if this be so in the case of heat, it would lead us to say a thing is in a hot condition, because the condition of heat had been imparted to it, which is no reason at all; and you may as well say it became hot without any cause, for no essential thing had been added. And so a thing, upon the same rule, may be magnetized without electricity being imparted to, or taken from it; or a man may be alive, or in a living condition, without having life in his blood to cause him to live.

If the meaning be, that "Life is not an entity" in the sense of a whole being, or organization, it may be true, and no one would negate the proposition. A wall is a necessary part of a house; there may be a wall without a house, but you cannot get a house without a wall. A wall is an entity to the extent of a wall, but not in the sense of a house. And so it seems to me that life is an entity in that sense alone, and not in the sense of a being, a part only of whose power is life. In order to compass the whole being of God, his other attributes and powers must be conceived, as well as life; and it seems to me that just as truly as you can impart an essential attribute of any substance to another, as the odor of the rose, without destroying the rose, so God may impart his essential powers to men, according to his pleasure, without loss to himself. Therefore, it seems reasonable that in order to induce a condition or state, in a thing, some entity or essence must be added or taken from that thing.

S.—But Spirit is not material.

P.—If you mean by that, that it is not manifest to our senses as are some other things, I might agree with you; but the term Matter, as distinguished from Spirit, is only a term of confessional our ignorance; a relative term. As we cannot tell precisely where the animal creation ends, and the vegetable begins, so neither can we tell positively where matter ends and spirit begins. The distinction between matter and spirit is about the same as that which is made between mind and instinct; but many thinking men have about concluded that mind, instinct, appetite, mechanical and involuntary motion are all of the same nature, but differing in degree; that mind, in a certain sense, runs through and is manifested by all substance, living substance, at any rate. When the generic difference between mind and instinct, or warmth and heat, can be demonstrated, then also can we define the essential or generic difference between spirit and matter. The matter or substance of water is plainly manifest to our senses, but the same matter or substance, in the form of vapor, is not so manifest, only very fine organizations can detect it, or the fine substance of odor, light, electricity, heat, etc., therefore we call them air, gas or spirit. Truly, there is not much in a name, and so when mind is used in the sense of an operator, or cause, as a name for a much finer substance still than the things mentioned, it may be well enough to call it such, but the effect ought not to be confounded with the cause. An able writer has said that "Spirit is the basis of all created things; and according to the will of. the Deity, rock, sea and vegetable are produced." If we see effects or things produced, something must have produced them. Spirit is just as real a thing as any other matter, or material out of which anything is made; indeed, it is the most real of all being, the foundation or base of all. Matter, then, is spirit manifested to us; we call it then material, but a spiritual body is just as real a thing, although we may not see it with material eyes. An animal man is a man with an organization of flesh, plainly visible to our senses—bad, sinful, corrupt. A spiritual man is a man consisting of spirit, invisible to us, but a real embryotic and growing entity in this life, begotten of "incorruptible seed," (substance) an individual begun, from an implanted Holy Spirit, a wild olive tree pervaded with a transforming power, engrafted into a good stock, a fleshly man in process of transfiguration, a natural man "translated or changed for the Kingdom," "escaped, or fled away from the corruption that is in the world through lust," a "babe" conceived, and nourished by material suited to its nature, strengthened and perfected by buffetings and chastenings; and designed, if perfected, to be born at the resurrection, when it will arise at the trumpet's call, in the glory and likeness of its Parent and breathe, not a borrowed life, that of the flesh, a life connected with blood, but its own life hidden for a time in Jesus, with whom then in perfect consanguinity it will exist, and with whom in co-heirship such will reign for a thousand years and beyond, for they who are accounted worthy of that age are equal to the angels, and can die no more.

S.—Well, that may be your opinion; but I cannot see it so.

P.—And I do not demand that you shall. I may advise you, however,, to anoint your eyes with eye salve, that you may see—Rev. iii. 18—and I will ask you to believe God's Word, on his authority alone. This view, however, strikes me as perfectly reasonable, and more so than the opposite one. May God in his providence, of which I am, perhaps, a part, open your eyes to see the great significance of his declaration, that all power is from, or out of him.

S.—But this would make me only a machine.

P.—Man, as a creature of God, is fearfully and wonderfully made, for the purpose of obeying and glorifying God. Necessity is laid upon him to fill this bill, or to perish. You cannot choose to disobey God, and live long. Men should be careful how they trifle with the long-suffering goodness of Him who endures for some time with "the vessels of wrath fitted for destruction." If you long for immortality, he will not turn a deaf ear to your cry; but if this world suits your nature best, I am sure you cannot say that God is not good, who allows you to enjoy its good, and to say to your soul, "enjoy thyself" as best you may. And as long as you live, or the world lasts. He only bestows his Spirit on those who want it. Many, however, never hear of the good news; such are in blissful ignorance of what they miss, but still the boon is so great, and the incitement so powerful, that those who know the joyful tidings of future good cannot restrain themselves from publishing it, whether men will bear or forbear. Blessed are they that hear and obey; but those who forbear, have their portion in this life. We have no need, then, to quarrel with one another; the one takes what the other does not want, and the other wonders at the silliness of the one who grasps, as he thinks, at the shadow or spirit, while he has the substance or matter. The poor "deluded" believer in spirit will still continue to console himself against all Saddusaic philosophy. He knows that although by the organs of sense a spirit cannot be seen, there is a power granted to some, if not to all men, to know that there are things in heaven and on earth, which cannot be seen or felt by any of the five senses. In fact, he knows that there is a God in heaven who is a Spirit, and that spiritual existences are the most powerful agents known. Indeed, that gross, solid, manifest matter, owes all its power to spiritual influences, either latent in itself or active from without; and the more sublimated and etherial they are, the greater is their power. Steam, for instance, while it retains its greatest force in the boiler, cannot be seen or felt; even on escaping out of the boiler it is for a little space perfectly colorless, and a person may put his finger or hand in it without injury; while a space farther it can be seen, and contact with it then involves serious injury and pain. I am told that a charge of invisible electricity has been forced through five inches of solid glass. Now, I am not so unreasonable as to think that because I am sensible of nothing presenf, that therefore there is nothing present. Would you call that stream of electricity nothing, which was able to cut its way through that glass? Was it not an immensely powerful thing? You see nothing in that boiler by looking through those glasses; but if you think there is nothing there, you may pay for imprudence in its management by your life. You see not God, who is a Spirit; but if you think there is no God, because he is not manifesf to your senses, you are simply an atheist, and will receive an atheist's doom. "There is no power but of God." God is a Spirit. A spirit, therefore, is the source of all power, and, in fact, without spirit no power can be manifested. Natural men, then, are free to act their own natures, but they have no power to love God until they know him, and they cannot know him without a Spirit.

More About the Rabbis.

Br. Storrs: In a previous week's Herald a brother has sent you, from Philadelphia, the conclusions, or "resolutions" of a convention of Jews, which, in brief, disavowed that their people looked forward to their restoration to the land of Palestine, to a literal resurrection of the dead, or for the literal coming and reign of the Messiah, as the heir and possessor of the throne of David, in Jerusalem. However surprising this convention's proceedings may appear, on first view, to the readers of the Herald, as an expression of the exponents of the house of Judah in the United States, I have the pleasure of sending to you a counterblast from the pen of a prominent chief Rabbi which was, it will be seen in the following article, published in a leading Philadelphia daily, disavows, utterly, the convention's expression of faith as true respecting their co-religionists idea of the Hebrew's hope and faith. And I trust, that our beloved readers of the Herald may justly discriminate between the representative of "the many thousands of Judah" and the so-called convention of "thirteen Rabbis," who seek to dissolvetheir brethren into avowed infidels respecting the prophetical promises of "Moses and prophets" of the Scriptures of Israel.

Yours, in the blessed hope of the soon coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ as the King of both Israel and Judah,

J. L. Boyd.

"The so-called conference of rabbis for jewish reform."

Your paper published a series of resolutions, passed by thirteen Israelites, who claim rabbinical authority. Those born in the ancient faith know that Rabbis are the appointed guardians of biblical and traditional laws. Hence, they must at a glance, have discovered the anomaly presented by such resolutions. But the Christian public, naturally less conversant with Jewish matters, may have reasonably judged from the ideas set forth at the late convention, that the Hebrew church is in a state of dissolution. To correct that impression I will say: the utterances of the men who assembled at the private residence of Dr. S. Hirsch, will be condemned in every ecclesiastical court properly constituted; and remain unheed by the largest majority of Israelites. With this assertion, resting upon historical evidences, the whole subject might be dismissed. But the minds of Americans have been drawn to the doings of a few, who exhibit themselves before the world as advocates of progress, and, indirectly cast reflections upon thousands, who discard their views. The press has also commented eulogistically upon the propositions emanating from the so-called Rabbinical Conference; but without clearly understanding their purport. It is needful, therefore, to explain why they are inadmissible; to show how they betray a degree of rashness, unbecoming all intelligent beings; but especially a body of men, who presume to legislate for an entire people.

That certain dogmas, accepted by the Synagogue, have been rejected; that the restoration of Israel to the patriarchial land, was declared a false hope, though standing on strong scriptural grounds; that the resurrection was pronounced a belief without any foundation, notwithstanding that the Bible may be quoted in its support, is comparatively of little importance; for that circumstance could not materially effect the perseverance of a religion, which demands of votaries only attendance to proscribed duties. But when it was resolved to alter the features of the whole matrimonial status in Israel, by renouncing the powers which ecclesiastical authorities have ever exercised, to decide whether the bond of wedlock might or might not be severed; by permitting a wife to contract a second marriage without possessing a full knowledge that her husband's absence is occsaioned by death, then questions most weighty in their results were disposed of in a manner reprehensibly hasty. It has been a just pride of the Hebrews that domestic relations among them have, in general, been happy. For, despite the insinuations thrown out at the late convention, that according to the traditional mode of performing the marriage ceremony, the bride is a nonentity—still faithful wives, and the fondest of mothers adorn the Jewish circles. The stringency of the rules about matrimony, which to the thoughtless appear unnecessary, and consequently calling for modification, proved a wholesome restraint both on parents and children; and while it affected the Divine ordination to keep Israel a distinct race, it furnished society with men and women of no doubtful extraction. Wherefore their attempt to change that, the moral advantage of which time has demonstrated? The answer to this query is contained in the third section of the eighth resolution. Had the thirteen Rabbis, who met last week in our city, been sincere in their declaration touching "the selection of Israel as a religious people," they would have trembled at the mere harboring of the idea, which that section embodies. But imbued on the contrary, with notions antagonistic to that belief, bent upon removing every trace of the ancient covenant, they did not scruple to proclaim the right of circumcision a useless institution. True, they feared public opinion among their brethren, and therefore, disguised their thought; but not so that it cannot be easily fathomed.

To a conscientious Israelite, the last conference is then but a mad effort to erase with a stroke of the pen what the finger of God wrote in characters of fire. To the discerning Christian who understands progress mainly to be the improvement of the mind and of the heart, it must now obviously appear an empty avowal of certain heterodox views.

BROTHERLY KINDNESS AND FORBEARANCE.

BY L. C. THORNE.

IT was not until to-day, No. 24, that we read the article in No. 7 of the HERALD, entitled the "Church of Rome." The extract from Benedict's History of the Baptist interested us greatly. As a matter of history it is valuable, and can hardly fail to be of interest to all its readers. Of its application, however, we cannot speak with favor. We read, "Now for the two great events in the year of our Lord 1869. One in Europe and one in America. The great Ecumenical Council at Rome; and the great National Convention at Rochester, N. Y. One called by the old Mother, and the other by the 'Youngest Daughter.' Now, brethren and sisters, these will ~~be~~ great events; and I cannot tell which part of the globe will shake the most; whether it will be Italy or New York."

Upon reading this, we were, at first, somewhat puzzled to know whether the writer was in earnest, or whether he designed a sort of burlesque; but the assertion that the Rochester convention was called by the "Youngest Daughter" dispelled all doubt. Certain individuals issue a call to a class of brethren to meet in convention; there need be no harm in that. This is an age of conventions, political, social, religious, etc., and we see no impropriety in any attending them who choose to do so. What is done in convention determines the question of harm. True, the call was somewhat exclusive, but we presume they who issued it have not yet opened their eyes to the fact, that the time has passed when the actions of any deliberative body of Christians can amount to anything permanent, if the laity are not directly represented in that body, unless its actions are in harmony with the views of a majority of the unrepresented. If any, by such means seek to exalt themselves, whatever they may appear to have accomplished in that direction, will inevitably work their injury, and sooner or later react to their discomfiture. Suppose the assembly at Rochester had even been so unwise as to have framed and adopted a creed; it would, to be sure, have been a sad spectacle, to behold in this age of gospel light; but sad and damaging to them only would it, in fact, have been by whose influence it was effected, and such an event would hardly have justified the epithet "Youngest Daughter." No such action, however, so far as we have learned, was taken, and to such an extent did wise counsel prevail, that whatever attempts may have been made in that direction were signal failures. Suppose any body of men should "assemble a standing army of ministers" who will stand ready to suppress every whisper of "Life only in Christ," what then? They might stand ready to do it, and be ever so vigilant, but their designs would be frustrated. God is with His truth, so we need none of us get impatient in this or any other matter, for He will insure truth's triumph. They who fight against the truth fight against God and will surely be overthrown. Let us, then, labor zealously and trust in the Lord. In that beautiful "Wreath of Gems," that immediately followed the article under consideration, we read, "Loveliness of heart is a real dignity, and humility is the brightest jewel in the Christian crown." If we only carefully cultivate these graces, and trust in him in whom alone is strength, we will feel little disposed to judge harshly, nor will we be in danger of becoming "fierce" and "false accusers," and thus add our mite to the abundant evidence already existing, that we are in the midst of Paul's last-day evils. With our present knowledge of them, we, for one, recognize those who assembled in Rochester as Christian brethren, that, as such, though not in agreement with us on some points, are to be treated with kindness and love, and esteemed as fellow-laborers. We think it not too much to hope that all earnest supporters of the "faith once delivered unto the saints," will shun all dark insinuations, and strive to both write and speak kindly of each other, and of all Christians, forbearing one another in love. It is the Lord who is working; we are his instruments. None, therefore, should hastily condemn others. If instruments become useless, the great Architect will lay them aside at his good pleasure, and raise up others instead. They who see faults and weaknesses in others, should themselves labor the more zealously, that the cause may suffer no loss.

A VISIT TO BETHLEHEM, PA.

BY E. WOLCOTT.

BETHLEHEM is a flourishing town on the Lehigh River, about 15 miles from its junction with the Delaware. It was settled by Daniel Nitschman, "who felled the first tree to build the first house," as appears upon a little slab that lays upon his grave. He was born in Moravia, South Germany, Sept. 18, 1676, and died April 14, 1758.

Being near this place by a train of circumstances, and knowing through the HERALD that it was the residence of Br. Ambrose Rondthaler (Runtoller), and having withal a desire to visit that old Moravian settlement, we ventured on our own introduction. The reception was gratifying, and our stay with the dear Br. in Christ, and with his estimable family, pleasant indeed.

Br. R. is 57 years; of extensive learning; was 17 years a member of the Moravian Synod, which position he resigned about two years since; is now the principal of the parochial school in that interest. It was pleasant to see the esteem and respect in which he is held by the teachers of the institution, and by numerous friends, some of them professors in learning, who called to see him, and to whom we were introduced as a "Life only in Christ" man, by which you may know the light has not been under a bushel, but for years his voice has been raised, and Br. Storrs' works have been distributed, and what light and comfort may have been wrought, the day of the Lord will more fully reveal.

During the noon-tide of Lord's day, Br. Irwin—a hearty believer—went to Freemansburgh, some two miles, and brought up three brethren, and together with others, who had come in, we passed a social interchange of views till the close of the day, mostly bearing upon the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, and the extinction of the ungodly, who shall live in the end of the age, in the lake of fire; endeavoring to show that 2 Peters ii. 4–9, did not teach "unfinished business," but that the judgments of God, as executed in the past, were final, and precluded any resurrection for the purpose of investigation or punishment. On this point an apostle bears witness: "For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward," etc. Heb. ii. 2.

THE MORAVIAN BURYING GROUND,

This was an interesting spot to us. It is high, gently sloping toward the river, and has a commanding view of the valley to the eastward, and of South Bethlehem opposite, behind which rises a line of high hills. The grounds are laid out at intervals of thirty or forty paces, with wide straight gravel walks; on one side of which the males are buried, on the other the females. The mounds in long regular rows, are raised a few inches above the level of the yard, upon which lays a simple marble slab. Our attention was called by Br. R. to some of the inscriptions, among which were those of some Indians, who were brought under the power of divine grace, by the labors of the devoted men who first settled this place. We give a few:

PETER NACASATAMIT,
A Mohican of Shecomeco,
dep. July 28,
1746.

DANIEL,
of the Delaware Nation,
dep.,
April 19, 1749.

In memory of TSCHOOP,
A Mohican Indian, who died in holy baptism,
April 16th, 1742. Received the name of JOHN;
One of the first fruits of the mission at Shekomeko, and a remarkable instance of the power of divine grace, whereby he became a distinguished teacher among his nation. He departed this life in assurance of faith at Bethlehem, August 27, 1746.
"There shall be one fold, and one Shepherd."—John x. 16.

By the grace of the latter we lingered. Having been led, through the goodness of God, to see that the righteous sleep in the grave till the last trump shall call them forth; that they are all there; not a part, and that the least important fact. We felt as though we stood near the Mohican, whose sleep doubtless is nearly out, when he will awake, and with the sweet singer of Israel "be satisfied." We felt to take him into the great brotherhood, and was truly glad to belong to the "one" fold under the "one" shepherd.

We also visited the spot where lays the eldest daughter of our beloved brother, who deceased last year. It was refreshing amid the sadness of the hour to read her, as well as his, faith as a witness to all who pass that way—"Asleep in Jesus."

Concerning this yard in general, we believe it contains many blood-bought treasures, many sheaves for the harvest day. Notwithstanding they believed mainly the Orthodox notions, and saw not the great light which illuminates our minds, and in which we rejoice, still they were reformers; they walked in the light of the Reformation, which to them was a great light, and abundantly testified their devotion to it in leaving their Fatherland, to seek in those rude days a home in the wilds among the savages of a far-off hemisphere, where they might worship according to that light.

Those times made truer hearts than these times; for we have fallen upon the days of peril spoken of by the apostle to Timothy; times which the Saviour said would culminate as in the days of Noah.

May God in his infinite love preserve us in a watching frame, till we all receive the end our faith, even the salvation of our souls.

KEYPORT, N. J., Nov. 27, 1869.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

ANOTHER RESPONSE FROM SCOTLAND.

MY DEAR BROTHER: I should rather say, father, for through your instrumentality, and the kindness of my cousin Walter Patterson, I have had the great privilege of reading the HERALD OF LIFE. I should not have been so long in acknowledging the benefit my wife and myself have received from its perusal. We are both fully convinced that the leading views that you and writers in the HERALD are contending for, are in accordance with the word of God. We do feel grateful to God for the light thus received. Being anxious that others should enjoy the same blessed truth, I have been circulating the HERALD along with books from your office; such as your Six Sermons, Bible vs. Tradition, Judge Halsted's Theology of the Bible; and wishing more to circulate, I enclose an order for three pounds [$18.10—ED.] for which please send me Dr. Finley's work, Life only in Christ, and some of all the Campaign Documents, and such works, mostly, as are fitted to convince men they are mortal.

Hawick is a town of about thirteen thousand inhabitants; and I do not know any who have fully embraced the same views. Some brethren to whom I have given the paper and various books to read, so far give credit to the views, but seem afraid to confess openly. However, I am not without hope that a good work will be done here. One sign is, that from the pulpits I get, what some would call, a "good lashing" against the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked. Strange that expounders of God's word should put aside the plain teaching of prophets and apostles, that death is the wages of sin; and the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God.

I close with grateful thanks to the brethren and sisters in America for the many excellent articles contributed to the HERALD; and may you be long spared in health to carry on the work of the Lord, is the earnest prayer of

Yours, most affectionately,
GEO. PATTERSON.

HAWICK, SCOTLAND, Nov. 10, 1869.

Note by the Editor.

It gives us much pleasure to hear from our friends on the other side of the Atlantic. May God bless them and their labors abundantly. We have sent by the "American and Foreign Express Company" a package of works, as desired, and paid the Express charges, in full, ($4), to Hawick; and trust Br. Patterson will receive the same safely before the middle of this month.

FROM S. S. CALL.

BR. STORRS: I see so many good things in the letters and extracts from the brethren and sisters in our beloved paper, that I do feel to thank God for its continuance and prosperity. It is and has been a great blessing and a source of comfort to me. Scattered, as we are, over the world, what a source of comfort our paper becomes. Through its columns we hear of the prosperity of some and rejoice with them; of the adversity of others, and sympathize with them; thus blending our joys and sympathies together, which we could not do were it not for our medium, our paper. Think what a loss were it to cease! O, what would we not give then to recover it, to sustain it. Let us put forth the same efforts now, that we would then. Let us double the list of subscribers this year. We can and we will, if we only get one each. I will do more than that—I will do all I can. O, how my heart leaped for joy when I saw $25 placed opposite the name of Br. Daniel Chase. God bless you, brother. I see my labor was not in vain; tears of joy run down my cheeks when I see so many names with their $5 and $10 attached; and they ask, "Where is your name? I don't see it. Are you not going to do something for the HERALD?" Yes, dear brethren and sisters, I will soon. I cannot do as much as I would be glad to; but my labors and sympathies are with you; and in good time my name shall appear.

Your brother in Christ.

HESPER, IOWA, Nov. 22, 1869.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BR. STORRS: I take my pen to write a few lines to you, to say, that through the loving kindness of our Lord my health is good, and my meditations of his goodness and wonderful works to the children of men is sweet. There is something continually to enliven and strengthen our hope in the near coming of our Divine Master.

To-day is the day after our national thanksgiving, and, O how much cause there is that I should be full of thanksgiving and praise to Him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb forever. O how precious the truth of God is to my heart, especially in these days when fables and the traditions of men are preached for gospel. There were two sermons preached yesterday in this place. The one that spoke first said many good things; especially of the blessings of God on this great nation; but I think he never hinted at our abuse of God's blessings; but it was peace, peace, going on to the millennium. I took dinner with the one that was to preach in the evening (or at the same place). He said that his brother had occupied all the ground, and he hardly knew what subject to preach upon. I asked him if he would not preach on the Great Restitution, for I thought we had abundant reason for thanksgiving and praise to God for his promise of it; for that would remain forever, but this state of things would pass away. He did not say that he would, but when he started for meeting I asked him again. But he went on in the same strain as the other, only more great swelling words of vanity. At his closing he said we had gold enough in Oregon to pay our national debt to a dollar; and silver enough in Nevada to cover the keel of every vessel owned by this great republic four inches thick; and if the sun was struck out of existence, the oil of our wells would give light to the world ten thousand years. O, when I hear such things I say, "O precious Bible, O blessed gospel."

Of all people on the earth, we, my brethren, have the most reason to give praise and thanksgiving to God for his living truth.

May God bless the going forth of the HERALD OF LIFE, and bless every one that helps to send it, and every one that reads it, and every one that shall hereafter receive it; and may it yet herald eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord, and that by a resurrection from the dead, to the perishing millions of earth. May God give us strength to work while the day lasts. May God hold you up, Br. Storrs, and Br. Spencer; and give you wisdom to choose what is most acceptable to Him, and for His honor and glory, and for the good of our fellow men, to fill up the HERALD OF LIFE, that it may be a living witness of the two living witnesses, that there is "No life out of Christ."

Your sister, hoping for life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA.

FROM J. S. POTTER.

BR. STORRS: Amidst all the trials of life, and the opposition we meet concerning the truth of God, my heart has been made glad from week to week, in hearing from you and all the dear brethren and sisters who have contributed by their pens, such precious things to the "household of faith," through the dear HERALD OF LIFE. May it long live to enlighten the dark corners of the earth. O, what a variety; some on one point, and some on another; but all belonging to the great plan of salvation. I thank the good Lord that my mind was ever led to examine this subject; and although the path of the just is as a shining light that shines more and more unto the perfect day, still we think we have got light enough from God's word to understand that He is not the being that has been represented to us by those holding the view of eternal torment; neither those who profess better things, but still cling to part of the old dogma, that God through Jesus Christ will justify all men to life, for the sake of taking vengeance on them for a short time, and then cause them to die again.

For my part, I have no fellowship for any such gospel; but I would have fellowship for them as Christians, provided they behaved as Christians should; but when I see men and women, who profess to be looking for the coming of the Lord (for the lack of better arguments) stoop to such low vulgarity, and going from house to house slandering their neighbors, and especially those holding the Life views, I feel sad, and sometimes cast down, but not destroyed, thank the good Lord.

This state of things has principally been brought about by men professing to be ministers of the gospel, who have succeeded in dividing the flock, to bring a little gain to their masters, whose headquarters are in Boston. There are about six or eight families here who acknowledge but one Master, "even Christ." Brethren E. Cotton and S. C. Hancock have been laboring here for two weeks to get up a revival; and last Monday night Br. George W. Brown from Maine, went into the meeting and gave an exhortation. The congregation seemed to like it much. Br. Hancock invited him to preach Tuesday night, and gave out the appointment, but soon after it was countermanded by one of the opponents, so that gun killed further back than it did forward. On Wednesday night Br. Brown went in again, and while he was speaking two Police officers were sent for, and appeared at the head of the stairs, and as soon as the people understood the matter there was another reaction.

Br. Brown preached a good discourse at my house Thursday evening, Nov. 4th, to about forty attentive hearers.

EAST BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 8, 1869.

FROM WM. R. WARNER.

BR. STORRS: Don't think because I have not written in a long time that I am losing interest in the cause which is so dear to us. My interest increases every day in the grand truth that is found expressed in the Scriptures every where, "That God has given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Jesus has said to every one that "believes on him, I will raise him up at the last day." Unbelievers cannot claim any life beyond this, of any kind. Neither can the church claim a resurrection to life, for the unholy of any class, especially such as child murderers, suicides, whoremongers, drunkard's, and all liars, so often spoke of as having no eternal life abiding in them, and whose names are not written in book of life. How dreadful the thought that all the heaven this class of individuals will ever have is what they have in this world of trouble, pain and death! That they are a class of drones, whose selfishness confines them to their own gratification; they only live to please themselves. God is not in all their thoughts; humanity might perish for all they would ever do. Their case is like the Amorites; their iniquity is not yet full. Yet there is a line they cannot pass, "for the day that comes shall burn them up." "He will burn up the chaff." "The grave shall consume them."

Such trials as we have passed through the past summer has brought these words often to remembrance: "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trials which is to try you as though some strange thing happened unto you." "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." But what are these things, if we can only have a resurrection with the just? These trials only tend to strengthen our faith, and through all this affliction we are led to cry out:

"O, what a blessed hope is ours!
We feel the resurrection near,
Our life in Christ conceal'd
And with his glorious presence here
Our earthen vessels fill'd."

Yours, hoping, watching, believing.

NORTH CAMBRIDGE, MASS., Nov. 22, 1869.

FROM C. W. CHICK.

BR. IN CHRIST: I feel grateful to our heavenly Father that the HERALD OF LIFE has been continued to us. While I am not able to do much for the glorious cause of truth, I thank God that there are so many able and zealous laborers in the field. The works published at the office of the HERALD OF LIFE are doing good service. I think, however, if the truth were preached here and other places, where it has never been heard, it would have a good effect in inducing the people to read and "Search the Scriptures, to see if these things are so." I loaned a member of the "Christian church" "Bible vs. Tradition." After reading it carefully through he openly confessed that he no longer believed life attainable only through Christ, by a change at his coming, or by a resurrection from the dead; and after reading some of the tracts you were so kind as to send me; he applied himself to the examination of our views, and it has resulted in his becoming a thorough believer in "No Life out of Christ."

Enclosed you will find two dollars and fifty cents from him to pay for "Life in Christ," "Bible vs. Tradition," both bound; also a set of campaign Documents.

Praying that God may bless all the brethren and sisters, and that his glorious work of bringing the people to a knowledge of the truth may prosper, I remain as ever your brother in the hope of immortality.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY., Nov. 12, 1869.

JACOB SHAFER, Kewana, Ind., writes: Will you or Br. Charles A. Hastings give the readers of the HERALD your views of the Spirit spoken of in Rom. viii. 11? I am much pleased with the views that you and Br. H. have given on the "Atonement." Blessed thought! I hope Br. Hastings will not forget to feed the church of God which Christ has so richly purchased with His own blood. Remember, brother, that Christ's precious lambs are scattered and far apart, and are destitute of such men, in a great measure, who have taken the advice the apostle gave to Timothy, and thereby made themselves workmen, rightly dividing the word of truth.

H. DROWN, Coventry, Vt., writes: I send the $2 pledged for Dr. Finley's work on the Constitution of Man. The truth is pressed very hard here, but I am trying to live at Jesus' feet and to learn of him who spake as never man spake; and to hold forth the word of life in soberness and in the spirit of love. Oh, that God may have mercy on this people, is my prayer, and guide them into truth, and make them see that they themselves are dependent on his Son for eternal life. I am in hopes to send something for the tract cause. God bless all of the brethren and sisters, in Christ.

OBITUARY.

ARTHUR THATCHER, of Philadelphia, fell asleep on Monday evening, Oct. —, and was gathered unto his fathers.

This dear brother was widely known in our city, and much loved by all his friends. At the time of decease, he had nearly attained the age of three score years and ten. It may truly be said of him, that he "served his own generation by the will of God." His was a well-spent life. The cause of the Redeemer was his chief delight, and after years of joy and sorrow, prosperity and adversity, through all of which he retained his integrity, he has returned to his earth, there to remain until he who conquered death shall descend from heaven to set the prisoners free. Then, his voice, which so often led in songs of praise here, shall mingle with those of the blood-washed throng who shall surround the throne of God and the Lamb.

A large concourse of friends attended the funeral to pay their tribute of respect to one who had been a brother indeed. His surviving companions and children have met with an irreparable loss. May the God of Peace comfort their hearts, and bring all at last to that land where life and peace shall exist forever.

F. H. BURBANK.

MARTIN.—Died, in Philadelphia, on Thursday, Nov. 4th, John L. Martin, aged 36 years.

Our friend died of Typhoid Fever. I am informed that he was an affectionate husband, a dutiful son, a kind neighbor, and an industrious citizen. He had a good name. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." At the request of the mother—Sr. Jane Martin, the writer conducted the funeral services, and he endeavored to hold up Christ as "the way, the truth, and the life," and to urge upon all who were present the necessity of "repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ," in order to secure eternal life.

May this affliction be sanctified to the good of the widow, parents, brothers, sisters, and friends of the deceased, that all at last may wear an incorruptible crown.

F. H. BURBANK.

Christ Made Like His Brethren.

Christ had his sorrows: when he shed
His tears, O Palestine for thee;
When all but weeping females fled,
In his dark hour of agony!
Christ had his sorrow; so must thou,
If thou wilt tread the path he trod;
O then like him submissive bow,
And love the sovereignty of God.

Christ had his joys; but they were not
The joys the son of pleasure boasts;
O no! 'twas when his spirit sought
Thy will, thy glory, God of hosts.
Christ had his joys, and so hath he
Who feels his Spirit in his heart—
Who yields, O God, his all to thee,
And loves thy name for what thou art.

Christ had his foes; the prince of hell
And all his angels sought his death;
See human hearts with malice swell,
And murder feign affection's breath!
Christ had his foes; and so, if thou
Shalt with him walk and near him live,
The cruel world will hate thee now,
And thou shalt suffer—and forgives.

Christ had his friends; his eye could trace
Through the long train of coming years
The chosen children of his grace,
The full reward of all his tears!
Christ had his friends; and his are thine,
If thou to him hast bowed the knee;
And where those ransomed ones will shine,
Shall thy bright eternal home ever be.

The Seed of Abraham.

"In thy seed shall all the tribes of the earth be blessed."—Gen. xxii. 18.

In a previous article I showed that "the final object of God's purpose in the gospel is to bless all the nations of the earth," and that the means by which to accomplish that object is the seed of Abraham. I have also shown that the nations of the earth, who are to be blessed, are composed of earthly people; that they occupy the position of subjects in the kingdom, and that the blessings, which are promised to them in the gospel, is adapted to the wants of such an earthly people.

I will now consider the subject of the seed of Abraham, and inquire:

Who is the seed of Abraham? The seed of Abraham is always distinct and separate from the nations of the earth. It is never called the nations, neither are the nations ever called the seed. Who, then, is the seed? "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies." Gen. xxii. 17. In this passage the seed is described as a ruler. He is to have power over his enemies. He is to occupy a position, in which he can break in pieces the oppressor, and bless all the nations of the earth.

Mary, to whom the angel had said, "thou shalt bring forth a Son, and call his name Jesus," applied this position, and this work to her promised Son, and she sang, He hath showed strength with his arm; he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree; as he spake to our fathers, to "Abraham and to his seed forever." Luke i. 51, 55. Zacharias applied the same position and work to Christ, saying, "God hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David, as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham." Lk. i. 68, 73.

Paul gives Christ the same position and work, "For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet; till all things shall be subdued unto him." 1 Cor. xv. 25, 28.

The seed of Abraham and the seed of David are the same, "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." Matt. i. 1. Then, whenever the Scriptures speak of the seed of David, the same is also the seed of Abraham.

"I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David, my servant, Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Once have I sworn by holiness that I will not lie unto David; his seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before." Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4, 34, 37. The same in Psa. cxxxii. 11, "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it, of the fruit of thy body will set upon thy throne."

In the New Testament this oath to David is applied to Christ. "Therefore (David) being a prophet and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, he would raise up Christ (his seed) to set on his throne." Acts ii. 30. The raising up Christ from the dead, is in fulfilment of the promise made to Abraham, Acts xiii. 32, 33. A prediction in Isa. ix. 6, 7, is also applied to Christ. "For unto us a child is born, a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders, of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." In Luke i. 32, 33, the angel said of Christ, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Paul seems to settle this question in Gal. iii. 16. He says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy Seed which is Christ."

From these testimonies, out of the many that might be cited, we conclude that Christ is the seed of Abraham; that he must occupy the position promised to that seed, and do the work that that seed was to do forever.

The relation which Christians sustain to Christ is such, that they also are the seed of Abraham, and heirs according to the promise.

When a sinner believes the gospel of the kingdom, and is baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, he becomes a member of the family of Christ, and is entitled to his name. All who have been thus united to Christ are as really the seed of Abraham as Christ is, because they are members of his body. This relationship between Christians and Christ is variously described, but it always of the most intimate and inseparable character. They are the branches, Christ is the vine. Who can separate the branches from the vine and not destroy them?

They are lively stones in the building, of which Jesus Christ is the chief corner stone. 1 Pet. ii. 5, 6. Who can separate the chief corner stone from the building and not destroy the building? They are the body, of which Christ is the head. Who can separate the head from the body, without destroying the body?

They are the brethren of Christ. Rom. viii. 29. Who can separate the brethren of Christ from Christ and not destroy the family? They are joint heirs with Christ to his inheritance. Rom. viii. 17. Who can prevent joint heirs from participating in their joint inheritance? They are the harvest, of which Christ is the first fruits. 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23. Is not the whole harvest, including the first fruits, of the same kind, and for the same purpose?

Christ, the head of the body, is born; he is the first born from the dead. Col. i. 18. Is not this a pledge the body will be born in like manner from the dead?

If they are Christ's, then they are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 29. Of what value is the promise, if it is not true to all the seed?

We now ask again, Who are the seed of Abraham? Christ, and those that are Christ's are the seed of Abraham. They are joint heirs of the same promise. They will share the same position, and do the same work. Christ will be the head, and Christians will be the members of his body. They jointly will constitute the seed that will bless all the nations of the earth, according to all that the prophets have said.

I will close this article by a few illustrations to show how completely the saints will share the position and the work of Christ in the kingdom.

If Christ was brought from the dead, Heb. xiii. 20, even so those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him from the dead. 1 Thess. iv. 14.

If Christ lives so that he can die no more, (Rev. i. 18,) those found worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection of the dead, can die no more. Luke xx. 35, 36.

If Christ is the first fruits of them that slept, the saints are the remainder of the same harvest. 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23.

If Christ inherits all nations (Psa. lxxxii. 8) the saints will be joint heirs with him to the inheritance. Rom. viii. 17.

If Christ was raised from the dead to sit on David's throne, (Acts ii. 30,) so he that overcometh shall sit down with Christ in his throne. Rev. iii. 21.

If Christ receives a kingdom, the saints will also receive a kihgdom. Luke xxii. 29.

If Christ reigns, the saints will reign. 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12.

If Christ judges the world, (Acts xvii. 31,) the saints will judge the world. 1 Cor. vi. 2..

If judgment was committed to Christ in John v. 22, it will be given to the saints, according to Dan. vii. 22.

If Christ breaks the nations with a rod of iron, and dashes them to pieces like a potter's vessel, (Psa. ii. 9,) those who overcome will have power over the nations, and they will rule them with a rod of iron, and break them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Rev. ii. 27.

If when Christ comes, he will take vengeance on them that obey not the gospel, (2 Thess. i. 7,) this honor will be given to all the saints. Psa. cxlix. 5, 9.

If Christ is to reign over the house of Jacob forever, (Luke i. 32,) the twelve apostles will sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix. 28.

If Christ is to judge the people righteously and govern the nation upon earth, (Psa. lxiv. 4,) so the faithful will be given authority; to some over ten cities; to some over five cities; to every man according to his ability. Luke xix. 12.

If there is to be given to Christ dominion over all people, nations and languages, that they may serve him, (Dan. vii. 14,) there will be given to the saints the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, that all dominions may serve and obey him. Dan. vii. 27.

If the Lord shall be king over all the earth (Zech. xiv. 9,) those that have been redeemed by the blood of Christ, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and section, will reign over all the earth. Rev. v. 9, 10.

If Christ's kingdom is to have no end (Lk. i. 33,) his servants, the saints, will reign forever and ever. Rev. xxii. 5.

If Christ is to be priest after the power of an endless life, (Heb. vi. 16,) the saints will be made kings and priests unto God, and they shall reign on the earth. Rev. v. 10.

Thus, the saints will be competely joined with Christ in his position, and in his work, in his kingdom.

The points we have made in this communication are these:

1. That Christ is the seed of Abraham.

2. That those that are Christ's are also the seed of Abraham by virtue of their relation to him.

3. That Christ and his saints will share jointly the position and work of the seed of Abraham; they will constitute the instrutality by which all the nations of the earth will be blessed.

Joel A. Simonds.

The Croucher at the Door.

Genesis iv. 7.

This passage, confessedly a difficult one, consists of three sentences or phrases which our Authorized Version renders thus: (1.) "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?" (2.) "And if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door." (3.) "And unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him." In the first of these sentences there is nothing to detain us. By common consent the literal translation of the Hebrew is: "If thou doest well, is there not a lifting up?" i. e., a lifting up of Cain's fallen countenance; and its sense is sufficiently given in our English Bible. The difficulty is started by the third sentence, and is only to be solved, I believe, by an amended translation of the second. Throughout the verse Jehovah is represented as remonstrating with angry, jealous Cain; and in its final sentence Cain is assured or warned, "Unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him." Whose desire is to be to Cain? over whom is he to rule? In this question lies the difficulty of the passage.

We are shut up to a reading which is sanctioned by most Hebrew scholars of modern times;—by Gesenius, Kalisch, Keil and Delitzch, and Lange, with many more. They say that the Hebrew word, which the Authorized Version translates "lieth at," is the participal form of a word which means "to lie down, to recline," and is specially used by beasts of prey who couch before they spring: that the participle in Hebrew, as in most other languages, is often used substantively: that it is used substantively here: and that therefore we ought to translate the second sentence of the passage, "If thou doest not well, sin is a lier in wait"—or, better still, because in a single word, "sin is a croucher"—"at the door." That is to say, the Divine warning to Cain is, that Sin crouches before his heart, like a wild beast lurking about a tent, waiting his opportunity to spring in.

Taken thus, we get the missing antecedent for the pronouns of the third sentence, though in this also it will be well to make one or two slight variations such as the Hebrew permits. The two sentences then read: "If thou doest not well, Sin is a croucher at the door; and his desire is against thee (i. e., the croucher's desire), but thou shouldst rule over him." With these emendations the passage yields a clear grammatical order; the pronouns "his" and "him" point back to "the Croucher" of the foregoing phrase. And the sense is as clear as the grammar. The Divine remonstrance mounts to a true climax. Cain is warned that, while he is nursing his angry jealous thoughts, Sin, like a ravening beast, as crafty as it is cruel, is crouching outside the door of his heart, only waiting for the door to be opened by any touch of passion, to spring in: and he is admonished to keep the door shut, lest he be overcome of evil. He is warned that the "desire" of the sin, which looks so fair and tempting to the eye stained and discolored by passion, is against him, that his only safety consists in subduing and ruling over it. [It is impossible without a disquisition on the Hebrew of this passage, which would be out of place here, to show how strong and conclusive are the arguments in favor of the reading given above. Here I could only give such arguments as the English reader may follow. He may need to be reminded or assured that the argument from the Hebrew is indefinitely stronger than that which can be laid before him.]

Now taken thus, the passage contains a comparison, and a warning, which we may do well to consider. It compares Sin to a beast crouching at the door of the heart, watching its opportunity to leap in. It warns us that the Croucher's desire or lust is antagonistic to our welfare, that, if we would do well, we must subdue and rule over it.

The Comparison. There are two main features in it: craft, and cruelty.

(1.) Craft. The first thing it tells us of Sin is, that it is subtle, full of wiles and "all deceivableness." It is like a wild beast, beautiful in outward seeming, lithe and graceful in its motions; its feet shod with velvet, its strength robed in a coat of many colors. It is like a stealthy crouching beast, lurking in ambush, stealing unheard and unseen from thicket to thicket, or gliding softly through the long tangled grass, availing itself of every inequality of the ground, hiding behind every trunk or bush—approaching its victim like a fate, silent, invisible, unerring.

The similitude is terribly true, as we may see from the story of the very first sin committed in the world, a sin familiar to Cain's thoughts as to ours. The stealthy and masked approaches of the beast of prey are not more crafty than the arts by which Sin drew nigh to our first parents, making every available circumstance subservient to its design; assuming a familiar and beautiful form, attempting the woman first, as the weaker of the two and the more susceptible; for the man, adding to all other temptations the force of his love for the woman, who had already been overcome; appealing at once to the strength of appetite, the desire for wisdom, the lust for rule; casting doubt on the inviolability of the command which kept the way of the tree, hinting that perhaps God had not uttered it, and that, if He had, He might not stand to it, that it was a mere threat intended to hold them down, as long as possible, from the divine power and knowledge and blessedness of which they were capable. Like a croucher, Sin drew near their door; and, when his wiles availed to open it, sprang in, and wrought our woe as well as theirs. They were beguiled from their simplicity. They were brought into bondage of evil; and we have still to pluck at the bonds with feeble, impatient hands.

As we study the record of Adam's sin, whether we take the record as historical or parabolic, we may see how true the story is: how sin continually repeats one and the same deceit: how we are conquered by the very wiles by which he was overcome. Into the body, taken from the dust, we are told that "God breathed the spirit of lives, and man became a living soul." This phrase "the spirit of lives," covers, as St. Paul held, three forms or modes of super-sensuous existence: the understanding, which apprehends all natural phenomena, the whole visible universe; the reason, which deals with the invisible and spiritual world; and the conscience, which is conversant with moral relations, which pronounces this right and that wrong, which prompts to duty and restrains from sin. These faculties indeed pertain to man as man, and therefore we may fairly assume them to have been inherent in Adam. And the assumption is confirmed by the fact that, even in Eden, he was provided with a sphere for the use of these various modes of activity, and availed himself of them. For the use of his understanding there was the whole circle of natural phenomena, the sun which ruled the day, the moon which ruled the night, the beasts of the field, the fowl of the air, the flowers and trees of the garden, to many, if not all, of which he gave "names" which summed up their several qualities; "what he called them, that they were." For the use of his reason, there were the mysteries of his own nature, the invisible laws by which the universe is governed, fellowship with angels, communion with God, converse with the Eternal Word, "the Voice of the Lord," who walked with him under the branches and over the fragrant sward of the garden. For the use of his conscience, there were the duties he owed to his helpmeet, to all other his companions, and to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

So long as these several faculties wrought in due subordination and harmony, the senses being subject to the understanding, the understanding to reason, and the reason to conscience, man continued "very good." God took pleasure in the work of his hands. It was by violating this orderly subordination, by jarring its harmony into discord, that man fell. There came to him an hour of trial, a crisis in which his loyalty was put to the test. One tree, and only one, was forbidden him, under penalty of death. But its fruit is very fair; a mysterious fascination lurks in it, perhaps also a mysterious power. As he looks upon it, strife and debate spring up in his "spirit of lives." Sense says, "The fruit is at least pleasant to the eye, and probably good for food." Understanding says, "It surely is a tree to be desired to make one wise." Reason says, "Ah, but the invisible threatenings of a Divine command hang all about it: you must not touch it if you would." Conscience says, "To do God's will is always the highest wisdom, the greatest good: do not eat of it, lest you die." Reason and conscience were the superior powers, and might have had their way. But here the Tempter stepped in with his "Ye shall not surely die: ye shall become as gods." And thus reinforced, sense and understanding usurped the superior seat: the divine order was violated: and the violation of that order was death.

This is the story of the First Sin as it is told in the Sacred Record. And even those who insist that we are to read that ancient Record not as history, but as parable, not as a literal narrative of fact, but as a dramatic expression of the general human experience—even these will admit, they are bound by their very theory to admit, that the story is an over-true story; that it reflects the common experience of man. As Adam fell, so we all fall. As in him, so in us, the proper natural order of the human faculties is broken up by the imperious cravings of inordinate passion.

In our early innocent days we walk as in Eden. The earth is very fair and beautiful; all men are true, all women gracious and pure. Youth scouts the lessons of sage experience, and thinks no duty hard, no enterprise impossible, no pleasure dangerous. It moves on, full of delight and hope, as through the golden days of paradise. But only too soon there comes a day of trial, the crises which brings "the knowledge of good and evil." The importunate crave a gratification which can only be had beyond the bounds of law. The understanding whispers welcome flatteries of a good and wisdom beyond the customary reach. And though reason pleads the claims of duty and the blessedness of obedience, though conscience admonishes and threatens and brandishes her thongs, "Sin has a thousand treacherous arts" by which to beguile them. The imperious appetites have their way. The forbidden fruit is plucked and eaten; the fatal usurpation of the baser over the higher nature is commenced. And now eager youth, hot with shame, and seeking to hide itself from the Voice of the Lord, finds itself an outcast from the Eden of its prime. The fiery sword of violated avenging law guards it from his approach. A curse has fallen and darkened over the fair beautiful earth. The claims of labor grow stern, exacting, rigorous. Duty grows hard. All the brave enterprizes, which once looked so near and easy, fade to an inapproachable remoteness. And now we can see the evil in men and women as well as the good, and begin to suspect other evils than we see. The garden disappears or rises into the heaven of our dreams. All that remains is a barren earth, bristling with thorns and briars, which will yield us no sustenance except as we compel it by toil, a hard earth which is to be softened only by the sweat of our brow.

Is not this a true story—a story in which we all have played our parts, and still play them? Is it not thus that man still falls day by day? The due order and subordination of his nature is broken up. Conscience does not rule the reason as it should, nor reason the understanding, nor understanding the sensual appetites. The larger part of men are the obvious slaves of sense.—Selected from the Sunday Magazine.

Grandma's Fortune Telling.

"Now, what mischief?" said grandma, smiling, as she entered the room, and found the children huddled together by the book case, evidently trying to cover up what they were about.

"Lizzie's telling fortune!" said little black-eyed Nell, looking up brightly.

"Ah! that's it, is it!" said grandma, taking out the big knitting pegs and a huge soft ball of crimson wool, which seemed to grow fast under her fingers into a warm gay tippet for some of the little folks. "Well, come and sit round the fire, and let grandma tell fortunes for you. She's a master hand at it."

"Why, grandma," said the children, coming forward, "we were afraid you would think it was wrong."

"Well, I do not approve of common fortune-telling, but my kind will do no harm. It does not require a tea cup, nor do I need to look into your hands. Still I saw the directions in print once. To begin with Lizzie: If a little girl with blue eyes, auburn hair, a quick mind, and nimble little feet and fingers will use her eyes and mind well in getting a good education, and employ her feet and fingers in useful work, such as helping mother about the house, and taking plenty of exercise out of doors with little brothers and sisters; if she keeps her rosy lips from ever pouting, and strives to love and obey God every day, she will be very likely to have a long and healthful life, to make good many people happy by it, to be good looking in everybody's eyes, and to be loved and respected everywhere as a sensible, excellent woman. Now, could anybody make out a better fortune than that for my little grand-daughter? Every word of it is true, too, while most fortune telling is only falsehood put together.

"Now, Georgie, if a boy with black hair and eyes will learn to master his temper well, so that ever so great provocation cannot make him angry, he will gain a greater victory than Gen. Grant did at Vicksburg even. If he will study his books hard, and learn to be very accommodating at home when he is asked to do anything, everybody will look on him as a sensible boy, and love him for his obliging ways. It is the polite, civil people who make their way best in the world. Try and see if you do not find it so.

"Now, if a little black-eyed four year old like Nellie, here, will run to grandma's room and bring me the black silk bag which hangs on the chair back, I should not wonder if she or her grandmother should find in it enough almonds and strawberry candy to treat all this little company."

Very merry were the children over grandma's fortune telling, and little Nellie insisted that hers was the best of all.

It had this peculiarity, that it applied just as well to children whose eyes and hair were of any other color. So you can apply it, dear children, if you will, and I know you will find it to come true.

Confession of Wrong.

A little girl once gave her mother the following note:

"Dear mother: It was I who lost your thimble; I was afraid to own it. I have felt unhappy since I told you I didn't know. Mother, will you forgive me? I told it all to God; I prayed to him. From your sorry daughter. Hannah."

This note, you see, made a confession of sin. For days and nights, perhaps, this child suffered under a sense of guilt—it took away her comfort—until at last, no longer able to bear the burden, she came and acknowledged it.

This teaches an important lesson, which you should early understand and act upon—that, when you have done wrong you will never have real peace of mind till you have confessed it. And confession, to be worth anything, must spring from real sorrow for the fault, and a desire to do better in time to come. "Whoso confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy.

The Oldest Religion.—A certain Italian saw in his church in the time of mass the well-know face of an English gentlemen. Glad to see him there, and wishing to convince him of the superiority of the Papal communion, he wrote on a slip of paper with his pencil, and sent to his friend, the following words:

"Where was your Protestant religion to be found before the days of Luther?"

The English gentlemen wrote in like manner the following answer:

"Our religion was to be found then where yours is not to be found now—in the Word of God."

Little faults become great, and even monstrous in our eyes, in proportion as the pure light of God increases in us; just as the sun, in rising, reveals the true dimension of objects which were dimly and confusedly discerned during the night.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE BINDING OF THE DRAGON.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

IT is generally admitted that the Dragon in Rev. xii. is a symbol of the Roman power in its Pagan form; but when they approach the 20th chapter they see the "Old Bos Devil,"—the old fellow that was supposed to be in the Garden of Eden,—and an angel coming down from heaven, which is said to be the Son of God, to bind him. Why men should be so inconsistent is very strange. It is evident that the Dragon of the 12th chapter is the same as the Dragon of the 20th chapter, for they are both called the Dragon, that old serpent which is the Devil and Satan. So if one is the serpent which was in the Garden of Eden, the other is the same.

Again, it is generally believed that the Dragon in the 12th chapter must have the Pagan religion connected with it to be a Dragon. This view, I conceive, has been the reason why there has been so many different views set forth that have not satisfied those who wrote on the subject nor those who have investigated the views presented.

In discussing this subject I shall take the ground that religion has nothing to do with the symbol, but that it is only a symbol of a government and that the chain which the Dragon was bound with was a symbol, and he was shut up in a symbolic pit or abyss.

Before presenting my views on this subject I will show the inconsistency of making the Dragon a symbol of Paganism.

Paganism ceased to be connected with the Roman government when Constantine became a Christian Emperor in A. D. 313, and Gibbon says, (18th chap.), "The religion of Constantine achieved in less than a century the final conquest of the Roman Empire." If Paganism symbolized the Dragon, it must have received its deadly wound A. D. 420, the year, according to history, when a law was passed prohibiting the Pagan worship in the Empire. That the Dragon was in existence after that is evident, for we read, in Rev. xiii., that the Dragon gave "his power and seat and authority" to the Leopard Beast; "and they worshipped the Dragon which gave power unto the Beast, and they worshipped the Beast;" showing that, so far as religion is concerned, the Dragon and Beast were of the same belief, and all admit that the Beast supported the Catholic faith. This transfer of power of the Dragon to the Leopard Beast took place in 476.

The Dragon, I understand, symbolizes the Old Roman government, and the Leopard Beast symbolizes New Rome, established by Constantine on the Grecian territory; and hence we have the symbol of a Leopard Beast to designate the locality of that Empire which is called by historians "Grecian Rome." Says history, "In the year 476, Romulus Augustulus, with the senate, disclaimed the necessity or even the wish to continue any longer the Imperial succession in Italy, since in their opinion the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to prevade and protect at the same time both East and West. In their own name and in the name of the people they consented that the seat of universal empire should be transferred from Rome to Constantinople, and they basely renounced the right of choosing their master, the only vestige that yet remained of the authority which had given laws to the world." (Gibbon, chap. 36.)

There cannot be found in the pages of history a more perfect and exact fulfilment of prophecy than this transaction, and therefore we have the symbol of the Dragon and the Beast like unto a Leopard, explained to be Old Roman or Cæsar government, and New or Grecian Roman government.

At this point it will be well to notice the symbols attached to the Dragon and the Beast. The Dragon and the Leopard Beast had seven heads and ten horns. Rome, according to Daniel's prophecy, was to be divided into ten kingdoms, and three of those kingdoms were to be plucked up by the roots by a power that was to arise among them. It would be strange if we could not find that event in the prophecy of John. The Dragon had seven heads and ten horns, which are symbols of kingdoms, according to Daniel's prophecy. It is claimed by some that heads symbolize forms of government; and others claim that they are literal mountains. Neither one of these views are sustained by any Bible definition.

Again, there is no occasion for this mode of interpretation. Rome was divided into ten kingdoms by A. D. 476, or thereabouts.—Three of those kingdoms were of Arian faith, and seven of them were of the Catholic faith. The three Arian kingdoms were plucked up by the roots by 534 through the direction of the Catholic church. I make this assertion without entering into the proof, but am ready at any time to substantiate this assertion. These heads and horns have their locality on the Western Roman Empire; and when the Dragon gave his seat and great authority to New Rome they became subject to that "universal empire;" and hence the symbols are transferred to the Leopard Beast.

These seven heads, or kingdoms, were the supporters of the Catholic church for 324 years, until Western Rome was restored; and hence the explanation given to John, in the 17th chap., of the Beast that was and is not, and the seven heads are seven mountains (or governments) upon which the woman sitteth, or in other words, that support the woman or church. The horns had not obtained a place in history when John saw the last phaze of the Roman kingdom in the Rev. xvii., when he stood in the wilderness and saw the woman going to judgment, after she had passed the summit of her power.

These kingdoms did not rise until 1815. Without going farther on this point I will notice the next change that took place after the Dragon in 476 gave his seat and great authority to the Leopard Beast. It seems necessary to notice these facts that we may more clearly establish the point when the Dragon was bound, or shut up in the abyss.

The next change that took place is a Beast with two horns coming up out of the earth, which spake like a dragon. Eastern Rome was under the direction of the Catholic church from 476 until 754, when he became unable any longer to protect Rome and the church. The Lombards began to encroach upon Rome, and all appeals to the Empire of the East could not stop their progress; and finally the Roman Pontiff was obliged to call upon France, the eldest son of the church, for aid. He got Peter to dictate a letter to Pepin, the king of France, in these words:

"Though I am dead in the flesh I am alive in the spirit. You now hear me and must obey the voice of the founder and guardian of the Roman church, that the virgin, the angels, the saints and martyrs, and the hosts of heaven unanimously urge the request and will confess the obligation, that riches, victory, and paradise will crown your pious enterprise, and eternal damnation will be the penalty if you neglect and suffer the tomb and the temple and people to fall into the hands of the perfideous Lombards."

Pepin came to the rescue, and established the Pope in Rome, and made him king, by virtue of which he claims to be king of Rome until this time. When the emperor of the East appealed to Pepin to restore Rome to him, Peter replied, "That no human consideration should tempt him to resume the gift which he had conferred on the Roman Pontiff for the remission of his sins and the salvation of his soul."

We see from this the mouth that was given to the Leopard Beast was vested in the two horn beast who exercised all the power of the first beast, in his presence, or while the Leopard Beast was still in existence. This Beast spake as a Dragon, or in the place of the Dragon. He was king of Rome, but not crowned with the crown of the Cæsars.

Charlemagne came to the throne of France in 768, and was crowned king of Italy in 794; when he pledged himself, on receiving the crown, "To maintain the faith and privilege of the church and respect the gift conferred upon the Pontiff by his father Pepin."

In the year 800, on Christmas day, Charlemagne recovered from the hands of the Pontiff the crown of the Cæsars. Says history, "After the celebration of the holy martyrs, Leo suddenly placed a precious crown on his head, and the dome resounded with the acclamation of the people, "Long life and victory to Charles the most pious and Augustus crowned by God (the Pope), the great and pacific Emperor of the Romans." The head and the body of Charlemagne were consecrated by the royal unction after the example of the Cæsars. He was saluted or adored by the Pontiff. His coronation oath represented a promise to maintain the faith and privileges of the church, and the first fruits were paid in his rich offerings to the shrine of the apostle." (Gibbon, 49th chap.)

Here we have the Dragon kingdom restored by the hands of the Roman Pontiff in the person of Charlemagne, who is called in history "The restorer of the Roman Empire." Upon what condition was he restored? Not until he had taken the oath that he would be a servant to St. Peter, or the God who crowned him. Is not this oath the chain by which he was bound? Was he not shut up in the abyss when he submitted to obey the mandates of the Pope, who stood at the head of this false system of religion or symbolic abyss? If this is not so, I am at a loss to know what would be a fulfilment of this Scripture.

This power, which bound him, claimed to be "God," and assumed the miraculous power of receiving a letter direct from St. Peter "who was dead in flesh, but alive in spirit," which must have been looked upon by kings as a miracle, which the Pope, or false prophet, wrought in the sight of the Beast.

The Revelator says the Dragon was to be bouud one thousand years, and then he was to be loosed. We are informed by history that "no king might legally assume the titles of Emperor and Augustus till he had received the crown from the Roman Pontiffs," who were bound with the same oath administered to Charlemagne. There were seven families or dynasties who were crowned with the Dragon or Cæsar crown. Six of these dynasties received the crown of the Cæsars from the hands of the Pope of Rome, as follows: Charlemagne in 800; who was succeeded by the Otho dynasty in 951; the Franconi dynasty in 1014; the Suabin dynasty in 1155; the Spanish dynasty in 1530; the Hapsburg or Austrian dynasty in 1764; and the seventh and last dynasty was Bonapart, who crowned himself, in 1806. As I said before, six of these dynasties were crowned by the Pope, and of course were bound to support the Catholic church; and therefore it will not be necessary to enter into any historical account of them; but the seventh and last will require the facts to demonstrate the fulfilment of the Dragon being loosed from the abyss, and no longer bound by that great chain of superstition forged by the Vicar of Jesus Christ on earth.

In the year 1800 Bonapart placed himself at the head of 40,000 men, and crossed the Alps to conquer the Austrians, who were the then supporters of the Pope. On the 14th of June, on the plains of Marengo, the decisive battle was fought. Austria was driven from Italy. "Immediately," says history, "Bonapart dispatched a messenger to Rome, informing the Pope that he must acknowledge him as ruler of Rome." Here we see the tables are turned, the chain is broken, and the Devil, that old Serpent, is pouncing upon the "God" that bound the Dragon just one thousand years before. The Pope was obliged to submit.

In 1806 Napoleon sent for the Pope to crown him with the Roman, or Cæsar crown; and while the Pope was in the act of taking the crown to place it on his head, Napoleon reached forth his hand and took the crown and placed it on his own head, and exclaimed, "I am Cæsar; I am Charlemagne!" and told the Pope that he would now attend to the things of Cæsar, and he might attend to spiritual things.

If time in prophecy ever marked anything this is one of them. I am aware that those who claim that the binding of the Dragon (or the "Old Boss Devil," as they claim), is yet in the future, will not receive the views here set forth. That belief is founded upon a "doubtful" text. The "Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge" on the word millennium says, "a thousand years, generally employed to denote the thousand years according to ancient tradition, grounded on some doubtful text in the Apocalypse." Buck, in his "Theological Dictionary," says the same thing. Putnam, in his history of dates, quotes from Bishop Burnet, who says the text is spurious, and evidently is an interpolation. Gregory, in his church history, tells how it was, and by whom it was interpolated in the text, and remarks that "It is a mixture of Judaism and Oriental philosophy, well calculated to make converts." Prideaux (Vol iv., page 334) says it is a heresy introduced into the church in the second century. The doctrine distracted the church so much in 1552, that the Church of England had to add an article to their creed in these words: "They who seek to restore the Millenary fable oppose the Holy Scriptures and plunge into the Jewish fanaticism." There is not one of the so-called fathers, who speak on this subject, that do not teach that the consummation takes place at the end of this age; and that the new heavens and new earth is obtained before their millennium commences. Again: that there would be interpolations made is evident, or why should a curse be pronounced against any that should add to or take away from this book (chap. xxii. 19)? The mere giving an interpretation or exposition of this book, however erroneous it might be, does not add to nor take from this book; if it were so, who would dare to venture or tread upon such dangerous ground?

Those who maintain that there is a thousand years between the resurrection of the righteous and wicked, turn things wrong end to, for they have the righteous gathered first. Our Lord says, Gather first the tares to be burned, and then gather the wheat. Who is right? Again: He will separate the sheep from the goats when he comes, etc.; and reward them both at the same time; one with life, and the other with eternal punishment, which is death, and no coming to life at the end of a thousand years. Paul says, The quick and dead will be judged when Jesus comes; and that they, the wicked, will be punished with everlasting destruction. Job says, Man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be more; they shall not awake or raised out of their sleep. So let it be.

THE CROUCHER AT THE DOOR.

GENESIS iv. 7.

OUR own experience has made us familiar with the genesis and progress of sin: we have fallen a thousand times before the very craft, the very device, by which our first parents were ensnared. The desires and lusts which haunt the senses, and the understanding which holds by sense, demand an excessive unlawful gratification. At first reason and conscience withstand the claim. The repulse only whets desire and makes the craving lust more vehement. They return to the attack. If again withstood, they return again, perhaps under some new disguise, always with new force: till at last the resistance of reason and conscience is overcome, and some pretext is found for yielding to the clamorous desire. At times, no doubt, the citadel of the soul is taken by storm, the passions rising in sudden, furious insurrection; but oftener it falls by treachery, or before stealthy and masked approaches. Reason and conscience, instead of being carried by fierce assault, are lulled to rest. No sign, no portent, warns them of the coming peril; no torches flash on the darkness, no tramp of armed men invades the silence. The spirit, like the Master, is betrayed with a kiss, by a friend. Step by step the power of evil draws nigh; but no warning voice is heard. One of the band of affections which wait upon the spirit has been won over; others of them are weakened by long travail, or are sleeping for very weariness. And the spirit, taken at unawares, is led away captives, to suffer many stripes, to endure many strange indignities and griefs, perchance to pass through the grave itself before it be redeemed from its captivity.

Or, again: Sin clothes itself in fair disguises; it stands before us comely and attractive as the unfallen eloquent serpent. Now and then, perhaps, the disguise is lifted by a passing breath from heaven. We still hear a voice sweet and melodious as an angel's; but we catch glimpses of a grovelling serpent-form and the baleful hunger of its eye. We waver and hang in poise. But the voice sounds on; the charm works; our scruples fade: we begin to side with the tempter, and to frame plausible excuses for yielding to his allurements. We do not wish to be disenchanted. We insist on it that he resume his disguise. We see things not as they are, but as we would have them be. We call evil good, darkness light, bitter sweet. Deceived at first, we carry on the cheat, and end by deceiving ourselves. The sin that was outside, is now within us. The Croucher has crept through the door.

We are not "ignorant of his devices." Our own experience translates these figures of speech into familiar ominous prose. We have been "drawn aside of lust, and enticed;" in us, "lust has conceived, and brought forth sin." The edge and strictness of our scruples have been worn down; the force of high spiritual resolves has been frittered away: the charm of things pleasant to the eye, though not good for food, has grown upon us till we have "consented to sin." And therefore we feel our need of the warning suggested by the image before us. We know that every time we yield to temptation, we become an easier prey to the wiles of evil; that every hour we neglect or postpone a duty, we harden into a more habitual neglect. We know that, so often as we suffer him to approach, the Croucher widens the approaches to our hearts; that every time he enters, he is more difficult to expel. Do we know it? Let us then listen to the warning: "Take heed . . . lest any of you be hardened by the deceitfulness of his sin;" "lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve by his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity and purity that are in Christ. Heb. iii. 13; and 2 Co. xi. 3.

(2.) Cruelty, no less than craft, characterizes the Croucher at the Door. The most crafty beasts are the most cruel. They crouch, that they may spring, and rend, and tear. And Sin is cruel, and fatal in its cruelty. If it crouch, it is that it may spring; if it spring, it is that it may destroy.

Revert once more to the first sin. The man and the woman whom God placed in the garden had but one positive commandment to fulfil, i. e., they had only one method of testing and proving their loyalty to Him who had loaded them with benefits. Of all the trees of the garden whose fruit was good for food, they might freely eat. Only one tree was forbidden them, and that because, whatever sense might say, it was not good for food. Prompted by sin, they broke the solitary injunction which restrained and defended their liberty; they turned their only test and proof of obedience into an occasion for insulting and denying the Majesty of Heaven. And that one sin unpeopled Paradise. It brought human life and immortality under the sorrowful obscurations of death. It reduced the whole creation into a bondage to vanity and corruption, in which it groans and travails to this day. It gave a false bias to the whole course of human history. Sin, taking occasion by the commandment, slew man: for in Adam all die. Was not that a hideous and unparalleled cruelty?

Or glance at the sin of Cain. He had one brother, and he murdered him. The world was wide, but not wide enough for them both. Abel, "meek, and gentle as the sheep he tended," was so good a man, that God himself "attested him to be righteous." But there is no truth in sin. The very excellence of Abel, was expressed in his "more excellent gift," was the very occasion of which Sin availed itself to make Cain a murderer and a fratricide.

Proofs of the malignity, the horrible and insatiable cruelty, of sin may be found through all the subsequent annals of the race. They are "writ large" on every page of the human story. But why should a sinful man, speaking to sinful men, adduce and multiply proofs of the cruelty of sin? We know its cruelty, for we have felt it. It has laid its fierce, implacable hand on every one of us, lacerating all the nobler affections of the soul, opening wounds in some of us that will never close until we have seen corruption. There is not a man on earth who, were he to lay bare his heart, could not show the wounds, and scars of the wounds, inflicted by this ruthless foe of our peace. If we are not sensible of them, it is because we are dead, because we have left the proper susceptibilities of life. Once quickened, and we cannot but discover them, cannot but find that the Croucher has torn and bitten while it has fawned upon us. Old wounds will smart, and ache, and throb. As spiritual consciousness returns, it will be with us as with the wounded soldier left on the field, whose pains, mercifully sheathed for a time in swoons, rack and torture him afresh as life recovers its abandoned seat. The energies which we would gladly devote to Him who has quickened us, will have to be painfully redeemed from their bondage to death. When we would do good, evil will be present with us. Old habits, although renounced, will assert their power, and defeat our endeavors after holiness. And then, rising upon us through manifold infirmities, relapses, and penitent regrets, there will come the conviction that Sin has left its cruel enfeebling traces on our nature, and well-nigh unfitted us for the toils and honors of a divine service.

THE WARNING. "If thou doest not well, Sin is a Croucher at the door; and his desire is against thee, but thou shouldst rule over him." The warning indicates our danger, and our safety.

(1.) It points out our danger. He who does not well is very near to doing ill. A merely negative virtue is in peril of becoming positive vice. He who neglects opportunities of doing good, by his very neglect of them does evil. The holy war admits no neutrals: we must be for God, or against him.

This is one thought suggested by the Warning; but it suggests another of a much more hopeful cast. For it implies that sin is external to man, not an essential part of his nature, but a foreign adverse power which has only an usurped authority; it represents evil as a croucher without the door, and capable of being kept out. "Sin is a transgression of the law" written on the heart as well as of the law engraved on tablets of stone. "He that sinneth wrongeth his own soul," and therefore does a great wickedness against God. Sin is not an inseparable element of our humanity, but an alien and separable adjunct. Only as we are without sin, or are redeemed from it, do we rise to the proper perfection of our nature. Christ was without sin, yet He was the Perfect Man.

We need to remember and to emphasize the fact that sin is not of the essence of our nature; for much depends upon it. It makes redemption possible; for how should they be redeemed from evil of whose nature evil is an essential and inseparable quality? It is because when we sin we wrong our own souls, and voluntarily submit to an alien external power to which we ought not to submit, that we are responsible and guilty creatures. It is because sin and manhood are distinct, separable, and even antagonistic powers, that Christ can take away our sin without taking away our manhood, that He can perfect our manhood by taking sin away. The croucher lurks outside the door, and can only enter as we admit it; nay, even when admitted, it remains an alien from whose tyranny we may be delivered.

This is the hope which is implied in the Warning, and which lends it force; that the soul and sin are distinct and adverse powers, that we may be freed from the usurpations of evil without loss, nay, with infinite gain, to our humanity: and yet there is dread in it too. How can we think without fear of being pitted against so crafty and ruthless a foe?—a foe who has left the print of its fangs and talons even on the best and noblest of our race? We may well fear the Croucher. God would have us fear him, that we may cease to do evil, learn to do well. For it is the evil-doer about whom the Croucher has his settled haunt. He that has once been drawn aside of lust and enticed may expect to be enticed again. The door that has been often opened, that still stands ajar, will not remain unvisited. The wild beast will return to its accustomed covert, even though compelled to leave it for awhile. The expelled demon, "wandering through dry places, seeking rest and finding none," will bethink itself of "the house whence it came out," and come back, perchance bringing with it "seven other spirits worse than itself."

It is very true that the Croucher lurks before all hearts, that at times it finds an entrance to every heart, that we are never in this world proof against its wiles and assaults. But it is our happiness to know that those from whose hearts the Truth has scared sin, though never quite out of danger, are freed from the worst and most perilous assaults, whether of its cruelty or its craft. There is one presence which evil cannot enter. It cannot meet the eye of God. And as He who inhabiteth eternity, also inhabits the humble and contrite heart, those who are lowly and penitent and delight in God are never long exposed to its malice. Sin has no more dominion over them, though now and then it stirs up unquiet passions to revolt. They are only in danger when they have grieved the Holy Spirit and caused it to depart. And as He never leaves them but for a moment, never forsakes them but that He returns in great mercy, their peril is soon past. The Croucher is not at their door often or long. But it is not thus with those who do ill. Only in well-doing can we commit our souls to the Creator. To be without God is to be in a constant peril. Every time we do one of the evil deeds which "proceed out of the heart," we open the door through which the Croucher comes in.

(2.) The Warning indicates our safety. "His desire is against thee, but thou shouldest rule over him." That the desire of sin is against, is adverse to, man is sufficiently evident. It banished Adam from paradise. It murdered Cain by making him a murderer. It has brought discord, defilement, death into our souls. So soon as the law of sin has begun to work in us, we have found it a law of death. Its desire is against us. And we have only one alternative. We must either subdue it, or be slain by it. We cannot escape the conflict. And the conflict begun, our foe will grant no truce, nor consent to any terms short of an entire surrender to its control. It is our only wisdom, as it is our imperative duty, to strive unto blood against the fierce passions and lusts of the flesh and of the mind. If we parley with them, they outwit us. If we submit to them, they destroy us. The Croucher cannot be tamed. It must be caged, starved, slain. "Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies;" "Its desire is against thee, but thou shouldest rule over it."

But how is this wily foe to be caught? how are the strength and fierceness of this cruel foe to be subdued? Truly, if we were called to the task alone, we might well despair. Sin has too firm a hold on us to be readily dislodged. It has too often crouched both at, and within, the door to be easily kept out. But our comfort is that we are not called to the task alone. He who warned Cain that the Croucher was at his door, would have helped Cain to repel him. And He, who warns us that sin is our subtle and implacable antagonist, will help us to detect its wiles and to withstand its assaults. It only needs that Christ show himself on our side, and evil will not court another overthrow.

It was thought of old, it is still thought by some, that relics—splinters of the true Cross, to wit—are a sovereign defence against all things ill. But the true defence against all evil is, not the cross on the breast, but Christ within the heart. And this is a defence we may all have. Behold he stands at the door—the door so often opened to the Croucher—and knocks: and if any man hear his voice, and open the door, He will come in, treading in the steps of the Croucher, and with his pure and blessed feet obliterating the foul tracks of evil, making our purified hearts temples not all unmeet for his presence, and service and praise. We have only to bid Him enter, and the Victor over sin will give us the victory.—Selected from the Sunday Magazine.

From Louisa J. Beach.

To the loved ones in Christ Jesus, greeting: As the Herald, our ever-welcome visitor, comes to hand, I eagerly run over its columns for the familiar names I love so much to see, and almost feel at times as if I had enjoyed a personal interview with some of you. Possibly some one may be looking for my humble name, and as I am very willing to confess my relationship to the family, and be recognized as a companion of all those who fear the Lord and love his truth, I do most cheerfully subscribe to the same.

I can say with others that I am much pleased with the appearance of the paper in its new dress, and with the general tenor of its articles, especially since our last annual meeting at Springfield. There seems to be an effort on the part of many to sustain and make the paper interesting by writing for it; and to stir up the minds of the church to draw nearer to the Lord, and lay hold of his strong arm, and claim, through faith, the precious promises of his word, which promises, beloved, "are not yea and nay, but yea and amen in Christ Jesus to those who believe." And is it not our privilege to live in a position where we may ask and receive, that our joy may be full? Says the Master, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Let us not be satisfied with a superficial knowledge of God's word, but learn for ourselves that the words of Jesus are "spirit and life," and know the blessedness of believing them.

I have often wondered why, with all our intellectual strength, and theoretical knowledge, we, as a people, do not enjoy a greater degree of spirituality. I am not now comparing ourselves with others, but in view of the light we nave received, are we, while professedly looking for the return of the Master, fitted for translation? It is one thing to know and teach others that the inheritance of the saints is to be on an earth renewed, under the whole heavens—not beyond the bounds of time and space—and quite another to be called to read our titles clear to a share in the inheritance, and show by our lives we are walking the narrow way that leads thereto. We may be able to show plainly from the word of God that man is mortal, and dependent upon a resurrection from the dead, or an equivalent change, for a future and endless life; but what will it avail us if the Spirit, that raised up our Lord Jesus from the dead, dwells not in us? We may be satisfied the coming of our Lord draweth near—may mark the fast increasing evidences of the fulfillment of the prophetic word, yet unless we, with uplifted heads and joyful hearts, can say in response, "Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly," no glad approval of "well done" will greet our ears. It is high time that we as individuals understood our position thoroughly, and awake out of our sleep, for "now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." We have need to consider one another to provoke to love and good works, and to be faithful, to reprove, rebuke, if need be, and exhort with all long suffering and meekness.

We should be in earnest, for we are doing a great work, engaged in important business; fitting ourselves through grace to be accounted worthy to obtain that world where none but the pure and holy shall ever dwell; and if thus fitted to be instruments of saving others.

Let us hold fast whereunto we have attained, "not laying again the foundation of repentance for dead works," but go on unto perfection. But do not think that I ignore doctrine. Nay verily. "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and those that hear." But let us take heed that we rest not too much on theory, even though it may be faultless, lest we be found holding the truth in unrighteousness, and devoid of its spirit, which would prompt us to active obedience in the service of our Redeemer.

My own experience since our late meeting has been a varied one. Over the couch of the sick and dying; by the open grave of loved ones; sympathizing with the afflicted in trial; oppressed with care, and prostrated on a bed of sickness, yet amid all, the grace of God has been sufficient, and his hand has led me thus far. What the future hath in store for me I know not; that I would leave it with the Lord. Yet with Sister Weaver I can say, I love life better than death, and I would like to see the end of the race.

N. B.—Since writing the above Sister Beach has been attacked with hemorrhage of the lungs—the third time since camp-meeting. She is quite feeble, and earnestly desires the prayers of the church in her behalf.

Geo. Flint, Central Falls, R. I., writes: I am very glad to receive the Herald of Life. I read it with very great satisfaction and profit. Please send me some of the Campaign Documents. If I had the means I would get many more; for some people read them gladly. Others refuse. I was talking with a minister and asked him, Do my parents [dead] know to whom I am speaking? He said "Yes." I put him in mind of Job xiv. 21, and asked him, Does the old man know anything about his boys? No answer. I asked him if he could show me one text in the Bible where the dead are said to be praising God? To this I got no answer. I said, they were gathered to their fathers—to their people. To this there was no reply.

"Physician Heal Thyself:"

OR, ACCURACY AND HONESTY.

Last week "The Advent Christian Times," Joshua V. Himes, editor, came out with an editorial headed, "An Amiable Warning." It commenced as follows:

Some months ago the Herald of Life announced to its readers that the General Conference at Rochester would result in the inauguration of the Advent-Christian body of believers as the youngest of the harlot daughters of Rome; and the prediction has since been repeated.

"Christian" journalists should try to speak the truth. The above statement we would be glad to believe was not a deliberate misstatement; but circumstances look unpromising in that direction. The article referred to above appeared in the Herald of Life, Oct. 13, and was written by Wm. H. Spencer, over his own proper initals. This article was partially transferred by Eld. Himes to his paper, with emphasis, stating it as the sentiment of the "Herald of Life," and omitting the signature. Was that honest? That our readers may see how honest the attack of Eld. Himes last week is, we republish the article of Br. Spencer entire, as follows:

"THE ADVENT-CHRISTIAN TIMES."

Many of the readers of the Herald will doubtless be surprised to learn that the "Voice of the West," published at Buchanan, Michigan, is now numbered among the things of the past. We have before us, however, "The Advent-Christian Times," which, in fact, is but a new name for the same paper. We can discern no improvement in the paper, either in name or typographical appearance.

To the majority of its readers the change may seem of no importance—a matter of small account; but to those who considerately weigh the motive which prompted this change, there is a significant meaning. It is clearly apparent that certain leaders are desirous of having a church organization which, like all sectarian bodies, must have a worldly formed name, and thus in fact become a daughter of "the old Harlot," which they have so severely condemned in times past. As a strategic movement towards perfecting such a church organization, they fling the name to the world in the shape of a paper, and thus bring it into popularity for adoption.

Let all the children of God, who are truly united to Christ, keep clear of such a movement, that when "the cities of the nations" shall fall, and "great Babylon" shall come into remembrance before God, we may not be partakers in her overthrow, for then will all the grand achievements of man be as the dross in the refiner's fire. Christ is our Head—our Leader—and if we are truly members of His body we belong to the "Church of the first born," and at last our names will be found written in the "Lamb's Book of Life."

W. H. S.

Where in this article did Br. Spencer say a word about "the General Conference at Rochester"? It is not even alluded to! But Eld. H. tells his readers that "The Herald of Life announced to its readers that the General Conference at Rochester would result in the inauguration of the Advent-Christian body of believers as the youngest of the harlot daughters of Rome." Was this statement of Eld. H. honest or true? Compare it with Br. Spencer's article above, and judge for yourselves. Read Br. S.'s article over and over, and see if there is anything in it calculated to alarm any honest Christian. Honest men, who have no design of doing evil, are not alarmed at "warnings" against evil doing, further than to be on the look-out to prevent it, nor are they likely to be angered at those who give the warning.

But Br. Spencer said, "Certain leaders are desirous of having a church organization which, like all sectarian bodies, must have a worldly-formed name," etc. A fearful charge! But fearful to none but the guilty aspirants; yet Br. S. did not say they designed to do this at "the General Conference at Rochester." He foresaw the tendency, ultimately, to such a result; and if we are correctly informed, by a member of that Conference, Br. S. was none too soon in sounding an alarm. Will Eld. Himes tell his readers that there was no attempt made at that Conference by some of the "leaders" to get a creed, articles of faith, or declaration of sentiments embodied and promulgated by that body? True, they might have been defeated in the attempt, and the subject "laid on the table." Did certain "leaders" acquiesce in that result from choice or necessity? Be it which it might, the fact is patent as to the desire of those "leaders"; and it seems they are striving to make a virtue of necessity, and vent their ill feelings on "non-ressurrectionists."

To give an appearance of self-justification Eld. Himes gives an extract from an article in the Herald of Life, from a correspondent, which appeared at Rochester towards the close of the Conference; too late, however, to help "lay" the designed creed—by whatever name it may be called—"on the table."

Eld. Himes gives an extract from that article, introducing it in this language: "The following extract will serve as a sample of the tone and spirit of the article." He then gives all of it that any Christian man can call offensive to an honest heart, and tells his readers it is "a sample of the tone and spirit of the article"! The article is mainly a historical account as to how Rome advanced to its high pretensions; and is highly interesting and instructive. Eld. H. takes all that suits his purpose and calls it a "a sample," etc. Suppose the extract to be what it ought not to have been: was he acting honorably in giving his readers no intimation that the article was not editorial, but left them to conclude that it was? The editor of this paper is not responsible for the sentiments of correspondents unless he indorses them; but Eld. H. persists in attributing such responsibility to him in spite of the standing statement at our editorial head.

Now our non-resurrection brethren at large either endorse or repudiate the spirit of the above and similar sentiments circulated by the Herald. If any endorse them, they should separate themselves from the Advent-Christian Churches and Conferences which endorse the General Conference, and make their attacks upon us from the outside, and not inside of the body. On the other hand, if the body of non-resurrection believers repudiate such a spirit as is manifested in the above extracts, they should find some means of letting it be known who among them mean to be Christian gentlemen, and manifest the Spirit of Christ even toward those they may regard as involved in serious errors. John Wesley warned reformers against "sour godliness." The friends of some of the professed reformers of the present day should warn them against acrid godliness—for the godliness of too many of them has evidently, if we may judge by the spirit they manifest, not only soured, but become bitter. The doctrines—true or false—that were so sweet to their taste, have soured on their mental stomachs, and embittered their entire natures.

We do not "endorse" the sentiments of the extract. But we cannot follow Eld. H.'s advice to "separate from the Advent-Christian Churches and conferences," for we never had, and probably never will have, any connection with those bodies. We have steadily refused, for nearly thirty years, to be identified with such organizations, believing it to be enough for us to belong to the "Church of Christ," without any of those sectarian names. If there are any "non-resurrectionists" who are not "Christian gentlemen" they are not wanted with us; let them go elsewhere and be organized.

To the latter part of Eld Himes' remarks, we will only say, "Judge not that ye be not judged." "Acrid godliness" can be found in more places than one. His own remarks will speak for himself.

In conclusion, we say to all our friends, Let us do our own work, to which God has called us, and let others go their own chosen way, if they will.

Burning of the World.

We gave last week an article on this subject from our estimable friend and brother, D. H. Chase, of Middletown, Conn. It would be the height of folly in us to enter into a controversy with this friend, whose mind is constantly employed in scientific matters. We shall not, therefore, controvert his science further than to say, that as scientific men contend that in the formation of the earth, the time was when the surface was a vast body of fire, as they now maintain the centre is. If we mistake not, our learned friend, Br. Chase, admits this. On this point, however, we will give a few extracts from an article in the "Methodist Quarterly Magazine" for Oct., 1868, on "Recent Astronomy and the Mosaic Record:" written by "S. D. Hillman, Professor in Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa." He is speaking of the "Nebulous Theory" of creation. He says:

"The theory claims that the matter now composing the sun and planets was anciently a vast, nebulous, rotating spheroidal mass, extending far beyond the orbit of the outmost planet."

Such has been our view of the subject for many years, although we have never made the subject a matter of scientific investigation. We would be glad to give large extracts from Prof. Hillman's article, as it is deeply interesting; but our object and space prevent it. We wish mainly to call attention to the fact that the earth was formed from broken fragments of the nebulous matter, other parts of which went to make the sun, moon and stars of this solars system. Of the earth he says:

"Inasmuch as the sun has heat and light, the theory requires that the planets and their moons, having been created by the same genetic forces out of the same body of materials, and by the same method, should at some early period of their history have been self-heated and self-luminous. The other planets we cannot subject to examination, but our own globe gives abundant testimony on this point. The increasing intensity of heat as we descend into the interior of the earth, springs of hot water, three hundred active volcanoes, earthquakes, the igneous rocks of the earth's crust, and other facts, attest the former fierce energy of the earth's heat. The rugged, broken surface of the moon, marked with crater-like depressions, miles in depth and breadth, the very fac-similes of the craters of extinct terrestrial volcanoes, warrant the belief in the moon's former burning state. These facts point back to a time when the earth shone self-luminous, like a star of the smaller magnitude. And when the earth had so far cooled that a crust was formed over the entire surface, and thereby its light had gone out forever, the people of other worlds, it may be, may have taken note of a star that disappeared, and may have felt the dim forebodings we might feel when we read of stars that have disappeared or waned because of the probable like extinguishment of their light through loss of heat. But while the earth was being buried beneath the opaque crust of rock and sea and soil, it was only passing through a series of preordained changes necessary for fitting it up and furnishing it as the abode of intelligent creatures made in the image of the great Creator."

Further on, Prof. Hillman in commenting on the Scripture expression, "And darkness was upon the face of the deep," Gen. i. 2, speaks as follows:

"The evidences are numerous and conclusive that the earth was at some remote period of its history a fiery liquid mass, which state could have been produced by the chemical combination among particles of matter brought into close and violent contact, as before described; but the molten mass kept cooling by the radiation of heat into space, until at length the cooling of the exterior part occasioned the formation of a rigid crust over the entire surface, hiding forever the light of the earth as a self-luminous body, and which may, therefore, now be classed among the lost stars. This extinguishment of light must place the earth in striking contrast with its previous conditions; utter darkness must come upon the face of the deep. Science avers that there was a time in the history of our globe when its light went out and thick darkness came. There was as yet no light of the sun, for it, the last formed of the members of the solar system, had not yet reached the point of condensation by which it became the source of light and heat. Its light at the brightest was like the dim haze of a planetary nebula. The radiation of heat still continuing, and the cooling of the crust and atmosphere following, the dense atmosphere, surcharged with steam and gas, condensed its steamy vapors into the waters covering the earth. We may regard the word deep, here, as synonymous with the waters of the following sentence; but the theoretic facts will hold equally good with the written word if, like the Septuagint, we interpret the deep as meaning an abyss, or the darkness resting on the wild, turbulent mass of gaseous vapors that ensphered the earth before it had cooled low enough to allow of the condensation of vapors into waters. A thick darkness vailing this earth in its early history is a fact fully warranted in the evolution of a world according to the nebular theory."

If these statements of the formation of the earth are correct—and we see no reason to doubt them—then the fires of the earth are less in power now than at the first, and have gradually become less likely ever to reach the face of the earth again so as to envelop the globe and cause the "crust of the earth" to be destroyed by their power. Hence, we do not see but that "science" is "point blank" against the idea of the universal destruction of the earth's surface by fire. That matter, however, we leave for scientific men to speculate upon: our business is with the Bible testimony. If that, in its general tenor, warrants the idea of the literal burning of the entire earth's surface and all things upon it, we bow to its authority. But does it warrant such a conclusion? We do not ask if some texts do not seem to teach it? That we admit; yet hundreds, yea, thousands of others, to our mind, teach the contrary, and utterly forbid such a construction of Bible testimony. The evidences of this are so numerous that we can only bring out a few. We note, in the first place, that all world-burners, or believers in that idea, fix the event at the second advent of Christ, as Br. Chase has done, if we understand his position.

We ask, will the testimony of Scripture in its general tenor admit of such an idea? Passing over positive declarations, such as the following, "Mount Zion cannot be removed, but abideth forever," Psa. cxxv. 1; "Like the earth, which He has established forever," Psa. lxxviii. 69, and like testimony, we proceed to notice statements of facts, to us irreconcilable with the theory of the world or the whole face of the earth being burned at the second advent.

We commence with the prophetic history of the world as presented by the prophet Daniel. In chap. ii. we are presented with five kingdoms. Four of these none presume to doubt are upon the earth as it now is. The fifth is set up while the fourth is still in existence, in its divided state; and "breaks in pieces, and consumes all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." It "became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Was this not the same earth that the four previous kingdoms occupied? It seems to us no other rational construction can be put upon the language.

But, if there were a lingering doubt, the seventh chapter of Daniel should dispel it. Here we have the same five kingdoms presented, and after the judgment sits, which fixes the fate of the fourth kingdom, we are told that, "one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, . . . and there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." This is further explained in verses 18, 27, showing that the reign of Christ is upon this earth, with his saints, and "under the whole heaven."

On the burning of the world theory, where are the "all people, nations, and languages," who are to "serve and obey Him?" Here is no burning of the globe, but a subjection of its inhabitants to Christ and his saints; for "The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever;" verse 18.

Corresponding with this are such prophecies as the following: "He shall have dominian also from sea to sea, and from the river" [Euphrates] "to the ends of the earth." . . . "Yea all kings shall bow down before Him all nations shall serve him." Psa. lxxii. See, also, Zech. ix. 10.

This reign, then, is before the explosion of the sea to blow up, or to "shatter the crust of the earth." But as some flee to Revelation (that book of symbols), to help out the burning world theory, we will give one or two samples from it also. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.

Here the eternal reign of Christ begins, and it is in "THIS world," and under these heavens, where "all people, nations and languages shall serve and obey Him." Dan. vii.

We have still another item in this symbolical book to which we call attention. John saw those who had gotten the victory over the beast and over his image, etc., stand upon a sea of glass, having the harps of God. Hence they were glorified. But the saints are not glorified till Christ's return from heaven. These glorified ones sing the song of Moses and the Lamb; hence sing what Moses and Jesus Christ taught. What do they sing? Listen! "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty . . . all nations shall come and worship before Thee; for thy judgments are made manifest." Rev. xv. So, after God's judgments are made manifest and the saints are glorified, there are "nations" left.

In harmony with this is the prophecy of Zechariah xiv., when "the Lord shall be King over all over the earth," etc., (verse 9), and the terrible judgments will fall upon wicked men, "and there shall be no more utter destruction," (verse 11); so that these destroying plagues constitute the last general plagues; yet, as in Rev. xv., it is said, "Every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts." How exactly the language agrees with that of the songsters in Rev. xv., quoted above.

That the persons "left of the nations" are not the immortal saints is clear from the fact that they are threatened with "punishment" if they come not up to Jerusalem, etc.

Add to this prophecy that of Isa. lxvi., "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, . . . to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many;" (verses 15, 16); "I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come and see my glory: and I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations," etc., (verses 18, 19). So all the prophets agree with the song in Rev. xv., that after God's extreme judgments are made known in the earth, there will be those who are left in the flesh who will be required to yield obedience to the government of God, under His own chosen King, whom He will then set on his "holy hill of Zion," Psa. ii. 6; and "the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem: and He shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and" [they shall be "burned up" in a general conflagration? no; but] "they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more . . . for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." Mich. iv. 2–4.

We might go on to show that with such testimony the whole tenor of the Bible agrees; and such language utterly precludes the construction put on Peter's language in 2 Pet. iii., about the earth, etc., being reserved unto fire, as if we must understand his language in the sense of a literal and universal burning of the whole globe, or "crust of the earth." All the prophets have spoken of the earth and its inhabitants after the Lord has come and executed judgments on ungodly rulers and those who corrupt the earth; and the same Peter, who is supposed to speak of the "literal" burning of the world, has told us, that God will "send Jesus Christ . . . whom the heaven must receive" [or retain] "until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii.

Will all the testimony we have presented from the prophets of Christ's reign over all nations, and from sea to sea, fail? are they all to give way to what some suppose Peter says about the burning of the world? We think "eternal torments" can be proved by the same method of reasoning.

While we have thus spoken, we wish none to suppose that we think "literal fire" will not be among the instrumentalities by which God will cut off many from the earth, and by which some portions of earth's surface will be materially changed and purified. All this we believe. But we reject the theory of a universal destruction of the earth's surface by fire, or any other material at the second advent of Christ. We believe such a theory subversive of all faith in prophecy and calculated to bring the Scriptures of truth into contempt, by setting aside all the prophecies of both the Old and New Testaments of the character we have presented for consideration; and what we have produced are only samples of a multitude of others announcing the same things. We therefore fully believe that when the Lord said, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Numb. xiv. 21), He meant this present earth, and not another formed out of its ashes.

Density of the Earth.

The following statement by Thomas Dick, LL. D., in his "Celestial Scenery," may show our readers that some scientific men differ from the notion that the centre of the earth is a body of liquid fire. Dr. Dick's judgment is perhaps as good as most other scientific men. He says:

"In the year 1773, Dr. Maskcline, the astronomer royal, with other gentlemen, made a number of observations on the mountain Schehallien, in Scotland, to determine the attraction of mountains. After four months spent in the necessary arrangements and observations, it was ascertained beyond dispute that the mountain exerted a sensible attraction, leaving no hesitation as to the conclusion that every mountain and every particle of earth is endowed with the same property in proportion to its quantity of matter. The observations were made on both sides of the mountain, and from these it appears that the sum of the contrary attractions exerted upon the plumbline of the instruments was equal to eleven seconds and a half. Professor Playfair, more than thirty years afterward, from personal observation endeavored to determine the specific gravity or density of the materials of which Schehallien is composed, and, after numerous experiments and calculations, it was concluded that "the mean density of the earth is nearly double the density of the rocks which compose that mountain," which seem to be considerably more dense than the mean of those which form the interior crust of the earth. The density of these rocks was reckoned to be two and a half times the weight of water; consequently the density of the earth is that of water as five to one; that is, the whole earth, bulk for bulk, is five times the weight of water, so that the earth, as now constituted, would counterpoise five globes of the same size composed of the specific gravity as water. As the mean density, therefore, of the whole earth's surface, including the ocean, cannot be above twice the density of water, it follows that the interior of the earth must have a much greater density than even five times the weight on it surface. Hence we are necessarily led to conclude that the interior parts of the earth, near the centre, must consist of very dense substances, than even iron, lead, or silver, and that no great internal cavity can exist within it, as some theorists have supposed, unless we could suppose that most of the materials far below the foundations of the ocean are much denser than the heaviest metalic substances yet discovered.

La Place has attempted to estimate the earth's density near the centre on the following data: If 5 2-5 be its mean density, and 3 1-8, 3 1-5, 2 4-5, and 2 3-5 be assumed as its superficial densities, then, on the theory of compressibility, the density at the centre will be 13 1-4, 14 1-2, 15 3-4, and 20 1-10 respectively. The least of the specific gravities (13 1-4) is nearly double the density of zinc, iron, and the ore of lead; and the greatest (20 1-10) is nearly equal to purified and forged platina, which is the most ponderous substance hitherto discovered. Yet this ponderous globe, with all the materials on its surface, is carried through the region of space with a volicity of sixteen hundred thousand miles every day."

Pauline Theology.

BY JACOB GRIM.

I love such theology as Paul preached; but not such mixed up stuff as is given to the world as the teachings of the great apostle. We think, were he living at the present time, he certainly would never be able to recognize as his teachings many of the productions that are offered as Pauline theology.

We call attention to the following quotations recently made from a writer in the "Crisis:" "The careful student of the Scriptures cannot have failed to observe, that the teaching of the apostle is uniformly in favor of the resurrection of all men." Again: "Learned men of every age of Christianity have adopted the Pauline view as in accordance with the plan of God, as revealed in his word."

We like the expression—"as revealed in his word." But the writer leaves the Word, and immediately gives us his preconceived opinion of the plan of God. Mark, "We maintain that as a consequence of Adam's disobedience a sentence of condemnation to death, without any promise or hope of a resurrection passed upon all men; so by the obedience of Christ unto death, this one grand righteous act, the sentence was so far reversed that death shall not finally triumph; for all shall be again restored to life." Now, to make Paul the author of such sentiments is cool, to say the least of it; and then to call it the plan of God as revealed in his word!

This evidently is meant for an exposition of the teaching of Paul in Romans v. 19, "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners; so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

Wiser heads than our "Crisis" brother have been troubled with this chapter. We recollect many years ago looking at some critical notes of Albert Barnes, on the same subject; at that time he was as much in the dark as some of the rest, and was inclined to give our Universalist brethren the advantage of the chapter. Again we looked to Br. Hudson. As Br. Burbank has given his exposition in full we will say no more about his views.

The question I ask myself is, Was Paul able to make his views clear, and did he do it? Now, for me to be compelled to go to some learned man, every time I wish to know what Paul was talking about, I would just as soon be without his writings altogether.

Just for a few moments suppose we drop all our notions and preconceived opinions, and inquire what Paul is talking about. First, we have Jesus Christ introduced as reconciling some persons to God by his death. Second, we have Adam introduced as an offender against God; and the condemnation of death entering the world through him. Third, we have Moses introduced for some purpose in the narrative; and in the 14th verse we have Adam introduced as a figure or type of him (Christ) that was to come. Now in this verse I conceive Paul has given us the key to unlock the whole sabject.

Adam is a type of him that was to come. Adam was made good, (Gen. i. 31,) but without any character; he had no development. God placed the man on trial to work out a character in harmony with his Creator. But instead of working out a character in harmony with God, he worked out, or developed a character of selfishness, in harmony with his own feelings; and in opposition to God. In other words, he did the will of himself. He stood as a representative man; was tried for his race, and they were condemned in him. "We maintain that as a consequence of Adam's disobedience, a sentence of condemnation to death, without any promise or hope of a resurrection, passed upon all men," is not found in Paul's theology, or the word of God, so far as we are able to discover. That God condemned Adam to death without any hope or promise, I admit; and through him death passed upon all men, from the simple fact, he had nothing but an animal life to give them. Justice must have its due, therefore all must die;" that is, without the promise or hope of a resurrection. Surely, then, if some power or scheme had not been introduced there would have been a total destruction. Well, we will now look at Paul's antitype, "Christ," and see what he came for.

Our brother says, "The mercy of God in Christ Jesus shall have its due also." Mercy, indeed! to bring back a dead sinner for no purpose except to kill him over again somewhat more severe than the first death; for mark you, the salvable state is not after the resurrection, but before. If our brother had said he believed all men would be placed in a salvable position after the resurrection, he might have called it the "mercy of God in Christ Jesus."

Go on, brother, "Life only in Christ" will open your eyes or drive you into the last salvable position for the wicked. Others have gone there, and you are on the road. "Nevertheless, death reigned from Adam to Moses." Why introduce Moses here? what has he to do with the subject? Adam was made under a law that promised life by obedience. God through Moses introduced another law that offered life by obedience. "For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them." Rom. x. 5. "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified."

Now then, as Adam the type was placed under a law of obedience, and was tried for his race, and failed because he did not do the will of his Creator, so Jesus the antitype was under the law of obedience and tried for his race. Who were they? We answer, Israel, or those under the law. "Who are Israelites, to whom belong the adoption (sonship), and the glory, and the covenants, and the law giving, and the rites of service, and the promises: whose are the fathers, and from whom is the anointed One according to the flesh. He who is over all, God blessed to the ages." —Rom. ix. "For verliy he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham."—Heb. ii. 16.

Here then we have the key; Jesus was made under the law; made subject to the law, just the same as Adam, who was the type. He says, "For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will but the will of him that sent me."—John vi. 38. Jesus obeyed God, and worked out a character in harmony with the will of God; for we read, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." He developed, as Paul says, a spirit of holiness. And was therefore declared to be "the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead."—Rom. i. 3. Again, according to his own testimony, "The hour is come; glorify thy Son;" "as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou has given him." John xvii. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

Jesus first having been tried for himself under the law of obedience, having worked out a character in harmony with God, under the law which said, "He that doeth the law shall live in it,"—for he himself had a right to live. He says, "I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." I lay my life down for the sheep. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father" (through the law). John x. "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." "But God commended his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "Moreover the law entered that the offense might abound. But where sin abounded grace did much more abound." Now if this is the law of Adam, we fail to see the point in Paul's argument. For he says in verse 12, "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin: and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.

Now, then, if this is the same law, verse 20, "The law entered that (sin, or) the offense might abound; but where sin abounded grace did much more abound;" if this is the Adamic law, and reaches every one, how can grace much more abound? Even universal salvation cannot meet the case; for it cannot save more than all. But it reads, "It doth much more abound."

The law was the law of Moses, introduced in verse 14, and affected only the Israelitish nation. There sin abounded. The Gentile world were without this law. And where no law exists there is no transgression. They were without God and without Christ in the world. The Jews were under this law; and condemned under this law. Jesus laid down the life which he had a right to keep. He loid it down for them, and by that act of sacrifiee, He reconciled them to God, even by his death. "We were reconciled to God by the death of his Son." I have been crucified with him, says Paul, and so was every son of Abraham crucified in Christ. He paid all the debt the law demanded of them. As by the disobedience of one man many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. This is, free from the requirements of the law which Jesus filled for them. Now, then, where sin abounded (in the Israelitish nation) grace did much more abound. It raised them from under the curse of their covenant, and brought a new principle of life into the world, which has abounded to the Gentile world. "As thou hast given him power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is eternal life, that they might know thee, the only and true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. Praise his holy name.

We will speak of the other part of the chapter at some future time.

Hell—Gehenna.

BY F. H. BURBANK.

ALL well-informed students of the Bible are aware of the fact that the English term Hell is used to translate four words (Sheol, Hades, Gehenna, and Tartarus), of the original Scriptures. Such students are few in number, when compared with the great mass of "believers." The masses are not aware of the above-mentioned fact, hence, whenever or wherever they find the term hell, they suppose it is one and the same in the original, and not four words. The multitudes know of but one hell, but the learned have two at least, and they are greatly to be blamed for keeping back their knowledge in this direction from the multitudes. It might be hazardous for Orthodoxy to diffuse such knowledge, but it would be of immense value to the people. Those who are not fearful in regard to the effects of knowledge upon the hearts of the children of God, will assist in scattering it, and I therefore endeavor to accomplish something in that direction at this time, and look confidently to the Lord for his blessing upon my humble efforts.

I. Concerning the term Hell.—This term is a most unfortunate one to indicate either a place or a state of endless misery. Properly, it means nothing of the kind. Webster and Worcester, our standard lexicographers, give us its true import. They inform us that it is from the Anglo-Saxon helan, which means to cover or conceal. No other definition is given.

Dr. Clarke in his commentary says, "The word hell comes from the Anglo-Saxon helan, to cover or hide, hence the tiling or slating of a house is called, in some parts of England (particularly Cornwall), heling, to this day. and the covers of books (in Lancashire), by the same name.

In Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible" we find him condemning the theological definition of the term hell.

Dr. Campbell states that "the word hell in its primitive signification . . . denoted only what was sacred or concealed. This word is found with little variation of form, and precisely in the same meaning, in all the Teutonic dialects."

We need not bring more evidence to establish the fact that the word hell does not properly apply either to a place or state of endless misery. It is wrong to give hell its present and not its primitive meaning. No authority can be produced to prove that meaning is properly changed to its present one.

The Original Terms.—Sheol is the only term in the Old Testament that is rendered hell: hades, gehenna and tartarus are the terms in the New. Sheol of the Old and hades of the New Testament are identical. The Seventy render sheol by hades in 60 instances out of the 64 where it occurs in the Old Testament. The sheol or hades of the Bible is not the hades of heathen mythology. The popular idea is in harmony with the latter. The proper meaning of hades corresponds with the primitive meaning of the term hell. If theologians could have been satisfied to retain that definition, there would have been no misunderstanding in regard to its use in the Old Testament, at least. There we find sheol rendered hell 31 times, grave 30 times, and pit 3 times. Hell and grave really express the same idea.

Concerning hades, Dr. Campbell states, "In my judgment, it ought never in Scripture to be rendered hell, at least in the sense wherein that word is universally understood by Christians. In the Old Testament the corresponding word is sheol, which signifies the state of the dead in general, without regard to the badness or goodness of the persons, their happiness or misery. . . . (It) signifies (that which is) obscure, hidden, invisible. To this the word hell in its primitive signification perfectly corresponded,"

Kitto defines hades, "Literally that which is in darkness."

Adam Clarke when referring to the primitive meaning of the term hell, wrote, "So the literal import of the word hades was formerly well expressed by it."

This is the hades or hell into which, Korah with their houses and goods went down quick; into which wicked men may dig; into which, of the mighty of the uncircumsized went with their weapons of war; into which, Christ's soul went; into which Jacob said he should go; which contained the rich man of the parable; which, shall by and by deliver up the dead which are in it; and which, finally, shall be cast into the lake of fire.

Thus much for one hell.

The second hell is gehenna. This is what learned theologians denominate "The proper hell." This is that hell "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." The multitudes confound this latter with the previous hell, because nothing in the common version of the Scriptures gives them the slightest intimation that there is more than one kind of a hell. The American Bible Union (Baptist) in their version of the New Testament have preserved the distinction between hades and gehenna. They render gehenna, hell—and hades, underworld. Yet they in common with others are misled in rendering gehenna by hell; this we will endeavor to prove. The grave, or underworld, or hell with its proper and primitive signification, rightly translate hades or sheol; but hell either with its primitive or modern definition do not rightly translate gehenna.

Gehenna occurs 12 times in the New Testament, and, in our version, is always rendered hell. The corresponding term in the Old Testament is Gai Hinnom, which occurs 13 times, and never rendered hell there, but —the valley of Hinnom. Gehenna is simply the Greek method of spelling the Hebrew Gai Hinnom. They are identical, even as sheol and hades are. While the latter are rendered hell in both Testaments, the former is rendered one way in the Old Testament, and in an altogether different way in the New, as already noticed. If the valley of Hinnom is a literal rendering of Gai Hinnom, then hell cannot be a proper rendering; or, if hell is the proper translation, then the valley of Hinnom is not, for the two translations are not identical, that is, the valley of Hinnom is not hell. No inspired evidence can be produced to show that Gai Hinnom had its meaning changed between the days of Jeremiah and of our Saviour, hence there is nothing in inspiration to prove that the valley of Hinnom (gehenna) and hell are one and the same.

Joshua is the first writer of the Old Testament who makes mention of it, and it occurs in his book four times, viz., Josh. xv. 8, xviii. 16. "And the border went up by (Gai Ben Hinnom), the valley of the Son of Hinnom unto the south side of the Jebusite; the same is Jerusalem: and the border went up to the top of the mountain that lieth before (Gai Hinnom) the valley of Hinnom westward, which is at the end of the valley of the giants northward." "And the border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the Son of Hinnom, and which is in the valley of the giants of the north, and descended to the valley of Hinnom."

Nehemiah mentions it once in Neh. xi. 30, "And they dwelt from Beersheba unto the valley of Hinnom."

It is mentioned twice in Chronicles: 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, and xxxiii. 6, "Moreover he (Ahaz) burnt incense in the valley of the Son of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen." "And he (Mannasseh) caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the Son of Hinnom."

In Kings we find it once: 2 Kings xxiii. 10, "And he (Josiaha) defiled Tophet, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Moloch."

It is mentioned by Jeremiah in his prophecy five times. One instance is in Jer. xxxii. 35, "And they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom."

We have quoted nine out of the thirteen instances where Gai Hinnom, or gehenna, occurs in the Old Testament, and no intimation is given in any of them that it is a place or a state of punishment for anybody. By substituting the New Testament translation in these instances, with the popular definition of the same, the result would be ludicrous in the extreme. And we may add that the New Testament translation is as far from the truth as it possibly can be.

From A. B. Van Doren.

BR. STORRS: I am about to make a request, and you will allow me to state that for forty years I have been called a "radical," both on the subject of slavery and temperance. During this time I have made it a rule never to vote for any man that would give or grant licenses; neither have I ever fitted up a saloon. [My business is "house and sign painting."] Thus showing to all, that I practiced what I preached. And so for my principle I have been condemned by a large portion of professed Christians, not excepting ministers." But I never allowed these things to move me from my purpose. Intemperance and war go hand in hand. What destruction of human life! Intemperance is a terrible destroyer of human life, and, in connection with war, of property also. And while war may terminate in peace, intemperace never tires, but rolls onward, generation after generation, in its work of death.

In views of these facts, how can a Christian be silent on so great an evil? Knowing the tendency to dissipation and drunkenness, every man, woman and child, ought to do all in their wower to reform the drunkard, and dry up the fountains of sorrow. Also to prevent the sober, and especially the younger from pulling into the snare of the fowler.

In view of what I have written, is it strange that I hailed with delight the article published in the HERALD sometime in September last, on the above subject? I took the article to the office of "National Prohibitionist" of our city, the editor agreeing to give it a place in the above named paper. But in moving their office, it was lost. Since I have tried to obtain a copy, but have not been able. This I trust will be all the apology that I need make for wishing you to republish the article in the HERALD; it will do good. I am much mistaken if Life believers are not practical temperance men; if not, then by all means keep it before them. Is it not a part of the gospel? Acts xxiv. 25, "And as he (Paul) reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and a judgment to come, Felix trembled."

Now, brother, I have done. I leave it with you. Should you think best not to publish it again, you will confer a great favor by sending a copy of the HERALD containing the article.

Yours, for righteousness, temperance, and eternal life through Jesus our LIFE-GIVER.

CHICAGO, ILLS., Dec. 1869.

Note by the Editor.

We have sent you the paper spoken of. If "Life believers" are not "temperance men," they ought to renounce the name, and call themselves, DEATH lovers.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

BR. STORRS: I have been thinking that perhaps some of the dear children are saying, What has become of the old one-armed preacher? We have not seen nor heard from him for a long time, and we fear he has quit preaching, or else he has fallen asleep, for we used to hear from him quite often through the HERALD OF LIFE. Therefore, we have concluded to report ourself once more, and let the household of faith know that our faith was never so firmly established and lively as at the present; and through the tender mercies of our covenant-keeping God, and the liberality of some of the dear brethren, we are once more out in the field; for it is already white unto harvest, and the laborers are few; and the Gentile times are fast closing. Soon the Master will come to give reward unto His servants, the prophets, etc., and destroy the corrupters of the earth; and we say, Amen: Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

We would say, in conclusion, that if the Lord will, we intend to labor in this Burgh and the vicinity through the coming winter, as it is entire new ground; and we crave your most fervent and devout prayers that our labor may not be in vain in the Lord; and in order to make it successful we want a full supply of the Campaign tracts; and if our scanty means would afford it, they would be coming forthwith. But our trust is in the Lord, therefore we need not fear. We will send you all the money we have got for a few of Dr. Finley's tract on the "Constitution of Man," hoping to be able to send more soon.

If any of the little flock in Missouri wish to hear what we have to say, they can address me at this place; and if it is in our power, we will fill the call. May the Lord help us, one and all, to do all we can to get the truth before the people.

MARTINSBURGH, MO., Nov., 1869.

From Lovina W. Bragg.

Beloaed in the Lord: In Jesus name salvation sweetly flows. And the blessed, yea, thrice blessed hope is still bouyant to my poor unworthy heart, and lifts my heart to things above; and I am still longing to see Jesus,—the great LIFE-GIVER to a mortal, dying race; and with all the family of faith, be made just like him, and equal to angels. to die no more. None guesses how wonderous our journey will prove. Here we are but despised, loney, wayworn, and outcast pilgrims. In this, the enemies' land, we are groaning with the groaning creation for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. We seem like anything but Princes while we journeying in weakness and sadness; and many think as fools and mad to still contend that this is the way that the Lord leads his little one. In the lonely valley of self-denial and salvation from sin, is no earthly grandeur, or pleasure feeking. The blessed honor which comes from God alone is what we seeek; whose price is more than all that earth can bestow. Let me be low enough to walk in the humble pathway the Master trod, and I'll he satisfied now, and at last rejoice with exceeding joy when Jesus comes to be glorified in his saints, and admired of all who believe in that day. Such a hope does purify the heart and overcome the world; and gives us an earnest of the world to come; the saint's eternal home. O, thank the good Lord forever and evermore, is the language of my unworthy heart. This hope bids me rejoice and sing; for my redemption is nigh. The sweet, heavenly testimony of the Spirit of God within, that our ways are pleasing to God, just here in this hard trying hour, is truly blessed beyond expression. No joys can equal the joy of the Lord. It is truly inexpressible and full of glory, and gives a longing desire for our eternal home, all glorified, and filled with it; where we shall have fulness of joy and pleasures forevermore.

Then I shall joyfully see what a blessing to me was the mortifying cross which I did bear. How true his promises, "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him." If we confess him before men He will also confess us before His Father and the holy angels. O, bless and praise the good Lord for the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of his dear Son; which grace teaches us to look for that bless hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour, Jesus Christ, Who will soon change this vile body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body. And the prospect! it is so transporting! Saviour hasten thy coming we pray. We sigh for the land thou hast promised; for the dawn of that bright endless day.

Do pray for me that my faith fail not; but that it may be greatly increased and strengthened to withstand the evil, deadly influence of these last days of peril.

CORINNA, ME., Dec. 1869.

From Jacob Shafer.

BR. STORRS: I am perfectly satisfied of the truth of the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead; that in mercy and love to them they are left there, as the best possible thing that could be done for them. Will you let me know Charles A. Hastings' address, as I would like to correspond with him. The ability with which you and he have shown the character of the Atonement, has, to my judgment, done credit to the truth, as the salvation of God's children, of all ages, hangs on the atoning love of Christ, the precious Lamb of God. Well may it be said, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son" thus to die. O, the love of God to a dying world, going out of life, to provide a life so much higher in its nature, which He gave to his Son in consequence of the voluntary suffering and death; who for the joy of this new life principle, and the glory that will follow, endured the cross, and by a glorious resurrection is now set down on the right hand of God, until the glorious restitution shall take place.

KEWANNA, IND., Nov., 1869.

CHARLES A. HASTINGS address is, Springfield, Mass.

S. S. CALL asks: Can we have added to the Campaign Documents, in a separate tract, "Christ the Life-giver; or the Faith of the Gospel?" I want a hundred of them."

Note by the Editor.

That Sermon is the "Seventh" in our pamphlet, familiarly known as "Storrs' Six Sermons." It can be printed separately; but we doubt the expediency of so doing; but we will think of it.

My Guide.

I know not the way I am going,
 But well do I know my Guide!
With a childlike trust do I give my hand
 To the mighty friend by my side;
And the only thing that I say to Him,
 As he takes it, is—"Hold it fast!
Suffer me not to lose the way,
 And lead me home at last."

As when some helpless wanderer,
 Alone in some unknown land,
Tells the guide his destined place of rest,
 And leaves all else in his hand;
'Tis home—'tis home that I wish to reach,
 He who guides me may choose the way,
And little I care what path I take,
 When nearer home each day.

Jesus Himself.

As time is marching on, civilization and a more refined taste are the foremost among its followers, and as the spirit of tolerance and liberality advances in its columns, hatred and prejudice must retire to the background where the masses seem to lie in deep sleep, not even dreaming of the distance they have been carried forward on the railroad of eternity as it speeds on. While, therefore, the intellectual class of humanity substantiates itself like cream on the top of milk, the rest remains as sour milk below untouched by the refining process. Thus the controversy between Jews and Christians has taken a different shape from what it had between the third century and the very recent date. It has become altogether different in principles as well as in forms and language, in argument and the mode of its application. The hatred and despiteful language of an Eisenmenger calculated to add fuel to the fire of persecution which already burnt in a blaze against the defenseless Jews has entirely disappeared from the controversial writings of Christian theologians—except here and there in some Roman Catholic papers, the sour milk of Christian society—argument, and nothing but argument from the Word of the living God, is the weapon with which the Christian meets the Jew. The most carefully studied language is employed in arguing with him so as not to hurt his feelings, and if, notwithstanding, he feels offended, it is not the language of his opponent, but, the principles to which, for reasons of his own, he sternly opposes.

Jewish polemics, on the other hand have, in latter days, abandoned that blasphemous language which could not but excite every Christian heart, and which, has, to a great degree, contributed to a continued hatred toward the scattered nation. The famous "Toldoth Yeshu" is no more considered as a true history of Jesus, as it records a great many more miracles done by Jesus—by the power of the Shem-Hemphorash—than those which are related in the New Testament, and modern Jews do not believe in miracles at all. They admit that the "Toldoth Yeshu"—a synopsis of the birth, acts and execution of Jesus—is the work of some one in the dark middle ages, one of the bitter fruits of the unheard-of persecutions and sufferings of the Jews by those who called themselves by the sacred name of Christians, the compulsory conversions of tens of thousands, who secretly abhorred the idolatrous religion which they were compelled to profess openly in order to save their lives.

The first and most remarkable change that has taken place in Jewish polemics is the fact that they do not keep themselves in the defensive position as in former times, but boldly take up the offensive. They do not attack Jesus himself but the Christianity which was, afterwards, taught and practiced in his name. They pay the highest respect to Jesus himself, admitting that he was inspired by the best intentions, not only to reform the corruptions among his own nation, but also to open the way to the knowledge of the One, Living and Eternal God to all nations then known, and who were prepared to receive the Divine Truth by the frequent contact in which they came with Jews residing among them.

Yost, the celebrated Jewish historian, says: "It was the destination of Jesus of Nazareth, who at the age of twelve years betokened his future greatness, to become the teacher of the people, and to obtain an adoration which no mortal being ever received. John the Baptist (Rabbi Yochanan) who was considered a prophet, called the people to repentance, and to be immersed according to the Jewish mode of ablution, as the token of their initiation into the renewed covenant with God. John was inspired with the idea that among the multitude that came to be baptized by him, he would find and recognize that man who received the calling from on high, to proclaim the kingdom of heaven and to teach the people with success. In Jesus when he appeared, he saw at once the chosen One, the Messiah, the Christos of whom he himself was but a forerunner. . . . Jesus proved the truth which he proclaimed and taught (not only by the miracles recorded of him by the evangelists) by his spotless life, his disinterested love toward mankind; his humility; and lastly by his mournful end, which he saw before that it would come upon him." (Yost's History of Judaism and its Sects, Vol. i. pp. 401 and 402.)

"The Jewish Times" of Oct. 1, in an article headed: "The Influence of the Jews on the progress of civilization," says, "When Polytheism had so enervated and degraded Greece and Rome, that their collapse as a natural consequence became inevitable, it was a Jew, a poor despised man of the people, in whom the moral truth of Judaism became a liquid fire. It was Jesus of Nazareth who, with sentences drawn from the great moral treasure box of the Jewish religion, swept away the military and aesthetic empires of Greece and Rome, and replaced their gross sensualism by an ideal of the living God of Truth."

But while the writer ascribes to Jesus himself the lofty character of one who gave his life for the enlightenment of the deeply sunken humanity, he handles Paul rather roughly; he continues to say: "The Jews who followed Jesus made a Messiah—Christ—a Redeemer of him, as tradition had always kept alive among the people the idea of a personal deliverer. But it was Hellenenized Paul, imbued with the polytheistic idea of his time, made, after pagan fashion, a God of him, and it was this abnormity probably, that conduced more than anything else to make Christianity acceptible to the heathens and barbarians in the first ten centuries of the Christian church."

More explicit is the language of another Rabbi who writes for the same paper. After giving a gloomy picture of the religious condition of the Jews in the days of Jesus which he concludes in the following words: "The Jews had become entombed in the easy, external and literal service of God," he says, "At this crisis Jesus made his appearance on the gloomy stage of Judea. His enthusiastic soul gave birth to a thought, which, to me at least, is the key of his whole career. He very rightly argued that it was every Israelite's duty to be exactly what the whole Jewish community ought to constitute; that as it was Israel's holy mission to be an example of true life, so also every Jew [ought to be in his own sphere of activity, an example of true life. 'Therefore,' said Jesus to himself, 'let me be the first to launch forth into this struggle. Let my whole life be an uninterrupted chain of love, of devotion to duty and action.' He called himself the Son of God; every individual was to consider himself a Son of God. A father educates his children. Every individual was to look upon the events of his life as this course of education, which goes to prove that earthly things have to subserve to Divine things enclosed in our breast. Jesus did not come to teach the law—others have done so before him—but he sought to enact the law, and whosoever enacts the law in all its respects will not long remain in doubt where to find the source of truth. . . . Jesus first proposed to found within Judaism a community that would incorporate his life into their own; that would find his life as their own, not only in external, meaningless imitation, but in ever renewing it in different characters. Theirs was the duty to listen to the law in their own heart, and not simply to cling to the letter. They should summon by their example the whole world to true life, as Jeremiah and all the prophets have in majestic strains promised."

These remarks would be sufficient to show the high opinion which modern Jewish writers entertain, and do not hesitate to publish it, of Jesus himself. Of course, they deny his Messiahship, for they deny that the prophets of old taught a personal Messiah in the sense of true Christian conception of it. They deny his divinity in the Christian sense, his return to the earth to occupy the throne of David, for they deny that the promises of a literal gathering and restoration of the commonwealth and kingdom of Israel have ever been given. But at the same time, they ascribe to Jesus the highest character that a man ever possessed, the light that shone to illuminate the world.

We subjoin another remark of the same writer which, we trust, every true Christian will admit to be correct. He says: "Can it, therefore, surprise us, that such a conception of life was hated by both Pharisees and Sadducees? At what time would they not have done so? Would the now living Christian Pharisees and Sadducees not raise the same cry ('away with him,' we suppose the writer means,) should a similar man be bold enough, instead of remaining quietly in some remote nook of the earth, hidden from their eyes, to consider it his duty to work as Jesus has done? If he would endeavor to cast them out of the temples which they desecrate with profanity; to hurl them from the throne of their assumed holiness, and show to the world piety and holiness in its true sublimity and grandeur as Jesus did, would he not be liable to the same persecution and suffering? Jesus died the death of a criminal and the adherents of his example, not the mere followers of his doctrine were outlawed." The Rabbi, then, asks: "And why are ye so loth to join the ranks of these true followers of Jesus' life? (Because) we have not, as yet, weeded out of our heart paganism, that is, indolence and sensuality. . . . No wonder, therefore, that the Jews became not all at once Christians in the true acceptation of the word. For Christians, in the right meaning of the expression, means disciples who will act on all occasions as Jesus himself. Now, how many Christians in this sense are to be found today even within the pale of the Christian church? To bear merely the name, to confess the truth of Christianity as first taught by Jesus, this the then living Jews did just as ardently as the present Christians. Immediately after the death of Jesus, there was no controversy concerning the doctrine between the Jews and the disciples of Jesus."

Such are the sentiments of modern Jews of Jesus himself, and our Christian readers will admit that they are of no small importance. Not to see in Jesus the imposter, the seducer of Israel, the justly condemned blasphemer, as which he was looked upon by the Jewish people, perhaps from the third century till very recently, is a vast step forward. If the Christians would weed out paganism which they have brought over from corrupted popery, and would truly follow in the footsteps of Jesus—that is, be the doers and not only the hearers of his word—who can doubt that the Jews would make another step forward, and finally unite themselves with hand and heart to the disciples of Jesus?—Nathaniel; or, The Israelite Indeed.

The Kingdom.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

We now invite the reader's attention to the new heavens and new earth state. Rev. xxi. 12, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth passed away: and the sea no longer is. And I saw the holy city New Jerusalem coming down out of heaven from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Verse 9 reads, "And there came one of the seven angels who had with them seven bowls full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me the holy city Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God.

What did the angel tell him he would show him? The bride, the Lamb's wife. What did he show him? The holy city Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God. In the third verse this holy city is called the "tabernacle of God," The Bible Dictionary defines "tabernacle" to be a "tent, booth, pavilion or temporary (more properly, movable) dwelling." In Rev. xxi. 3, it is doubtless used with reference to the tabernace built by Moses in the wilderness, especially the western division, in which dwelt the holy presence. This apartment was a perfect cube. This tabernacle, according to Paul, was constructed after the pattern of things in the heavens, and was a type of future things. On a certain occasion, John the Baptist was baptizing in Jordan; and seeing Jesus coming he cries out to those with him, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Why did he do this? All know that it was done for the purpose of pointing out Jesus as the antipical Lamb. Well, then, when the voice out of the throne uses the same form of expression to John, on the appearance to him of the holy city, saying, "Behold the tabernacle of God," etc., is it not for the same purpose, i. e., to point out to John, and through him to those to whom the Revelation was written, the holy city as the antitipical tabernacle? Most certainly it is. John says this city was descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God; and verse 23d says the "glory of God did lighten it," (as the Shekinah did the holy of holies,) "and the Lamb is the light thereof," consequently the Lamb is the antitipical Shekinah.

This seems to me to leave no room for doubt as to what is intended to be understood by the holy city, New Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God; it is Christ, surrounded by the glorified church: he having "seven horns and seven eyes which are the seven spirits of God," or "the whole fulness of God;" consequently the holy city is, in truth, the "tabernacle of God."

The identity of the church as the bride, the Lamb's wife, is established by the following passage: "For we are members of his body; of his flesh and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and his mother and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church."—Eph. v. 30–32. The symbolic number of this church is 144,000—the square of twelve. The sealing of these, we are told, in chapter vii., was the work of an angel that came from the sunrising, having the seal of the living God. Angel (properly, messenger) may symbolize any agency employed to accomplish a definite work, as in Rev. ix. 14, where nations are meant; and in Rev. xiv. 6, where it symbolizes the promulgation of a message. The angel with the seal came from the sunrising. In Mal. iv. 2, Christ is called "the sun of righteousness that shall arise with healing in his wings." This sun arose at Jerusalem over eighteen hundred years ago, at which time and from which place a message went forth. See Mark xvi. 14–18; Luke xxiv. 47, 49. This message (the gospel) issued forth, or began to be proclaimed at Jerusalem about fifty days after the rising of the Sun of righteousness; and soon it began to be preached in other localities. John saw the work of preaching the gospel, as an angel ascending from the sunrising with the seal of the living God. If this be the correct interpretation we must find something connected with this message answering to the seal of the living God. Let us see if Paul can help us in this matter.

"In whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also after that ye believed (the message) ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise; which is the earnest (foretaste) of our inheritance until the redemption," i. e., until the sealing work in finished. Eph, i. 13, 14. "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."—Eph. iv. 30. This ought to settle the question of the identy of the seal. It is the Holy Spirit of God with which men are sealed, on their believing the gospel; but this was not the complete work of this seal; this was only the commencement of the process. The sealing will not be complete until the Holy Spirit, which accompanied the message and which the believer received, has clothed them with immortality; symbolized by writing upon them the name of him who only hath immortality. John saw this message as it went forth accompanied by the Holy Spirit: he also saw the result on completion, viz., the 144,000 standing on Mount Zion with the Lamb. If this is the correct interpretation (and I am very sure that it is) there can be no mistaking who the 144,000 are, for they could only be those who believed the message—and were sealed with the Holy Spirit of God; i. e., "redeemed from the earth." Their earthly bodies being clothed upon with immortality—the image of the heavenly; ("it is the Spirit that giveth life"), consequently the time allotted to the sealing angel to complete his work is the entire period from the issuing forth of the message to the gathering in of the first fruits; probably the commencement of the time of the end; at which time another message goes forth, described in chapter xiv. as another angel flying in the mid heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to those that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and tribe and tongue and people, saying with a loud voice, (so that all may hear), "Fear God and give glory to him, because the hour of his judgment has come." This message is not described as having any definite starting point, as did the first; neither was it accompanied by the seal of the living God. The most prominent feature in this messsage is the proclamation of the hour of his judgment at hand; and that it is not a false message is evident, for it is immediately followed by another, proclaiming the fall of Babylon, the commencement of the judgment.

The work of the first message was the sealing the 144,000 with the seal of the living God. That of the second is the preaching the everlasting gospel with a loud voice to every nation, tongue, people; warning them that the hour of judgment is come. Let us see the result of this proclamation.

"After these things (the sealing of 144,000) I saw, and a great multitude which no man could number, out of every nation and tribe and people and tongues, (the parties to whom the second message was sent), standing in the presence of the throne and in the presence of the Lamb, clothed with white robes," etc. How came they with white robes? "And he said to me, These are those who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they in the presence of the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple."—Rev. vii. 9–15.

I know of but one way that a man can wash his robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb, and that is by believing and obeying the "gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Consequently when this "everlasting gospel," proclaiming "the hour of judgment is come," "worship God and give glory to him," is preached to all nations, kindred, tongues and people, those who believe and obey, constitute the "great multitude which no man can number. They are the harvest mentioned in chapter xiv. 14–16. Let me ask, Has this everlasting gospel and proclamation of the hour of judgment at hand been preached "to every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people," with a loud voice, so that all can hear it, and have the opportunity to believe and obey? If not, then those who are looking for the glorious appearing of Christ at any hour will certainly be disappointed; for when he thus comes, he comes in "flaming fire yielding (margin) vengeance on those who know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." These he will punish with everlasting destruction. 2 Thess. i. 8–10. As he has said "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all his messengers with him, then will he sit on his throne of glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations."—Matt. xxv. 31, 32. He thus proceeds to make the great separation in two parties, one party, called the righteous, he places on his right hand, and says to them, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom (dominion) prepared for you from the foundation of the world." The other party he sets on his left hand, and says to them, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his messengers." "These," he says, "shall go away into everlasting punishment," which Paul calls "everlasting destruction." Why are they destroyed? Because they know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord. What is meant by "knowing God?" "He that loveth, knoweth God, and is begotten of God; he that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love."—John iv. 7, 8. What cause men to love? "We love because he first loved us." Will not the Judge of all the earth do right? And is it in harmony with his revealed character and former examples to punish men for not knowing God, i. e., loving him, and obeying the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, until they have become acquainted with the fact that God first loved them, and have heard the gospel preached that they may obey it? I think not. But this second message carries to them the news of love and affords them the opportunity of obeying or rejecting the gospel.

"Great Men are not Always Wise,"

Was it so?—"The Christian Era" says:

"Prof. Agassiz, in the opening course of his lectures at Harvard, is reported as saying, 'I do not wish any one to come to my lectures who believes the book of Genesis, as given in the Bible.'"

If such be the spirit and letter of his teachings, the students in his departments had far better go untaught. Prof. Dana and his school at Yale will use no such language concerning God's word, nor will Prof. Rice in his lectures. Well does the "Era" add:

"Prof. Agassiz is a great man in the world of letters, but greater men than he have failed to outlive the Bible, or prove it untrue."

The above item we clip from "Zion's Herald," as showing how men of note are becoming more and more outspoken in their skeptical views. To our knowledge the Professor was apprised of this report concerning his lecture, when he replied: "If I have not yet earned the right, by my publications, to let alone newspaper reports concerning my views, I would not give a farthing for American culture," thus tacitly admitting its correctness. Some may reject Genesis in clinging to geology, but with the Psamlist we can look heavward and say: "The beginning of thy word is true."—Psa. cxix. 160, margin.—Advent Herald.

Great Virtues.—Do not be troubled because you have no great virtues. God made a million spires of grass where he made one tree. The earth is fringed and carpeted, not with forests, but grass. Only have enough of little virtues and common fidelities, and you need not mourn because you are neither a saint nor a hero.

We should think less of what we are in the view of others, than of what we are in the view of God.

A Curious Story.

Dr. Beetle says he has something in hand. The Doctor is a stout, ruddy-faced man, with sharp eyes, that easily spy out many things that other folks cannot see. He loves to go into the woods, and over the hills, and along the brooks, to study the habits of birds, beasts, fishes and insects, He can tell many curious and wonderful stories about them. He has friends in different parts of the world who write to him when they find any strange facts which they think would please him. Here is some one in Culpepper County, Virginia, who writes to the Doctor about

A COMICAL OLD FROG.

"Dear Dr. Beetle: There is a queer old frog which has lived for many years about our house, and has become remarkably tame. It had frequented our door-steps before our hall some years before my acquaintance commenced with it. My father had admired it for years on account of its size and color, and he visited it every evening, when it would come forth at his summons, and by constant feeding he brought it to be so tame it would come to the candle, and look us as if expecting to be taken up and brought to the table and fed on insects of all sorts. On presenting living insects, it fixes its eyes intently and remains motionless for a while, as if preparing for a strike, which is an instantaneous throwing of its tongue to a great distance, upon which the insect sticks fast to the tip by a glutinous matter. I can't say how long my father had been acquainted with it; from my earliest recollection he spoke of it as 'Old Tom,' the 'Old Frog.' I have known it for a great number of years—I can answer for fifty-seven years. It makes its appearance (always a welcome visitor) with warm weather, and remains till fall, appearing morning and evening, to our great amusement, having been trained to many things, such as leaping, turning somersaults, holding alternately by its feet and hands to a small rope, swinging and whirling, after the manner of a slack-rope performer, marching erect on its hind legs, and at the word of command going through the manual exercise. It seemed perfectly good natured, and never shows temper, but is very fraid of a cat, on whose approach it will often leap four feet from the floor, with the utmost precision, plump into the mouth of a large stone water-pitcher, and thus secure a safe retreat. Yet he is in no wise alarmed or disturbed by the presence of dogs, of which we have many about the premises. They seem to regard him as one of the household and a 'privileged character.' An old judge living in the neighborhood gives it as his opinion that this frog is at least one hundred years old.

Yours, etc.

Jehiel Jinks."

Dr. Beetle says he does not know whether the "judge" his friend Jinks tells about is a judge in court, or only a judge of frogs. Perhaps ho is both.

"A Brave Boy."

As two boys were on their way home from school, one day, in passing a corn-field where were some plum trees full of fine, ripe fruit, Henry said to Thomas:

"Let us jump over and get some plums. Nobody will see us, and we can scud along through the tall corn, and come out safe on the other side."

"I cannot do it," said Thomas, "it is very wrong. I do not want plums if I have to steal them."

"You are a coward," said Henry, "I always knew you were a coward; and if you don't want any plums, you may go without them; but I shall have some very quick."

Just as Henry was climbing the fence, the owner of the field rose up from the other side of the wall. On seeing him, Henry jumped backed, and ran off as fast as his legs could carry him. Thomas, who had no reason to be afraid, stood still. The owner, having heard the conversation, told Thomas to step over and get as many plums as he wished. The boy accepted the invitation, and very soon filled his pockets with the ripe fruit.

Now, I don't think it will take very long to tell which of these boys was the real coward. Thomas was a noble boy. And even if Henry had succeeded in stealing the friut, and Thomas had gone home without any, Thomas would have been the happier boy of the two. If the owner of the orchard had not seen and heard, some One else would.—Sel.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death. 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

A VISIT TO BETHLEHEM.

FEW persons, I suppose, who visit Jerusalem, allow many days to elapse before they betake themselves to Bethlehem, if they have not already visited it on their way thither. It was in February last that the writer of this enjoyed that pleasure. The day was exceedingly fine, a genial spring day intervening between some days of rain; the air fresh and balmy, and the sky without a cloud. Emerging from the Damascus Gate, we scrambled up the rough path which conducts to the western side of the city; (for the roads round the walls of Jerusalem are about as rugged and dangerous as the worst roads in the country). This course was to avoid riding through the city, as our starting place was near the north-east end of it. But for this the Jaffa Gate would have been preferred, as it opens directly on the road to Bethlehem, and, indeed, is called by the natives Bab-el-Khulil, Hebron Gate, from its being the point first reached by those coming from Hebron and Bethlehem. But it is a serious matter to ride through the streets of Jerusalem, paved as they are with large shapeless blocks of slippery limestone, and in many places narrow and steep; so this is avoided by all as much as may be. From the Jaffa Gate our road struck down into the valley by the Lower Pool of Gihon, and then, ascending through cultivated fields and olive yards, it passed the row of cottages erected by Sir Moses Montefiore, as almshouses for the Jews. These are remarkably neat and clean-looking, and present a wonderful contrast to the abode of the Jews in the city; for though no part of Jerusalem is very clean, the Jews' quarter enjoys a bad pre-eminence for squalor and filthiness. Passing the hill of Evil Counsel on the left, and the plain of Rephaim, where David conquered the Philistines, on the right, we soon got on to a fine springy turf, over which our horses went merrily. In a little while we were passing the convent of Mar Elias; its heavy grey walls seeming to frown on us as it looked out from amidst the sombre olive groves by which it is surrounded. We paused for a few minutes at the curious well, surrounded by large rough stones in the very centre of the road, where, according to tradition, the Magi, who came from the East to salute the new-born king, when, wandering in uncertainty after being dismissed by Herod, saw the reflection of their guiding star in the water. Some Russian pilgrims were kneeling at the well offering their devotions when we came up. Leaving the well, we descended a somewhat steep acclivity, and found ourselves beside the Kubbet Rahil, Rachel's tomb. A coarsely-built and unsightly Moslem wely covers the site; but there is no reason to doubt that this is the spot where Jacob committed to the dust the remains of his beloved wife. There is an opening in one side of the building through which we tried to peer, but we could distinguish nothing. This tomb is distant only about a mile from Bethlehem; and thus the locality answers well to the historian's statement that it was where there was but a little way to come to Eprath that Rachel died, and that she was buried on the way to Eprath, which is Bethlehem.

Few towns in Palestine present so fine an appearance as Bethlehem, whether approached on the Jerusalem side or on the side next Hebron. The town stands on the crest of a hill, which, steep and rugged on the western side, slopes gently downwards on the eastern. All around, the evidences of diligent culture are apparent; a feature, it may be remarked in passing, which generally characterizes the Christian as distinct from the Moslem villages of Palestine, and which is due not merely to the more industrious habits which Christianity tends to foster, but also to the fact that the Christians are better protected from Turkish rapacity than the Moslems, in consequence of the interest taken in them by the European powers. On the more rocky parts of the hill on which the town stands, terraces have been formed so as to secure level spaces for the raising of grain and vegetables; and from this, one is enabled to understand how the now bleak and utterly barren hills of Judea may in the former time have been made productive. Fruit trees, such as the olive, the vine, and the fig, are extensively cultivated around Bethlehem. The town still retains its right to the name it bears, as well as that which it more anciently bore; it is still Bethlehem, The House of Bread, still Ephrath, The Fruitful.

There is little to be said, however, of the town itself; like all Palestinian towns, it is mean and dirty, the streets narrow and crooked, and the houses more or less ruinous. The aspect of the people is more pleasing, though we looked in vain for the beauty which it is the fashion of travellers to ascribe to the Bethlehemite women. Their unveiled faces are certainly more agreeable objects than the closely-masked countenances of the Jerusalem women, and there is an openness of expression and a brightness of eye belonging to them which render them pleasant to look upon; but, so far as we had any opportunity of observing, only a romantic courtesy could describe them as beautiful. They owe something also to their dress, which is more picturesque than any I saw elsewhere in Palestine. A closely-fitting robe of blue cotton with a scarlet silk vest, a sort of basket-shaped bonnet covered with a white veil thrown back and hanging down over the shoulders, bracelets and anklets of silver or copper, and a frame of coins fastened together encircling their foreheads and cheeks, formed the most striking parts of their costume. The effect is on the whole good.

The main object of interest in Bethlehem is the Church of the Nativity. This, with its attendant monastic edifices, occupies a site at the south-eastern extremity of the town. Its general aspect is not ecclesiastical; it looks rather like a huge baronial castle of the middle ages. On reaching it, we were ushered into a small parlor hung round with some poor engravings and a portrait or two. A monk presently made his appearance, who received us with much courtesy, and ordered refreshments to be brought for us. These consisted of coffee and a sort of sweet cake, with some kind of liqueur. Having partaken of these, we were shown over the building. There is not much to attract notice in the different churches which are here clustered together; in the Greek church are some curious pictures recently presented by the Emperor of Russia; but for the most part the decorations are tawdry and poor. The nave of the building, which is common to the different communions, is almost in a state of ruin, and seems to be used chiefly as a place of merchandize, which is spread out on the floor,and which visitors are grievously pestered to buy. The interest of the building lies in the underground grotto. Here are shown the cell which was occupied by St. Jerome, and where many of his valuable works were composed; it is adorned with a portrait of the venerable father, who is represented as writing with a lion crouching at his feet. Close by is his tomb, surmounted by another portrait; also the tombs of Paula and her daughter Eustochium, with a rude painting of the two above it. Remembering the inestimable services which Jerome rendered to the cause of sacred literature, and forgetting the errors, both of temper and of judgment, which have somewhat detracted from his reputation, we lingered with much interest in the spot where his latest hours were spent, and his latest labors carried on. From this we hastened on to the chapel of the Nativity. This is a low and small apartment, apparently hewn out of the rock, and terminating in a semi-circular apse, in the centre of which is a silver star fixed in a marble slab on the floor, and bearing the inscription, "Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est" ("Here of the Virgin Mary was born Jesus Christ"). The entire floor is of marble incrusted with jasper and porphyry. In the same place is a marble trough, which is shown as the manger in which the Saviour was laid by his mother. It is not easy to describe the feeling with which one finds oneself in such a place. It is not possible to feel quite sure that this is the actual scene of that transcendent event, and one is disturbed by the attempt to throw a meretricious splendor over a scene which, if genuine, needs no help of human art to make it impressive, even if that art were of the highest and purest kind, instead of being, for the most part, poor and in questionable taste. Yet when one remembers that there can be no reasonable doubt that the khan, in the stable of which our Lord was born, stood on the site now occupied by the Church of the Nativity, that it was somewhere within these precincts that the birth took place, and that there is no valid reason why it might not have been in this grotto, it becomes impossible not to feel a solemn awe, mingled with a strange gladness, stealing over the soul and overpowering every other emotion, as one stands within it. We had been discussing before starting, and by the way, the probabilities of this being the scene of the Nativity. But as we stood there, all inclination for discussion vanished, skepticism seemed to become impertinent, and silent thought and prayer were felt to be alone befitting the scene. None of us were inclined to speak, and even the one of the party who was the most disposed to treat with contempt what he called the fabrications of the monks, I saw prostrate himself in prayer before the supposed manger, an example, I confess, I did not feel myself at liberty to follow.

After this we had little disposition to look at the other shows the monks had to exhibit. We allowed ourselves, however, to be conducted through the whole; and then, after making a few purchases of scallop-shells, crosses, etc., of mother-pearl, which seems the principal manufacture of Bethlehem, and of which there was abundance exposed for sale at the church, we emerged into the open air. Here it was pleasant to stand and gaze around. Without troubling oneself to identify localities with minute accuracy, it was enough to feel sure that one was looking on the spots with which so much of never-to-be-forgotten history stands connected. These were the fields which Boaz cultivated, and where the fair Moabitess, who afterwards became his wife, gleaned. Yonder, David tended his father's flocks, and as they rested at noon-day, tried his youthful skill with pipe or harp, making the rocks ring with his jubilant strains. Over these plains had floated the music of a loftier melody, when the sons of God who had sung together as earth rose into being, broke in on the silence of the night with their triumphant chant, announcing the advent of Him who had come to lay the foundations of a new creation, and to bring in a state of things so glorious and so beautiful that the former should not be remembered or come into mind. And here the Virgin Mother had wandered forth with the Divine Babe, that He might breathe the air of that world He had come to redeem. Surely, if there is any place on earth that may be called holy ground, it is here.

We returned to Jerusalem in the afternoon, having in the meantime visited Solomon's Pools, which we reached by riding alongside the aqueduct that once conveyed their waters to Jerusalem. We struck into the road we had travelled in the morning, near to Rachel's tomb. Here my companions left me; they were young men, and wanted a canter homewards. I felt otherwise inclined, though, had I chosen, my smart Arab mare would, I suspect, very soon have shown them her heels. But I was inclined for quiet, and so I jogged easily onward, "chewing the cud," not "of bitter fancies," but of what I felt to be pleasant and profitable thought. To me, that day, Bethlehem was the "House of Bread" in a higher sense than that which its name imports.—W. LINDSAY-ALEXANDER.—Sunday Magazine.

HELL—GEHENNA.

BY F. H. BURBANK.

[Concluded.]

IN the nine instances already quoted in the Old Testament where Gai Hinnom occurs, we have learned its location, and the purposes for which it was issued by the Heathen and wicked Jews.

Kitto says concerning this valley, "Hinnom, or rather Ben Hinnom, as unknown persons whose name was given to the valley that bounds Jerusalem on the South, below Mount Zion, and which in Scripture is often mentioned in connection with the horrid rites of Moloch, which under idoatrous kings were then celebrated. When Josiah overthrew this idolatry, he defiled the valley by casting into it the bones of the dead, the greatest of all pollutions among the Hebrews; and from that time it became the common jakes of Jerusalem, into which all the refuse of the city was cast, and where the combustible portions were consumed by fire."

In reference to this valley Prof. Stuart remarks, "The pious king, Josiah, caused it to be polluted i. e., he caused to be carried there the filth of the city of Jerusalem. . . Perpetual fires were kept up in order to consume the offal which was deposited there, and as the same offal would breed worms, (for so all putrifying meat of course does,) hence came the expression, 'Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.'"

The remaining instances are in Jeremiah, vii., 31, 32. And they have built the high places of Tophet which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to bury their sons and daughters in the fire. . . Therefore behold the days come, saith the Lord, for it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place;" and in Jer. xix., "Thus saith the Lord: Go and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people and the ancients of the priests, and go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee; and say, Hear ye the word of the Lord, O kings of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem; thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle. Because they have forsaken me, and estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents; they have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal. . . Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter. And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place, and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives; and their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of heaven and for the beasts of the earth. And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing: every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of the plagues thereof. And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and straightness wherewith, their enemies and they that seek their lives, shall straighten them. Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee, and shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Even so will I break this people and this city, as one that breaketh a potter's vessel that cannot be made whole again; and they shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place to bury. Thus will I do unto this place, saith the Lord, and the inhabitants thereof, and even make this place as Tophet: and the houses of Jerusalem and the houses of the kings of Judah shall be defiled as the places of Tophet," etc.

These instances, together with 2 Kings xxiii., 10, give us the key to the use of the word in the New Testament. Gehenna's defilement is set forth as a symbol of a terrific judgment that is to be visited upon Judah and Jerusalem on acoount of their sins. Not the slightest indication of its being a place, or of its being taken as a symbol of eternal torment, or the eternal destruction of the wicked, either of Jews or Gentiles. It has reference alone to a national judgment,

In looking at the passages where Gehenna occurs in the New Testament the following, among other significant facts occur:

1. It is used by none but Jesus and James.
2. It is spoken of to Jews only.
3. In ten instances out of the twelve where it occurs in the New Testament, it is spoken to Jewish believers.
4. In the remaining two instances, it is spoken to Jewish unbelievers.
5. Luke, in his gospel mentions it once; James who wrote to the twelve tribes, mentions it once; it is recorded in Mark three times, and in Matthew seven times. The instances in Mark and Luke are but repetitions of those in Matthew.
6. It is not mentioned at all by John in his gospel, his three epistles, or his Revelation, all of which were written after the desolation of Jerusalem.
7. Luke does not mention it once in the book of Acts, where we have an account of the labors of the Apostles amongst the Gentiles for thirty years. If Gehenna is the place of future punishment for all the wicked who have ever lived, the Apostles ignored the fact altogether, and consequently they must have kept the Gentiles in the dark upon that point. But the Apostles declared the whole truth, and as they did not declare that to the Gentiles, then it must be that it was a matter of no moment to them. They left Gehenna to the Jews and the Jews to Gehenna.
8. Paul, Peter, and Jude whose writings form two thirds of the New Testament do not mention it.

With all these incontrovertible facts before us, combined with the fact, that in the Old Testament when the term has any reference to punishment, it is a symbol of a national punishment or judgment of Judah, and of no others, we are compelled to believe that the theologian's translation of Gehenna, namely, Hell, is a very improper one, and especially so when we take this definition of this their "proper hell" into the account. Gehenna is the symbol of defilement, desolation, destruction, etc.

The first passage to be noticed, where it occurs in the New Testament, is in Matt., xxii., 15. "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child of hell (Gehenna,) than yourselves." Literally translated, the latter sentence would read, "ye make him two-fold more the child of the valley of Hinnom than yourselves." How readily the meaning of our Saviour can there be understood. As Gehenna was a place of defilement and an abomination, as well as a symbol of a fearful judgment, so these proselytes were "two-fold more" the children of Gehenna, because they were so wicked.

The next passage is the most interesting one of all. It occurs in Matt., xxiii., 33, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell (Gehenna.) This passage, together with the preceding one just noticed, are the only ones in the New Testament where Gehenna occurs with reference to unconverted Jews. Revivalists often select this verse for a text wherefrom they may teach the doctrine of eternal misery. Often the hair upon the heads of their hearers has been made to stand on end while they have listened to "the damnation of hell." But "the damnation of hell" is not what these revivalists and theologians and Christians generally have supposed. In the first place, Protestants are decidedly opposed to the use of Latin in our churches, therefore they need to substitute another word for damnation, which is a Latin and not an English term; its meaning is condemnation. The original term is Kriseos, which means judgment. We need also to give the proper rendering where the term hell occurs—namely, the valley of Hinnom. The text thus properly translated, would then read,—

Six hundred years before the Saviour uttered these words, Jeremiah had foretold this judgment. It had not been visited upon the Jews at the time of our Saviour, but the event then was impending. In the verse preceding our text, Christ told them to "fill up the measure of your fathers." After repeating our text, Christ continued,—"Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes, and some of them ye shall kill and crucify, and some of them ye shall scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city, that upon YOU may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth. . . Verily, I say unto you, all these things shall come upon THIS GENERATION. . . Behold, your house is left unto you, DESOLATE." Jesus refers to the same event in Luke, xxi. 12–24. . . And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them (disciples) which are in Judea flee into the mountains. . . For these be the days of vengeance, that all things written may be fulfilled. But wo unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days, for there shall be great distress in the land and wrath upon the people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles," etc. . . "Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish," were to come upon "the Jews first."

The Jews filled the measure of their fathers rapidly. They scourged many Christians; they stoned some; they killed and crucified others; they persecuted them from city to city; they imprisoned them, and they crucified the Lord of Glory. How could such vipers escape "the judgment of the valley of Hinnom." The judgment according to Christ's words, was to come upon that generation. In forty years from the utterance of the prophecy, the judgment came.

The following condensed account of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem, will show how literally the words of our Saviour and Jeremiah were fulfilled.

The city was besieged by Titus. The Roman armies surrounded it completely. A trench was literally cast about the city, and in three days the Romans built a wall nine miles in length, together with thirteen towers in which soldiers were placed as in garrisons. This wall environed Jerusalem. Thus the Jews were so inclosed on every side that none could escape from the city.

Within the city, the fury of the opposite factions filled all places, and even the temple itself, with continued slaughters. In their fury they burned the granaries of corn. Famine soon began to rage. Children snatched the half-baked morsels which their fathers were eating, out of their mouths, and mothers even snatched the food out of their children's mouths. Whole housholds were destroyed by the famine. Men, women, and children were starving to death in every direction. The living seized and ate the meanest animals, and even ate the flesh of human beings. Finally the Romans entered the city, and horrors were piled upon horrors. They massacred the people and burned houses that were filled with wretched Jews, and the streets ran with blood so that even fires were extinguished by it. The temple was burnt and thousands perished in it. Six hundred thousand Jews lay around the city, unburied, the victims of famine, fire, and sword, 500,000 others had been buried. Thousands of the living were carried away into captivity. From that hour to this, Jerusalem has been trodden under the foot of the Gentiles.

It was in connection with the mention of this judgment that our Saviour said, "The queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with the men of THIS generation, and shall condemn it. . . The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with THIS generation, and shall condemn it." Luke, xi. 29–51. Jesus declared that "All these things shall come upon THIS generation." They were not to escape "the judgment of the valley of Hinnom." Wrath came upon them to the uttermost. Those were the days of vengeance. All things written were then fulfilled. It came to pass that from that time, men looked upon the carcasses of the men who transgressed against the Lord, where their worm should not die, and where their fire should not be quenched, and they were an abhorring to all flesh.

The queen of the south and the men of Nineveh condemned that generation, even as Moses accused the same unto the Father—"There is one that accuseth you, even Moses in whom ye trust." John, v. 45.

That God will bring up all these Jews once more to suffer another day of tribulation and anguish, I do not believe. They have had all vengeance threatened, fulfilled.

The remaining passages are easily explained. They occur in Matt. v. 29–30.—xviii. 9. Mark, ix. 43, 45, 47. Matth. v. 22–28. Luke xii. 4, 5, and James iii. 6.

In the first six verses here referred to, Jesus is telling the disciples that it were profitable that one of their members should perish, and not that they should perish altogether in the valley of Hinnom. Everything causing offence must perish, therefore if one of their members cause offence, they had better be deprived of it than to perish wholly.

In the next reference, Matt. v. 22, it is declared that whosoever called his brother a "fool," should be in danger of the valley of Hinnom fire. They were in danger from the impending judgment.

In Matt. x. 28, and Luke, xii. 4, 5, the cases are just the same. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body, in the valley of Hinnom." "Fear HIM whom after HE hath KILLED, hath power to cast into the valley of Hinnom." These nine instances are addressed to Jewish Christians by way of warning. Men might kill them, but they could not cause them to perish: God alone could do that. Jesus had declared, whosoever will save his life (soul) shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul, etc. . . They might be put to death for Jesus' sake. Some might be tempted to forsake Christ in order to save their souls, but they would be exposed to the judgment that was near, and then lose their life forever; therefore it was better to lose an eye, a foot, a hand, and to hate or lose our own life also, on account of our faith in Christ, than to be lost eternally.

The last instance, James iii. 6, says, "The tongue is a fire. . . it is set on fire of the valley of Hinnom." It is a self-evident truth.

The foregoing is respectfully submitted.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

BY ELD J. PARRY.

Modern Christianity is a very easy affair; no cross except on the steeple, no mortification of the flesh or spirit—no self-denial—no loss of popularity and the praise of man. Religion goes now in silver slippers, sits in gorgeous palaces, called churches, has its delicate ears tickled with delicious music and oratory. Enjoys its gala day of feasts, festivals and picnics. Rules the fashion of the hour and repudiates all sack-cloth and ashes. Sits as a queen, and knows no sorrow. Glides softly and sweetly down the broad way that now leads to heaven! Even death, instead of the king of terrors, is metamorphosed into a messenger of peace and joy, the gate of Paradise instead of the grave! This is religion made easy, the cross exchanged for the crown: a suspension bridge over the dark abyss of olden times. The Millennium is come with a witness, peace on earth, good will in the popular churches!

The offence of the cross ceases, the rugged narrow way made wide and smooth—the pilgrim lays aside his staff and heavy burden and rides at his ease in the rail-road car to glory!

Pity to disturb such a beautiful dream, but is it true, or are men deceiving themselves with a false hope that may end in disappointment? What if all this boasting should turn out to be a fulfilment of what Paul says of the latter day, 2 Tim. iii. 1–5, "In the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, dispisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the powers thereof."

One of these descriptions is true of the church in our day, they cannot both be true. One is the popular creed, the other is the apostle's creed. Which do we subscribe to? This is a matter of some moment to every professsor of religion. Where do I stand? The religion of Christ does not change; what it was in former times so it is now, a war-fare, a rough and stormy path. The truth has never been popular; strait is the gate and narrow the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be who find it. Those who will embrace the truth will yet find opposition in the world and in the popular churches. We cannot serve God and mammon, The apostles gave up all they had for Christ; those who profess to be their successors are far from following their example.

From these two stand points how different do the same things appear! One is all sunshine, the other palpable darkness. One is the flattering hope of prosperity and peace, the other anticipation of coming woe. One is as man sees the outside show and glitter, the other as God sees the deep recesses of the heart.

One is full increasing in goods and in need of nothing, the other is poor, miserable, blind and naked. If we are ashamed of Christ, his word or doctrine, he will be ashamed of us in our time of need. Who are ashamed of Christ, now? Do not all call him Lord? But do they do the things that he says? Many in our churches have light on God's word, but they hide it because it is not popular. Is not this being ashamed of Christ? The fear of man is stronger than the fear of God. Let these time servers openly avow their love of the truth, and they will soon see trouble in the church. Let them boldly advocate "Life only in Christ," and the anathema of all the sects will thunder in their ears; in this they will be all agreed, however else they may differ. We speak of what we know, and testify of what we have seen and felt to our cost. It is no fool's play to beard the popular lion in his den. Dr. Cummings may find it so at Rome, and the younger brood of the same stock at home manifest the same proclivities. The leopard still retains his spots and the Ethiopian his skin. There is nothing new under the sun. Human nature changes not for time or clime in this age of the world.

THE COMMUNION OF SAINTS.

BY CLAMOR FRANKE.

"They that feared the Lord spake often one to another."—Malachi iii. 16.

IT is but the spontaneous outflow of love, which the Holy Spirit begets in the heart of every lover of Jesus, that they who are one with Him "often speak one to another," to rehearse to each other the wondrous story of God's redeeming love; a story that will never, through the remotest ages of eternity, lose its freshness and power. And then, too, to speak words of comfort, encouragement and hope to each other, that we may not faint and tire by the way, but with eyes ever gazing steadfastly toward the hills, whence our help cometh, continue faithful in well-doing, being well assured that in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

O how my heart swells with emotions of gratitude to our gracious covenant God, that though many of us are scattered far and wide, and cannot see each other's faces, and depict thereupon the sweet smiles which Jesus' love has imprinted thereon, yet we may, one and all, "speak often one to another, and let our joys, our fears, our hopes be known through our dear HERALD.

I bless God for the many, many soul-refreshing, soul-cheering words which find expression in its columns from week to week. O, how I love to peruse them. They almost intuitively, as it were, draw my first attention on opening the paper, and many a "God bless them," rises from this poor heart of mine to our Father in heaven, for the loved ones that indite them. Our dear Br. Wolcott's letter, telling us such good things of our beloved Br. Rondthaler, and pointing to that "blood-bought treasure" in the old Moravian burying ground at Bethlehem (sweet name ever to be remembered), Pa., was full of interest to me. Would to God that the faith which dwells in that old, sturdy soldier of the cross, our beloved Br. Rondthaler, had obtained a wide-felt power among others of my countrymen and kinsmen after the flesh, for I am sure my heart's desire and prayer to God is, that they too might be saved. And then the never-tiring dear old Sister Polly Pitts—a name as familiar to most of us as the names are of our household pets—what a treat it is to glance at her heaven-inspired words, and catch her spirit as she unfolds in her fascinating way the riches of God's grace.

And what shall I say of the many others of our dear household of faith, who, from time to time, refresh our spirits by their communications to the HERALD? I am almost tempted to apply to them the words of the Apostle, when he says, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" If the communion of saints, while their Lord is yet absent, is so sweet, what must it be, when they shall see the King in his beauty, and walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem with Him together? Truly, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of men, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

O that all the world might know and feel the power of God's redeeming love.

Blessed Jesus! what delicious fare,
How sweet thy entertainments are;
Never did angels taste above
Redeeming grace and dying love.

And now may grace, mercy and peace from God our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ be richly multiplied unto us all, is the prayer of your unworthy Br. in Christ.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Dec. 9, 1869.

F. H. WHITE, Fulton County, Illinois, writes: I send $4 for the HERALD OF LIFE. The longer we read the paper the more we prize it. The truths it so valiantly defends, are, I think, fast gaining ground in our vicinity. "Eternal torment" has about quit the field, while immortal-soulism is affrighted and ready to flee. May the Giver of all good, fast speed the time, when the blessed truth of "No Life out of Christ," may be acknowledged by multitudes of poor perishing mortals, who are now feeding on husks. We have no preaching here although Adventists are getting quite numerous. I wish some of the brethren would give us a call. I think much good might be done.

Your brother in hope of life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

TO THE HERALD'S FRIENDS.

ONE more number will complete the first quarter of this volume. We have abundant evidence that a general satisfaction has been experienced by our friends, thus far; and we thank them for their good words and kind deeds. We should much regret to part with any of our present subscribers. We have before said, there has been a leniency toward such as have yet paid nothing on this volume, which is not usual in the business of this office. We have continued the paper to some who have not, to this time, made a remittance for volume seven. If none is made by the first of January, such persons must not think strange if their paper ceases to visit them. We hope better things for you, though we thus speak. Please try and renew immediately. And why cannot we have a few hundred new subscribers for the remainder of the volume? The small sum of $1 50 will pay for 36 numbers. Who will see what can be done? We trust all will.

BR. WILLIAM H. SPENCER.

It will be seen by a letter from this brother, that he has been compelled to return to Rochester by ill health. We deeply regret the necessity of his leaving our office, but as God's "ways are not as our ways," and "his thoughts are higher than our thoughts," so we trust this deprivation of our brother's services in one way, may be more than made up to the cause in another.

It is certain that his labors here left him no time to write for the paper, even if his health had remained unimpaired. While we shall miss him much from the office, and in counsel, we trust much more aid will be given to the HERALD OF LIFE, by the use of his pen and otherwise, if his health will permit, than he could possibly have given in the position he occupied here.

Our intercourse with him has been all that we could desire. So far as we know, not an unpleasant thing has arisen between us, though not always agreeing on some theological points. He leaves us with our best wishes, and prayers that he may be led and guided by our kind heavenly Father, safely through the trials of this pilgrimage into the eternal inheritance of the redeemed: "the rest that remaineth to the people of God."

TO THE PILGRIMS SCATTERED ABROAD.

FROM WILLIAM H. SPENCER.

DEAR PILGRIMS: How often all of us are led to feel—some more deeply than others—that we are truly pilgrims and strangers! But whether we suffer with pain or sad disappointment, we have a blessed comforting promise that if we suffer with Christ we shall also reign with him. We can never bear the degree of suffering which Christ bore for us; and but feebly can we realize the magnitude of his agony on Calvary,—but he bore all without a murmur, submissively bowing to the will of God. Thus should we humbly, trustful and without a murmur, bow to the will of our heavenly Father, in whatever disposition he may make of us, faithfully doing all he may give us to do, and uncomplainingly bear all the chastenings which are necessary to bring us into that condition of complete harmony to his will as to fit us to share in the glory which shall be revealed at the appearing of the Lord. May we always feel to say, Lord, thy will be done.

The other night, (December 7th,) though in great physical pain, as the cars bore me away from the blessed associations of the HERALD office, towards my home in this city, I felt deeply that I was indeed a pilgrim and a stranger in this world; but I blessed God that I was seeking a "better country," looking forward to "a sweet bye-and-bye." That night's experience will long be remembered. The weary hours passed slowly away, as sad and sleepless, the panorama of the past brought many scenes to my mind in which I could behold in a wondrous degree, the mysterious hand of Providence, guiding and preserving me on the tempestuous sea of human life. Vividly I beheld the time when not more than eight years ago, a friendless, homeless boy, I was seeking for a place that I could call home. The years that followed in which I was struggling for an education and toiling for a living, were fraught with many sad changes, scenes of suffering, hope and discouragement. When physicians many times have given me up with disease, the Lord has raised me up. When looking upon the struggles of the past until my heart would shrink back in despair, the blessed "Spirit of truth" would fill my heart with joy and gladness, by bringing to mind that precious promise of Christ: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." I am willing to suffer, bear the reproach of the world—yea, be "faithful" in the lowest position in which the Lord may place me, if at last I may obtain "a crown of life." Sad partings with dearly loved friends will then be swallowed up amid the transporting glory of the "coming day." I have no selfish ambition to satisfy in this world, but I do have a holy ambition to wear a crown by-and-bye; one "incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." Let all our hearts be animated only by this holy ambition.

Many of my friends, undoubtedly, will be surprised and perhaps sorry to learn that I have been obliged to dissolve my relation with the HERALD OF LIFE office, which has been of the most blessed nature. Last season I was brought very near the edge of the grave by lung difficulty of a catarrhal nature. The doctors gave me up as beyond their reach, but the Great Physician, for some wise purpose, restored me to health, for which I have continued to praise his holy name. When the Lord called me to the HERALD office, to assist in the labor of issuing the paper from a new office, I left my family in Rochester, feeling uncertain what effect the change of climate would have upon my health. It proved unfavorable. My lung difficulty returned with the changes of the fall weather, but I remained at my post of duty—hoping for settled weather and recovery—till the last heavy storm prostrated me, and I was compelled to seek the more favorable climate of my home, trusting in the Lord that I may soon recover sufficiently to go to work at my trade, and labor for the cause of truth.

My stay in New York was of the most pleasant nature. Br. Storrs—may God bless him!—was untiring in his efforts to make me comfortable, and I feel deeply grateful to all the dear friends in New York who were so attentive to make my stay pleasant. I feel I cannot frame language that will properly express my gratitude to those dear brethren whose names were attached to that letter, presented to me at the hour of departure, which contained such a substantial "token," ($30,) of the "affection and esteem of the donors." May the Lord bless them. At the present time this "token" was very acceptable, and the names of the donors will be long cherished by one who feels his unworthiness before God.

Those dear saints who have requested me to visit their places and preach the word of truth, and also those who invited me to visit their homes, will please accept this statement regarding my health as an apology for not so doing.

Finally, dear reader, permit me to say,—as one who has carefully viewed the interior working of the HERALD,—could you fully understand the arduous and zealous labor of our beloved editor and those engaged in getting up the paper, I am sure it would inspire in your hearts new zeal for the paper, in extending its circulation, and in sustaining it. Let us all make an effort in increasing its circulation.

Beloved in the Lord, I earnestly crave your prayers.

Yours, waiting for the appearing of the LIFE-GIVER.

"THE CONSEQUENCES OF CHRIST'S OBEDIENCE."

The consequences of Christ's obedience extend as far as the consequences of Adam's disobedience. The consequences of Adam's disobedience extend to all mankind; and therefore so do now the consequences of Christ's obedience.—H. H. D., in World's Crisis.

We are not aware that the author of the above believes in the final salvation of all men, but the reader cannot fail to see that in his eagerness to prove the resurrection of the wicked dead he could not advance an argument more favorable to the theory of the ultimate restoration of all men to God's favor. Let us look at his argument briefly.

1. "The consequences of Adam's disobedience extend to all mankind," he argues. We grant this. As a result of Adam's disobedience we are all mortal, dying men. He could not transmit to his posterity what was not in his possession. His disobedience confined him simply to an animal existence, by depriving him of right to the tree of life. As an animal he lived, and as animal he died. "The first man is of the earth, earthy." "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy."—1 Cor. xv. 47, 48. Thus we see that Adam's disobedience would ultimate in the eternal death of all his posterity were not some remedy introduced to rescue them from its claims. Thus far we believe the correspondent in question will not disagree with us.

2. Now we come to the point at issue. Upon the truth that our legacy from Adam was simply an "earthy," mortal nature, our brother bases his grand assumption—in order to get the wicked from under the sentence of death—that the "consequences of Christ's obedience extend as far as the consequences of Adam's disobedience." It is strange to me that any Bible student should advance an assumption so absurd and so wholly without foundation in the Scriptures. Will our brother stand by his argument? Let us see whither it will lead.

Before Adam disobeyed his Creator he was in the beautiful garden of Eden—surrounded with all the glory of Paradise—and had right to the "tree of life," of which, should he eat, he would "live forever." As a consequence of his disobedience he was driven forth from Eden, and at the east of the garden was placed a "cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life."—Gen. iii. 24. Now shall we so question God's wisdom and justice as to assume that his purpose in depriving man of access to the tree of life, by driving him from the garden of Eden, will prove a failure? Will Adam again be placed in a condition of probation, and have another opportunity to partake of the tree of life? Has God deceived mankind by declaring that the "wages of sin is death?" If our brother's assumption be true, then he must answer these questions in the affirmative. Therefore, if his argument is of any force to prove a re-living of the wicked dead, it is fully as conclusive as proof that God's purpose regarding sin will prove a failure, and universal restoration will be the result.

But, as we deny our brother's assumption, it may, with great propriety, be asked, How far do the consequences of Christ's obedience extend? if not to the whole race, to how many of Adam's posterity? To give a full exposition on this point demands more space than we can now devote to it. But we believe we can settle this question by a few testimonies from the inspired word; and above all others, Christ's own testimony should be the last to question. He gives God's plan and purposes as follows: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John iii. 14, 15.

Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness as a means of salvation to the perishing Israelites; but all who did not look upon that serpent perished. They refused to obey God. How can those rebellious Israelites be said to have "perished" if they are to live again? Temporary sleep in death cannot be called by that term; for Paul says, "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain," and "they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

Again, as Christ was typified by the serpent which was lifted in the wilderness by Moses, and as none who looked upon that serpent did perish, so God's purpose in giving his Son was that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Did the lifting up of the serpent by Moses affect the condition of those who would not look upon it? The history of the transaction shows that it did not; and this fact, set forth in type, God fulfils in the antetype, Christ; for the consequences of his obedience unto death only reach those who believe on him—all others perish in the same manner as though he had not come—like as the rebellious Israelites who refused to look upon the uplifted serpent. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth (Syraic—"obeyeth") not the Son shall not see life."—John iii. 36.

Without going farther into detail on this point, the reader cannot fail to see the absurd and unscriptural argument our brother has used to prop up the shattered structure of the revival of evil-doers beyond the grave; a structure of man's invention.

A TOUCHING CASE.

THE following letter was marked "private." We do not feel to withold it from our readers, but omit names and places. It is too interesting to keep "private." It reads as follows:

BR. STORRS: I have got the impression, somehow, that you do sometimes send the HERALD OF LIFE free to the worthy poor; and therefore I take the liberty to tell you the circumstances of a dear little Christian girl; which, after you have heard, if you judge her meet, and can afford it, I doubt not but that you will send it to her. She is an intelligent girl of 15 years, living at home with her father, doing the work like one of far more years, for him and three children, younger than herself.

She wants the HERALD very much, but cannot ask her father for it, because he is struggling to pay up debts which were contracted, I suppose, during the long and painful illness of her mother, who is now dead. Her father supports his family by days work here and there, and is very kind to her. With remarkable firmness she presses on. A faithful, dutiful child is she. You can judge of her need of reading matter, when I tell you they have no Bible in their house (though she has a Testament). I do not write this as an expose, but it is right that you should know for whom I solicit this favor, for which, if you grant it, you will receive the heartfelt thanks of your unworthy sister, looking for Life only through Christ the anointed of GOD.

We gladly send to this "one of Christ's little ones" the HERALD OF LIFE gratis, and have pre-paid the postage on the same. We hope to send her a Bible soon. May God bless her abundantly.

PAULINE THEOLOGY.

BY JACOB GRIM.

And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.—Rom. v. 16.

Here again we have set before us, the work of the two Adams, under the two dispensations. Under the first, the one offence brought condemnation upon the whole race, and, in consequence of it, death. Under the second law, under which the second Adam was made, we have many offences. We find God charging the children of Israel all through their dispensation, with violating their covenant. Jesus said, "Hath not Moses given you the law, yet none of you keepeth it." John, vii. 19. Here, then, we have many offences under this law. As under the first covenant, by one man's disobedience, the many were constituted sinners, so by the obedience of the one man, the many sinners under this second law were constituted righteous or liberated from the many offences committed under this law: "For when we were without strength, in due time, Christ died for the ungodly." Rom. v. 6. "Christ our passover was sacrificed for us." 1 Cor. v. 7. "How that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. xv. 3. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." Heb. ix. 28. "For Christ also, hath once suffered the just for the unjust." 1 Peter iii. 8. "Who his own self, bear our sins in his own body on the tree." "Peter ii. 24. "Who gave himself for me." "For I through the law, am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless, I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." Gal. ii. 17, 20.

Here, if I comprehend the Apostle, he says, I through disobedience am dead to the law, that is, if the law receives its demands, I must die. Nevertheless, I live. Why do I live? Christ loved me and died for me. I then was crucified with Christ. I paid all the law demands in Christ; nevertheless, although I died in Christ, yet I live in the flesh. Yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. How? Look at me and when you see me living in the flesh it is not of my right, but if the law had received its due, I should have perished under the law; therefore it is not I, of myself, but of Christ who died instead of me. If he had not given himself for me, I should have died. Therefore the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me.

I suppose Paul is referring to the same when he says, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God." Col. iii. 1. Now, Paul did not mean to say that they were risen from the dead literally. "For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God." The Diaglott renders it, "For you died and your life has been hidden." Now then, as we understand the Apostle, he is speaking to the early Jewish converts who were dead under the law; that Christ their pasover was crucified for them, and as God excepted the sacrifice, it was the same as if the nation died. The High Priest understood this fact when he said, "Neither do you consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die in behalf of the people, than that the whole nation should perish." John, xi. 50. (Digglott.) We think from the above proofs, the fact is established that Christ died as a substitute for his people, the Jews, or the house of Israel. Then we can understand some of Paul's language which seems contradictory. "Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Rom. v. 9, 10.

Here Paul asserts a fact that the reconciliation of some persons was accomplished by the death of the Son of God. And yet in 1 Cor. xv. 17, we have another fact declared, and that is, "If Christ be not raised (from the dead), your faith is vain: ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Now in Rom., v. Paul says the reconciliation is accomplished by the death of Christ.

In our last quotation the dead Christ is perished if he rise not, and they are yet in their sins, and all who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished also. How then shall we understand the Apostle? I answer: in Romans, he is discussing the relation of the Israelite to God under his covenant. Under which covenant, without the shedding of blood, there is no remission of sin: the covenanter is guilty under his covenant from many offences. Christ, by the obedience of the law, becomes an acceptable offering in behalf of his kinsmen according to the flesh. He offers up himself under the law, and the offering is accepted and the reconciliation is complete. God is reconciled to his people; they are justified from under the law, and set free from the curse of the law, for "Know ye not brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth. . . Wherefore my brethren ye also, are dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." Romans vii. 1-4.

Here Paul asserts another fact, that the Jews or Israel were married to God under their law covenant, and they were bound by it as long as they lived. But they having died in Christ, they were set free from the marriage covenant and were set at liberty to marry Christ.

To sum up the whole. The death of Christ as the sacrifice for Israel, accomplished all the law claimed, and satisfied all its demands and justified Israel from under its bonds. It justified them from all the marriage bonds that they were under through their law, reconciled them to God, their former husband, from the fact that they died in Christ, and now having risen from under the covenant, they are at liberty to marry Christ, "For if by one man's (Adam's) offence, death reigned by the one, much more they which receive the abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ." And how shall they receive the abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness? We answer, by becoming married to Christ, "so then as sin hath reigned unto death (through Adam by being in him) even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ" the second Adam. Then as Israelites, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son; much more (than that) "we shall be saved by his life," "For if Christ be not raised (although reconciled) all that have fallen asleep in him are perished."

But thanks be unto God, "now is Christ risen and become the first fruits of them that slept."

PHILADELPHIA PA., Dec. 1869.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM SAMUEL BROWN.

BR. STORRS: It is with deep and heartfelt interest that I stand with the great gospel Chart spread out before me; then taking observations from the professed Church and the ungodly world, the question comes up, What are our soundings? Are we not nearing port? Can we not plainly see the breakers ahead, which will dash in pieces, and blast the hopes of many eternity-bound mariners?

We look back to the time when our blessed Saviour stood on the mount of Olives, and took his last look, and wept over the doomed city, and said, "O that thou hadst known," etc. Does not the Christian's heart beat in sympathy with the dear Saviour's, when it looks upon the professed Church, comparatively as blind to what awaits her, as the old Jewish church was of her doom, and then turn and look at the great multitude who are rushing on to destruction, as the mighty waters rush over the falls of Niagara. Will not the Christian heart, with tears, cry out, O that thou wouldst see and feel, and know that which would not only give peace but eternal salvation? But the heart that can weep, feel and pray, is to the great mass like one that mocks rather than one that loves them and yearns for their salvation.

We have had a "State Christian Convention" here last week, composed of all the different denominations, with their ministers and delegates. I attended all their sittings. It lasted two days and three evenings. There were different topics discussed; one of them was, Is there a growing laxity among ministers and evangelical churches in regard to the doctrines of the gospel? The discussion was opened by one of the ministers. He thought the gospel preached at the present time was as pure as it ever had been since the apostles' days. He was followed by a Methodist brother, who said, He did not preach hell fire and damnation as John Wesley did; for, said he, if I do, my people ask questions that are hard to answer. I use Bible language, and that, I think, is strong enough, then there are no questions asked. He thought that the old theology should be somewhat revised.

Another brother got up and made some remarks, taking the same position, but went on to tell what a minister once said in his sermon, that God took the sinner up in the tongs of his wrath, and held him over hell fire until he was thoroughly scorched; then he placed him on a great wheel filled with hooks, and whirled him on that until he was nearly torn to pieces; then he took him down, laid him on the anvil, and with the great sledge-hammer of his wrath he pounded him to a jelly.

Well, they all thought that was not the right kind of preaching.

A Congregational minister got up and said, It might be that our theology needed some modifying, but, on the whole, he thought the ministers in the Evangelical churches, as a whole, were not lax in their preaching of the gospel. Another one said, He did not hear a sermon once in six months, only as he heard himself; and that the lay brethren could tell better where the ministers failed than he could; and so the invitation was given for lay members to speak.

I arose and said, that when the topic was up for discussion ("The preaching demanded by the times,") I was particularly struck with the manner in which it was discussed. I heard a good deal said about Christ crucified. He was held up as the only Saviour, and as our only hope; to which I could give my most hearty Amen. But I had not heard one word said about His resurrection. My Saviour was a risen Saviour; as the apostle said, "He was the first-born from the dead; the first fruits of them that slept. Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." Here comes in the resurrection as the consummation of the Christian's hope; and this is my hope. I said, I heard some one remark, as they left the house this morning, that there was no resurrection power in any of the remarks thus far; and while I did not wish to find fault with ministers, I must say that we have ministers in Milwaukee that do not believe in the resurrection, and say so in their congregations. What I wish to know now is, does this large body of ministers before me believe in the resurrection or not? There was a response from all parts of the house, "We do, we do." Thank God for that. One of our Methodist ministers got up and said, he thought it ungenerous to make this broad assertion, as they were all implicated thereby. It brought to my mind what one said to Christ, "Thus saying thou reproachest us also;" but no one denied the charge any further than himself was concerned, for they knew well that I could prove it by living testimony then present.

A good Baptist brother said to me, as we went out, I wanted to follow you up on the resurrection question, if I could have had an opportunity, for I believe in a living Saviour, not a dead one.

There was a sister from the interior, who came as a delegate; she sat in front of Sister R. W. Pierce. She turned around and looked at her, and was pleased at the turn the discussion had taken. They both went out together and had a long talk, the lady being quite interested, as I afterwards learned by Sister Pierce.

As I went out I was introduced to one of the ministers of the Convention, who took an interest in what was said, and is with us in some of our views, at least; but I had not an opportunity of saying, or hearing him say much. O that the fear of man might be taken away from all Christians and Christian ministers. I have suffered much in this way formerly, but not now. The question is not, What will become of my good-name? but What will become of Thy great name, Thy truth, and Thy glory, dear Saviour?

I wish to speak of one circumstance that has a bearing on the great question of the day. I attended a funeral, but a short time ago. The minister in speaking of the one that was dead, started up all at once, and said, "This is not death, but translation." I thought, what need of a resurrection, then? I told my brethren ten years ago, there were but two roads for the church of the present day to take; one was right straight into spiritualism—deny the resurrection altogether—or else come on the Bible doctrine of no immortality out of Christ, and no eternal life but by a resurrection from the dead. I have lived to see it come to pass; some turning to the Bible doctrine, and some who are inclined that way, but are afraid to own it, for fear of being put out of the synagogue; others denying the resurrection altogether; ministers in our Orthodox churches standing up before their congregations and denying it.

Where is Orthodoxy now? All gone to the four winds; every man for himself; no one can hang on to the skirts of another, for he knows not where it may land him; and in this great breaking up of the powers that be, God is gathering up a people for his glory: those that will say, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him, and He will save us."

From your brother in Christ, as I trust.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Dec. 7, 1869.

FROM WM. C. METCALF.

BR. STORRS: It has been so long since I have written, you may have thought that, if living, I had quite forgotten you and the dear HERALD OF LIFE, or, at least, had lost the interest I had formerly professed for you and it. Be assured, my dear brother, I still hold both in grateful remembrance, and love you both for the sake of the blessed truths which you, with other beloved brethren, and sisters too, are, through it, publishing to a dying world.

O, how glorious the work, how precious the privilege in this age of fables and philosophy, of atheism and infidelity, of spiritism and superstition, whereby is made void the plain, positive teachings of the Holy Word in relation to the nature and destiny of man and his one great want, which is so fully met by the great atoning sacrifice of the blessed Son of God; how precious, I say, the privilege of publishing to all the plain, simple and literal truth, so long obscured by human tradition.

I sometimes wonder how good, wise, honest and Christian men, with the Bible in their hands, can be so blinded by errors which have come down, through a corrupt church, from pagan philosophy. But, then, I remember that we all, who now so rejoice in the blessed light of God's word, understood literally, were but a little time since groping our way in the same darkness, trying to believe in man's inherent immortality and exposure to eternal conscious suffering, etc. Views we now see and feel to be alike dishonoring to God and inconsistent with His character as a being of infinite love and justice; and furthermore, to be great hindrances to the success of the gospel among men.

I rejoice in the progress the truth is making all over our land. The work is so great, and involves changes so radical, that time will be required to accomplish it. The Christian church, it seems to me, is in much the same condition of the Jewish church, as recorded in Ezra, chapters ix. and x. It has become wedded to strange wives, contrary to the commands of God. We can say as Israel did (Ez. x. 13), "But the people are many . . . neither is this the work of one day or two; for we are many who have transgressed in this thing." Our priests, our elders, our deacons, and down to the humblest members have formed a loving union with immortal-soulism and her sisterhood of attendants, and it will require a fierce struggle to break away from her embrace. But it will be done. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." I see evidences around me in this vicinity that old prejudices are giving way. Men are more ready to hear with candor, and are giving more careful consideration when the great truths of the Bible are presented to them, of man's mortality, his exposure to death, as the penalty of sin, and his dependence upon Christ alone for future and eternal life, to be secured through faith, and received at the resurrection of the just. O, these are blessed truths, and I rejoice that God has opened my eyes to see, and my heart to receive them, and that thousands more are enjoying the same precious privilege. Go on, my dear brother, and may God still preserve and prosper you in your arduous work, and give you a mouth and wisdom that none of your adversaries can gainsay or resist.

HOLDEN, MASS., Dec. 4, 1869.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

BR. STORRS: Since coming here, I have received two numbers of the HERALD OF LIFE, and my heart warms as I see the familiar names and read the outgushings of hearts filled with the love of God.

Especially glad to see "another response from Scotland." Yes, glad because to me it is a dear land, the land of my forefathers, and the land of my birth; and when I think of the preciousness there is in the true gospel, yes, the good news of life only in Christ, my heart swells with emotion, and I long to have that precious soul-cheering truth proclaimed among that Bible reading people, for the Scotch are a Bible reading people; but alas! they read it through the superstitious mists of years. I am glad that Bro. Patterson is scattering light, yes, the true light of life which none shineth. May the Lord strengthen his heart and enable him to fight manfully the battles of the Master, remembering that we fight not against flesh and blood, but against church governments and spiritual wickedness in high places.

I arrived here one week ago, yesterday, and as I sit and look out upon the habitations of the people—I long to go and tell them the good news of life, but it has already commenced a severe winter, and therefore not much prospect of getting out doors. Still, by the help of my heavenly Father, I mean to let my light shine, or rather, the light of the gospel shine. I have a large field, eight in my sister's family, and I feel that a daily walk and conversation speaks louder than words. But that is so everywhere and under all circumstances, therefore let us all so walk that others shall take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.

I have been to-day, thinking over what the Master said of a woman's simple act. She possessed a box of precious ointment, and breaking it, poured it on the Master's head. Some had indignation and complained of the waste of ointment. In these days of great boasting many would laugh at the little act, but what did our Lord himself say? "She hath done what she could." This is all our Lord requires. It is required according to that a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. The widow's mite was accepted more than all the abundance of the wealthy, cast into the treasury; she, also, did what she could.

Let us all do what we can, and after it all, say, We are unprofitable; we have done only what was our duty to do.

God shall have all the glory, and when the King of kings comes, we will crown him Lord of all, because he is the Great LIFE-GIVER.

Your sister, watching and longing for his appearance.

Box 769, RACINE, WIS., Dec. 5, 1869.

FROM WM. H. WHITMAN.

BR. STORRS: We wish to say a few words to those who write for the HERALD OF LIFE. We have considerable correspondence with brethren, sisters and friends in different parts of the United States. We received a letter from a friend, some time ago, who wanted us to answer the letter; but we could neither make out the name or post office. We have received others that required a great deal of labor to read them. We received one only a few days ago, in answer to our questions in the HERALD of Nov. 3. We could read this letter and name; but the post office and State we could not make out. So we cannot answer that letter, yet the writer desired we should.

Brethren, sisters and friends, when we receive such letters we cannot but sympathize with our beloved Editor, who receives perhaps hundreds of such letters, which is a severe tax on him in his old age. Now, let us all write out our pieces with pen or pencil; then look it over carefully, and correct it. Then after this, re-write it with a good pen and ink on good paper; then we will lessen the labors, to a great extent, of our aged and beloved Editor. We generally do all our writing in the above manner. Then, a great deal of it is incorrect, no doubt. Then if it is thought our pieces are unfit for publication by our dear Editor, we should never utter a murmur, but go to work and see if we cannot do better the next time. We love to hear from all the dear writers and readers of the HERALD in different parts of the country. Write, all who can; but write plain, and condense your thoughts in as few words as possible; and do all that you do to the glory of God, and his Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

GALESBURG, ILL., Box 1,080.

We thank Br. Whitman for the above suggestions. Hours of our time are wasted by the carelessness of writers in the matters referred to. If you cannot write plain yourselves, get some one to copy it who can, and who knows what you wish to say. We have spent not merely hours but days in deciphering some communications, and then have often to re-write them before we can give them to the compositor. This carelessness in writing ought to cease; and it must cease if you expect your business done accurately, or your communications to find place in the paper.

FROM CATHARINE E. CONKLIN.

BR. STORRS: I enclose $3 to pay my subscription for the HERALD OF LIFE. I thank God that he is still blessing you with strength of body and mind to conduct the paper we so much prize. How much reason we have to praise God for his wonderful goodness to us who have seen a great light, while others are left to grovel their way in darkness. May God enable us to hold on, to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the truth, that we may be sanctified through the truth. I never felt more grateful for the truth as I understand it from the word of God, than for the past two weeks.

Eld. Edwin Burnham has been laboring in the Baptist Church in this place, to get up a revival of religion. He labored two weeks with so little success, that he became discouraged and closed his labors last Sunday. I think had he preached on the coming kingdom and the resurrection as faithfully as he did on the sufferings and death of Christ, he might have accomplished a great amount of good, as his audience was one that could not be reached by a regular Advent minister.

The first text he preached from was Matth., xvi. 26, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," etc. Had he rendered soul, life, as in the preceding verse, which, I am told, is the same in the original, it would have changed the tenor of the discourse very materially. It is too late in the day to drive or frighten people into the kingdom. They may be persuaded, but not driven or frightened. There has been too much light thrown upon the word of God for the last few years, for that.

Our God is not a tyrant, an unrelenting foe,
Delighting more in vengeance, and in the utter woe
Of the beings he has fashioned, far more than in their joy;
He will not make immortal the sinner—but destroy.
'Tis that his mercy fails not, 'tis that his name is love.
He will all sin and sinners from the universe remove;
Then holiness will triumph and every being sing,
Honor and glory evermore to their most holy King.

Eternal life in misery! a libel on the name
Of God the good and righteous—such doctrine doth defame.
His character and being, presenting to the view
Of mortals but a tyrant—not one, all wise and true,
Oh let the truth be uttered, ye ministers proclaim
With unabating fervor in honor of His name,
That endless life's not given, with anguish at each breath,
But the wages of the sinner, is death, eternal death.

Yours, in hope of eternal life.

SENECA FALLS, N. Y., Dec. 1869.

FROM M. M. YOUNG.

BR. STORRS: Having a desire to do or say something to benefit the dear readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, I will communicate a few lines to our much loved paper. Much loved, because its columns are open to all who write with brotherly love and kindness. It is above all other religious papers in this respect. Much loved, because if a Br. does not believe as the Editor does, his thoughts are not, on that account, rejected. Much loved, because, since it pleased our Father in heaven to put it into the minds of his dear children, under the old chestnut tree at Wilbraham, to publish it, both sides can be heard through its columns on this important question.—There is not another paper like it; and I do praise the name of our Father in heaven that it still lives. May it long live, is my prayer.

Dear brethren and sisters, have you not felt the want of the same spirit in the Advent churches? If you have not, I have, and feel the oppressive spirit this day. I can't go into a congregation but what I am pointed out, and many of my old friends will go out of the house! O, they have not time to talk.

I was in a meeting not long since where Geo. Storrs was handled in a very unbecoming manner, and I was not allowed to say a word in his behalf. If they cannot have it all their own way, they think we want to debate and contend. There is about as much liberty in this as there was in the popular church we left, twenty-five years since.

I am very much surprised to see how anxious their people are to have the plan of God cover all mankind, regardless of character. But every effort in this direction has failed, in my humble judgment, and all such attempts will prove abortive. It is a very difficult task to make it appear plain that the atoning blood of the only begotten Son of God avails in the unbeliever's behalf, in raising him up from the dead.

Never, in all my Christian experience, did I feel a greater confidence in the atoning blood of the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world, than now. I have been at Lynn, and labored some in that place. In that city is one of the most thriving meetings, and the largest of any I have visited. I should judge there are one-half of the leading brethren, who are believers in Life only in Christ.

Yours, in hope of Life in Christ alone.

FROM S. MORGAN.

BR. STORRS: After so long a time, I feel a deep interest in our paper. I do feel much interested, indeed in the HERALD OF LIFE. Of all the papers I have seen in my life, the HERALD is the best. It does fairly exceed any that I ever saw. It would be almost impossible for me to live without it. If it cost me twenty dollars per year I would pay it rather than be deprived of it. The people here are much opposed to my views. It reminds me of the history that the Bible gives of Sodom and Jerusalem in ancient times. It seems they would not believe though one rose from the dead. I am still standing upon that rock on which our Saviour said to Peter he would build his church, and the gates of hell or hades shall not prevail against it. I stand upon that same rock witnessing and contending for the blessed gospel hope. I have many to contend with. They are all against me, but what makes me rejoice is because I have got the truth, just what our Saviour taught, and what the patriarchs and the disciples of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ taught. They are all upon my side of the question; therefore I am led to rejoice in the hope of life through Christ.

Ah, brothers and sisters, I wish that I was able to expound to you all, by my pen, the comfort and joy that the HERALD affords my heart. When I look over its pages and am contemplating its precious contents, I can scarcely refrain from shedding tears, to see and meditate upon the articles which the children of God write for the paper.

I have had a great many arguments with both men and women here, and can master them every time. Some of them will argue pretty close, but their arguments do not weigh much.

Pray for me that I may continue faithful, spotless and blameless, and be found of him in peace, when he who is our life shall appear. May we appear with him in glory, for we shall see him as he is. Even so come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is the prayer of your brother in the Lord.

NORTH LAWRENCE, Kansas, Nov. 28, 1869.

FROM LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

BR. STORRS: I am much interested in Sister Wood's communications; especially those relating to her faith and experience in prayer. I have long believed that the prayer of faith was as efficacious now as in the days of James the apostle. I have realized many remarkable answers to prayer, when I could reach what I term the rest of faith. Are we not inclined to place answers to prayer with the age of miracles, and not to be looked for in these days? Especially anything aside from the natural course of events. Not so with the worthies enumerated by Paul in Hebrews. The promise of God was sufficient for them.

Now, my beloved friends, believing that where two or three shall agree as touching anything they will ask, it shall be done, I have a request to make. For the year past my eyesight has gradually failed, until I can scarcely read or write. Many advise me to submit to a surgical operation. This does not seem to me the right way. I have contrasted the surgeons of our time with the great Physician, who could speak, and it was done, when clothed with flesh and blood. He now has all power in heaven and earth, and can as easily say, "Be opened," as when He dwelt on earth. I therefore would request the praying ones to unite with me in a petition that my sight may be restored.

I see so much to be accomplished, such a field of truth to be explored, that I may be a more competent teacher of children and youth. Never before did I realize such hungering for a greater knowledge of God and his word, that I may glorify Him in body and spirit. What I have treasured in memory I esteem a mine of wealth for contemplation, when the windows are so darkened that reading is impossible. How transporting the thought, that these vile bodies will soon be made like unto Christ's glorious body. For the meantime let us bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

Yours, in love.

ST. PAUL, MINN, Nov., 1869.

WM. STEELE, Arkansaw, Wis., writes: The gospel truths which are published in the HERALD OF LIFE are as precious to me as ever. I think I never read a better number than that of November 10. I was sick when it came, but was able to read it the next day, and it was refreshing indeed. Your Br. in hope of God's unspeakable gift.

FROM WARREN SMITH.

BR. STORRS: Having just returned from a quarterly conference held in Algansee in our State, and while there, found a friend that had formerly been bound, as it were, in a nut shell, belonging to the old line Baptists; and who, after hearing such truths as are presented by our brethren believing in the literal resurrection of both the just and unjust, found himself with the shell broken, looking for the truth as revealed in the blessed Bible, which will bring him into a larger place than he has before occupied, if he continues his investigations May the Lord guide him and us into all truth is my prayer.

I do, yea, and I will rejoice in the glorious hope of Life only through Christ; believing, also, that his coming is very near; therefore, if saved, it will be through the belief in the truth and the obedience required by our heavenly Father of his adopted children. Then glory to his name, we shall be joint heirs with Christ, to that inheritance that is incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away. Others also, are investigating our Life views as held by our brethren of the HERALD, and believing them. Some are its bitter opposers. The last named are mostly preachers. However, this class is small, and I do believe that prejudice is giving way and that many of our brethren will soon see that life future can only be obtained by complying with the conditions found on record, in God's word. The Lord help them to search for truth, and may their search not be in vain, for truth makes free.

Yours, in hope of the Abrahamic promise.

CAMBRIA MILLS, Michigan, Nov. 29, 1869.

FROM MRS. DEBORAH C. CORWIN.

BR. STORRS: I received the package of tracts you so kindly sent me with a great deal of pleasure.

Meetings are being held in different churches in the city, and a good deal of revival seems to be going on. Would it not be a good time for some good brother to plant the standard of the cross here in the capital of this great nation?

No Advent preaching! How it sounds. Where is the Lord's money to support a missionary here? Sure his children can't take it with them into the kingdom when Jesus comes.

One thing surprised me, when I was at Springfield campmeeting, so many ministers of the gospel scattered through the East, preaching or not as they had an opportunity, and eking out a scanty subsistence; and they seemed hardly to know which way to turn or what to do, when the vast fields of the glorious West are white and ready for the harvest, affording everything in abundance, and cheap, to sustain the body, and plenty of people to hear and receive the word of life.

I think, too, the West is healthy compared with the East. I should give the West the preference.

It is seldom you see a person who has consumption there. I lived there twelve years and am hoping to go back there the coming spring.

Pray for Washington that there may be many here ready to meet the Lord at his coming.

Yours truly, for the better life.

407 F Street, WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 6, 1869.

FROM CHARLES A. HASTINGS.

BR. STORRS: I see in the HERALD of Dec. 1st, a wish from Br. Shafer that you or myself should give our views of the Spirit in Rom. iii. 11. The text reads thus: "But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Now, to my mind, this text needs but little explanation; it seems quite plain on the face of it. It starts with a condition: "the Spirit dwell in you." Of this Spirit, the apostle, in another letter says, "Whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." It is the witness to us that we are the children of God. "He that believeth hath the witness in himself." It is "the Spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba Father." The apostle says in the first two verses of this chapter, "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life, in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death." "If this Spirit dwell in you," as God raised up Christ from the dead, so shall He also—"also" do what? Do the same thing; quicken, make alive (as the Diaglott renders it), your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

Thus we see the principle which gives life from the dead. Without this indwelling Spirit, the natural conclusion from this text is, they will not be quickened; will not be made alive, else there is no propriety whatever in the condition. Thus it seems to me.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS. Dec. 8, 1869.

DR. E. C. BALCOM, Bashan, Ohio, writes:

We received the tracts and were very thankful. They are all gone except one or two, and where we hope they will do good. We have labored entirely alone. We have not seen one of like precious faith for six years. We have never heard a sermon by one that believed in Life only in Christ. Yet we have stirred up the people till their fire of indignation is dying out, and they are beginning to read with interest. We hope we shall yet, by the help of the Lord, see the work prosper until there shall be more worthy help sent to this place, and may it come soon, is our earnest prayer.

FROM P. FLICKNER.

BR. STORRS: We feel to praise God once more and take courage that our paper still lives, and that it has the prospect of witnessing for Jesus when he comes. Thank the Lord for the light it sheds, and for the reception it receives by as many as it does over the country; and I would say, let all praise His name that they have been privileged to live in this day of unfolding of this (seemingly) hidden truth. For my own part I oft-times shed tears of joy and thankfulness that it has been my privilege. Then again we should all praise Him that He has raised up men with means, courage, and standing, to uphold and sustain it against all opposition and persecution. As for myself, I never expect to be able to do much at any one time toward its support. Still I hope I shall never lack for the mite; and if faithful and diligent, relying upon the promise, I feel confident I shall not be disappointed.

Yours, hoping for that better world when Christ comes.

DELTON, WIS., Nov. 29, 1869.

GEO. T. COLLINS, Chateaugay, N. Y., writes: I think we have had a miracle in our place, or it was none in Enoch's case. I attended a funeral of an old lady the other day, and the preacher, a Methodist, told the friends that as God met Enoch, so He met this aged sister; and, said he, she is now in heaven. Eureka! I am happy to see the HERALD OF LIFE so well sustained, God bless the noble Band that bear it up.

Remark by the Editor.

Such "miracles" are frequent everywhere, if we believe the common theology of these days. Nevertheless, such a miracle, on a grand scale, will occur when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven." May we be ready.

LEWIS L. BROWN (whose father and mother we knew well, 35 years ago), Concord, N. H., writes: It has been some time since I wrote you. Then I was surrounded with clouds and unbelief, and by no means at rest. Your letter was a blessing to me. Now I am happy in the Lord, and feel like a new convert. The way looks so good that it seems as if we might always walk in the narrow way. But, like Peter, when temptation comes on us, like the boisterous waves, we begin to sink. We need to have our faith strengthened in these perilous times. It seems as if the surrounding influences were never so bad as now. Spiritists around us are dead set against the Bible. But their triumph is short. The LIFE-GIVER will soon come, and then such characters will get the wages of sin, which is death. I have examined the subject of Life from the dead till I am satisfied the righteous only will live again.

A Trusting Faith.

"By faith Abraham, when, when he was called . . . obeyed, and he went out, not knowing whither he went."—Heb. xi. 8.

I know not what shall befall me, God hangs a mist o'er my eyes,
And so each step in my onward path He makes new scenes to rise,
And every joy He sends me, comes as a strange and sweet surprise.

I see not a step before me, as I tread on another year,
But the past is still in God's keeping, the future His mercy shall clear,
And what looks dark in the distance, may brighten as I draw near—

For perhaps the dreaded future has less bitter than I think,
The Lord may sweeten the waters before I stoop to drink,
Or if Marah must be Marah, He will stand beside its brink.

It may be He has waiting for the coming of my feet,
Some gift of such rare blessedness, some joy so strangely sweet.
That my lips shall only tremble with the thanks they cannot speak.

O, restful, blissful ignorance! 'Tis blessed not to know,
It keeps me so still in those arms which will not let me go,
And hushes my soul to rest in the bosom that loves me so!

So I go on not knowing, I would not if I might,
I would rather walk in the dark with God, than go alone in the light,
I would rather walk with Him by faith, than walk alone by sight.

My heart shrinks back from trials which the future may disclose,
Yet I never had a sorrow but what the dear Lord chose,
So I send the coming tears back with the whispered word "He knows."

The Kingdom.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

This great multitude will be the subjects of Christ's kingdom: the nations of them that are saved, walking in the light that issues from the holy city. They are "all nations" blessed in the seed of Abraham. These are not redeemed from the earth, as are the first fruits; for of them it is said, "And no one was able to learn the [new] song but the hundred, forty and four thousand—"the first fruits"—it cannot extend to the harvest—the great multitude. Yet this great multitude are not under the law of sin and death, i. e., they have not the sentence of death in their members, (2 Cor. i. 9), as all of Adam's posterity have and will have until the appearing of the great white throne; for at that time "The Death" will be cast into the lake of fire, and will be no more.—Rev. xx. 14, xxi. 4. This is the restoration; and the nations of them that are saved will be restored to that state in which man was first created, symbolized by their standing in the presence of the throne and the presence of the Lamb; and like Adam, before the fall, they have access to the tree of life (Rev. xxii. 2), which would be unnecessary if they were immortal like the saints, i. e., were "redeemed from the earth." In this glorious restoration, the literal twelve tribes of Israel will be restored, and become "one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one King shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all; neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling places, wherein they have sinned, and I will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God."—Ez. xxxvii. 22, 23. (Please read to the end of the chapter, and compare with Rev. xxi. 1–4). They will occupy the chief place among the nations; for Jerusalem, the metropolis of the nation, will also be the metropolis of the new earth, in which will grow the tree of life, and where the I Am will dwell.—Ez. xlviii. 35. This, it will be observed, is not the kingdom of Israel restored for one thousand years, but the Restoration, after "The death and hades have been cast into the lake of fire. Proof, "And the city" (that descended out of heaven from God), "had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof."—Rev. xxi. 23. This city is the Lamb's wife. Now read verse 24, "And the nations shall walk by means of the light thereof; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory into it." This is after all things have been made new. Isaiah tells us something about this new heavens and earth. He says, "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create: for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy."—Isa. lxv. 17, 18 (compare with Ez. xlviii. entire); verse 20 of the chapter just quoted from reads—"There shall be no more an infant of days nor an old man that hath not filled his days, for the child shall die a hundred years old, but the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed. And they shall build houses and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit thereof."—Verse 21.

"The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."—Verse 25. If the reader will take the trouble to read in connection with the above passages chapter lxvi. entire, he will see that the prophet and the apostle are speaking of the same things, viz., the restoration; and both speak of the nations, the children of the kingdom, as being a distinct class from the saints—the brethren of Christ. John introduces Christ and the saints by the symbol of the Lamb and his bride, constituting the holy city Jerusalem, in the light of which the nations walk.

Isaiah introduces Christ and his brethren—the bride and bridegroom—the head and body united in immortality, in chapter lxvi. 7, as a man child, which Zion brought forth before she travailed, (the "one like unto the Son of man," Paul's perfect man, or fully developed Christ, the first fruits, gathered before the harvest), while the children of the kingdom—the harvest—are in verse 8, thus: "For as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children." But, says one, John says there will be "no more death" in the new earth, while the prophet says, "the child shall die a hundred years old;" how can both be true? I reply, John did not say, "there shall be no more death." The sentence stands thus in the original, "And the death not shall be longer."—See Emphatic Diaglott. Tregells reads, "And death shall be no more." Perhaps some one may ask, What is the difference whether he said "The death not shall be longer," or "There shall be no more death?" I answer: If John had said, "There shall be no more death," he would not only have contradicted the testimony of Isaiah, but himself also. Let us see. What is death? A state in which life is extinct, is it not? Yes. Well, then, if there ever comes a time when there will be literally no more death, the second death will have given up the dead which were in it. Most people read this as though it said, "There shall be no more dying." But this it does not say; but what it does say is not in antagonism to what the prophet says, as I hope to be able to show from the word itself, to the satisfaction of such as "rejoice in the truth." In Rev. vi. 14, a death is mentioned which is called the second death. But there could be no second death without a first death. The second death is symbolized by a lake of fire. "This is the second death, the lake of fire.',—Rev. xx. 14. Fitting symbol—as a lake of fire utterly consumes all combustible matter cast into it. So the second death is the "everlasting destruction" of whatever is consigned to it. Consequently, when the first death and hades are destroyed, it is said, they "were cast into the lake of fire" (which is the second death). Well, then, is it not evident that "the death" (ho thanatos) that shall be no more," (in the new earth) is the first death, which was consigned to the second death?

The Royal Family: The Born of God.

BY ALBIN CHANDLER.

Br. Storrs: Upon reading the query of a brother in the Herald of Nov. 3d, as to the harmony of the literally born of God, and others only of the flesh seeing the kingdom, my mind was directed to the thought heading this article. Now, the subject of the new birth has been very satisfactorily clear to my mind for some years. Still I do not know as I can concentrate my investigations in one short article, so as to enable the reader to obtain any satisfactory result, but will make a brief trial.

First. God sought a number of persons sufficient to fill every position necessary to rule the world in righteousness, and He wanted none but such as he could trust; such as credited his word, and that loved his will far superior to theirs. Hence he made great promises to Abraham, as a representative man, of landed estates, of great wealth, and kingly honors; also a never-ending life, that these possessions might be perpetual. Notice, these were not for all the world, for many people are comprehended in the promises, i. e., given to this elect or select family as dwellers on the land, or subjects of the governmental policy. So from Abraham we find God making offers to his literal descendants, if they would properly qualify to represent Him in his true character of love, truth, and justice, He would accept them as a "people for his name;" for He "sought a peculiar treasure unto him above all people." "A kingdom of saints." (See Exo. xix. 5, 6). But because of their stiff-neckedness and rebellious tendencies and practices, He withdrew this high and glorious honor from them as a race or generation, and through Christ made the offer to any individual from any nation that will qualify. Now here is where many of our brethren overlook the kingly polity. But please keep in mind that this is a politic arrangement, a selecting of governmental officers of a God-like nature, to be coheirs and rulers in the kingdom of Jesus Christ's inheritance, even the kingdom of God on the earth, upon which David in the flesh tried to represent Him.

Now, as man is mortal and under the law of death, it is absolutely needful for him to be "born from above," that is, "of God." Hence of the nature of God, which cannot die; and as God is a king, a mighty sovereign, so his sons, literally of him, are princes and heirs of their Father's goods and honorable titles. To illustrate: The people that live in Great Britain are not princes or sons of the crown; therefore all have not an inheritance in the kingdom; but they are a part of the kingdom, for the very idea of a king or kingdom, implies subjects or people over which to exercise kingly authority.

Now, I understand the whole gospel is to select, as Peter says, "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood," etc., (see Pet. ii. 9; also, Rev. i. 6, and v. 10); and the beloved John in vision heard the saints sing of the Lamb of God, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

Jesus said to Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, mark it, a ruler in the nation still claiming these especial privileges, i. e., of authority, and the medium of blessing, You must have your nature changed to legally exercise this privilege. But he did not understand, when he was old, how he could be born again. Then Christ explains further, and tells him that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit, and he must be born from above. But still he said, How can these things be? Jesus expresses apparent surprise at his being a master or ruler in Israel, and not understanding these things. The expressions—cannot see the kingdom, and cannot enter the kingdom—all refer to the royal inheritance; in other words, Jesus tells him, Now God has transferred this high honor (see Deut. xxvi. 19), to his literal sons; so now except we are the sons of God and come through Christ, i. e., in his name, the Eldest Prince, therefore the first in the kingdom, we cannot see, undertand, or enter upon the inheritance of the kingdom.

Therefore we read of being heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise (Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iii. 29); and also of the elect we are told, there are "many called but few chosen." Therefore we must labor to make our calling and election sure. Yes, dear brethren and sisters, we are called to labor for more than life or salvation from the bonds of death; that is the first and a very important work to accomplish, for without it we could not stand in the honored and glorious capacity of kings and priests. But to labor in humility, because the aspirations of the flesh are to honor, to places of trust and profit in the nation. We find that the second great temptation of Jesus. If we humble ourselves now in the flesh, and labor in faith on the Son of God for the election of the called, in due time we shall be exalted, and hear the final result of the campaign, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," etc. (Read the exposition of Paul in Rom. viii. and ix.) Yes, dear brethren, that the Spirit may qualify and the blessed birth obtain, we must very carefully cultivate the precious seed, that the tender buds may appear, and the fragrant blossoms of a Christ-likeness emitting the sweet smelling savor of obedience unto God. Then the ever-blessed fruit will be seen and known to be of God.—See Gal. v. 22–26, and John i. 4.

I apprehend one very great obstacle to many seeing that it is this "little flock" only that is to receive "the kingdom," that in "the times of restitution of all things," that some think that every one must be immortal. But in the beginning, Adam was made mortal, and a tree for the perpetuity of life placed within his reach. Now, suppose he had not sinned, we have no intimation that he ever would have had immortality: that is one of the new things brought to light in the gospel of Christ, but he could eat and live on, and by continual obedience continue to have access to this medicine tree to renew his strength and vigor, and to live on forever. I can see a wide difference between living forever and eternal life, in this light. So after Jesus comes, and the restitution takes place, and all God's peculiar treasure is gathered out from the dead, by Jesus the magnet, our Life-giver, he has given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, etc., Dan. viii. 14; and in the 18th verse we are told, "The saints of the Most High," i. e., the family of God, the elect officer, "the Bride, the Lamb's wife," the body of Christ: all different titles applicable to the same one "Royal family," they are to take the kingdom and possess it forever, even forever and ever.

Now, without theories or prejudices, cannot all see there are nations and people of different languages, and they are to serve the King and associate rulers, while yet mortal? For the saints of the Spirit will have but one language. And furthermore, the Apostle John in vision foresaw this time of restitution; and on the earth saw the tree of life, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. And as long as these nations continue obedient, they can have access to the tree of life; and if obedient forever, can have the tree forever, hence live forever.

So, dear brethren, in view of the great honor and glory to be bestowed upon us, if children, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness? Good old faithful Abraham could look forward by faith to Jesus (John viii. 56), the way and the life! and we can by faith also look to Him as the Son of God, with power to call the sealed ones from the dead, and change the living by "the Spirit of God" that is in us; for, "having this seal, He knoweth them that are his." Therefore, let us, like Moses, refuse the honors and emoluments of man made positions; choosing rather to suffer with the people of God; esteeming the reproach for Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; holding in respect the recompense of the reward. For whosoever is born of God overcometh the world, and this is the victory, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? So while we continue to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and labor to improve the talent given, we may not only have life everlasting, but reign with Jesus in some capacity, either in local authority, or as an aid, attendant, or messenger of his peace and righteous good will to the people.

Yours, in the blessed hope, striving for an abundant entrance into the Messiah's kingly polity.

Batavia, Iowa, Nov. 18, 1869.

The Power of God.

BY LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

How the finite mind is lost in the contemplation of unlimited power, although but imperfectly comprehended. The tiny vegetable, up to the giant tree, speak of power. Also, in the animal kingdom, from the animalcule to the great Bohemoth. In the heavens above us we witness the loftiest conceptions of power. Our planetary system, revolving in perfect order and harmony around the glorious orb of day, while it performs an annual revolution of itself reveals an unseen power, vast and incomprehensible. Yet when we consider that the vast expanse is filled with planetary systems of various grades, our reason reels with the weight of this mighty conception, we instinctively exclaim, If these are but parts of His ways, who can comprehend the thunder of His power?

The heart of man shrinks from contact with such power. Why is it? Partly, I conceive, from a sense of guilt, but more from the teaching of a false theology, whereby we associate in our minds the idea of tyranny, oppression and cruelty, with that of unlimited power. The confiding child does not fear to be folded in the arms of his stalwart father, although he could crush it like a moth, for in that manly breast beats a heart of love, and the child is safe; the power is its chief source of confidence. So the power of our God is moved by love. Creation's work was conceived and carried on under this rich impulse. How it sparkled in Adam's eyes in innocence, when he awoke from his deep sleep and beheld the beautiful bride his Creator's power and love had provided. How the sons of God shouted for joy in view of the rich display which the great Author and finisher pronounced all very good. Man disobeyed; the curse came and ruin in its wake. Yet love is not quenched; nor does it cease to move the great heart of God. The gift of His beloved Son bears the most unmistakable marks of the love that controls His power. He could have blotted man from existence and hope. Who could justly have found fault? Love moved Him to undertake their redemption. When the great plan is finished, and we with rapture behold the triumph of love and power which has been so blended in all His works, we will be ashamed of our fears, and wonder at our weak faith.

I once read of a widowed mother, with five small children, one an infant in her arms, who, crossing the Atlantic encountered a severe storm; so severe that the hardy seamen trembled with fear, while she sat in the cabin with her little ones clinging to her unmoved and cheerful. When the storm abated, she was inquired of, how she could retain her self-possession amid such terrors? Her answer was, I knew my best Friend ruled the storm, and His love and power was my safety.

May we, dear friends, gird our loins with truth, take the shield of faith and stand fast a little longer, knowing that naught can separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Suez Canal.

Few persons, comparatively, stop to consider how stupendous a work is the Suez Canal, now an accomplished fact. How important a part it may play in the closing scenes in this dispensation, it is impossible to determine; but we think it not unlikely that the hand of God is in it. The work has been steadily prosecuted since 1859, and is an enterprise by a joint stock company, having a capital of 40,000,000 dollars. The average surface width of the Canal is over 300 feet, the width at the base is about 250 feet, the depth is 26 feet, and is 100 miles long. The distance from the English channel to Calcutta, by way of the Cape of Good Hope, is about 13,000 miles; by way of the Canal it is only about 8,000 miles. Here is a gain of 5,000 miles, besides securing a much less dangerous passage. By the old route from England to Bombay the distance is 11,500 miles; by the Canal and the Red Sea route it only about 6,200 miles—a saving of 5,300 miles. It is not easy to comprehend even the present value of this improvement; its future importance and value none can foretell. It is one of the grandest achievements of this age of light and progress.

Voices of Grace.

It is marvellous and beautiful to observe how various are the voices of Free Grace.

"I am thirsty," says one. "Come to the waters," she cries.

"I am hungry," says another. "Then eat ye that which is good," she says, "and let your soul delight itself in fatness."

"But I am poor, and have nothing to buy with." "Come, buy wine and milk without money and without price."

"We are weary," sighs the laborers in the sunbeaten fields. "Come unto me," breathes her answer, like a breeze from the waters, "and I will give you rest."

"Cast thy burdens on the Lord, and he will sustain thee," she whispers to the pilgrim ready to faint on the highway.

"Behold the fountain," she cries to the guilty; "the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness."

The Indian Tongue.

Two hundred years ago, John Elliot, a very pious man, translated the Bible into the language of the Indians of Virginia. The poor Indians were very much pleased to have a Bible that they could read, for they did not understand our language. Our Bible looked as queer to them as theirs does to us. That the children may see what kind of words the Indians used, I will here copy a portion of the Lord's Prayer, as it is in their Bible.

"Yowutche yeu nuppenantamook: Nooshun kesukqut, quttianatamunach knowesnonk."

"Payaumooutch kukketassootamoonk, kuttenantamoonk neanach ohkeit neane kesukqut."

There; I think that is all you will be able to read, and all that the compositors, or those who set up type, will care to set up. Those verses are found in the sixth chapter of the Gospel by Matthew. The verses are the ninth and tenth.

Though the words seem very odd to us, they were very pretty and sweet to the Indians, for they taught them to pray for God's kingdom to come on the earth. That will be a better place than their hunting-ground that they used to think they would go to, when they died. When Jesus comes, I think that we shall see many pious Indians there, who gave their hearts to Jesus when they read those words in their Bible, which seem so strange to us.

A Noble Boy.

Mrs. Simons was a widow, and poor. But poverty could not crush her, for she felt that the owner of all things was her Father, and he would withhold no real good.

It took more than a needle, twist and wax, to degrade her in her own esteem, for she knew she was fulfilling, as far as in her lay, her calling, as under the eye of her Master, and that a queen could do no more. It was the one desire of her heart to rear up her son to be a good and useful man, and to this end she toiled—"stitch, stitch, stitch,"—often far into the night to buy his books and to keep him at school. In return, Ned did most of the simple, domestic work, and for this act of filial love, more than for anything else, he was made a byword. His mother, however, encouraged him to bear nobly all this, saying: "We must either bend or break under our trials, my boy; this may be the very thing to make a man of you, teaching you to control your spirit, and to love those who hate and despise you. You have God's promise to the fatherless, my son, and that is worth more than all their fathers' riches. Bow yourself before the storm and it wiil not injure you."

One day, as Ned was walking to school, three boys approached, when one called out, "Hallo, Ned Simms, run up to the stable and tell Patrick to saddle Flash, and bring him to the school house at four o'clock."

"1 would oblige you, Sam," he replied, "if I could without being late, but you see there is but seven minutes before the bell rings."

"You miserable, disobliging fellow!" cried Sam Lent; "what if you are late? This master don't whip."

"But he expects us to be faithful," replied Ned.

"Faithful!" shouted Sam in an angry tone. "Come, go; I want to race round the pond with Bill Hunt here. He says his Clipper will outrun my Flash, and bets his gold pencil on it. Go, and I'll give you sixpence. That would save your mammy an hour's stitching."

Ned felt his ears and cheeks grow very warm at those words, but he set his teeth closely together to keep the unruly member still, lest he might sin against God, and entering the yard, the boys followed close upon his heels.

"Good afternoon, Betsey!" cried Bill Hunt; "I caught you last night taking clothes off the lines, didn't I?"

"No," shouted Ned "you did not catch me, for I didn't run. I looked straight in your face as you rode past, to let you see that I was not ashamed to help mother."

"My lord is brave, indeed!" cried Sam Lent. "Are you going to iron the clothes?"

"Yes," cried Ned, turning and facing them, "if mother wishes me to do so. I have ironed clothes, and washed dishes too, and I expect to do both again."

"He gets dismissed sometimes to hang the tea-kettle on," said Bill Hunt, winking at his comrades, but the bell now rang and Sam Lent had only time to say, "I'll pay you for your impudence to me, you beggar-boy."

This was almost too much for the brave boy, but he bore it meekly and like a Christian. Years rolled on. These boys became men. Ned was blessed and prospered. He was honored and wealthy and able to provide a comfortable home for his dearly-loved mother in her old age. The time came when Sam Lent and Bill Hunt, who had squandered the property their fathers left them, were glad to receive favors from the man who in boyhood they had so badly treated. God has honored Ned because he has returned good for evil; and he has proved in his experience the truth of that proverb of Solomon, "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city;" and he has received the blessing promised to those who honor father and mother.

Christians may well be content with a lean dinner and spare diet in this life, seeing the large dinner the Lamb is preparing will recompense them all.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

REASONING WITH AN UNBELIEVER.

BY DR. JOHN K. FINLEY.

MY DEAR S.: Allow me to urge upon your attention a subject which I regard as of great importance. I feel sure it is the truth, and all truth is important. It is truth, not error, that secures the blessing of God.

I send you by this mail a pamphlet on the "Life Doctrines," as taught in the Bible, written by myself. Do me the favor to read it carefully and with prayer, for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, that he may lead you to the truth, and guard you against error. Read it with the same exercise of your reason and judgment, with which you investigated the doctrines of Millenarianism. It will not require you to give up stronger prejudices than I overcame, when at the request of your late excellent husband, I took up the study of that subject.

The Life doctrines and the Millenarian are very intimately connected—indeed, there is a strong mutual dependance upon each other. To become acquainted with the Life views as taught in the Bible, will not require as much study as do the Millenarian; for, although the latter have much simple didactic teachings for their support, yet they require also to understand a good deal of prophetical interpretation, many of the prophecies being couched in tropical language. On the contrary, the Life doctrines are taught in the plainest and most didactic forms of language, requiring only a knowledge of the most ordinary meaning of words; just such words as we ought to expect God would make use of in order to convey truths, so important to be understood by every one of the most common grades of mind.

Take for example, the account of Adam's probation: if read without prejudice and without any preconceived views, just as we would read any other communication intended to be of use to us, on a subject affecting our highest interest, no one can fail to see that the probation was for the privilege of eating of the "tree of life," and thereby obtaining immortality of existence. This is apparent from the record; for when Adam was cut off from the "tree of life," God gives as the reason, "lest he put forth his hand and eat of the tree of life, and live forever."—Now, to live forever, any body, according to the ordinary meaning of the words, knows is to be immortal. This plain narrative is utterly inconsistent with the usually received doctrine, that man is immortal by natural constitution; for if naturally immortal, access to the tree of life was unnecessary; he would live forever whether he ate of it or not.

Now look at the penalty threatened in case of disobedience—"Thou shalt surely die." How could he die if immortal by nature? The threatening is absurd on the very face of it. That the penalty threatened was literal death is evident from the fact that death did pass upon Adam; and as he was the representative of the race, it has passed upon the whole human race. That he was our representative, is made clear by the statement, "As in Adam all die." Doctor Hodge says, this means all who are in Adam, embracing all of his descendants. Now the usually received doctrine, that eternal life means eternal happiness—and death means not merely the extinction temporarily of life, but also everlasting life in unspeakable torments, is a clear perversion of the language from its ordinary acceptation, and forces upon it a meaning entirely adverse and foreign to what it imports in all common usage.

Let me ask you, does God in his revelations for the benefit of the whole race of man, intend to be understood by them or not? Now, he certainly did not, unless he intended them to understand the language he used, to be received according to its usual meaning. In all of his other preceptive teachings, both in the Old and New Testaments, especially in the various instructions given by our Saviour and his apostles, we receive them according to the plain primary meaning of the words; except, forsooth, when the common expressions, life and death are made use of, and then it is demanded of us to receive them as intended to convey a meaning entirely different from what they convey on all other subjects. I am not now alluding to tropical language, which you know, as well as I do, is resorted to for the purpose of illustrating and enforcing instructions previously given in plain preceptive language, and are not to be regarded as having an independent meaning of their own.

Now, God has neither given us a glossary, or commissioned any body of men to tell us, when we are to understand words as having a different meaning from that commonly belonging to them. But he has given us reason and common sense to enable us to understand them just as we would when coming from any other source; and not only so, but he will hold us responsible for so understanding them. And I am greatly mistaken if he will not hold teachers responsible for perverting their meaning to suit the dogmas of human creeds. If done ignorantly, I think they will suffer loss, when the wood, hay and stubble, although on the true foundation, will be burned up; though they themselves will be saved.

The folly and wickedness of these perversions are evident from the fact, which cannot be denied, that throughout the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelations, the final destiny of the wicked, and the ultimate reward of the righteous, are always spoken of in terms expressive of literal death and literal life. We have the harmony of the whole Bible in support of the life doctrines; whilst the Orthodox, to sustain their creed, do violence to the harmony of the whole Bible. I am not going to discuss these points here; you will find them fairly treated of in the pamphlet.

Let me ask you the question: If God meant as the penalty of sin, what our theologians tell us he did, although he gives not the slightest hint of it, was it not placing upon our first parents a most unreasonable responsibility? Let me illus-rate. What would you think of the conduct of a parent, who should place before his child a basket of beautiful apples, and say to him, I am going away to be gone all day; now if you eat one of those apples, when I come back I will put your hand into the fire, and hold it there until it is entirely burned off. Now suppose one of the servants should presently go into the room and ask the child, Why don't you eat those apples? Because my father said if I did, he will burn my hand off in the fire. The servant replies, Your father did not mean that; he loves you too much to treat you so cruelly. If I were you I would eat them, they are so nice; and besides, you will feel a great deal better after eating them. Yonr father knows they will do you good. The temptation of the apples, and the bad counsel of the servant are too much for the child to resist, and he eats and disobeys the command. The father on his return finds that he has been disobeyed, and executes the threatened punishment. Would not every reasonable being feel and say that this father deserved the execration of the whole universe for placing such an awful responsibility before his child? and would he not be justly regarded as a very fiend? a most unnatural monster of cruelty? And still more inexcusable would his conduct be esteemed, if he had threatened to punish his child by shutting him up in a dark room for twenty-four hours, and then in addition to the infliction of this threat, should hold his hand in the fire until it was consumed, without the slightest hint beforehand that he intended such a punishment. Would it not only be an act of the most horrible cruelty, but also of the vilest injustice?

Now, Orthodoxy accuses our merciful and just heavenly Father, of placing innumerable millions of his children under this unreasonable and unnatural responsibility, and of being infinitely more cruel, vindictive, and unjust than would be such a parent.

Now, my dear S., these things are just so, and cannot be truthfully denied, or fairly refuted. I make these suggestions, hoping to disarm you of such a degree of prejudice, as might otherwise prevent you from seeking the truth from the Bible alone. The Bible itself, in all points affecting our eternal interests, is a great deal plainer and more intelligible, than any of the many clashing creeds of the numerous sects, which have so wickedly rent the body of Christ. Going with the crowd is no evidence of being right; if it had been we should never have had the Christian religion; and when it became corrupted, we should never have had the Reformation.

It is a fearful risk that any one runs, who affirms that we are naturally immortal. Who does it, is guilty of making God a liar. I do not say this—God says it himself. 1 John v. 10–12. "He that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record: that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in (or through) his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son hath not life." Is it not evident that whosoever, after reading this record, shall still affirm that man is immortal in his own nature, makes God a liar? God helping me, I shall never be guilty of this great sin.

The adherence to the Life views may, has, and will lead to reproach and contempt from many good people, the loss of confidence and friendship of many, who heretofore have given us their respect and friendship—but what is all this compared to the love, favor, and approbation of our beloved Master, who has said, "Whosoever is ashamed of me and of my words, of him will the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in the glory of His Father with all the holy angels."

May God guide you, my dear S., into all truth. Truly yours.

NILES, MICH.

WAS SOLOMON'S TEMPLE A TYPE?

BY CHARLES A. HASTINGS.

WITHIN the past year I have listened to some three or four discourses on the building of Solomon's Temple, using it as a type of the great Spiritual Temple which the Lord is to build at his Second Advent; that the stones for Solomon's Temple were cut out and prepared in the mountain; that when it was constructed it came together without the sound of the hammer; that there was no stone wanting, and there was none too many; that every stone fitted its designed place and made the structure complete.

Thus God has, and is preparing a people and laying them aside, so that at the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead, this spiritual house will be complete; that there will be no more to be cut out of the mountain.

Thus, seemingly with triumph to have annihilated the views of an Age to come.

Now, I have thought of this proverb, "He that is first in his own cause, seemeth just; but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him." I am aware that when false premises are taken, let the argument be ever so good, they invariably end in false conclusion.

Now, a temple has some signification; it is for some purpose. Is it supposable that God has nothing in the world to come but a temple? It seems as though some of our brethren have very meagre views of what Jehovah's great work is in the future. Solomon had more than a temple in his kingdom; he built himself a house and was thirteen years in building it. Whereas he was only seven in building the temple. He also built an house for Pharoah's daughter.

Will the Lord have less in his kingdom than had Solomon? Now, if Solomon's Temple and the stones in the temple are a type, may not the furniture in the temple be typical also? In which was the "molten sea which stood on twelve brazen oxen, and ten lavers of brass and shovels, and basins, and vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many; also vessels of gold, the altar of gold, and the table of gold whereupon the shewbread was, and the candlesticks of pure gold, five on the right side and five on the left, before the oracle; with flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs of gold, and bowls, and the snuffers, and the basins, and the spoons, and the censers of pure gold; also, two cherubims whose wings, of each cherub were ten cubits, extending from one wall to the other, meeting together in the centre, over the mercy seat." Yes, says one, these cherubs with their wings, are typical of the time of the extent of mercy; the first cherub reaching from the time of Adam down to the first advent of Christ; the second spanning the time from the first to the second advent.

Now, possibly this may prove more than some of our good brethren would be pleased to have proved; for the length of the cherub's wings were equal, meeting together in the centre; the first spanned four thousand years, the second being equal, must span two thousand years more of mercy yet in the future.

Again, if Solomon's Temple is typical, why not the time of its building be also typical? This temple was seven years in building, and as we are living near the close of the six thousand years there must be yet another thousand years, either before or after the Second Advent, and our brethren may take which horn of the dilemma they choose.

Now, suppose we admit for argument's sake, that the position of our brethren in some respects, on this type is correct; may it not be explained in harmony with the Scriptures, and also with the view of an age to come?

Let us go back to the time when Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt, and came to the desert of Sinai, and the Lord spake to Moses, saying, "Tell the children of Israel, now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me, above all people, for all the earth is mine, and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, an holy nation." We learn from the history of this people that they soon began to murmur, and were a rebellious and stiff-necked people; so much so, that God suffered none but Caleb and Joshua, who came out of Egypt that were over twenty years old, to even enter the Land of Promise. And after this, those who did enter the land, were for a time prosperous, and the Lord blessed them with numerous blessings and led them with tender care; yet they soon forsook him; they hearkened not unto his voice, and kept not his covenant; they followed and worshipped strange gods, gods of the heathen nations. The Psalmist says in the 81st Psalm, "Oh, that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways! I should soon have subdued their enemies and turned my hand against their adversaries. The haters of the Lord should have submitted themselves unto him, but their time should have endured forever." But, for their wickedness, God suffered them to be divided into two kingdoms. The ten tribes, who were called Israel, had their capital in Samaria; and for their idolatry, he caused or suffered the Assyrian king to besiege their city and take them captive into the north country, into the cities of the Medes, and have since been considered the ten lost tribes.

The two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, who went by the name of Judah, had their capital in Jerusalem, and for their idolatry they were taken captive and caused to serve seventy years in Babylon. But the prophecy had been uttered that "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." And that this might have its fulfilment, they were permitted to return and to establish their former Mosaic law and worship, and thus continued until the coming of Christ. And as they were exceedingly hypocritical and received not their Messiah, he says to them, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." What kingdom is this? Evidently, the kingdom of priests, before spoken of —this spiritual temple; for Peter writing to the strangers scattered abroad, says, "Ye also, as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood; ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, (a kingly priesthood) an holy nation, a peculiar people, which in time past were not a people but are now the people of God." And James says, "Simeon hath declared how God, at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them, a people for his name. To this agree the words of the prophet, 'After this I will return and build again the Tabernacle of David which is fallen, and I will build up the ruins thereof, that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles on whom my name is called saith the Lord.'"

Again, this spiritual house may be represented by the 144,000. "After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude which no man could number." Like the vessels which were in the temple, "which were unweighed for they were exceeding many." Also, the bride, the Lamb's wife, who hath "made herself ready." "And blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." Now, it is not customary for the bridegroom to marry the guests.

Again, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me, in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father on his throne." "He that overcometh, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." And the Prophet Isaiah says, "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." Who will they reign over? over one another? Christ says, in the Apocalypse it is the nations. Let Daniel also answer, vii, 14, 27. "And there was given him dominion and glory aud a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him." "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

Mark the expression, "all nations shall serve and obey." This does not look like instantaneous destruction. Many more texts might be added of like import, but one more and I forbear. The Psalmist says, "Let the saints be joyful in glory, let them sing aloud upon their beds, let the high praises of God be in their mouths, and a two-edged sword in their hands to execute vengeance upon the heathen and punishments upon the people, to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written; this honor have all his saints, Praise ye the Lord."

Thus we see there are at least two classes if not more, in the world to come. If the saints represent the lively stones in that grand and glorious temple, the furniture and the appendages connected with Solomon's Temple may represent something more. But the offer in this age is, he that overcometh, shall be clothed with immortality and be associated in the grand cabinet of Jehovah. Well might we lay our hand to our mouths and our faces in the dust and cry, Unworthy — unworthy. Yet, it is all of grace through our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, "who hath redeemed us by his own blood, and hath made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."

THE KINGDOM.

BY CLARENDON KELLY.

[Concluded.]

WE will now examine into the character of the first and second deaths. Paul says it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this [death] the judgment.—Heb. ix. 27; and in Rom. v. 12 he informs us that this appointment was to all Adam's posterity. "Death passed upon all men," says he. This is the first death, because he says it came to all men through Adam. It embraces all men, and reaches from the sin that introduced it into the world, to its final extinction in the lake of fire. During this long period—the creation itself being subject to vanity—all men have the sentence of death in their members, and die irrespective of character or deeds. But when the great white throne appears, this first death gives up the dead that are in it. Its term of office having expired, it can hold its prisoners no longer. The first death, then, is not the final state of any man (this is not an argument for a re-living of the wicked), it can only hold its prisoners until he who has the keys of death and hades demands that they be given up. In the mean time, however, all men out of Christ are in a state of death. Hence the apostle says, "We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren. He that loves not his brother abides in death."—John iii. 14. Again: "Because we thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead."—2 Cor. v. 14. "Let the dead bury their dead." —Matt. viii. 22. So we see that all men are by nature in the first death; they are his prisoners, and when they cease to breathe the breath of life, death casts them into the hades. Therefore, when the great white throne appears, both death and hades are represented as having prisoners to deliver up. Hence this is the "time of the dead to be judged;" (Rev. xi. 18), for John saw none but dead standing before the throne; (see Rev. xx. 12); consequently those having "passed over from death into life" belong not to that crowd of dead ones, for having thus passed over, they constitute the first resurrection.

But to what do death and hades deliver up their prisoners? To come before the throne to be judged, says one. I think not, for they are not surrendered up until after they stood before the throne, and "were judged out of the things which had been written in the books, according to their works."—Rev. xx. 12. To what, then, were they given up? Those whose names were found written in the book of life were set at liberty, i. e., given up to life as subjects of Christ's kingdom. Those whose names were not found in the book of life were passed over into the second death state, called the lake of fire, into which death (the first death), and hades are also cast, i. e., that these states are forever done away or destroyed; consequently, in the new earth men will not die by reason of the "sentence of death in their members," for "the death" (the first death), no longer is; it was cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death. In the new earth men will only die in consequence of a special death sentence, passed on them individually, for their own transgressions. They will die the second death, a death preceded by a judgment. It will be "everlasting destruction." They will be the "accursed sinners," being a hundred years old, i. e., the child that dies having arrived at the age of a hundred years. But this second death is not dying a second time.

The differeuce, then, between the first and the second deaths is this: The first death passed upon Adam and all his posterity, through him, and is followed by a judgment deciding the future destiny of those in death. The second death reaches no farther than the individual transgressor, and is always the effect of a special sentence passed upon the individual, as saith the prophet Jeremiah, "In those days they shall say no more, the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But every one shall die for his own iniquity," etc., ch. xxxi. 29. If second death meant second dying, "death and hades" would have to die a second time, for they were cast into the lake of fire, "which is the second death, the lake of fire."—See Diaglott—Tregelles and B. U. That sin will be the exception, and sinners comparatively few in the new earth, I believe; but that there will be sinners, and death continue to be the "wages of sin," is clearly taught in many passages in the Scriptures, else I have very much mistaken their import. Not the gross sensualism of fallen and depraved humanity, certainly, but occasional violations of the law of the kingdom; and why not? Adam transgressed the law; why should the inhabitants of the new earth be entirely free from transgression, seeing the kingdom is the restoration? Besides, the very idea of law has associated with it the idea of transgression and penalty, and the prophet says, the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

I now pass to the remaining proposition, viz., The restoration will include both the city of Ezk. xlviii. 30–35, and the one seen by John (Rev. xxi. and xxii.) If the reader will take his Bible and turn to the xlviith ch. of Ezk., and commencing at the 13th v., read to the end of ch. xlviii., he will be convinced, I think, that the prophet is speaking of a literal land and city. From the 15th to the 20th v. is a description of the boundaries of the land of Israel. Any one can take a good map of the land of Canaan and trace it out, as it will be in the restoration, according to Ezekiel's description. The xlviiith ch., down to the 29th v., is taken up in parcelling out the land to the twelve tribes, and laying out the grounds and locating the city. Vs. 31—34 is a description of the gates, showing that each tribe will have its own gate for entrance and egress, and in v. 35 of ch. xlviii. we learn that "the name of the city from that day shall be JEHOVAH-SHAMAH, or, The I AM is there." But we would ask in what sense is God there? Turn to Rev. xxi. 2–4. "I saw the holy city New Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."—See also vs. 9, 10, "And I heard a great voice out of the throne saying, behold the TABERNACLE OF GOD is with men, and he will dwell with them [in his tabernacle] and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them their God."

John saw the holy city—the bride, the Lamb's wife—those of "the churches" that overcame, coming down out of heaven to the new earth; and immediately he hears a great voice out of the throne, saying, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them." This holy city, then, is not only the bride the Lamb's wife, but it is the tabernacle of God in which he will dwell with men in the new earth, as the apostle saith: "In whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God, through the Spirit."—Eph. ii. 22. "But Christ as a Son over his own house: whose house are we if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end."—Heb. iii. 6. Therefore the I AM will dwell in Ezk's city, it being the metropolis of the kingdom of Christ. He will be there in his tabernacle—the holy city—the bride the Lamb's wife—the 144,000 redeemed from the earth. Was there anything like this in the beginning—before the curse?

In the "Dictionary of the Holy Scriptures," published by the American Tract Society, I read the following under the word God: "The proper word for God is ELOHIM, which is plural in its form." By consulting the Hebrew concordance, it will be seen that this word, Elohim, is the one from which God is translated in all the first and second chapters of Genesis. David says, in Psa. xcvii. 7, "Worship him all ye gods." And in this passage the word gods is translated from the same Hebrew word, viz., Elohim.

Paul, in Heb. i. 6, quotes this saying of David's thus, "Let all the angels, i. e., messengers of God, worship him." So what David calls Elohim, Paul calls messengers of God. From these and other passages it would appear that the creation was the work of the one God, operating through his messengers—the messengers of his power. And Adam is represented as holding familiar intercourse with God, i. e., with Elohim—the plural manifestation of the one God. In the glorious restoration, Christ and his brethren —the 144,000—constituting the "Tabernacle of God," will be the Elohim: their location being in Jerusalem, the name of the city is changed to one which means the I AM is there. And the nations will walk by the light that they (Christ and the saints) will shed abroad, and be subject to their rule. So we read in Ezek. xxxvii. 26–28: "Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them" (the children of Israel; see v. 21), "it shall be an everlasting covenant with them, and I will place them and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. My TABERNACLE shall be with them; yea I will be their God, i. e., Elohim, and they shall be my people; and the heathen shall know that I the I AM do sanctify Israel when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore." This is the kingdom of Christ—the restoration of the original plan and order of things, which pleased God so much that he pronounced it "very good"—the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world—the inheritance of the nations of them that are saved.

BURNING OF THE WORLD: A CORRECTION.

BY HON. D. H. CHASE.

BR. STORRS: Permit me to correct your error regarding my "position." I was accidentally involved in a public controversy with Messrs. Stuart, Pile and others, a few years since, and a brief report appeared in the HERALD. My arguments against them included most of those you urge in your last number against my supposed views. I have long believed, with you, that "the theory of a universal destruction of the earth's surface by fire . . . 'at the second advent of Christ' is subversive of all faith in prophecy."

In the old discussion, my explanation of the "Transfiguration" showed my views fully. Moses represented the children of the resurrection; Elias the changed living saints; Peter, James and John probationary mortals; Christ the glorious King; the whole being an epitome of the millennial kingdom, in which all these classes, mortals and immortals, dwell together on the earth.

In every dispensation of human probation, the results have shown and will show, the truth of Christ's declaration that few find the narrow way of life. Eden was left tenantless; only eight were saved from the deluge; the chosen seed of Abraham lost their temple, their city, and were uprooted as a nation. Great and terrible judgments are prophesied for the closing up of the present "Christian Dispensation." There seems to remain only one more dispensation of a probationary character, the Millennial. Under the personal administration of Christ and the immortal saints, the progress of men in knowledge, power and happiness will be wonderful. Satan will be bound for a long period. Wars will cease. The earth will be filled with people. It may easily happen that man's great achievements will beget pride. Through pride even angels are said to have sinned and fallen. "They kept not their first estate." Satan will, at last, "be loosed for a little season," "and will go forth to seduce the nations that are in the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, to assemble them for battle; whose number is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth and encompassed the camp of the saints and the beloved city."

The saints, as ever before, are the small minority. How vividly the types foreshadowed this result! Noah and his family, shut up in the ark, encompassed by scoffing and hostile nations; the Christians besieged in Jerusalem.

Fire from heaven destroys the innumerable hosts of Satan. Probation ends. The final resurrection and judgment are followed by the casting of death and the grave into the "Lake of Fire."

The deluge of water was a thorough work. "The waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; and all the high hills that were under the whole heavens, were covered." Thus the second heavens and earth were purified for the new trial of probationary men, for a sinning race as we too well know.

This second set in the series has already been widely contaminated by the contact of the wicked. The process is not ended, and the future will doubtless witness the occupation and defilement of every part. Will any partial cleansing by fire suffice to prepare the third heavens and earth to be the eternal dwelling place of righteousness? If the wicked are to be reduced to ashes, and their graves to be cleansed in the lake of fire, what part of the earth's surface could be spared?

My conviction is that Peter did not use figurative language nor overstate the facts when he wrote, "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up."

Dr. Dick wrote nearly forty years ago. Geology was then just beginning to awaken scientific interest. It is not surprising that he appeared to consider the earth as a solid mass. Yet even then he recognized the marks of heat and fusion in basaltic rocks.

Truly yours.

MIDDLETOWN, CONN., Dec. 14, 1869.

Note by the Editor.

We are glad to find we were mistaken in regard to Br. Chase's position as to the time of the burning of the world. The "Resolution" which forbids replying to a correspondent in the same issue, prevents us saying anything on his position, as now stated, this week; and as the burning is at least a thousand years off, we think to defer our reply till some time in the distant future.

GATHERED GEMS.

GOD hears the heart without words, but he never hears words without the heart.

We should view all men in the clear sunlight of charity.

We often omit the good that we might do, in consequence of thinking about that which is out of our power to do.

If you be poor in this world you should be rich in faith; and if you be rich in this world, be poor in spirit.

When the multitude applaud you, seriously ask yourself what harm you have done; when they censure you, what good.

If the sun is down, look up at the stars; if the earth is dark, keep your eyes on heaven. With God's presence and God's promise, a man or child may be cheerful.

The highest flames are the most tremulous; and so the most holy and eminent Christians are more full of reverence, and fear, and modesty, and humility.

A saint is not free from sin—that is his burden; a saint is not free to sin—that is his blessing. Sin is in him—that is his lamentation; his heart is not in sin—that is his consolation.

A broken and contrite heart unlocks our inward senses, and makes us see, and hear, and feel the things which could no more be seen, heard, or felt before, than a man in a deep sleep can hear, see, or feel the things that are said and done about him.

Fear not, trembling believer. The bark which bears thy spiritual destinies is in better hands than thine; a golden chain of covenant love links it to the throne. That chain can never snap asunder. He who holds it in his hand gives thee this as the pledge of thy safety: "Because I live, ye shall live also."—Selected by W. H. S.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 22, 1869.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

THE "LIFE AND ADVENT UNION" decided at its first anniversary, (1864), that 48 numbers should constitute a volume. This was done when other papers and periodicals were increasing the price of their issues. It was thought best not to do so, with the HERALD, but to adopt the above measure till such time as the paper should become self-sustaining. That point is not yet reached. We have practiced dividing the four omissions, at Christmas, first week in May, "Fourth of July," at our anniversary, and at the close of the volume. Our next issue will be January 5, 1870.

Will our friends see if they cannot, at least, send enough new subscribers to fill the places of those whose names we may have to drop before that time. To new subscribers commencing with January 5, who send us $1 50, for the remainder of the present volume, we will send a set of the numbers of the past quarter gratis, so far as we can supply them. But we shall not send any of them unless specially requested to do so. No time should be lost.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

THIS number completes the first quarter of the present volume, and terminates the time of "three months" subscribers who, of course, will not expect the continuance of the HERALD unless a remittance is made to the office. Some others who, we supposed, would wish their papers continued, from the last volume, have as yet, made no payment on this volume. As this quarter has now closed, we shall regulate our mail-book preparatory to the second quarter, before our next issue. Those who have paid nothing, and do not do something before January, 1870, must not complain if our paper ceases to visit them. We send out no "Bills:" our remedy for non-paying subscribers is, after waiting on them a while, if nothing is heard from them, to drop their name, and cease to send the paper. Injustice may sometimes be done in this case: they may have paid more than appears on our books, as all of us are liable to mistakes: therefore, if any are deprived of the paper, who believe themselves still entitled to it, and will let us know, we will rectify all such mistakes as far as possible.

CHURCH LORDSHIPS.

THE following sentiments we find as the utterance of one who would have a creed, or declaration of sentiments by the churches, and enforce them too. He says:

"I insist that bodies of men, and churches as well as other associations, have a right, like individuals, to promulgate their sentiments—that Christianity, as a rational religion, has its fundamental first principles, a rejection of which is the rejection of Christianity itself—and that churches have, in consequence, a right to know the sentiments of their members, and to reject those that are considered fundamentally wrong in principle—the same right, in this respect, that temperance and other volunteer associations claim and exercise. Be it so that they may judge wrong. This does not take away their duty and their right to judge, and to act according to their best judgment. This they are bound to do. And to do it is no infringement of other men's rights. It is only the necessary exercise of their own."

Against such lordships over men's minds we protest: First.—We dissent from the idea of likening the church of God to any "other associations." It is unlike any and all other associations, in its organization. Other associations are wholly of man's organization, and may be entered into or not, without sin, according as the object to be accomplished, in the judgment of the individual may be in agreement with the law of God or not. The church of God is entirely a different matter. He has never empowered any man, nor body of men, to organize his church. That is a work which the great Head of it has retained in his own hands. "Upon this rock will I build my church," etc. "The Lord added to the church," etc. And if the Lord has added a man to his church, shall man, or any body of men, take upon themselves to attempt to thrust that man out of the Church of God? Let them first show their authority for bringing any man into it. They have neither authority nor power to do it. They may be instruments in the hands of God in accomplishing that work; but the work, itself, of adding to the church of God, is the Lord's own work. Let men beware how they attempt to take the work out of his hands.

No man can neglect to become a member of the church of God without sin; because it is sin only, that keeps him out of that church; the moment he becomes reconciled to God, that moment he becomes a member of the church of God. Let any one show the contrary, if they can. It does not depend upon the will of our fellow men whether we shall belong to the church of God or not. The idea that men can receive into, and turn out of, the church of God, has kindled up all the religious persecutions that have been the disgrace of Christianity since the days of the apostles.

We would as soon ask admission to the church of Rome as to any other church that claims the right to decide whether we may be a member or not. The principle is the same in all. It is a "sitting" in the place of "God, showing" itself "that" it "is God." The principle is an assumption of a prerogative that belongs to God alone.

To compare the Church of God to "temperance and other volunteer associations," we conceive, is very much to lower down its high and holy character. The church of God is not of man, nor does it depend for its existence upon the will of any body of men. It exists by the will of God; sustained by his power; built up by his Son, who is head over all things to it. And all, in every place, that Christ has "received" are members of it; and they are not dependant upon the will of a body, calling themselves a church—and which, perhaps, as a body, is corrupt—for their membership in the church of God. Those bodies, organized after the fashion that the above extract speaks of, are not churches of God; they are as distinct and separate from that church, as "temperance and other associations." And, we apprehend, the author of the above statement will see that he has placed the churches, he speaks of, on the same ground of those "other associations," having no more authority for their existence than they, and no more claim to be called churches than they. And the very fact of the necessity of the existence of those other associations, of which he speaks, shows that the churches that he refers to, as bodies, have not the vital power of Christianity in them; they are but the shadow of Christianity, and hardly that; for they give no refreshment to a soul truly alive to all the great and holy principles of reforming the world. Hence the living souls that are in them have to seek some "other associations" to find vent for the holy breathings that proceed from their hearts.

Now, having said thus much, perhaps we can grant all for which this writer contends, if he will admit, that the churches he speaks of, are not identical with the church of God. That is, admit they are merely of human invention, like those "other associations." If that point is admitted, then we say, his reasoning is correct. But if that is not admitted, and he maintains that they are the churches of God, then, in our judgment, his reasoning is false. Men have not the right to say who shall be members of the church of God, nor the right, or power, to shut out of that church; and to attempt such a work is to invade the rights of God; though it may be done ignorantly in unbelief; nothing else can excuse it. We do not contend but that men may and ought to be rejected from Christian fellowship for practices clearly condemned by the Bible; and so a man may, and ought to be stript of the privileges of society who violates the wholesome laws of society.

But suppose the work of imprisoning or hanging men should be commenced, because they may be considered "fundamentally wrong in principle," would not the author of the sentiments we oppose, himself cry out stoutly, if he happened to be in the minority, and of course among the proscribed class? Would he not say he had a right to the privileges of society, on the score of his own judgment that he is a man, so long as he demeans himself as a peaceable citizen? And where is his authority for rejecting any man from the privileges of the church of God, so long as his conduct is that which the gospel does not condemn? Is he in such a hurry to "root up the tares" that he cannot wait even till the "fruit" appears? "Let both grow together till the harvest:" Christ will take care to "gather his wheat into his garner," and "burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

NEARING HOME.

WHAT a blessed thought! How it thrills the pilgrim's heart, waiting in a land of sad disappointment, of death and mourning! But we are nearing home—to meet Jesus—who hath loved us and suffered so much for us; to meet the heavenly hosts that have been so interested in our salvation; yes, to clap glad hands in the kingdom of glory, and join our voices in that heavenly anthem of praise and thanksgiving to Him who hath saved us, "as the voice of mighty thunderings." Dear reader: do you wonder that we often get homesick when contemplating this? Do you wonder that "the bride" longs and sighs for the Master's return?

But our eyes turn to earth, and our heart is saddened with the gloomy mantle of sin that covers it every where. All manner of iniquity abounds, and it really seems that we are now realizing the antitype of the days before the flood. God destroyed the antediluvian world, because of the iniquity that filled the land, and Christ gives it as a type of the end of this dispensation. We have passed all the landmarks, and now, through the gloom and deep darkness of sin, we hear the cry echoed over hill and dale, by the faithful watchmen of Zion, "We're almost home!" It thrills every sinew, braces every nerve, revives the drooping heart, and brings untold joy and gladness into the weary heart. Jesus is coming! "Then the sick will bloom with health, the dumb sing forth the praises of their God, the blind receive their sight, the lame leap like an hart, and the earth be filled with the glory of God as the waters cover the sea."

Listen to the author of "Solitude Sweetened" tell of his loving and longing for his Lord's appearing:

"But how much does it rather become me, if an heir of God, an expectant of bliss, and a candidate for glory, to be waiting for him who will appear the second time without sin unto salvation, to be hastening unto the day of the Lord and crying: "Why is his chariot so long in coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariot?" When will these empyrean heavens divide to let my Lord descend? When will these celestial doors fly open that the exalted one may come in all his state; in his own and in his Father's glory, with his holy angels? When shall the starry way of eternal communion be stretched out between the highest heaven and the "new earth" wherein shall dwell righteousness? When shall I begin to behold him in all his glory, whom eye hath not seen and see thee without a cloud, who art altogether lovely? When shall my soul be revived with the fragrance of "The Rose of Sharon" in the Paradise of God, and sit down with great delight under the "Tree of life," the plant of renown, and eat of thy immortalizing fruit, and drink of thy refined wine? When shall I join my songs with the anthem of eternity, and mingle my grateful notes with the harpers around the throne? When shall the hiding hill, the intervening heights be molten down by the beatific vision of thy blessed self? When shall I enter into the joy of our Lord, walk with thee in white, and be satisfied with thy likeness? Then shall I know thee as I expect, praise thee as I aspire after, and love as I would."

Such is the language of a sanctified heart, when contemplating the sure promises of God. Should not a consideration of his promises inspire a responsive feeling in our heart? We have the promise of being made like unto Christ's glorious body, of having a right to the tree of life, and of having God himself, dwell with us, and wipe all tears from our eyes. Oh, ravishing thought,—no more sorrow, no more pain, no more death; but a sweet rest; glorious rest; and as lasting as eternity. Reader, how thoroughly are you preparing to partake of these things?

"We are tired and weary and fain would rest,
Away from earth's cares, in the land of the blessed."

THE OVERTHROW OF PAPAL ROME.

BY WILLIAM H. SPENCER.

"She saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." —Rev. xviii. 7, 8.

IT may be justly claimed that one great aim of the Revelation made to John, was to give the Church light regarding that great apostate power—the Papal Church—represented symbolically as a harlot woman, "drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus;" and no wonder, when John saw her, "he wondered with great admiration."—(Rev. xvii. 6.) And probably, no two events are set forth in the book of symbols so prominently as the sudden and fearful overthrow of this harlot church, immediately followed by the glorious exaltation of the true church—"the bride, the Lamb's wife."

We cannot read the sad details of her infamous career, without feeling in our hearts that she hath fulfilled the prophetic picture, and that now she is rapidly approaching her utter overthrow by the Almighty power of God: for, truly, "all nations have drunk of the wine of her fornications." Her "sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities."—Rev. xviii. 3, 5. We remember Pagan Rome, and the painful details of persecution by Nero, Domitian, Diocletian, Julian,—and others who have made themselves famous in slaughtering God's people,—are fresh in our minds. But what is this compared with the history of Papacy? She hath slain her tens of thousands, where Pagan Rome has one. Let the blood of 50,000,000 who have fallen under her blasting power, affirm this statement.

In her last death throes she calls into council, her devoted votaries; but shall her Ecumenical Council infuse new life into her failing system? Does God's fearful hour of vengeance tarry? Is it not near at hand? Let the immediate events of the future answer. God will speedily avenge "the blood of his servants." He has not forgotten her. Though for 1260 years she was decked in meretricious splendor, and "by her sorceries were all nations deceived," yet the end of her fearful career draweth nigh. Her dreadful cup of abominations is filled to overflowing; but she shall be rewarded "double," for all that she has done. As "much as she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow" will God give her.

Now, mark, dear reader, that her headlong plunge, from her queenly position into woe and utter ruin, will take place at a moment when, in her blasphemous pride, she shall say in her heart, "I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Does she not occupy such a position this very day? Surrounded by her devoted children in Rome; though rebellion is rampant in her household, her queenly position denied, and she warned of widowhood and sorrow, yet when beholding a large number of her deluded subjects gathered around her, the lightning speed of the telegraph brings us her proud declaration, "THERE IS NO CAUSE TO FEAR BECAUSE THE CHURCH IS STRONGER THAN EVER BEFORE." Can we find a more literal fulfilment of John's prophecy, — the last link of the prophetic chain?

That "great city" awaits her doom. The mighty Vesuvius is nigh, Ætna is not far away; and is it not, at least, probable, that in the very height of her bold pride, these great volcanic fires will do Jehovah's bidding? Have not the clarion notes rung through the land, "Come out of her, my people," for "her plagues shall come in one day, [suddenly] and she shall be utterly burnt with fire." "MENE! MENE! TEKEL!" is written in flaming wrath upon her brow, and God will "give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath."

"For in one hour is she made desolate." In an hour of her haughty pride, her plagues shall come; in an hour her magnificence, her splendor and glory will be despoiled; in an hour her riches be brought to nought, "and the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her," and "shall stand afar off, for the fear of her torment;" in an hour shall her bold blasphemy cease, her witchcraft and sorceries be blotted out, and "the kings of the earth. . . shall bewail her and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning, standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city, Babylon, that mighty city, for in one hour is thy judgment come;" yes, in one hour will she sink down into the black sea of death, as hopeless and wretched as Sodom and Gomorrah.

"Rejoice over her, thou heaven;
Ye prophets and holy apostles;
Your blood hath Jehovah avenged."

Probably, the brief space of time that will remain after Rome's overthrow, will be a scene of fearful consternation among the nations; a "time of trouble such as never was, since there was a nation even to that same time, and at that time shall be delivered every one found written in the book." Dan. xii. 1. To my mind, the downfall of Rome is the great event just before us, inaugurating a series of thrilling and rapidly occurring events which end this dispensation by the appearing of "the Lord of life and glory," and "the heavens departed as a scroll when it is rolled together, and every mountain and island were moved out of their places."

Dear reader, let me assure you by the word of God, that the scenes of earth are rapidly closing. I affectionately request you to consider this fact, and awake to new diligence that you make your calling and election sure. The next great event—Rome's overthrow—is sure to inaugurate "the great day of God's wrath." "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly," is my prayer.

A BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.

"IF there should break one doubt on the mind of any Christian student, as to the divine power that will be personally wielded by the Son of God on earth, and the period when the world will in reality be brought into righteous submission to the grace of his sceptre, let him ponder the fourth and fifth verses of Psalm cxxxviii. The words are as follows: 'All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O Lord! when they hear the words of thy mouth. Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the Lord; for great is the glory of the Lord!' What must be the manner of the glory that can produce such results? In what age of the world's existence have such things been known? Where is the volume of history that can produce a record of the willing acquiescence of the rulers and princes of the earth to the will of the Lord, or of submission and joyous conformity to his 'ways?' Let Psalm ii. 1–3 be contrasted, where there is a recorded principle of their antagonism to the heavenly rule. Yet shall they 'serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling.' But when? The prophetic voice says that it will be when God's Son is 'set as King upon his holy hill of Zion,' and the inhabitants of the earth are being taught righteousness through his judgments.—Psa. ii. 5–9; Isai. xxvi. 9. Not until the glorious advent of the Son of man, with power, will the kingdom of the world be under the Royalty of Jehovah and his Christ (Rev. xi. 15); for hitherto in his absence he has never been acknowledged as 'Governor among the nations;' nor will he till the time comes for him to assume it according to the decree of the Most High, AS HIS RIGHT.—Ezek. xxi. 27."—Gen. H. Goodwin.

THE HUMAN WILL.

BY Z. CAMPBELL.

"For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."—John vi. 38.

EVERY living creature has an organized body and every living body has a living head. The head contains the brain the sensorium of the creature, from which spring all his thoughts and actions, and hence the power that moves the body.

Now, concerning the church of God, it is one body having many members organized under one living Head, who presides over and governs all the members of the body. This great, living Head has said, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." And now, since the Head has no will of its own, it is self-evident that the body should have none of its own. This brings us to the grand difficulty: almost every member has a will of its own. This is almost an insurmountable barrier to the smooth course of Christianity. The human will the anti-christian monster, the enemy of God and satan's most successful engine.

It was to gratify the human will that our first parents sinned in Eden and brought death into the world, with all the ills that flesh is heir to. But says the Christian, "My will is to do the will of God." Right, but the will of God you can never know until your own will is nailed to the cross and taken out of the way.

Here lies the difficulty: you are very willing to do the will of God, but you are determined to make his will harmonize with your own. This should not be; we should conform our own wills into the will of God, and try to make ourselves more like God, and not to make God like ourselves.

The devil has drawn so thick a veil over our eyes that few can see the strength of the human will. Some do not believe in the second personal coming of Christ, and contend the Scripture does not teach it. True, it does not teach it to them, and the only reason is, their will is that he should not "so come in like manner as he went" up. Others cannot read the unconscious state of the dead, in the Bible, because their will is to live while they are dead. Other some think they read in it the mortal resurrection of all men, merely because they will have the wicked die twice. It is not until we are as willing that a thing should be one way as another, that we are capable of judging between truth and error.

Take heed and beware of the human will. Never make up your mind that a thing is true or false until you are sure you have no will about it. Take away the human will, and the Bible would read to all alike, and there would be but one faith, one hope, and one baptism. Many who read this, will recollect they once opposed truths which they now believe, and are blessed in believing: and they will recollect, too, that while opposing what they now believe, they had a will that these things should not be so; but as soon as their own wills were removed, they saw the truth clearly.

Now, such may have a further will, which remains uncrucified; if so, they cannot receive further truth until it is nailed to the cross and taken out of the way.

Now, since none of us dare to say we have all the truth, none of us ought to oppose a new idea because it does not harmonize with our will, but let the word of God decide. The Saviour said to his disciples, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." John xvi. 12. Is the church in her present, erring state, better able to bear them now? I think not, for there was never more self-will than now. What, then, is to be done? Are we to box up in a creed, and receive nothing more and nothing less, but drive per fas et nefas?

There is more truth ahead, but we can never reach it until we do as we have done, take our own will out of the way. Every step we have advanced beyond the strictest orthodox has been by submitting our will to the word of God. The human will is opposed to God, and must be taken out of the way before the church can be one with Christ, as he and the Father are one. To crucify the human will, is the great work of the Christian. He that subdues his own will, does more than he who subdues empires. Alexander subdued kingdoms but had not power to subdue his own will.

Little children, you know not how much you may enjoy when you get your own indomitable will securely nailed to the cross. Just think of it—the Son of God, the Saviour of lost man, no will of his own! No; not my will, but thine be done in all things.

Had you not rather it would be a fair day when you have planned business abroad, than to be stormy? "Yes." Then you have a will, and if it storms, God has crossed your will, and he is to blame for sending the storm, or else you are to blame for having a will about it.

And how is it with you that labour in the vineyard? had you not rather your appointments would fall on pleasant weather, in which you get a full audience and a full collection? "Yes;" then you have a will, and you forget that God takes care of the sparrows without the aid of a contribution box, and you account yourselves of less value than a sparrow.

I believe we are coming to a time in which we shall need a more perfect resignation to the Divine Will. Let us therefore rally on this point; resigning ourselves implicitly to the will of God in all things. I am satisfied that we should enjoy more,—be better Christians, and have more union among us, if we had less will of our own and more of the will of God.

LANDAFF, N. H., (among the mountains), Dec. 9, 1869.

FALSE CHRISTS.

OUR blessed Saviour, in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, and, just before his crucifixion, uttered this prediction: "Take heed that no man deceive you; for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. . . If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false CHRISTS, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before."

Something of the kind thus foretold 1800 years ago, is just now exciting some attention in Poland. A man has appeared in a country district there, who pretends to be Jesus of Nazareth come again for the salvation of the world. He has selected twelve followers, who go about the country with him as apostles; and he pretends, in the usual manner of such people, to work miracles. He devotes himself particularly to the healing of the sick. All this has had a great effect upon the Polish peasantry; the would-be-prophet and his followers have been everywhere received by them with open arms. He is now turning his success into political capital. He denounces the peasantry for their indifference to the rising of 1863, calls upon them to repent and prepare for new efforts, and prophesies the speedy re-establishment of the old Polish kingdom. The authorities might look with indifference upon the religious pretensions of the impostor, but they naturally do not feel quite so easy about passionate appeals to the people to rise against the existing government. They are, therefore, using all means to put the movement down. They are, apparently, finding the task a somewhat more difficult one than they at first anticipated. It may seem like a trifling affair, to be mentioned in connection with the solemn words of our Lord's great prophetic discourse, but it is not without significance in these critical times.—Prophetic Times.

THE ECUMENICAL COUNCIL.

THE long-talked-of Ecumenical Council was opened at Rome on last week. The opening day, December 8, was unpropitious, the rain falling at intervals, but enormous crowds lined the streets through which the grand procession passed. The Pope was in fine health. He was followed by seven hundred bishops, all clad in the full insignia of their ranks. The grand cortege passed into the hall of the Council amid the ringing of bells and the thundering of cannon from the forts of St. Angelo and Mount Aventine. The galleries of the Hall of Council were occupied by the sovereigns and princes now in Rome, by the members of the corps diplomatique, and other notables. It is noteworthy, however, that not one of all the temporal authorities has a special representative to the Council. The ceremonies excelled in grandeur and magnificence any that have taken place in Rome within the present century.

On Friday the Pope delivered an allocution before the assembled bishops. He expressed his satisfaction in being able to open the Council on the day which had been fixed, and finding that the bishops came in such numbers to aid the Holy See, helped by the Holy Spirit. False human science and impiety, he said, were never before so strong as at the present day; for they were well organized, and hid themselves behind pretended aspirations for liberty. But there was nothing to fear, because the church was mighty. Time would remedy the present evils. The Holy father concluded with an invocation to the Holy Ghost, the Blessed Virgin, and Saints Peter and Paul.

On Saturday the Council adjourned until after Epiphany, January 6. Telegrams on Monday announced that the French Government has informed the Council that infallibility will release France from the obligations of the Concordat.—Christ. Adv. of Dec. 16.

THE COMING OF OUR KING.

THE coming of Jesus is a precious theme, never ceasing to afford consolation and refreshment. It is not soon tiresome and exhausted of interest, but a perpetual fountain of joys; frontmost, midmost, and topmost, amid all hopes the most fruitful of themes, and lending sweetness to everything relating to it. It stands a tower of glory amid Bible topics and promises, itself the best and fairest promise. Why is it unwelcome to many who profess a love for the Saviour? Why is it disapproved, discouraged, and dismissed, when, where, and by whom it should be welcomed, loved, cherished, and defended? Why is it not eagerly received into Christian societies and associations as the most delightful subject of conversation? Why is it so hard and so rare to find an avenue or a means of its introduction into religious assemblies? Why is there such an array of opposition to it? Alas! it is deemed an innovating and obtrusive theme. But it is sweet, grand, and powerful, notwithstanding. Around it revolve a glorious array of vital Bible truths, and from it issue unspeakably important results. The coming of Christ is the great hope of the Church, and, rightly understood, is her only hope and supreme necessity. It is not a subordinate concern, but first, single, and absolute, as a fixed condition to any and every future fruition beyond this life. Without it there can be no immortality, no eternal life.

No wonder, then, it is of such towering proportions in the teachings of the word of God, and, in the esteem of the rightly instructed believer. But in what a maze of darkness is the mass of Christiankind in our day involved respecting it! Darkness, which is nevertheless disavowed and unperceived. Darkness in regard to related events, both as signs and consequences; darkness in regard to the order and manner and time of the advent, a darkness which amounts, to a great extent, to a practical negation of the fact itself, and a practical neglect of the event in the very time and act of its nearly prepared and tremendously imminent advance. Why is it thus, and how long shall it be thus? Nevertheless, the wise can understand and rejoice in the onward march of events, as courier going just before the hour and power of the return of the High Priest and Prince of the people of God, to reign forevermore.—Selected.

REST IN CHRIST.

LEAVING entirely out of view for the moment, all denominational peculiarities and the different conclusions to which men have come respecting the future of the church and the world, it is refreshing to think of the glorious centre of all divine life and hope—the Lord Jesus Christ. In him there is rest for the weary heart amidst the trials of the world, and the storms that agitate and rend, and are likely at no distant day, to overwhelm the nominal church. Happy is the man who has personal knowledge of this most blessed rest. He may be sorely tried in any or many of the manifold forms in which trials come; and,—keenest pang of all!—his loyalty to the Lord he loves, may be doubted, simply because that very loyalty has compelled him to reject as spurious certain notions that pass current in the churches as verities of divine revelation; but his refuge is certain, his place of shelter from the storm is sure, he comforts himself in the Lord and leaves his cause with his God.

And with relation to the great future, there is rest in Christ. Complicated, intervolved, mysterious as all things seem to be, the infinite wisdom of our blessed Redeemer will arrange and settle everything so as to call forth the wonder and praise of the intelligent universe. All will yet be pronounced good, by One who cannot err, and the concurrent testimony of men and angels will echo the glorious declaration. It cannot, it will not be otherwise; let us therefore calmly, quietly, lovingly, REST IN CHRIST.—The Rainbow.

ABSURDITIES OF THE YEAR-DAY SYSTEM.

I HAVE expressed astonishment at having been myself so blinded as to believe and teach as I once did, the doctrines of what may be called, for the sake of brevity, "year-day system" of prophetic interpretation, because the whole of that assumption rests upon the assumption that a day in the language of prophecy, stands for a year. An assumption for which, I may observe, there is not in the whole Bible, a tittle of evidence, not even the shadow of a shade of authority. An assumption also which involves the most palpable absurdities; as e.g., that there shall be "no rain upon the earth for 1260 years!" in which case, the earth and all that it contains, would (according to these interpreters), have been long since reduced to impalpable dust! Also it would follow that Nebuchadnezzar should be at this moment eating grass with the beasts of the field. For "seven times" were to pass over him in that condition, during which he was to be "driven from men," and his "dwelling to be with the beasts of the field," etc. (Dan. iv. 25.) But a "time" we are told is 360 years; and seven "times" are seven times 360—namely, 2,520 years. And as this prophecy was delivered about 570 years B.C., it follows that the term of Nebuchadnezzar's punishment has yet eighty-three years to run ere its completion!

But in truth, to all who know the force of educational prejudice and the influence of long established opinions upon any subject, such mental blindness as that with which I charge myself, will occasion no surprise whatever. Even at the time I most warmly advocated what is called, though most incorrectly, the Protestant interpretation, I had continual misgivings of its validity, and every now and then had to go through a long course of argument to reassure myself of the soundness of those views; and withal had to throw into the scale the whole weight of authority. "So many learned and pious men," I reasoned with myself, "have held these views and lived and died in the firm persuasion of their truth, and shall I now presume to question their soundness?" etc., etc.

Notwithstanding, the said "misgivings" would return to the charge again and again, and would not be silenced: until at length, I resolved to throw aside all "prejudice," and examine the subject for myself alone, in the light only of common sense. This resolve once made and carried out, I was indeed "amazed" to find, as I soon found, that the so-called "Protestant" system of prophetic interpretation was from first to last devoid of all foundation, and nothing more than "the baseless fabric of a vision." The result was such rest of mind as those only can experience who have gone through the same sifting process.—WILLIAM KER, A.M. The Rainbow.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM HENRY ZEITS.

BR. STORRS: You will excuse me for interrupting you with my imperfect scribbling this time. At least I think you would, were you aware of how the Lord has kept me up to this time, through all the darkness that I have passed since I first heard you preach in Lancaster Co., Pa., 1843 or '44. It was then that I learned, through the "Bible Examiner," that the wicked are not immortal; and in the "Examiner," No. 9, I learned that the whole man constituted the living soul. And now, last and best, which crowns the whole, is that there is not and cannot be any Life out of Christ. And 1 John ii. 16, 17 he says, "All that is in the world," except "he that doeth the will of God" shall "pass away." O how plain; and how rich and important Jesus becomes; and if we are without God we are without hope of ever seeing life, but must remain in the dust, from whence we were taken.

Now, my brother, I am a member in the Southern Methodist church. Would you advise me to stay in it? I receive no food there such as my soul craves. They will not believe but that I am in error, and that they are right. They preach of a home in heaven, where the soul will go at death, at which time Christ comes to all those that are his, and the rest go to hell; and then preach there will be a world's conversion before Jesus comes, and that all are immortal, inherently so, and have an endless existence, good or bad. But I look for Jesus at any time, for I believe the prophets and apostles foretold this time so plain that there cannot be a mistake. I can't see how it can be otherwise; but as Jesus said when he was on earth, that thus it must be to fulfil all Scripture; and that he must come, because the word has gone forth marking out and warning us of those times. How perilous and trying, when the world is flourishing and moving by steam and lightning as it is, when they have but a short time, as their father the devil has.

I don't go as regular to church as I used to, because I don't hear the word of God preached as I think it was intended by our Lord it should be, when the children will have meat in due season.

They say they can't see the importance of believing as I do, that Jesus is so near, and if he comes they are ready. I tell them that only to "them that look for him will he come the second time without sin unto salvation." It's a question with me whether I ought to hold my connection with a church that holds such fables and doctrines of men or not. They have again taxed me for the year 1870 with $40 for the support of the preacher.

Now, what I want to know is, how will it meet with God's approval to uphold with my money and personal connection, such a ministry? Can you tell me what I am to do? I am alone here, except Jesus and my Bible; there are none like-minded with me; and I am announced as over, or self-righteous, and as knowing more than those preachers who do nothing else. I am a farmer by profession, or occupation; and I expect by your paper and the assistance of Jesus, to attain unto a resurrection from the dead. Will you pray for me that I may hold out faithful through all my single-handed warfare till the Lord shall come?

PALMYRA, Mo., Dec. 9, 1869.

WE have never advised any one to withdraw from a church, with which they had a connection, so long as they could have the privilege of remaining with the full understanding that they were at liberty to speak, on proper occasions, what they believed to be the truth. If that is not allowed, hold up your light judiciously, and if the church cannot endure it, let them thrust you out. But to be "taxed" to support such a church as our brother speaks of, is another matter. If you think you owe them anything, by all means pay it. But if "taxed" without your consent, leave them by refusing to submit to any such "lordship." Take that "$40," if you have it to spare, and purchase works on the Life views, and scatter them all around you, far and near: thus you will do honor to God and your own faith, and further the truth.

This Br. has begun well by sending $10 for four subscribers and a copy of the "Theology of the Bible." Go on, Br. Seitz, and scatter $40 worth of tracts among those who can and will read them; and the said church will bear it or turn you out. Try the experiment. We have no doubt it will do good.

FROM EMELINE WOOD.

BR. STORRS: My heart rejoices to know that our Father in heaven is blessing my efforts to bring the light before the people, and they receive it, I do believe, in good and honest hearts. They love to read those works on the Life views; and the blessed Saviour presses the truth home on their hearts.

The brother whom I visit Sabbath afternoons, told me yesterday that if the Lord raised him up he was coming with me to our next camp-meeting. How my heart did rejoice. A young man came in to see him whose father is class-leader in the Methodist church. He wished some of our tracts. I have a friend that has just found the Saviour. She called on me one day and saw the tracts on the table. She took up the one on the devil, read in it and asked me to lend it to her. She has a friend whom she loves. She said her heart would be cheered to read it. I lent her the different ones. She seemed grateful for them.

The truth is spreading here, glory be to our blessed Father's name. I do praise him much for it. Jesus is precious to me, and gives me his presence wherever I go. He sends the truth home. I do rejoice and will rejoice that he ever raised up Br. Storrs to advocate this glorious truth and bring it before the people. Let all the glory be to our God and his dear Son. How glad I am that my eyes have been opened to see those blessed things that I see and hear. I have a feast all the day long, and my Father is supplying all my needs, glory be to his name. My heart rejoices in having my petitions answered. I am encouraged to hold on the Lord. You know he loves those that have strong faith. Jesus always upbraided his disciples for their want of faith. I do believe in my heart he can do greater things now than when on the earth. May he greatly increase our faith. He blesses me more since I exercised such faith in prayer. Now, you loved ones, I will tell you that our Father is going to do greater things yet for us and the truth than ever before.

How I wish you could be at one of our little meetings; then I have the opportunity to leave tracts, and they say, What blessed books they are; how we like them.

Yours, looking for the LIFE-GIVER.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1869.

FROM HORACE LOVELAND.

BR. STORRS, and all friends of truth: I wish to say, The Lord is good; his mercies are over all the work of his hand; therefore we are not cut off. We have had no preaching of present truth since Br. J. Lewis was here, over a year ago, only the weekly visits of the HERALD OF LIFE. I assure you they are welcome. May the God of all grace bless you, and all that labor for the advancement of the cause of Christ and the honor of his kingdom. We are living in perilous times.—"Peace and safety," they cry; but "there is no peace to the wicked, saith my God." I do wish the HERALD to live, for it is, in value, next to my Bible. I am not learned, therefore, I the more highly prize it.

I wish some of the preaching brethren could come out here, and scatter some of the bread of "Life only in Christ," that false theology may be broken down and the truth built up. I have Br. D. L. Osborn's Bible Dictionary, which he forgot to take with him when he went home. It is of use to me, and I will take care of it till further orders. We looked for him last summer, but were disappointed. We have the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the wicked, going to heaven at death, and eternal pain and suffering preached so much out here that it has become an old story, and will not scare the people. True piety is scarce. The preachers have me to shoot at. When I go to meeting they load with a general judgment after the resurrection of all classes, called "The great day of assize." They forget the time which would be required in such a procedure; and they affirm the soul is immortal and must thus be dealt with, in order to have justice done to all.

It seems to me, the investigating judgment is passing upon us every moment of our lives, and at death, as the tree falls, so it shall be.

LEWISTON, ILL., Dec. 10, 1869.

FROM SARAH G. WADE.

BR. STORRS: While reading the HERALD now and then I see letters from friends of former years. Dear ones, it rejoices my heart to hear from you and see your names in the HERALD OF LIFE. I read every word of your letters over and over, and remember our friendship of other years. Lest you think me selfish to read and not write, I will pen a few lines to say I still love our blessed Lord, and love his cause. I am a firm believer in no Life out of Christ. How can I believe God to be a tyrant and torment the wicked in a lake of fire and brimstone? The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy; he will not always chide, neither will he keep his anger forever; he is a God of love. Jesus said to the wicked Jews, "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." David said, "Let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave."—Psa. xxxi. 17. Another one says, "Let them perish in their own corruption;" and again it is said, "They shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb." "He that believeth not is condemned already." We see in the writings of divine truth that life and death are plainly set before us. Oh let us be wise and choose life that we may live.

Sister Wood, have no fears of the building tottering; God is at the helm; the cause is his and it will stand every storm, overcome every difficulty. There are at least seven thousand that have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal. Let us be bold to testify, strong to endure, and live the life of the righteous, that our end may be like theirs.

Yours, hoping for eternal life through Christ.

APPLETON, KANSAS, Dec., 1869.

FROM THOMAS APTHORPE.

BR. STORRS: The tracts that I received from you last summer have all been scattered, and I hope they will do some good. I find a few who are willing to read, but such are few. I wish that people were disposed to examine. I think many of them would see the light.

I feel thankful to my heavenly Father for giving me a heart to investigate the doctrine that I now love, and I wish all could see the truth.

Inclosed you will find five dollars for more works. Please send me Judge Halsted's work, the "Theology of the Bible," and "Bible vs. Tradition." For the balance, please send the "Constitution of Man," by Dr. John K. Finley.

Mrs. Apthorpe received 75 cents from individuals where she distributed the tracts, which I also send.

My prayer to God is that we may be led by his Spirit to love him more and do his will, and at last have a happy meeting in the kingdom of his dear Son.

Your brother in Christ.

ROUSEVILLE, Pa., Dec. 8, 1869.

FROM S. BALDWIN.

BR. STORRS: I have been a believer in the advent doctrine for four years; but never heard of the doctrine of "Life only in Christ" till last spring, when Br. Albin Chandler called on us and preached one sermon. He told us the ungodly dead would never live again. I thought that was absurd, and was unwilling to investigate the matter till he gave me your work on the atonement. I read that, and it looked like the truth. The next was a little work which filled my heart full of love for my heavenly Father. You can guess what it was; it was, "GOD IS LOVE." Then I began to investigate, and I was troubled for many days. Prejudice was strong; yet I desired to know the truth in the matter. I determined to put my trust in the Lord, knowing that if I seek to do His will I shall know of the doctrine. So, after a long time, I was satisfied that the doctrine of "Life only in Christ" is the truth, and that "God is Love." Br. Chandler sent for the HERALD OF LIFE for me, and it has been a great help to me. I hope to be able to send for tracts soon.

Yours, in the blessed hope.

CORYDON, IOWA.

FROM J. W. MCCAGG.

BR. STORRS: I am jogging along slowly, but trust my faith is unshaken. I can now trust all things in the hands of my heavenly Father. The first of last January I left off using tobacco, after using it 25 years, and the good Lord has kept me as securely as if I had never used it. He will keep any one from the power of a perverted appetite, if they will trust him. Praise his holy name. It rejoices my heart to see so many willing to come out and proclaim the glorious truth of No Life out of Christ, and give of their means. I would be glad to do something more just now, but I am poor. I love this glorious cause above all things; it is meat and drink to me. God grant that we may finally be found worthy to attain to the resurrection out from among the dead, for his name's sake.

WARSAW, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1869.

CHARLES H. SUTTON, Manyunk, Pa., writes: I am strong in the faith of the gospel; a resurrection of life for those only who sleep in Christ, or a change to immortality of the living saints when Christ comes. "God is Love." The mortal resurrectionists are so used up for arguments, that they fly to the old repudiated ones of those who have advanced in Bible truth; having none of their own as good; thus did a certain Elder in the "Crisis," not long since. I pitied him for his folly: he was "like one who beateth the air."

LOUISA J. BEACH, New Britain, Conn., under date of Dec. 17, writes: Through the mercy of God I am still alive and much better than when I sent to you before. The day Br. Powell wrote you I was completely prostrated; could not turn or raise myself in bed, and could not sit up for some days. I am now able to be up, but not strong enough to do anything. I think the Lord has helped me wonderfully, for I have had no physician, nor taken any medicine—only the usual remedies for a hemorrhage. My lungs were in a dreadful condition for some days, but are greatly relieved; and were it not for other difficulties I should gain strength much faster. The Lord is good, and I do feel to praise him.

OBITUARY.

Br. STORRS: It is a painful duty to record the death of ISAAC WESLEY EATON, a son of James and Amanda Eaton, who are our nearest neighbors. He died of Typhoid fever, last Saturday night, about 12 o'clock. He was nineteen years old the 13th day of last August.

Last summer we noticed that he had become more serious than usual, we noticed this for several weeks. So one day while we were riding together, he asked us what a man must do to be saved? We replied, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and obey his commandments. We then asked him where he thought good people would go to when they died? He said he thought they would go to heaven. We asked him if he ever read the Bible much? He replied he never had, but had commenced to read it, and intended to live a better life. We then told him if he would find the place in the Bible where it said the righteous would go to heaven, where God and Christ now dwell, we would make him a present worth $5. This seemed to excite him to search the Scriptures more; and also to ask more questions. So, in the course of a month after this, he asked us why the preachers preached all the righteous up to heaven, if it was not taught in the Bible? We told him that was the way they were educated, but if he wished to learn the truth, he must not be guided by men, but go directly to the Bible. Men could help him to learn the great truths of the Bible, and he should use them as helps, not as guides.

Through the latter part of the summer and fall, we had several conversations with him, on the subject of religion. He ever seemed willing to be guided by the Bible; he became fully convinced that "the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace," Psa. xxxvii. 9–11. Matth. v. 5; and that going to heaven where God is, was not a Bible doctrine. He also was convinced that the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, would be set up at his second appearing, and that it was only by a patient continuance in well-doing that we would obtain eternal life and have an entrance into the kingdom of God.

But death, the great enemy, has taken him from our midst, in the very commencement of his searching after the truth as revealed in God's word. He would have made a good critic and a close investigator. He is the first of eleven children, taken from the family by the hand of death. And it was a severe trial—in the family to part with him. May the blessings of God rest on them, and may they continue the investigation of the word of God, which was so earnestly commenced by their deceased son. May they search out the promises of God and keep them; learn the commandments and obey them, and at last be saved in the kingdom.

Our young friend has gone into hades—the state of death, but the Lion of the tribe of Judah holds the keys. He can shut and no man open. He can open and no man shut. And we believe the Judge of all the earth will do right. Now the peace of God is like a river, and his righteousness is like the waves of the sea. So the Christian's life is a growth in grace and a knowledge of the truth. We commence by giving our hearts to God in Christ, and continue on, growing like a river, or a wave of the sea. It is true a small pebble cast into a very small stream, will impede its course, but it will rise until it will surmount the pebble; then, on it will go. Move the same pebble farther down and cast it into the stream;—it will cover it up immediately, and roll right along. This illustrates the Christian's life. A small offence may be thrown in his way when he has gone only a small distance in the race. This will impede his course a short time, but he works and prays, and at last surmounts the difficulty; then, on he goes. Let the same offence be thrown in his way farther on: he will pay no attention to it, but will go on his course, blessing and praising God.

Thus, the Christian becomes stronger and stronger, the farther he goes in the race, so that nothing can impede his course, any more than you can impede the course of a large river, or a great wave of the ocean. Will not God be pleased with all who have started to run the Christian race? And if one is cut down by the enemy, death, after starting on the race, will he not receive a crown?

Brethren and sisters,—let us all run with patience, the race that is set before us, ever looking to Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith.—Amen.

ACROSTICS.

The glorious truths you advocate
Have no tradition for their base,
Enveloping in misty state,
Homes, hopes and heaven of a race.
Entrancing truths to dying men,
Re-lumined by the Saviour's words,
A halo dazzling mortal ken,
Love such as mortal's hath not been,
Draws the disciple to his Lord.
O may He in whose mighty hand!
Future and present states are held,
Lord of the universe! command,
Inspire and strengthen, nerve and shield
Friends of thy glorious thoughts, divine,
Evolving truth in every line.

God of our fathers! hear us now
Entreat for one, to us so dear,
O listen to us, as we bow
Reverently in thy fear.
Grant still to us, if it may be,
Extended life for him who guides,
Still o'er life's dark and troubled sea,
The HERALD, on its surging tides.
O grant to him the glorious boon,
Richer, than ever yet bestowed,
Right at his post, his duty done,
Safe in that hour, to meet his Lord.

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

WILL God judge all men, and by what law are they to be judged?

In the first place, we will inquire in what relation do mankind stand to the Judge that is to decide the character of all men? Man, as I understand, has but one probation or trial. Adam, who stands at the head of all the human race, was upon trial for eternal life or eternal death. He failed of life, and hence death followed, which is eternal as far as he is concerned. Bishop Law, in commenting on the sentence pronounced upon Adam, says, "The words 'thou shalt surely die,' might be more properly rendered thou shalt utterly die!" He quotes from Athanasius, who says, "that doubling the expression, denotes that he should not only die, but remain in the corruption of death for all eternity."

In consequence of Adam's transgression, all his posterity are subject to death; but God devised a plan by which we might be saved through a second Adam; and through him, life from the dead would be bestowed upon all those who would confide in him; and again placing all men in a probationary state, as far as the glad tidings should extend, and no farther. That this view is correct, I quote from Paul, (Acts xvii. 30, 31,) who went to Athens and there saw the Athenians worshipping gods of wood and stone, etc. He says, "And the time of this ignorance, God winked at (or overlooked) but now commandeth all men, everywhere to repent (or reform), because he hath appointed (or established) a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he has given assurance (or offered faith) unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

The next inquiry that suggests itself to our mind is, What relation do we stand in, to the Judge of all the earth, in consequence of our having the gospel preached unto us? Jesus says, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." What does this gospel propose to do for these nations? Is it not to offer life unto all that will receive it? Certainly that is what Christ came for. He did not come to condemn the world, for he says, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life; for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotton Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life; for God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." The figure or type which Jesus uses to convey to us, the position or relation that we now occupy to God, is of vast importance to every one who hears the good news of life and immortality which is brought to light through the gospel. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up."

Why did Moses lift up the serpent in the wilderness? If we turn to Numbers xxi. we find that for the disobedience of the children of Israel, God sent serpents among them and they were bitten, and death was sure to follow unless something was done; and hence, Moses was commanded to raise a serpent of brass upon a pole, that whosoever looked upon it might be healed. We are represented as occupying the same position. The sting of death is in us, the same as the sting of the serpent was in those that were bitten. God was not obligated to heal them only on condition of repentance and faith. But suppose they did not look at the serpent and be healed; did God add any other penalty to them than that death which was sure to follow the sting of the serpent? We do not read of any penalty being added if they did not look. Will God add any punishment to those who do not look upon Christ and be healed, or redeemed from death? Has God changed? Is he not the same God of love who so loved the world as to give his only begotton Son to die that we might have life from the dead? Can there be an instance found in the Bible where God ever punished any one unless it was for their good or for an example to others who should live after them, which should be for their good or a terror to evil doers? Is that not the basis of all law where punishment is inflicted? Can there be any good results follow the punishment of those who would not obey the gospel? Could they be benefitted by it, or could those that are saved be benefitted? Would they not rather say, "Lord forgive them, they know not what they do?"

In reference to a resurrection of the "unjust," Professor Hudson says, (Debt & Grace, page 263,) "It is hard to believe that they are raised up by a miracle that ends in their destruction, or that accomplishes nothing but a judgment which in this view must appear simply vindictive. If they have no immortality, why are their slumbers disturbed?"

Is that not the inquiry of every true Christian, when he bestows a moment's thought upon the future? I, for one, can say AMEN; let them sleep a perpetual sleep and not awake. Let us now look at our text. God has appointed a day in the which he will judge the world, etc. The word appointed might be more properly translated, established a day, etc.

We are all upon trial for life or death. There is no degree of punishment. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Mark the expression, the "gift of God is eternal life." Death is not the gift of God; for the sting of death is already in us, and, like the children of Israel in the wilderness, we mnst die eternally if we do not look to Jesus. If we are now upon trial, the decision of every one's case is fixed when his trial is ended. His name is written in the book of life or the book of death. Our Lord said "He that believeth on him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already." Every man has it in his own power to choose life or death, so when Jesus comes he will come with his reward to give to every man as his works shall be, good or bad; for what a man soweth that shall he reap, for he that soweth to his flesh shall of his flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. It is evident that we are now undergoing what might be termed a "judicial judgment," which is followed by an "executive judgment," after the trial is ended, when the merits of every case will be passed upon by the Judge. John says, Rev—xx. 12, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened; and another book was opened which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works."

It is said that the dead stood before God. It may be said that the dead cannot stand, and therefore they must have been raised from the dead prior to the judgment. If that view is correct then the reward is conferred upon men before they are judged, for Paul says, "they are raised immortal, raised in power." Our Lord says, "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." This is the reward of the righteous, to be raised up immortal at the last day; which proves conclusively that the Judge has rendered his decision before the resurrection while they were dead; and if that is so, then the wicked have been judged while dead. The dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works; which shows conclusively that the books contained all that was necessary to enable the judge to decide the case of each one without the personal appearance of the individual. Therefore when it is said "that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment (for by thy words thou shalt be justified and by thy words thou shalt be condemned,)" it is evident that an account is written in the account book referred to by John, out of which men are judged.

Again, that every man's case was decided prior to the resurrection, is evident, for the book of life was examined to see whose names were written therein; and of course all the names that were not found in the book of life must be found in the other books. Hence, I conclude that at the end of this dispensation each man's case is decided by what is written in the books either for life or death; and those that are to have life are written in the life book, and those that are for death, are written in the death book and they shall not see life, but the wrath of God, which is death, abideth on them and they will not be raised up at the last day, not being children of the resurrection.

That there are texts which seem to conflict with this view of the subject, I admit. One of the texts usually brought forward is found in John v. 28, 29. "Marvel not at this for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation." I find a text in Dan xii. 2, which reads, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake,—some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Now, as many of cannot mean all, there must be some that do not awake, and hence "all do not come forth from their graves." It is generally admitted that this text is not properly translated. I will give the opinions of some that believe in the resurrection of all men. Dr. Hody argues "that if many standing alone could signify all, many of could not. Many of does plainly except some." Rev. Edward Winthrop translates the words, "And many from out the sleepers of the dust, shall awake;" leaving some unawaked. And the learned lexicographer, Gesenius, says, The Hebrew word "designates a part taken out of the whole." Professor Bush says, "The awakning is evidently predicated of the many, and not of the whole: consequently, these in the one case, must be understood of the class that awake; and the these in the other of them which remain asleep." Professor Hudson remarks on this text, "It is thought by good critics that the prophet here speaks only of the resurrection of the righteous, and that the passage should be read,—These who awake to everlasting life, and those who do not awake, to shame and everlasting contempt."

Many quotations might be given from Jewish commentators who invariably render the text, "a multitude of the sleepers in the dust shall awake, leaving many unawaked." There is seemingly a contradiction between John and Daniel. Is there no rule of interpretation by which we can harmonize these texts? Our Lord makes the resurrection the crowning blessing to all believers. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." John vi. 39. Four times in this chapter, the promise is made that he will raise believers "up in the last day." He does not say he will raise them up to a blessed immortality, but simply raise them up at the last day.

Again: Our Lord says "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (or age) and the resurrection from the dead neither marry nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more for they are equal to the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Here it is stated that those who are raised from the dead cannot die again, and the reason given is because they are "the children of the resurrection." I would ask if the ungodly are raised, are they not "the children of the resurrection?" It was Paul's only hope, he was willing to sacrifice everything and count it as dung, "if by any means I might attain unto a resurrection out from among the dead," leaving some behind, which fully harmonizes with Dan. xii. 2, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," leaving some behind unawaked.

Many of us believe that man dies and is unconscious; that he is all mortal and is dependent on his organization for thought, life, and action. Are there no texts that seem to teach otherwise? Our Lord says, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul (or life), but rather fear him which is able to destroy both body and soul in hell."

Again, says Paul, "Deliver such an one unto satan for the destruction of the flesh that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Are you willing to believe that a man has an undying soul or spirit because we find some texts like these in the Bible? These texts are far more difficult to handle in our arguments with an opponent who wishes to establish the immortality of the soul than John v. 28, 29, and a few other texts of a similar import.

It is claimed that there is a necessity that the wicked should be raised and punished for their wickedness, and because they would not obey the gospel. I would ask, Are there degrees of punishment? Does not the same punishment come upon all men alike? whether one has been notoriously wicked, and another like the young man whom our Lord loved, who only lacked one thing which would keep him out of the kingdom, and that was, he had too much of this world's goods; in fact, he was almost a Christian. I say, does the one receive any more punishment than the other by raising them from the dead, just to kill them over again? for, death is the penalty to all.

Again: I would ask, Who would it benefit? Would it be pleasing to our Lord to see that young man who came to him and asked him, "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" Would not his heart be moved to pity and anguish because he was obliged to take away his life, just because he neglected to choose life while it could be had, he being the only one that was a loser?

Again: suppose one of the martyrs were brought face to face with those that had tormented him; would he rejoice to see them undergo a horrible death? Would he not turn away from such a scene of suffering? or would he delight in it and say, You are "served right?" Would that be manifesting the spirit of Jesus, when he wept over Jerusalem, and when he hung upon the cross?

Again: let us bring it a little closer home. What would be the feelings of a mother or father to see their dear children brought forth, and hear the awful sentence, "Depart into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels?" Could they look on with pleasure? While they were on probation they were kind, dutiful children, but had neglected to become reconciled to God, who loved them with such love as no one but a God of love could.

I would ask again: can you believe that a God, who is love, would afflict a parent, or a husband or wife with such a scene as must be presented to them, if they are raised up and then separated as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats, when there could be no benefit to any one? It has always been the case when God afflicts, it was for the benefit of some one; it was not because He delighted in it; but as He said to Jerusalem, How oft would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, but ye would not. A striking figure here used. See the chickens run for protection to their mother when danger is at hand; and see the mother huddling them under her wings, and will risk her own life to the last to protect them from harm.

God does not afflict willingly any man, neither will he punish any man whom he cannot benefit by so doing, or some one else. Does it not follow that if the ungodly are raised, and are to be rewarded according to their works, that the man that has been a notorious wicked man, who has persecuted the saints of God, must receive greater punishment than those who are the most innocent, who have not willingly afflicted one of the least of God's little ones? The only fault in them was, they neglected to look to Jesus that they might have life. Will not the Lord of all the earth do right? and would it be right, if God raises them up to afflict those who were almost children of God, with the same punishment as the notorious wicked man? Would that be righteous? Does not that view of the subject smack a little of the eternal torment theory?

God is love. He is not willing that any should die, but rather that they should turn to God and have life. Would it have been righteous for God to have punished the children of Israel more than once, by sending the serpents to sting them to death, and then after they saw their condition, a remedy was prescribed, and they refused to apply it that they might be healed—would it be justice in God to afflict them with greater suffering because they would not look and live? Would it not be all of grace to provide the remedy? I say yes. Amen.

NEW YORK. Dec., 1869.

THE REFUGIES OF LIES.

BY W. H. WHITMAN.

BR. STORRS: We heard a preacher say, last Sunday, that the spirit of man was immortal, though he gave no proof from the Bible to sustain his proposition. But he said the whole Orthodox world admitted the fact. Is it a fact, or is it false? Let us look at a few texts in the Bible, and see how many kinds of spirits are spoken of; and see if we can find the immortal one.

1. We read of the spirit of Antichrist in 1 John iv. 3.
2. The spirit of bondage, Rom. viii. 15.
3. The spirit of counsel, Isa. xi. 2.
4. The spirit of divination, Acts xvi. 16.
5. A dumb spirit, Mark ix. 17.
6. The spirit of error, 1 John iv. 9.
7. Evil spirit, Luke vii. 21.
8. A familiar spirit, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6.
9. The spirit of fear, 2 Tim. i. 7.
10. A foul spirit, Mark ix. 25.
11. The spirit of jealousy, Num. v. 14.
12. A lying spirit, 1 Kings, xxii. 22.
13. A perverse spirit, Isa. xix. 14.
14. The spirit of slumber, Rom. xi. 8.
15. A sorrowful spirit, 1 Sam. i. 15.
16. The spirit of vexation, Eccl. i. 14.
17. Unclean spirit, Mark i. 23.
18. The spirit of understanding, Isa. xi. 2.
19. The spirit of whoredoms, Hos. iv. 12.
20. A wounded spirit, Prov. xviii. 14.
21. The spirit of infirmity, Luke xiii. 11.
22. The spirit of anguish, Exod. vi. 9.
23. A hasty spirit, Prov. xiv. 29.
24. A haughty spirit, Prov. xvi. 18.
25. The spirit of sleep, Isa. xxix. 10.
26. A grieved spirit, Isa. liv. 6.
27. The spirit of heaviness, Isa. lxi. 3.
28. A faint spirit, Ezk. xxi. 7.
29. A troubled spirit, Dan. ii. 1.
30. The spirit of disobedience, Eph. ii. 2.
31. A proud spirit, Eccl. vii. 8.
32. The spirit of adoption, Rom. viii. 15.
33. A broken spirit, Ps. li. 17.
34. A faithful spirit, Prov. xi. 13.
35. The spirit of grace, Heb. x. 29.
36. Humble spirit, Isa. lvii. 15,
37. A patient spirit, Eccl. vii. 8.
38. The spirit of truth, John xiv. 17.
39. The spirit of wisdom, Eph. i. 17.
40. An excellent spirit, Dan. vi. 3.
41. The spirit of sanctification, 2 Thess. ii. 13.
42. The spirit of judgment, Isa. iv. 4.

Now, here are more than forty different kinds of spirits spoken of, and many more can be found in the Bible. And we ask, which one of the forty is immortal?

The "immortal soul" question has taken a turn here in the West. The preachers we hear preach, have taken up the word spirit, to sustain themselves in the false belief that man by natural generation is immortal. But when they examine the Bible thoroughly on this subject, they will find themselves as far out of the way on the term "immortal spirit" as they have on the term "immortal soul." Would the Lord of heaven use a term that has so many different meanings, to teach us that man is by nature immortal? We think not. It is one among the strangest things to us, why men, who call themselves smart, cannot see the truth on the same subject. Now, unless we have the spirit of Christ we are none of his. It is this spirit—the Spirit of God—the Holy Spirit dwelling in us, that will make us immortal in the resurrection at the last day. We all must be regenerated by it, or we shall perish as the beasts. God will give us of his Holy Spirit if we ask him in faith.—See Luke xi. 13.

My wife is severely afflicted with catarrh in her head; so we are confined at home on her account. We both ask an interest in the prayers of all God's believing children.

"IF there were two ways to heaven, I would not wonder that yonder people stand musing and consulting a twelvemonth. But when there is but one way, and yet people stand moping, it is this that angers God."—Chadock.

PREACH the Gospel to every creature; that is, go tell every man, without exception, whatsoever his sins be, whatsoever his rebellions be—go and tell him these glad tidings, that if he will come, Jesus will accept him, and he shall be saved.

THE SNOW STORM.

Janet Ray lived with her mother in a lonely cottage on the mountain side. It was far away from the rest of the world but they had not always lived alone there. Mrs. Ray's two sons went away from their mother to go to sea, and Mrs. Ray intended to leave her solitary cottage, and before winter find a home among the little cottages at the foot of the mountain. But she was so much attached to her own pleasant home where she had lived many years, that she delayed leaving it as long as possible. All through the lingering autumn there was more freedom for Janet, who was enterprising, and fond of mounting some of the greatest heights in search of flowers. She would go too, every day, down to the glen, where their friends lived, who would fill her basket with some delicacy to take to her mother, and every day asked her when she was coming down to live among them.

One day, as Janet left her mother's house, on one of these daily visits, both she and her mother saw how threateningly the clouds were gathering.

"I fear there is going to be a storm," said Mrs. Ray; "I am almost afraid to let you go down through the glen. If it should surprise you and delay you in coming home, it would give me great anxiety."

"Oh, do not be afraid," said Janet, "if there is going to be a storm, there is more need we should have something to eat in the house, and I shall be back before you have time to be anxious."

Janet set forth, but among the mountains it began to snow before she had been long gone. She, meanwhile, had passed the glen, and reached the little huts in the valley.

"I'm surprised to see you," said her mother's friend, Ann Ross, "or rather, I wish your mother had come with you. Donald was saying, this morning, your mother ought to be safely housed among us. And to-day it looks quite threatening."

Janet promised that she would urge her mother's moving away directly, and she did not linger long, but exchanged some of her own and her mother's work for the little supplies they should need, and set out homeward.

Her path led up the glen and she could not help stopping to admire how the swollen stream dashed over the rocks. Presently her way was impeded by the rushing current, and she soon met the storm of snow that was fast increasing. She hurried on through the blinding flakes, and by the rising stream, and then she had to leave the water-course and climb up the hill-side. She found the snow had been fast increasing for some hours, and it was difficult to keep her footing in the midst of the deepening drifts. She kept courageously on till at last her strength failed her.

"My mother, how frightened she will be for me!" she thought, "and I am quite without help!"

Then she remembered how, in stormy nights, when she and her mother had fancied her two brothers struggling against storms upon the sea, her mother had always ended in saying "God is there as well as here. They are in His hands and I could not ask a better protection, even were they close by my side."

"And so she is praying for me now," said Janet to herself. "God is here as well as there, and his arms will uphold me even in death," she added; for the snow was folding about her chillingly.

Then she began to sing with a loud voice,—

"The Lord my refuge is."

For she was beginning to be benumbed with the cold, and she thought if her mother should come out to find her, she would send out her voice to melt her.

Meantime, Donald Ross had returned home toward evening, and when he found that Janet had been down into the glen, and had set out to return, he was very much alarmed.

"You should not have let her go back," he said to his wife, "the snow is gathering fast among the mountains, and I do not know how Janet can get home alive."

He set out directly with his dogs and one or two of his neighbors, in the steps of Janet. With difficulty they made their way up the glen, the drifting snow clouded in, still more, the dying light, and they could not decide at what point Janet would have left the glen. The men took different paths and Donald followed one path which his dog, who seemed to understand the object of their search, eagerly led him upon.—Yet even the dog seemed uncertain, for Janet had lost her usual course, and had been wandering blindly through the snow.

At length, Donald himself reached the cottage, and found that Janet had not been there. The poor mother was almost distracted and had been calling Janet's name in every direction, and herself having searched in vain among the drifts, Donald went back upon the search again, with his dog, and just as the faithful animal had started forward, as if he had come upon the scent, Donald heard a voice in the distance. He hastened on and found Janet sinking in the snow, her breath almost gone, but still singing out the words of her hymn. She was hardly conscious when Donald took her in his arms. He carried her to the cottage and by the warmth from the fire she opened her eyes and said—"Ah, mother, God was there as well as here. I had no fear in His arms, and I trusted that you, too, felt Him near."

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1; postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents; postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.
